Mr. Renton: I thank my hon. Friend for his support, which is always welcome. I am never sure when I will have it, but it is nice to receive it.

The new chairman of the CRE is a well-respected figure. We keep close control of the money provided by the taxpayer for the United Kingdom immigration advisory service. It is right that there should be such a service to help with immigration cases, but I assure my hon. Friend that we keep a close eye on the budget.

Mr. Randall: How does the Minister justify having insufficient staff to enter data into the Home Office computer that produces statistics on the fate of asylum-seekers refused entry to Britain? Is it because the Government really are doing a cover-up job, as suggested by The Guardian this week? Or is it another example of the gross incompetence of that part of the Home Office, as has been demonstrated by the shambles at Lunar house and the crisis at the passport office?

Mr. Renton: The hon. Gentleman would know, if he had mastered his immigration brief better in the year in which he has been——

Mr. Randall: Answer the question.

Mr. Renton: I am answering it. If the hon. Gentleman will keep quiet for a second, I shall tell him about the port returns. The port returns, of which he has evidently obtained a copy, show only immediate action taken. They may well be inaccurate one week or even one day later, because of subsequent action. I suggest to the hon. Gentleman, in my most helpful way, that he obtains his information from me rather than from leaked documents reported in The Guardian.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

4. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Irish ambassador to discuss the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hurd): I met the ambassador on 13 June at his request. He repeated to me his Government's concern about these convictions. I made it clear that I was bound to respect the recent confirmation of the original verdict after a full hearing by the Court of Appeal.

Mr. Wall: Did the ambassador inform the Home Secretary of the widespread belief in Ireland that an Irishman accused of terrorist offences in Britain cannot expect a fair trial? Is not the Birmingham bombing case casting doubt on the whole judicial system in Britain? Will the Home Secretary find some way of ending the scandal once and for all?

Mr. Hurd: The ambassador did not express himself in that way. I do not think that he would have become an ambassador if he had. The hon. Gentleman is simply feeding prejudice by passing on such criticism. After a lot of thought, I referred the case of the Birmingham bombers back to the Court of Appeal because there was new material which it seemed to me a court of law ought to consider. The Court of Appeal considered the case again and reaffirmed the original verdict and I have to respect that.

Dame Jill Knight: There is very little point in my right hon. Friend meeting the Irish ambassador on any occasion to discuss this matter, since there is not the slightest doubt that the Birmingham bombers had a fair trial in the first place and had their case reviewed again and again. Those who suggest in their written works that other people were responsible might have the guts to come forward and identify them.

Mr. Hurd: I agree with my hon. Friend's second theme. If hon. Members or any other citizens have specific information on this or other cases, it is their duty to come forward and give it in the proper way to the proper people.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Mullin.

Hon. Members: Name them.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Mr. Mullin.

Mr. Mullin: Will the Home Secretary confirm that he has the power—and can choose to use it—to set up an independent review tribunal which could consider evidence inadmissible before a court of law, and that that has been done in other alleged serious miscarriages of justice?

Mr. Hurd: I have the power to set up inquiries, but in this case I took a course which seemed much more straightforward. I referred the new material to the Court of Appeal, which then, as the hon. Gentleman knows, had the right to look at all matters and to hear all arguments all over again. The Court of Appeal held a very long hearing. The hon. Gentleman has acknowledged that it was a hearing of record length, and, I would say, thoroughness. That was the straightforward way of handling the matter, and the original verdict was reaffirmed.

Mr. Stanbrook: If the highest courts in the land are satisfied of the guilt of those men, what interest is served, except that of the IRA, in attempting to set aside their judgment?

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend knows from his long experience that in many cases throughout the history of this country people have continued to disagree with verdicts. In a country such as ours that disagreement can be satisfactorily resolved only by a court of law. That is what happened in this case.

Mr. Hume: Will the Secretary of State confirm that neither the security authorities nor the prison authorities, both of which are subject to his Department, regard the people convicted of the Birmingham bombing as high-risk, high-security prisoners? That is evident in the handling of the Old Bailey hearings in comparison with other such hearings. It is also evident to anyone who has visited the men in prison. Does he agree that the fact that the prison authorities who know the men on a day-to-day basis do not regard them as dangerous tends to confirm the widespread opinion that they are innocent?

Mr. Hurd: The hon. Gentleman knows better than that. He knows that the secondhand, hearsay opinion held by prison officers is neither here nor there. The matter has been referred to the only people who, in a law-abiding country, are competent to make a decision, and that is those in a court of law. It has been examined thoroughly. There has been no serious criticism of the way in which it has been done, and the House, like myself, should respect the outcome of that process.

Sir John Farr: May I ask my right hon. Friend to look at Thursday's debate on the proposed new clause 2 of the Criminal Justice Bill? He will see that a good deal of unease was expressed on both sides of the House about the validity of the Birmingham Six convictions. In view of the widespread unease expressed by former Home Secretaries and other senior Ministers, will he look again, as some of his predecessors have done, to see whether it is his duty to establish a special review into the case of the Birmingham Six?

Mr. Hurd: This morning I read the interesting and high-quality debate on the new clause to the Criminal Justice Bill. I recognise my hon. Friend's deep-seated, persistent concern with this case. As I have said before, it is normal in a free country that people should have strongly differing views about verdicts in controversial cases such as this. I repeat that I believe—nothing in the debate altered my view—that the straightforward course was followed by me and others who handled the matter. I am bound to respect the confirmation of the original verdict reached in this thorough way, and the House should do the same.

Prisoners (Statistics)

6. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted persons are currently held in English prisons; and if he will make a statement.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): On 30 April this year 39,625 convicted prisoners were held in prison department establishments in England and Wales. A total of 1,650 of those prisoners were unsentenced, 1,340 were sentenced females and 8,327 were sentenced male young offenders.

Mr. Brown: If the recent parliamentary delegation to Iran is to have any chance of success, surely it is important to give some sort of concession, for example, releasing Iranian prisoners held in this country, remembering that some of them have changed their political views. Some who have been anti-Khomeini are now pro-Khomeini. Some concession is necessary. Even the Council of Europe argues for the exchange of prisoners. Why cannot the Government do that with the Iranian regime? Something has to be done if we want Terry Waite and others to go free. Now is the opportunity.

Mr. Hogg: My impression of that question is that it is wide of the one that the hon. Gentleman tabled. However, I shall make two points. First, the hon. Gentleman might care to bear in mind that there are some 755 people in prison for criminal damage—that is damaging property. I should have thought that that would make criticism from the hon. Gentleman wholly inappropriate on subjects of this sort.

On the other point, the idea that one bargains for the release of hostages is grotesque and absurd and I regret hearing it in the House.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: I thank my hon. Friend for the figures he has given. Does he agree that the prisons are overcrowded and that, as a result, many policemen are being forced to look after remand prisoners in police cells? Will he please take some urgent action to consider allowing remand prisoners to be kept in hostels run by authorities other than the Home Office?

Mr. Hogg: My hon. Friend makes a very serious point. We have brought about a substantial reduction in the number of prisoners held in police cells. In March the number was about 1,500, but it is currently about 750, which is a substantial reduction. We have also put in place a number of measures designed to reduce substantially the number remanded in prisons. My hon. Friend is right when he says that it is a serious problem, but we are addressing it.

Mr. Alex Carlile: While it remains the Minister's judgment that in some cases prisoners must be kept in police cells, will he take special measures to ensure that they are not remanded hundred of miles from their homes and their legal advisers? Does the Minister recognise that this is causing great personal hardship and extreme difficulty in the preparation of cases for court?

Mr. Hogg: A number of the measures that we have taken—in particular, the new camps—have reduced the problem to which the hon. and learned Member refers.

Independent Television Programme Producers

7. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to promote the greater use of independent programme producers by the British Broadcasting Corporation and Independent Television.

Mr. Renton: We have sought and received a commitment from the BBC and IBA that, subject to satisfaction on cost and quality, 25 per cent. of original television output covering a wide range of programmes will be commissioned from independent producers by the end of 1992. We attach great importance to the achievement of that target, and we shall continue to keep in touch with both broadcasters and independent producers, to satisfy ourselves about progress towards it.

Mr. Knight: Can my hon. Friend tell the House to what extent the Government's independent production initiative has helped reduce costs and increase efficiency in the television industry? Does my hon. Friend agree that, apart from the need for a fifth television channel, because the BBC is either unable or unwilling to broadcast programmes after midnight, there is an overwhelming case for directing the corporation to turn over its BBC1 and BBC2 transmitters to independent companies during late evening and early morning periods, so that a better public service may be provided?

Mr. Renton: I have no doubt that our determination that independent producers shall have reasonable access to television screens throughout the country has been one reason why companies have been active in recent months in entering into new agreements with their work forces and taking new steps to use the latest technology and equipment, thus reducing their costs. I agree with my hon. Friend that, so far, there has been more initiative shown by Channel 4 and the ITV companies in using the night hours, although the BBC is now starting a subscription service during the night for doctors.

James Thurber advised:

"Early to rise and early to bed makes a male healthy and wealthy and dead."

So far, the ITV companies are heeding that advice more than the BBC.

Mr. Cryer: When considering the use of independent film producers, will the Minister ensure that the IBA exercises its duty under the Independent Broadcasting Authority Act 1973 and stops the practice of feature films being interrupted by advertisements in a highly arbitrary manner and not when natural breaks occur? Will the Minister ensure, too, that feature films made specifically for theatrical exhibition will not be interrupted in the devastatingly arbitrary way that the IBA permits, so breaching its statutory obligation?

Mr. Renton: The hon. Member raises an interesting point. It is solely for the IBA to monitor the insertion of advertisements within feature films. The Council of Europe's draft convention suggests that feature films should be interrupted only once during the whole course of their transmission. That proposal worries British advertisers, but it is one that we shall consider and argue about in the weeks ahead.

Mr. Roger King: Is my hon. Friend aware that over the past few weeks we have been subjected by all the TV channels to a diet of England losing at football and at cricket, but that when it came to England winning at Le Mans and Jaguar's victory there for the first time in 32 years, there was no coverage because of the absence of any contractual arrangements between the media? We all look forward to independent producers who can bring success stories of that kind to our screens, which the public desperately want.

Mr. Renton: My hon. Friend makes a very good point. It is interesting to note that at present independent producers are making a bid to handle the televising of Parliament, and I hope that that will be a success story as well.

Mr. Worthington: It is clear that Britain can lead the world in this area of programme-making. Will the Minister get together with his colleagues in the Department of Trade and Industry to ensure that there is a thriving programme-making facility, not just in the south-east of England, but in the rest of the United Kingdom, particularly Scotland?

Mr. Renton: I met members of the Independent Producers Association only yesterday. I assured them that we were anxious to ensure that regional production continues throughout the country—in Wales, Scotland and other parts of England—and is not just centred around WC2, with everyone taking lunch at the White Tower restaurant.

Mr. Holt: Will my hon. Friend ensure that all these so-called drama producers are told that the vast majority of people are fed up with their television sets producing four-letter words, men urinating into lavatories, and buckets of blood, all in the name of so-called realism?

Mr. Renton: Yes, Sir. It is precisely for that reason that we have set up the Broadcasting Standards Council and Sir William Rees-Mogg has taken on the difficult job of being its first chairman.

Mr. Corbett: While I welcome the greater use of independent television producers to give variety to both national and regional stations, will the Minister encourage that on radio as well? To assist in the process, will the proposed new Channel 5 and the new commercial radio stations be run on the lines of Channel 4?

Mr. Renton: When the hon. Gentleman refers to Channel 5, I take it that he is talking about television and not radio. The answer is that that will not necessarily be so. This is one of the matters that we are examining, and, as my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary said in his speech last night, we must consider—outside the BBC—to what degree ITV channels and any new terrestrial channels should be subject to the same public service broadcasting obligations as now exist.

Crime Prevention

8. Mr. Samberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further plans he has to involve the private sector in collaborative schemes of crime prevention following his recent initiative.

The Minister of State, Home Office (Mr. John Patten): Crime Concern, the new national organisation for crime prevention, was launched on 23 May. One of its tasks will be to provide a national focus for private sector support for crime prevention. We shall also be expecting to see continued private sector support for individual local crime prevention projects, including some that will be established under the safer cities programme, and crime prevention panels have an important role too.

Mr. Sumberg: I welcome my hon. Friend's initiative in this important matter. Will he in turn send a message of support to the Bury police, who have recently established in my constituency the Bury crime prevention panel, which will involve the community and the private sector in police activities? Is that not the sort of action that will translate his good intentions into good deeds?

Mr. Patten: The Bury police are showing a lead, and I shall write to them this afternoon.

Mr. John Greenway: Is my hon. Friend aware of the insurance schemes with low premiums for members of good neighbour and neighbourhood watch schemes, which have recently been introduced? Does he agree that such schemes provide a very good spur to membership of neighbourhood watch, and to crime prevention in general?

Mr. Patten: I welcome the actions of insurance companies that are giving a discount to householders and flat dwellers who live in the areas covered by neighbourhood watches of which they are members. I only wish that more insurance companies would do the same.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: Will the Minister ensure that those private sector schemes do not follow the arrangements that were set up for the collection of parked vehicles in Brighton? A tin-pot little company from the back end of Brighton was given a substantial contract and will now make a quarter of a million pounds a year collecting vehicles. That could have been done by the local police authority, and the ratepayer would have been the beneficiary. Why does the Minister not ensure that authorities keep such services in the public sector, so that the money can go to the real people, not just to a small group of people?

Mr. Patten: The private sector is more cost-efficient and cost-effective. That is why we welcome the involvement of more and more private sector companies in sponsoring crime prevention schemes.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: While the Minister is considering the role of the private sector in crime prevention, will he be having new discussions with the brewers? As the Home Secretary and the Ministers have fulfilled their side of the bargain and delivered the Licensing Bill to the brewers, will he now, although late in the day, be having discussions with the brewers about alcohol-related problems and, in particular, about their pricing policy in public houses, which artificially inflates the cost of low-alcohol and non-alcoholic drinks? Surely the events of recent weeks prove that the Government were wrong to push ahead with the Licensing Bill before tackling any of the problems of alcohol abuse.

Mr. Patten: I find it amazing that the hon. Lady seems to have overlooked the stiffening by the Licensing Bill of the provisions for the sale of alcohol. I thought that she welcomed that in the Standing Committee on the Bill. I also thought that the hon. Lady would want to join us in encouraging magistrates and licensing benches throughout the country to use the powers they already have to ensure that licenses are given only where they are appropriate.

Bail Hostels

9. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any recent representations on the provision of local public consultation on the establishment of bail hostels and similar residences for offenders in premises which do not require a change of use.

Mr. John Patten: I have received representations about the decision by the Dorset probation committee to purchase The Pines hotel, Cecil road, Boscombe, Bournemouth, for conversion to use as a bail hostel.

Mr. Atkinson: The location of bail hostels, which is bound to be a sensitive issue in any locality, will incur greater opposition only where there has been no public consultation. Will my hon. Friend, therefore, consider issuing new guidelines to the probation service pointing out that it is essential to consult the local planning authority as well as the police authority on the location of such residences?

Mr. Patten: I shall certainly consider my hon. Friend's constructive suggestion, but we have 101 probation hostels of this sort in the country and it is a very long time since we have had any complaint at all from local residents about them. However, I appreciate the concern that is felt in his constituency and will certainly consider the very constructive suggestion that he has made.

Police Forces (Restructuring)

10. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to encourage police forces to restructure their administrative systems in order that police officers' time might be used more efficiently.

Mr. Hurd: My Department has produced practical suggestions for reducing the administrative burden on operational police officers, both by streamlining procedures and by introducing specialist support units. The West Midlands police increased the operational availability of police officers by 12·5 per cent. in one sub-division by such means and are extending the process. A number of other forces, including Humberside, have also made significant gains in efficiency. The recent Audit Commission report acknowledges that this approach has "captured the imagination of almost the entire police service."

Mr. Cran: Does my right hon. Friend agree that, while it is desirable to lighten the administrative burden on police officers—which will perforce mean that they will spend more time on the beat—it will not solve entirely the problem of the 94 per cent. increase in crime on Humberside in the last 10 years, against which there has been a 1·5 per cent. increase in the police establishment? The community would like more police on Humberside. Can he hold out any hope?

Mr. Hurd: The rise in crime on Humberside has been well above the national average, which my hon. Friend will have been glad to see has been decreasing. Only part of the answer lies in increased numbers of police and, although his figure about establishment is accurate, he will have noted that the strength of the force—the number of police and civilians available—has gone up by 235, which is just about 10 per cent.

Ms. Armstrong: Does the Home Secretary not think that the answer to his hon. Friend fits ill with the recent decision in respect of Durham county constabulary, where the county police committee saved enough money to employ 12 new officers on the beat and the right hon. Gentleman then refused permission so to use the money?

Mr. Hurd: As the hon. Lady knows, we are in the middle of a further programme of expanding the police forces in England and Wales, which are now at a record level and steadily increasing. I recently announced, on top of the 300 extra police for London, 500 extra for the non-metropolitan forces. I am in touch with my colleagues about the right number for next year.

Sunday Trading

11. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the proposed reform of Sunday trading.

Mr. Hurd: Between 1 January and 14 June we received 153 written representations broadly in favour of Sunday trading, and 110 against. Ministers have also received various deputations, some for and some against Sunday trading.

Mr. Marshall: Does my right hon. Friend agree that a law that allows shopkeepers to sell gin but not dried milk, pornography but not the Bible, fresh fish but not canned sardines, is illogical, indefensible, frequently breached and rarely enforced? Does he agree that it is high time the law was changed?

Mr. Hurd: I agree with my hon. Friend. I remember using similar examples two years ago when I tried to persuade the House to agree to the logical solution, which is deregulation. The House would not have it at that time. Now we are searching around to see whether opinion has changed about deregulation or whether there is some way in which we can move forward out of the intolerable position that my hon. Friend has described in a way that is acceptable to both Houses of Parliament.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Charles Powell

Q1. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment was made, when Mr. Charles Powell was seconded to her Office as her private secretary for overseas affairs, of the implications of his role and authority in that capacity for his effectiveness in any future posting on his eventual return to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister (Mrs. Margaret Thatcher): None, Sir.

Mr. Dalyell: Did Mr. Powell really fail to tell the Prime Minister about the role of the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in the Westland Law Officer's leaked letter before the inquiry had reported?

The Prime Minister: As I have told the hon. Gentleman many times, I have nothing to add to the many answers and statements that I have given on this matter.

Mr. Cash: Does my right hon. Friend accept that the batty question asked by the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) shows that he has no clue about the qualities that are needed for such appointments? He knows perfectly well that he has no justification for the allegations he has been putting down on the Order Paper, which are a grave misuse of the procedure of the House.

The Prime Minister: I agree with my hon. Friend.

Mr. Fatchett: Is it not about time that the Prime Minister came clean with my hon. Friend the Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) and the House and told the whole truth about the Westland affair, particularly in the light of the journal report this week which suggested that the right hon. Member for Henley (Mr. Heseltine), who was then Secretary of State for Defence, had made it abundantly clear that the Prime Minister was responsible for the leaked letter? Is it not time that the Prime Minister commented on that and told us the truth? It is her integrity that is being challenged by these proceedings and by the right hon. Gentleman's comments.

The Prime Minister: I have answered innumerable questions and given extensive replies. I have nothing further to add.

Sir Bernard Braine: When my right hon. Friend rightly drew a sharp contrast between the orderly and civilised city of Toronto——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the Father of the House, but this is a definitive question.

Engagements

Q2. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I returned from Canada. I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the President of West Germany.

Mr. Davies: Will the Prime Minister confirm a report in The Daily Telegraph of yesterday that she informed the Ottawa summit that she was now of the opinion that private affluence did not necessarily solve all society's problems? If that conversion is true, will she have a word with her hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) before she makes a complete fool of herself and the Tory party by her attempts to legitimise and justify the disgraceful actions of the ticket touts at Wimbledon?

The Prime Minister: First, the summit was not in Ottawa, but in Toronto. I do not know of anyone who thinks that affluence will solve all problems. People cannot know anything about human nature if they think that. Ticket touts at Wimbledon are not a matter for me.

Sir Peter Blaker: Bearing in mind that today is the 40th anniversary of the beginning of the 10-month blockade of West Berlin by the Soviet Union, which led to the signing of the North Atlantic treaty, will my right hon. Friend affirm that, in spite of the changes in the Soviet Union under Mr. Gorbachev, a strong NATO remains as essential as ever?

The Prime Minister: Yes. A strong NATO is our only sure defence. One of the reasons why we are able to welcome the bold actions of Mr. Gorbachev in trying to change the Soviet Union is that, whatever happens, our defence under NATO will be sure.

Dr. Owen: Will the Prime Minister support in Hanover next week the proposed study by the central bankers for a European independent central bank? Does she agree that that would be the mechanism whereby the freeing of capital flows would be a success, so that in the longer term United Kingdom domestic interest rates might come down to the OECD average?

The Prime Minister: No, not precisely that. Other things need doing, which I shall refer to in a moment. We can have a European central bank only when there is a united states of Europe under one sovereign Government, not under 12, and when all the countries have the same economic policy. That not being on the cards, I see no point in anyone studying a European central bank. There are points in having a number of central bankers and possibly Finance Ministers considering the composition of reserves and greater use of the ecu, but that is a different proposition from the one which the right hon. Gentleman has put, which would come about only with the dissolution of this House, among others.

Q3. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Colvin: Will my right hon. Friend find time today to read the ruling of the European Court on rates of value added tax in the United Kingdom? Is this not another example of the loss of sovereignty that is part of the price that we have to pay for membership of the EEC? In view of her concern about the need to crack down on alcohol abuse, will my right hon. Friend take note that if there is harmonisation of taxes on alcoholic drinks, 18p will come off a pint of beer, the price of a bottle of wine will drop by 25 per cent. and a bottle of whisky will be a full third cheaper? What would that do for the sobriety of the nation?

The Prime Minister: As my hon. Friend is aware, following a statement in the House on Tuesday, that VAT judgment arose from a 1977 directive which must have gone through the House, or not have been objected to by the House, for it to become a directive. Therefore, the court was re-interpreting existing law. With regard to drink taxation, the Commission's harmonisation proposals would require the unanimous agreement of all member states and could not be imposed against the will of the United Kingdom Government. We believe that these attempts to harmonise duties are misconceived and unnecessary, and we shall oppose them.

Mr. Kinnock: Is the Prime Minister aware that after the interest rate rise yesterday Mr. John Bannan of the CBI said:

"We do not believe the present medicine will have the desired results. It will have very serious side effects."

Does the Prime Minister think that he is wrong?

The Prime Minister: The most important thing is what the Chancellor said in his Budget speech:

"Short-term interest rates remain the essential instrument of monetary policy. Within a continuous and comprehensive assessment of monetary conditions, I will continue to set interest rates at the level necessary to ensure downward pressure on inflation."—[Official Report, 15 March 1988; Vol. 129, c. 997.]

Most industrialists agree that the worst thing for them would be a return of inflation. My right hon. Friend took steps to prevent that.

Mr. Kinnock: Clearly, the Prime Minister thinks that Mr. Banham and all who agree with him are wrong. Is it not obvious that the further increase in interest rates came because the Government have completely lost control of credit? [Interruption.] Having completely lost control of credit, the Prime Minister is making British industry pay the price, as usual. Why does she always do that? Is it any wonder, given those policies, that British industry has lost 20 per cent. of the international market and 30 per cent. of the British market? Why does the Prime Minister not give our producers a chance for a change?

The Prime Minister: Short-term interest rates are the essential instrument of monetary policy. If the right hon. Gentleman has no such instruments to control it, how does he ever expect to be able to keep inflation down? But then, of course, he never did. With regard to industry, may I make it absolutely clear that a 1 per cent. increase in wages costs industry four times as much as a 1 per cent. increase in interest rates. Wages went up by over 8½ per cent. last year.

Mr. Kinnock: If it is short-term interest rates that concern the Prime Minister, why have interest rates been higher for longer under her Government than under any other Government?

The Prime Minister: And inflation has been lower than the right hon. Gentleman's party ever achieved in Government.

Q4. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Marshall: Yesterday in Moscow I was asked to thank the Prime Minister—[Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let us hear it.

Mr. Marshall: I was asked to thank the Prime Minister for the support that she has given the refusenik community. In doing so, may I ask her, in the course of her busy day—[HON. MEMBERS: "Reading".]—to consider the plight of Vladimir Kislik who has been fighting for an exit visa since 1973? Does she agree that his condition is intolerable, and will she press the Russians to give him an exit visa?

The Prime Minister: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for passing on those thanks. I am pleased to receive the message. Official consultations on human rights questions are taking place in Moscow today and the plight of Soviet refuseniks will, of course, be among the matters that are discussed. Our officials will be handing over a list of cases, which includes the case of Vladimir Kislik. His name was also on the list handed to Mr. Shevardnadze last year.

Despite recent improvements in emigration arrangements, many Soviet Jews are still waiting to leave. We shall not forget them and we shall continue to raise their plight.

Q5. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the repely that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Hughes: Will the Prime Minister explain this? A reply dated 9 June 1987 from her Office, on her personal notepaper, to a Mr. St. John from south London, described the system under which council tenants could have their tenancies transferred. She said that that would happen only if the majority of tenants expressed their support for it. Is she aware that the Housing Bill now before the House blatantly contradicts that commitment and allows a transfer even if the majority do not express their support? Will the Prime Minister honour her commitment of last year, reverse the U-turn and make sure that tenants' transfer is conducted under a democratic and proper system of voting?

The Prime Minister: I thought that we had arranged that it was a majority of those voting—either for tenants' co-operatives or for a possible transfer to housing associations. The hon. Gentleman will be referring to housing action trusts—[Interruption.] In that case, may I have another look at it? I think that we have arranged for a block to be transferred only with a majority of those voting and for those who do not wish to be transferred to remain under existing ownership.

Q6. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave some moments ago.

Mr. Beaumont-Dark: Will my right hon. Friend accept that one of the most important rights that people have in this country is the resort to justice? The problem that arises is that if one is poor enough one may get legal aid, and if one is rich enough one may pursue a case to the end of one's pocket. However, if one is in the middle, which the great majority of people are, one has little hope or right to justice because, unless one is willing to impoverish one's family at a cost of a hundreds of thousands of pounds —as have some hon. Members—one cannot get it. Will my right hon. Friend accept, at long last, that this one great monopoly should fall, as other monopolies have fallen, because she believes that justice should be done for all?

The Prime Minister: Legal aid is widely available, often to those with incomes well above the national average. I think it is right that we should have a place where we draw the line. It would be quite wrong for everyone, automatically, regardless of means, to be able to get legal aid. A report of the review body on civil justice was published on 7 June. It has made recommendations that would make justice quicker, simpler, more cost-effective and more accessible to the public. The Lord Chancellor is at present consulting on those suggestions.

Economic Summit (Toronto)

3.30 pm

The Prime Minister (Mrs. Margaret Thatcher): With permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement on the economic summit held in Toronto on 19-21 June, which I attended with my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Copies of the economic and political declarations issued by the summit have been placed in the Library of the House.

The Toronto summit marked the end of the second seven-year cycle of these meetings. In contrast to the first cycle, which was characterised by short-term policies and expedients, which led only to high inflation and low growth, this second cycle of meetings followed a different approach. We concentrated on fundamentals, like sound financial policies to get inflation down, coupled with incentives to encourage enterprise and reforms to remove barriers to growth. These policies have led to sustained growth, with low inflation, higher investment and new jobs. The Toronto summit was therefore able to confirm that our countries are achieving unprecedented economic success.

Our economic discussion took place under four main headings—macroeconomic policies, trade, agriculture and the debt problems of the poorest countries.

First, on macroeconomic policies, Heads of Government committed themselves to continue the fiscal, monetary and structural policies which have brought non-inflationary growth. We shall all maintain vigilance against any resurgence of inflation. Countries with budgetary deficits will continue their efforts to reduce them. Those with large external surpluses will continue to sustain the momentum of domestic demand. We shall all continue to carry through structural reforms aimed at removing unnecessary regulations and burdens on business.

Secondly, on trade, the summit Governments renewed their commitments to resist new measures of protection and steadily to reduce the present barriers to trade. We attached major importance to strengthening the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade itself by ensuring that member states carry out their obligations, and that disputes over trade are resolved speedily, effectively and equitably. We urge the newly industrialising countries to accept more obligations in the GATT.

We committed ourselves to ensure more open markets for the exports of developing countries, many of which need trade as much as they need aid. We want to see progress on all these matters at the mid-term review meeting of the GATT negotiations in Montreal in December.

Thirdly, on agriculture, in furtherance of our agreement at the Tokyo and Venice summits, we pledged ourselves to take further steps to make the agricultural sector more responsive to the needs of the market. We agreed on an approach to international negotiations in the GATT which should steadily reduce agricultural subsidies and protection in all our countries. We hope that this will lead to decisions covering both short-term steps and longer-term objectives at the Montreal meeting.

Fourthly, debt. Our discussions concentrated on the debt problems of the poorest and most heavily indebted countries, particularly those in sub-Saharan Africa.

I pay tribute to the way in which my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has taken the lead over the past 14 months in pressing for action to ease the debt service burden of those countries. His proposals, and subsequent variations by other countries, were welcomed at Toronto and we were able to agree on action to put them into effect.

First, on trade debts, we agreed that creditor countries should choose between concessionary interest rates, longer repayment periods and partial write-offs, with the details to be worked out at the Paris Club. That relief is conditional on the debtor countries agreeing a programme of reform with the International Monetary Fund. It will offer major additional benefits to the poorest countries which could build up to $500 million a year. Secondly, on aid debts, we welcomed the action that the United Kingdom and others have taken to write off old aid loans and we urged countries to give further aid to the poorest in the form of grants, as the United Kingdom already does.

Heads of Government also discussed a number of political issues which are covered in the political declaration. On East-West relations, we congratulated President Reagan on what he had accomplished, together with Mr. Gorbachev, at the recent Moscow summit. We reasserted our belief that our security will continue to depend on a combination of nuclear deterrence and adequate conventional strength. We pledged our continued support for further negotiations to reduce United States and Soviet strategic weapons, as well as to reduce the threat posed by the Warsaw pact's massive superiority in conventional forces. We urged the Soviet Union to enshrine in law the recent advances on human rights matters and to remove obstacles to emigration. We encouraged the countries of eastern Europe to open up their economies and societies.

The statement also approved important steps to improve international co-operation in the fight against drugs, including measures to deal with laundering of drug money. Heads of Government reiterated the strong stand taken at earlier summits against all forms of terrorism and hi-jacking. We appealed to all countries that are not party to the international conventions on civil aviation security to accede to those conventions.

I should like to pay tribute to the very skilled and effective chairmanship of the summit by the Canadian Prime Minister, Mr. Mulroney.

The message from the Toronto summit was one of achievement and of confidence in the future, coupled with a commitment that the sound policies which have brought us success will continue and that new progress will be made on current problems. Those are the policies that the Government have consistently followed for more than nine years and, as a result, Britain has been able to give a lead in securing rising living standards and a better world.

Mr. Neil Kinnock (Islwyn): I welcome the further steps taken by the summit leaders and their countries to co-operate in combating terrorism, in attacking the evil of international drug trafficking and in punishing those who profit by such horrific trade. I welcome the commitment at the summit to continue the efforts to improve international economic policy co-ordination. What will be the consequences of the Prime Minister's commitment in endorsing the objective of reducing spending in countries with large external deficits, particularly as Britain is now just such a country?

The statement on debt rescheduling for some of the poorest countries is evidence of progress, and I note with satisfaction that the communiqué urged countries to maintain a high grant element in their future assistance to the poorest. In the light of that, will the Prime Minister now reverse the reductions in Britain's overseas aid development programme, reductions that have cut the value of our programme in half since she came to power?

Why did the Prime Minister insist on weakening the summit statement on the Sharpeville Six by resisting the efforts of other leaders, including Mr. Mulroney, to impose real pressures on Pretoria by including the threat of sanctions against apartheid? Does that not discredit the right hon. Lady's calls for clemency?

The Prime Minister: I am grateful to the right hon. Gentleman for what he said about the points with which he agrees. It is much easier to obtain international economic policy co-ordination when all the members of the summit countries are running their economies soundly —which they are and which they have been. They are running their economies in a way that is very similar to the policy that we are pursuing.

As for the reduction in spending in countries with large external deficits, our external deficit at present is very small indeed, compared with our gross domestic product. It is one of the smallest among all countries. I am glad, nevertheless, to hear that we have in the right hon. Gentleman a convert to reducing public spending. Is that not good? Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman will tell us how he intends to reduce it, or will all the reductions be on defence?

As for a high grant element in aid to the poorest countries, that is absolutely right. The number of loans that have been given could not possibly have been repaid, so it is better to be quite bold and give them that help in the form of grants. What was the last thing— [Interruption.] I am so sorry: South Africa. I must tell the right hon. Gentleman that no proposal for sanctions against South Africa ever came before the Heads of Government.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to have regard to the fact that this is an Opposition day and that there is to be an important debate on Wales. I shall allow questions on the Prime Minister's statement to continue until 4 o'clock and then we must move on to the business statement. Therefore, I ask hon. Members for brief questions, please.

Sir Peter Hordern (Horsham): Was there genuine concern at the summit conference about the risk of inflation and was there a general agreement to increase interest rates?

The Prime Minister: There was no general agreement to increase interest rates. My hon. Friend is aware that there are a number of instruments for keeping down inflation. One of the most important of those is interest rates; another is to keep down public spending and deficits—in preference, having a Budget surplus—as my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has done. My hon. Friend will have seen a sentence in the economic communiqué that states that we must continue to be vigilant and ensure that there is no resurgence of inflation, so we are aware of the problem and we are taking steps to deal with it.

Mr. Robert Maclennan (Caithness and Sutherland): While one welcomes any steps that improve international economic co-operation, why did the Prime Minister fail to draw attention to the historic imbalance in current accounts and to the historic yo-yoing of the exchange rates, towards the correction of which this summit appears to have done nothing? While one bears in mind the disparities between the Federal Republic of Germany and ourselves, why is the Prime Minister so hostile to the co-ordination of central bank activities, as she expressed it in her earlier answer at Question Time to the right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen)?

The Prime Minister: The right hon. Member for Plymouth, Devonport (Dr. Owen) was not asking about the co-ordination of central bank activities. I gave two examples where I thought greater co-ordination could come about. He referred to setting up a European central bank. That can be set up when there is only one Government in Europe. As for the yo-yos of inflation, I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will agree that the revaluation of the yen was one of the very important events that led to the reduction of Japan's external trade balance.

Sir Fergus Montgomery (Altrincham and Sale): Is my right hon. Friend aware of the support on these Benches for the agreement reached at the summit for the continuation of the fight against illegal drug dealers? Will she confirm that the work started at the summit will include greater international co-operation over the confiscation of the assets of drug barons?

The Prime Minister: Yes, that has been very much in our minds. A new special task force has been set up and we hope that it will make strenuous efforts to trace the ill-gotten gains of those who deal in drugs. We have already signed a number of agreements, including an agreement with the United States and Canada. It is a reciprocal agreement that follows on the powers that we took under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986. Under that Act we can take advantage of the powers in one another's courts to trace the money of drugs dealers with a view to confiscating it, if they have been convicted. We can also trace the many actions that have led to the laundering of drugs money, which thereby obscures where that money went. The two agreements that we have already signed will help us to achieve these aims. We are now negotiating with about 20 other countries, so we should be very much better able to take action against those who deal in this terrible traffic.

Mr. A. E. P. Duffy (Sheffield, Attercliffe): May I follow the question of the right hon. Lady's hon. Friend the Member for Horsham (Sir P. Hordern) and ask, in view of the deterioration in the outlook for inflation and the importance that she clearly attaches to short-term interest rate increases as a means of countering it, why did she not at least encourage a discussion on co-ordinating interest rate increases?

The Prime Minister: The way in which we are dealing with international co-ordination is by each of us running our economies in a sound way; by each of us having as our main objective keeping inflation down; by each of us trying to reduce deficits—we have already reduced ours to nil; by keeping our spending on a thoroughly sound basis; and by structural changes, among them tax incentives for enterprise. Japan, for example, certainly needs to increase demand in its domestic economy. That is a structural change.

We have a framework of running our economies soundly. We all agree that the most important thing is to keep inflation down. One can use several instruments to achieve that, but one does not make the instrument the objective. The instrument is a method of reaching another objective—the objective being to keep inflation down.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): While I warmly applaud the amazingly positive contribution that the Prime Minister made to the summit in Toronto, not least on terrorism and drugs, and the example which the United Kingdom has set in dealing with inflation, does my right hon. Friend accept that some people are concerned about interest rates, not least because they penalise industry, which is, of course, a major source of wealth creation? Is she not therefore concerned that increasing interest rates in the United Kingdom could cause a problem for United Kingdom industry?

The Prime Minister: As I said at Question Time, a resurgence of inflation would cause a far bigger problem for industry. That would be the very worst thing, so the objective must be to keep inflation down.

With regard to the actual increase in costs when interest rates rise by a small amount, again, as I have said, a 1 per cent. increase in wage rates costs industry four times as much as a 1 per cent. increase in interest rates. As those who complain now have seen average increases in wages and salaries of 8·5 per cent. during the past year, it ill behoves them to complain about an interest rate increase of 0·5 per cent.

Mr. James Molyneaux (Lagan Valley): While writing off the loans will not undo the damage that they have done to the economic and social fabric of Third-world countries, will the Prime Minister assure us that everything will be done to prevent such mistakes being repeated?

The Prime Minister: I have described what we are trying to do to help Third-world countries. It was agreed, and we are trying to ensure, that the burden is shared equally between the member countries at the summit. That will be done through the Paris Club. We shall do our level best to ensure that those countries get on a sound economic footing because that is the condition for both writing off their aid loans and for helping them with trade loans. The right hon. Gentleman will be pleased by the degree of co-operation between the Western industrialised countries and the poorest countries of sub-Saharan Africa.

Mr. Timothy Raison (Aylesbury): May I warmly congratulate my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the section in the economic declaration on the debt of the poorest countries? What timetable does my right hon. Friend envisage for the implementation of the new measures to relieve debt? Will she confirm that, if there are additional resource requirements from the United Kingdom, they will be provided from funds which are additional to the current aid programme rather than out of it?

The Prime Minister: As my right hon. Friend is aware, the current aid programme is increasing in real terms, although I know that he would like more. The length of time that it will take will, to some extent, depend on the recipient countries themselves because they will have to agree programmes with the IMF. There is no point in giving them extra help if they are just going to continue with the ways that have got them into a great deal of trouble. Some are agreeing their programmes, and some have already agreed them, and it will be quicker to operate with those.

We shall then try to undertake to negotiate—we are prepared to negotiate quickly in the Paris Club—and that should not take a great deal of time. However, if the methods that separate countries choose are very varied, obviously they have to make a coherent whole. It might take some months to make certain that that happens.

Miss Joan Lestor (Eccles): Bearing in mind that the initiative to turn loans into grants was started by Dame Judith Hart, as she then was, in this House, those of us who follow this matter closely are pleased that, at last, the Government have taken it on. In the communiqué that the Prime Minister read out, she said that Third-world countries

"need trade as much as they need aid."

But the reverse is equally true. Therefore, was she not somewhat embarrassed to find that Britain's aid is at an all-time low at 0·28 per cent., which places us one from the bottom of the countries which were meeting at Toronto? I would have thought that that would have been discussed, since the leader in the Financial Times is highly critical of the promises yet to become deeds.

The Prime Minister: When the last Labour Government had a higher percentage of their gross national product in aid, they had, of course, a very much lower gross national product. I sometimes feel that Opposition Members would prefer a lower GNP even though that meant lower aid and lower social services. The amount involved now is a slightly lower percentage of GNP, but we are steadily increasing aid. This year's budget, excluding aid administration, is £1·3 billion, which is scheduled to increase by £70 million next year and by more the following year. Those figures represent an increase over expenditure in 1987-88 of some 4 per cent. in real terms.

Mr. David Howell (Guildford): While I warmly congratulate my right hon. Friend on her role in a most successful summit and, through her, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor on his excellent initiative for solving the debt problem, does she recall that it was the failure of communication between some of the Finance Ministers of the Western countries back in October last year that led to the collapse of confidence and the great stock market crash? Will she at least reassure us that, at the Toronto summit, better communication on interest rate policy and monetary policy was maintained and that she will use her considerable influence in the future to see that that co-ordination is further strengthened?

The Prime Minister: First, I thank my right hon. Friend for what he said about the debt problem. May I acknowledge—I did not do so when answering the previous question, and I should have done—that the Labour Government started to change from aid loans to aid grants, and also wrote off a considerable amount of debt. We are continuing that policy most successfully.

I do not believe that the October stock exchange crash was caused by a failure of communication between Governments; rather, it was the fundamentally sound policies that we had been following through previous years that enabled the world to ride that sudden loss of price. I remember that my right hon. Friend the Chancellor, myself and many other people—either Heads of Government or Finance Ministers—went on television and radio to say that there was no justification for fear in the future because our policies were fundamentally sound. It was that soundness that enabled us to ride the storm. That soundness has come partly from meeting at economic summits when we have discussed such matters together and from getting all our policies on a sound basis.

Mr. James Lamond (Oldham, Central and Royton): When the Prime Minister's speech writers were preparing her for the meeting, did they remind her of her remarks at Question Time on 8 December 1983 when she was rather angry with the United States because it was running what she described as which caused high interest rates, which were extremely damaging to this country? She said that she was very glad indeed that this country had a surplus of £1·2 billion, which placed us in a strong position, and she forecast that the United states would be in trouble within 12 months. Did she say that all again to President Reagan, bearing in mind that the situation is very much worse now than it was five years ago?

The Prime Minister: The United States budget deficit is now falling and the trade deficit is also falling, which is good news for us all.

Mr. Quentin Davies (Stamford and Spalding): During the years that my right hon. Friend has been attending summits, has she noted a growing admiration for the economic performance of, and an increased national confidence in, this country? Is she aware that throughout the world she is being given a large measure of credit for that remarkable turnround?

The Prime Minister: Yes, my right hon. Friend the present Chancellor and the former Chancellor and I are constantly congratulated on the way in which Britain's economy has turned around from being the lowest growth economy in Europe to being the highest and one of the strongest. That is because of the sound policies that we have been pursuing. I know that the Opposition do not like them, but they are sound policies and most countries are now following them.

Dr. Dafydd Elis Thomas (Meirionnydd Nant Conwy): May I ask the Prime Minister to turn to the third of her economic topics, which has not yet been covered, that of agriculture? Can she explain where she stands as between the United States Administration, which is calling for agricultural support and protection to be rapidly phased out, and the European Community, which is rather more protective both of protection and of the social objectives of agricultural support?

The Prime Minister: We made it clear that we did not think it possible in any way to abolish all agricultural subsidies in 10 years, or by the end of this century. Therefore, the hon. Gentleman will have noted from the communiqué that negotiators are to set a long-term framework for steadily reducing those subsidies, which are great distortions to trade. Therefore, short-term steps may be taken with those long-term steps in view.

The hon. Gentleman will know that we took steps in Europe to try to deal with the agricultural problem, and that has reduced surpluses substantially. Nevertheless, he will also know that the subsidies are really very high indeed. We must measure them by the figure for the producer subsidy equivalent—which attempts to look at all kinds of protection, whether subsidies or other forms—and compare them by taking the proportion of income that farmers receive from the subsidy. This shows that, in 1986, the OECD farmer on average received 47 per cent. of his income from some sort of support; in Japan it was 75 per cent.; in the EC it was still 49 per cent.; in Canada it was 46 per cent.; and in the United States it was 35 per cent. Obviously, those figures are such that we still have quite a long way to go to reduce them to a rate that farmers can take.

Sir Ian Lloyd (Havant): Shortly before the summit convened, the Congressional Office of Technology Assessment published a most detailed, devastating and convincing report on the so-called star wars programme. Was that subject raised at the summit? Did the President attempt to deal with those attacks on his strategic programme? Was my right hon. Friend convinced by the replies? Is there not a great danger that acceptance of 100 per cent. defence against a missile attack will lead to a massive and dangerous diversion of Western defence resources?

The Prime Minister: We did not, in fact, discuss that report, but I do not know of anyone who would think that the strategic defence initiative would or could be a 100 per cent. defence. I do not know anyone who believes that. It would be a substantial defence, just as a defence weapon has been developed against every attack weapon throughout history. I view the SDI in that light.

We also learned a great deal of new technology and science from pursuing that programme. I think that my hon. Friend will be the first to agree that being ahead on technology and scientific research is a very powerful deterrent indeed. In fact, if that had not been the case in the last war, other people might have had the atomic weapon first.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): When the right hon. Lady was discussing terrorism with President Reagan, did it cross her mind that perhaps she should have raised with President Reagan the attitude of the United States towards supporting the Contras and the other anti-democratic forces, Governments and reactionary dictatorships that the United States supports? Has it ever crossed her mind that she has a double standard in quite rightly saying that there should be freedom in the Soviet Union, but never asking President Reagan where he and his Government stand in relation to freedom in other countries where they constantly interfere in the internal affairs of people who are struggling for their rights?

The Prime Minister: I seem to remember answering a similar question from the hon. Gentleman just a few days ago, and pointing out clearly that we would not like to live under a Government such as that of the Sandinistas. It hardly equates with his idea of democracy, or mine.

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): Does my right hon. Friend agree that anyone who has seen famine in sub-Saharan Africa will warmly applaud the initiative that she and our right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer have taken? Will she make it clear that creditor countries not only expect debtor nations to negotiate some of their economic policies in line with discussions with the IMF, but also spend a large proportion of their GNP on arms to prosecute border disputes and pointless civil wars against each other, all of which could be much better resolved by peaceful negotiation? A lot less of the budget in sub-Saharan Africa should go on wasting money on arms, but should be spent on people.

The Prime Minister: I understand precisely what my hon. Friend is saying. But he will be the first to know that countries such as Mozambique face a very real problem from RENAMO. Obviously, that country must have the means to resist the attacks from those people, for which they need a certain amount of training and help. We have to consider it case by case.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths (Edinburgh, South): Is the Prime Minister aware that people in this country from all backgrounds and supporting all political parties view with great distress her statement on Third-world aid—[HON. MEMBERS: "No."] But facts are chiels which winna ding. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. Gentleman be brief, please?

Mr. Griffiths: The facts are there. They were given in the Financial Times today——

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. Gentleman ask a question?

Mr. Griffiths: Is the Prime Minister aware that, for the first time in history, overseas aid from the Government has dropped below 0·3 per cent.—to 0·28 per cent.? In the past year it has dropped by 2·8 per cent. in sterling terms and by 7 per cent. in volume terms, and many people from all backgrounds are concerned that the Government do not care about poverty in the Third world and are doing nothing to alleviate it.

The Prime Minister: In absolute terms, our aid programme remains substantial. It is the seventh largest among Western donors. It is of high quality, it is focused on the poorest countries and it is now growing in real terms. This year's budget is 5·7 per cent. up on last year in cash terms, and the programme is now scheduled to grow by some 4 per cent. in real terms compared with expenditure in 1987-88.

I have not found anything like the reception that the hon. Gentleman mentioned; quite the contrary. Most people are extremely pleased with my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's initiative and sad that it took such a long time for other countries to take it up. Not only is it writing off the loans; it is giving substantial help to some of the trade debtors. We are doing so alongside the six other members of the summit seven. That is a very good advance, and it is far greater than anything previously achieved.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. As a matter of balance, I shall call one Government Member.

Mr. John Browne (Winchester): Does my right hon. Friend accept that one of the greatest challenges now facing Western leaders is the management of strategic peace in an era when the peace of deterrence may be replaced by the peace of detente? Will she accept that one result of the summit is that the risk that any perceived weakness or division on our part, leading to war is now greatly reduced and there is a much better chance that peace will be maintained as a result?

The Prime Minister: I think that there is a clear political communiqué, that we must keep up our guard. Weakness is the most dangerous and damaging thing and would put our liberty in jeopardy. We can be highly co-operative with the Soviet Union and what it is trying to do in changing its whole system and giving more personal responsibility and initiative precisely because our defence will be strong and liberty will not be in danger.

Business of the House

4.4 pm

The Lord President of the Council and Leader of the House of Commons (Mr. John Wakeham): With permission, Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement about the business for next week:

MONDAY 27 JUNE—Completion of remaining stages of the Housing Bill.

TUESDAY 28 JUNE—Completion of remaining stages of the Criminal Justice Bill [Lords].

WEDNESDAY 29 JUNE—Motion on the Northern Ireland Act 1974 (Interim Period Extension) Order.

Motion on the Appropriation (No. 2) (Northern Ireland) Order.

THURSDAY 30 JUNE—There will be a debate on foreign affairs, on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

FRIDAY 1 JULY—There will be a debate on the White Paper on fair employment in Northern Ireland (Cm. 380), on a motion for the Adjournment of the House.

MONDAY 4 JULY—Estimates Day (2nd Allotted Day). There will be debates on defence (class I, vote 1), housing, England (class IX, vote 1), and local environmental and planning services, etc. England (class X, vote 1). Details will be given in the Official Report.

[Estimates to be considered on Monday 4 July:

Class I, vote 1 (Defence: personnel costs etc of the armed forces and civilians, stores, supplies and miscellaneous services), so far as it relates to the defence requirement for merchant shipping and civil aircraft:

Class IX, vote 1 (Housing, England), so far as it relates to the provision of bed and breakfast accommodation for the homeless;

Class X, vote 1 (Local environmental and planning services etc, England), so far as it relates to grants to local authorities for the provision of gipsy sites.]

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): I thank the Lord President for his statement, and in particular for the extra day that he has conceded for debate on the Housing Bill without a guillotine and the extra day that he has conceded for debate on the Criminal Justice Bill without a guillotine. Perhaps on reflection the Leader of the House will accept that a bit more give and a bit less take by the Government would lead to more orderly debate and fewer Government Back Benchers being kept up all night.

May I also thank the right hon. Gentleman for giving us the long-promised debate on foreign affairs. Long before he promised a debate on foreign affairs, the Lord President said that he would use his best endeavours to get his hon. Friends to serve on the Scottish Affairs Select Committee. When does he expect them to do their duty? Does he think that there is no chance of Tory Members being prepared to carry out that task? Surely if the Scottish economy were doing as well as the Prime Minister and the hon. Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) claim, Tory Members would be flocking to the colours to serve on that Committee.

Will the Leader of the House tell us when we can expect an announcement about the Government's proposals to reform, and we hope curtail, the Official Secrets Act 1911? No doubt the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Allason) will have a personal interest in that.

Finally, as a number of Opposition Members have pointed out, as the proportion of our national output devoted to overseas aid has sunk to an all-time low, can we expect an early debate on that shameful record, or, better still, a statement that British aid will be increased?

Mr. Wakeham: The hon. Gentleman asked me questions about housing and foreign affairs. I shall answer his questions in the order in which they were asked. First, in regard to the Housing Bill, I do not believe that there is any point in rehearsing the events of last week. I am sure that it is better to proceed without a guillotine, and I am pleased that it has been possible to reach another agreement through the usual channels that the Housing Bill should be completed at a reasonable hour on Monday.

I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for what he said about the foreign affairs debate which I promised would be arranged in the near future and I am glad that I have been able to fit it in.

With regard to the Scottish Affairs Select Committee, as I said last week, I regret that the proposals that I put to the Opposition parties for the establishment of the Select Committee did not prove acceptable to them. I saw the Chairman of the Committee of Selection yesterday. I understand that he is to discuss with his colleagues whether there is any generally acceptable basis on which to set up that Select Committee.

I have said that the Government are proposing to publish a White Paper about official secrets, and that we shall be arranging a debate. I stand by what I have said on that subject.

I do not believe that the hon. Gentleman was listening to what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said about overseas aid. She said that the amount of overseas aid is increasing. Perhaps that could be fitted into the foreign affairs debate next week.

Sir Bernard Braine (Castle Point): My right hon. Friend will recall that the recent statement by the Prime Minister contrasted the orderly and civilised city of Toronto with what is happening in many towns and cities in Britain. No doubt she was aware that Canada is outstanding among nations in its alcohol control policies. Should we not have a debate before the House rises for the summer recess about the growing problem in Britain and the steps that are being taken by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's departmental committee to resolve it?

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise the long and well-known interest of my right hon. Friend and others in these matters. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is considering the issues urgently. We shall need to look at all the problems, including the difficulties the police have had in tackling them and the contribution made by heavy drinking. On the role of alcohol, I have asked for a report to be made at the next meeting of the ministerial group on alcohol misuse, which I chair.

Mr. James Wallace (Orkney and Shetland): I would not expect the right hon. Gentleman to divulge the detail of the conversation he had with the Chairman of the Committee of Selection, but was anything said that gave him any hope that when the Chairman meets the Committee next week there will be some positive move forward in setting up the Scottish Select Committee? If that proves impossible, which would be regrettable, will he consider the proposal in early-day motion 1270 about setting up a Joint Committee of both Houses where he could use his noble Friends in another place to fill the gaps that his hon. Friends in this House are unwilling to fill?

[Mr. James Wallace]

[That this House notes with dismay the lack of sufficient Conservative honourable Members willing to accept nomination to the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs, thereby frustrating the setting up of the Committee; expresses its belief in the need for a Committee with powers to call for persons and papers to ensure effective scrutiny of the Scottish Office and Scottish public affairs; and calls on the Leader of the House urgently to initiate procedures which will lead to the early constitution of a Joint Committee of both Houses.]

Mr. Wakeham: That would not be an adequate solution. There are considerable difficulties, but I prefer to say nothing until I have heard from the Chairman of the Committee of Selection.

Sir John Stokes (Halesowen and Stourbridge): There are rumours in the press about what is happening or not happening in the Committee discussing the televising of the proceedings of the House. Will there be an official statement before the recess?

Mr. Wakeham: I cannot imagine that there will be an official statement before the recess. However, that depends when the recess comes. The Committee, which I chair, has a difficult job to do. We are working hard and it is not surprising that, from time to time, there are problems to overcome. I believe that we will overcome them and report to the House in due course.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): Will the Leader of the House turn his attention to a growing menace in the House —the private Bill procedure? Is he aware that that has been corrupted during the past two or three years? There used to be a system whereby it was easy to distinguish between private Bills and Government Bills. Now that distinction has become blurred with the Associated British Ports Bills, the North Killingholme Cargo Terminal Bill and the Felixstowe Dock and Railway Bill. Surely it is high time that was stopped. To some extent, it would be in his interest, in terms of getting Government business through the House, to ensure that we do not clog up the private Bill system. Bills used to be geographically constrained but now affect every hon. Member. Private Bill Committees used to be manned by people who had no interest in those Bills. Yet the Bills before the House tonight involve South African coal with blood on it being imported into this country. Surely there is no hon. Member who, in some way or another, is not affected politically by that Bill. It is time it was stopped.

Mr. Wakeham: I do not know whether the hon. Gentleman's question was supposed to be helpful. As he knows, the Joint Committee on Private Bill Procedure is currently considering that matter and other matters to do with private Bills. I understand that it intends to publish a report before the end of the Session. It would be better to wait until the House has received the report before considering how best to proceed.

Mr. Tim Devlin (Stockton, South): As our noble Friend the Lord Chancellor has announced the results of the Cleveland child abuse inquiry, not in the other place but in another country, will my right hon. Friend take urgent steps to ensure that copies of the report are given to Cleveland Members of Parliament for their consideration and that a statement is made at an early opportunity?

Mr. Wakeham: I am not sure where my hon. Friend obtains his information. I can assure him that the speech given in Lisbon by my noble Friend the Lord Chancellor was delivered to the organisers of the conference some time in March, long before the Cleveland report was produced. The speech had to be there in advance so that it could be translated into Portuguese and other languages. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services has said that the report to which my hon. Friend referred will be published early in July. I see no reason to bring that date forward.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): Can we have a statement or debate on the shameful Government decision to reverse their proposed ban on imports of fur from animals caught in the cruel steel-jaw trap? Was that proposal reversed to smooth the Prime Minister's way in Toronto or to sell submarines? Does it not show that the Prime Minister would sell her own grandmother to further the arms race?

Mr. Wakeham: If we can strip the fuzz from the hon. Gentleman's question, which is a serious one in spite of the way in which he put it, I can tell him that my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade is considering the matter and that an announcement will be made in due course.

Mr. Nicholas Soames (Crawley): Will my right hon. Friend consider allowing the House time to debate some of the conditions in the prison service in view of the intransigent and irresponsible behaviour of a hard core of prison officers and the difficulty that the Government appear to be having in running the prison service? Is it not time we had a debate so that we can discuss those matters at some length?

Mr. Wakeham: I appreciate my hon. Friend's rightly held concern about our prisons. As he will realise, this is a particularly busy time of year and I cannot promise a debate in the near future.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing (Moray): Will the Leader of the House accept that the continuing wishy-washy statements about problems in setting up the Scottish Select Committee will be greeted with dismay by Opposition Members and those in Scotland? Is it not appalling that more than one year after the general election the Scottish Select Committee is the only Select Committee that is not up and working? Will he give a straight yes or no answer: will there be a Scottish Select Committee this Session?

Mr. Wakeham: I regret it, too, and if the Opposition parties had accepted my proposals we could have made some progress. I have told the House before—I stand by it—that there will be a debate, whether or not the Select Committee is formed.

Mr. Spencer Batiste (Elmet): My right hon. Friend will be aware of the importance to the Yorkshire and Humberside region of rapid rail transit through the Channel tunnel when it is opened and the number of issues that have arisen that are causing doubt and concern relating to customs and immigration clearance on the trains to locations at inland depots. Can my right hon. Friend offer an opportunity to the House to debate those important issues in time so that decisions can follow?

Mr. Wakeham: I answered a question on that subject a week or so ago. It is an important subject but this is a busy time of year and I regret that I cannot immediately find time for a debate. I shall bear it in mind.

Mr. Ray Powell (Ogmore): Will the Leader of the House consider allowing a debate next week on early-day motion 792?

[That this House deplores the increasing frequency of grandparents being deprived of the right of access to, care, fostering or adoption of their grandchildren; notes with alarm the attitude of some social services employees; and calls on Her Majesty's Government to introduce early legislation to give legal rights to grandparents providing immediate right of access before children are taken into care and the right to be present or legally represented at any official hearing or inquiry regarding future access to, care, fostering and adoption of their grandchild or grandchildren.]

This is one of the rare occasions since 1922 when an early-day motion has been signed by a majority of hon. Members. Surely it deserves time for debate. If not, the Bill that I presented to the House should be supported by the Government, given that the majority of hon. Members have declared their support for it. Will he ensure that time is given for those matters to be debated or accept my proposals as a fait accompli and introduce legislation?

Mr. Wakeham: I cannot promise the hon. Gentleman time, but I hope that these remarks may encourage him. Grandparents may already be made parties to adoption, and further rights are provided in amending legislation to be implemented this year. The Government will give careful consideration to the early-day motion's proposals when framing the child care and family services legislation for which the 1987 White Paper provides.

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): Did my right hon. Friend tell the House that agreement had been reached with the Opposition that the Housing Bill would be completed at a "reasonable hour on Monday"? What did he mean by the words "reasonable hour"? How confident is he that any agreement reached will be honoured?

Mr. Wakeham: I chose my words carefully because they had been agreed through the usual channels. I do not know that I should go wider, but, to me, a "reasonable hour on Monday" means on Monday.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Andrew Faulds.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): What about me?

Mr. Andrew Faulds (Warley, East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There are so many intrusive little worms around the Chamber. To revert to a matter that was raised earlier by the hon. and gallant Member for Halesowen and Stourbridge (Sir J. Stokes), for whom we all have great affection——

Mr. Tony Banks: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Faulds: I am speaking for myself, and for most of my colleagues. Will the Leader of the House, as Chairman of the Select Committee on the Televising of Proceedings of the House, be prepared to consider another demonstration, much better publicised than was the previous one, at which not only the members of the Select Committee but most of the Members of the House can see what the imposition, the intrusion of lights and cameras in this Chamber will do to their comfort, to their convenience and to their conduct in the proceedings of the House? Does he not agree that it is quite disgraceful that on the majority of the Members of the House, who do not know what is going to hit them, there should be imposed this range of inconveniences without their knowing what is going to happen?

Mr. Wakeham: I shall certainly refer the hon. Gentleman's helpful suggestion to the Select Committee, which will consider it. I am glad to see the hon. Gentleman looking so well. He was looking a little tired last week—perhaps he has had a little more sleep.

Mr. Geoffrey Dickens (Littleborough and Saddleworth): Will the Leader of the House consider an early debate on the broad question of law and order? A debate would serve to remind the House, prison officers and criminals that imprisonment is meant to reform, deter and punish. During the debate we could also explore why the Home Office keeps casting its beady eye on good industrial sites for new prisons, such as in Oldham and Rochdale in my own constituency. We build North sea oil rigs the size of hotels, so why can we not put prisoners out to sea, on islands? Let prisoners understand that no longer are we prepared to tolerate misbehaviour. If we do that, we shall come to grips with law and order.

Mr. Wakeham: If my hon. Friend can keep a secret, I may tell him that there is to be a debate on the Criminal Justice Bill next Tuesday. Provided he does not make too long a speech and gets it in order, he may be able to make some of his points on that occasion.

Mr. Max Madden (Bradford, West): Will the Leader of the House arrange for the Secretary of State for Social Services to make an early statement next week about the non-help that is available to those people losing more than £2·50 a week in housing benefit? Bradford council's computer records identified more than 17,000 people in that city who could claim such help, but on asking the Glasgow unit for 17,000 application forms the council was told that it could be given only 1,000. Advice agencies have asked for 100 forms but have been given only one copy. The Glasgow unit is in shambolic disarray. Will the Leader of the House arrange for the Secretary of State to tell the House what he is doing to ensure that all those who are eligible for help receive it?

Mr. Wakeham: I do not accept the hon. Gentleman's comments. The transitional scheme has been designed for people above income support level, because those on income support will continue receiving maximum housing benefit. If the hon. Gentleman has any particular cases in mind, he should bring them to the attention of DHSS Ministers for them to study.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): Will my right hon. Friend arrange an early debate on gipsies and travellers, so that the House may consider their behaviour around the country, and especially in my constituency, where large groups of them have been terrorising residents with their dogs and their behaviour—particularly at

[Mr. Harry Greenway]

Perivale hospital and Brentside high school? Something must be done on both a national and local basis, particularly in areas where sites have been properly designated and where gipsies should not camp illegally anyway.

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise that this is a problem—particularly in constituencies such as my hon. Friend's and my own. I cannot promise an early debate but perhaps my hon. Friend could arrange an Adjournment debate on the subject.

Mr. D. N. Campbell-Savours (Workington): May I ask the Leader of the House a very helpful question? Is he aware that on Monday week I shall have an Adjournment debate on the valuation of Richmond yard? Will he ensure that the Minister who answers that debate at the Dispatch Box is the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope), the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment?

Mr. Wakeham: I cannot guarantee that, but I recognise the strength of the hon. Gentleman's point.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: He is the one who told the lies.

Mr. Wakeham: I totally reject that allegation, and I should have thought that the hon. Gentleman would be the first to withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unhappily, I was distracted, but I understand that the hon. Gentleman may have used unparliamentary language. Will he please withdraw his comment?

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I will withdraw it pending the debate a week on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Please withdraw it now, absolutely.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: I withdraw it for the purposes of today's proceedings.

Mr. Wakeham: I shall do my best to ensure that my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, who has excellent answers to the questions which have been raised, personally answers that debate.

Miss Ann Widdecombe (Maidstone): My right hon. Friend is aware that in every week's business there are two opportunities for private Members' legislation under the ten-minute Bill procedure. He will also be aware that the procedures governing the obtaining of ten-minute Bills are enshrined in tradition rather than in informal procedures. Uncertainty about the procedures involved has recently given cause for confusion, although it was averted because of the grace and tact of my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard). Will my right hon. Friend avoid such problems in the future by referring the matter to the Select Committee on Procedure, and arrange for interim negotiations through the usual channels?

Mr. Wakeham: My hon. Friend raises a point that I know is a cause for concern. The matters that the Select Committee on Procedure choose to consider are for it to select according to their importance. I recognise the strength of my hon. Friend's comments and shall speak to my right hon. Friend the Patronage Secretary to ascertain whether anything can be done. My hon. Friend will know that there has been trouble over the years. The first occasion was when my hon. Friend the Member for Tiverton (Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop) got there first and secured the whole of the ten-minute Bill allocation for one year.

Mr. George Galloway (Glasgow, Hillhead): The Leader of the House has been playing cat and mouse with this Chamber long enough in respect of the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs. What started out looking like honest endeavours are now sounding very much like weasel words. Will the right hon. Gentleman deal straight with the people of Scotland? Will he accept the momentous consequences of an admission that a governing party cannot muster five hon. Members to man a Select Committee overseeing the Government's own administration of a country that is a part of this state?

Mr. Wakeham: The hon. Gentleman has not long been a Member, and had he been here longer he would know that there were many times when his own party, when in government, did not set up a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs. My answer is straightforward: if the hon. Gentleman and his hon. Friends will accept the very reasonable offer I made, we can set up the Select Committee. If they do not, there will be difficulties and I shall proceed in the way I suggested.

Sir Anthony Grant (Cambridgeshire, South-West): Has my right hon. Friend any news for the House about limitations on the length of speeches, which is becoming necessary in view of the current prevalence of verbal diarrhoea on both sides of the House?

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise the strength of my hon. Friend's point, and I hope that I can manage to arrange a debate before the summer recess. I cannot guarantee it, but I shall do my best.

Mr. William McKelvey (Kilmarnock and Loudoun): The right hon. Gentleman's answers to my colleagues about the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs cause grave offence to me, and to many other hon. Members. The offer that he made was certainly not a fair one. The truth of the matter—and it is the truth that we should be seeking—is that the Government are either unwilling or unable to find Back Benchers to man the Select Committee.

If the right hon. Gentleman wishes to retain an honourable position on the matter, as he is unable or unwilling to put names forward to assist in the setting up of the Committee, will he at least attempt to assist financially the committee that has been set up today by the Opposition parties to fill the vacuum created by the lack of Government inspiration, or at least give us a Clerk to run the Committee?

Mr. Wakeham: I must say that the hon. Gentleman is less than fair. It was I who moved a motion two nights ago to give substantial financial assistance to the Opposition, in spite of misgivings by some of my hon. Friends. I reckon that I have played my part.

I recognise the strength of feeling about the Scottish Select Committee on both sides of the House. I have shown the way forward, and I have said that there will be a debate which will give everyone an opportunity to express points of view. That is the way in which we proceed in the House, and I believe that it is the right way to proceed.

Mr. Michael Brown (Brigg and Cleethorpes): In view of the heavy listed programme of Government legislation this year, does my right hon. Friend not agree that the business statement for next week is an excellent one? Does he also accept that there is a heavy listed programme for the Brigg and Cleethorpes constituency? In view of that, will he consider allowing me to make a business statement to indicate progress on that legislative programme so that I can invite my hon. Friends to support the Associated British Ports (No. 2) Bill tonight?

Mr. Wakeham: I congratulate my hon. Friend on his ingenuity. I have announced the Government's business; private business is a matter for private Members.

Mr. Greville Janner (Leicester, West): Will there be an early debate on the shortage of policemen on the beat, having regard to the Adjournment debate on Monday night in which the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) will be raising the question of policing in Leicestershire? Is the right hon. Gentleman aware that, with his customary courtesy, the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton has informed his colleagues from Leicestershire? I believe that, for once, everyone is united in concern and outrage at the growth of crime and the refusal of the Home Secretary to permit additional police as requested by the chief constable. However, it is clearly impossible for that concern to be developed in the space of a brief Adjournment debate. Can we have a major opportunity to develop it in future?

Mr. Nicholas Winterton (Macclesfield): That will come up in the debate on the Criminal Justice Bill on Tuesday.

Mr. Wakeham: My hon. Friend has pointed out that that will come up on Tuesday, but I recognise the strength of what the hon. and learned Gentleman is saying. I confirm that my hon. Friend the Member for Rutland and Melton (Mr. Latham) has obtained the Adjournment debate on Monday and that the Minister will reply. I feel that that is the best way forward at present.

Mr. Ivor Stanbrook (Orpington): Will my right hon. Friend ask his right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and his right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry not to make any more statements about broadcasting policy until they have had the opportunity to read the report on the subject by the Select Committee on Home Affairs, which is to be published shortly after long and deep study? Should not a report of a Select Committee of the House, which it is known will be published shortly, receive some respect in the timing of statements of policy by Ministers?

Mr. Wakeham: I am sure that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will study the report of the Home Affairs Select Committee with great interest. I understand that my right hon. Friend is intending to publish a White Paper on broadcasting later in the year, and there will clearly be an opportunity for a debate on broadcasting matters, although it will not be in the immediate future.

Mr. John McAllion (Dundee, East): The right hon. Gentleman's statements about the Scottish Select Committee can hardly be described as incredibly clear, but it is clearly incredible that on the eve of the anniversary of the Queen's Speech the Government are as yet unable to set up such a Committee because of Conservative Members' lack of willingness to take part.

Will the right hon. Gentleman say when he will give time for this important matter to be debated on the Floor of the House? Or are we to assume that he expects us to discuss Scottish affairs in next Thursday's foreign affairs debate?

Mr. Wakeham: The content of speeches is not a matter for me. I have made it clear, however, that whether or not the Scottish Select Committee is set up there will be a debate in the House. I have not announced it in today's business statement and I cannot anticipate future business statements, but I shall arrange it through the usual channels.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: Will my right hon. Friend arrange for a Minister from the Department of Trade and Industry to come to the House to make a statement on the draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, or arrange for a short debate on the subject? The matter is of immense concern in many constituencies up and down the country, not least to the ad hoc committee of 21 companies located in many constituencies represented by hon. Members on both sides of the House.

This will affect employment and investment. In some instances, it could also affect the future viability of a number of companies in the fabrics sector of the textile industry. Will my right hon. Friend arrange either for a Minister to make a statement or for a short debate in the near future?

Mr. Wakeham: I recognise the importance of the subject, and the interest that my hon. Friend has taken in it. There is a possibility that we shall be able to do something in the near future, but I shall look into the matter with my right hon. and noble Friend and write to my hon. Friend.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I say again to hon. Members that we have an important Welsh debate after this. It is only a half-day debate, and I ask hon. Members who are about to be called to be brief.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): My question arises out of Home Office questions. The House has, or should have, a degree of accountability from the Independent Broadcasting Authority. Could we have an early debate on the way in which the IBA is carrying out its duties under the Independent Broadcasting Authority Act 1973? For instance, it is allowing theatrical feature films to be chopped up by advertising, and many classic and much-cherished films are being arbitrarily broken up. They were not intended by their authors, directors or photographers to have any breaks, let alone the arbitrary "natural" breaks imposed by television. Is it not time that we had a debate on this important topic to stop the IBA from allowing the television companies to get away with breaking the law? Surely, for a law-abiding party, that is an important issue.

Mr. Wakeham: I do not even know whether the hon. Gentleman's allegations are correct. I do not imagine for a minute that the IBA has broken the law. However, the hon. Gentleman has raised a subject which he feels is important, and it is legitimate for him to raise it in the House. I wish that I could be more encouraging than to say that I hope that there will be a debate later in the year when the White Paper on broadcasting has been published. That is the best that I can do at present, but I shall keep the matter in mind.

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): May we have a debate on the threat that is posed to the ancient right of petitioning without duress, which is our citizens' most ancient tradition and right? That threat has been posed by the Minister of State, Scottish Office—the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Lang)—who has said that petitions against the poll tax can be used by poll tax registrars to place people on the poll tax register. That can be found in column 851 of Hansard for 28 March 1988. Either we should debate it, or it should be disowned in a statement from the right hon. Gentleman or from the Minister concerned.

Mr. Wakeham: I am not sure that I follow the hon. Gentleman's logic. It seems to me that citizens of this country are either liable for the community charge or they are not. I should have thought that all of us on both sides of the House would want to encourage compliance with the law, whatever our views about a particular law.

Mr. Tony Banks: May we have an early debate on the legalisation of soft drugs? Is it not a fact that the real concern about drugs is the criminality associated with the trade in the illegal use of drugs rather than the damage to health? If it were health, of course, the Government would be banning the use of alcohol, which causes far more damage to health than the use of soft drugs. So can we have that early debate, because if we can talk about decriminalising drug use surely we can do something about the criminal activity that now surrounds it?

Mr. Wakeham: I should like to be able to say that I share the hon. Gentleman's view on drugs, but I do not; I believe that there are very serious problems. But I recognise the force of some of the points that he made and I wish that I could offer him an early debate. But I cannot, although it is a very important subject.

Mr. Tam Dalyell (Linlithgow): May we have an inkling of what the Government's thinking is on their legislation on official secrecy? Connected with that, what line is the Leader of the House taking on early-day motions 1241 and 1242, which have to do with the ethics of civil servants?

[That this House notes with interest but not surprise that the former Permanent Under Secretary at the Ministry of Defence, Sir Frank Cooper, has stated in relation to the leaking of the Solicitor General's letter during the Westland affair that 'there is political secrecy and genuine secrecy' and that as regards the real malefactors in this episode 'only a percentage of the truth ever came out.'.]

[That this House notes with interest that the former Secretary of State for Defence, the Right honourable Member for Henley is reported in the St. Edward's Oxford School Chronicle as having admitted privately to pupils and masters that the source of the leak of the Solicitor General's letter during the Westland Affair was the Prime Minister; and calls upon the Right honourable Member for Henley to be as forthcoming to the House as he has been in private.]

Mr. Wakeham: I have nothing to say on those early-day motions, as I have indicated many times before. With regard to official secrets, the position is that there will be a White Paper and a debate, and I have indicated probable timetables for them.

Mr. John Home Robertson (East Lothian): Is it not dishonest humbug for anyone to suggest that anyone other than the Government is responsible for the fact that there is no Select Committee on Scottish Affairs yet? Is the right hon. Gentleman not stringing the House along when he keeps coming back for business questions week after week and month after month telling us about more meetings with the Chairman of the Committee of Selection? Since he is talking about a deal, would he like to give us some idea of which of his hon. Friends have said that they would be willing to sit on such a Committee?

Mr. Wakeham: The nomination of hon. Members for a Select Committee is a matter for the Chairman of the Committee of Selection, not for me. The hon. Gentleman probably knows more about humbug than I do.

Mr. Roy Hughes (Newport, East): May I call the attention of the Leader of the House to my early-day motion 1271 which is supported by numerous hon. Members representing Welsh constituencies?

[That this House queries the answer to Parliamentary Question number 17 given by the Secretary of State for the Environment on Wednesday 22nd June to the honourable Member for Newport East that the number of houses vacant in the town of Newport was 130 with 68 families homeless; compares this with the information publicly announced by the Chief Housing Officer of Newport Borough Council that on average for the year 1987-88 up to 31st March, 130 properties were vacant throughout the borough with 661 people declared homeless in that period and eligible for assistance under the Homeless Persons Act, 389 of that number assisted and advised, a further 272 housed or referred to housing associations, and that overall there was a 24 per cent. increase in the number of homeless in the borough in 1987-88; and calls for an early explanation and statement from the Secretary of State about the misleading figures given to the House.]

Will the right hon. Gentleman appreciate that even the Secretary of State for the Environment might welcome the opportunity to make a statement to the House concerning the answer he gave to question No. 17 yesterday on the matter of homelessness in Newport?

Mr. Wakeham: My right hon. Friend accepts that he should have made it clear that the figure that he quoted of 68 households accepted as homeless related to the period January to March 1988. Since the chief housing officer has confirmed that on average there were 130 dwellings vacant in the borough during 1987-88, I stand by my hon. Friend's statement that there is no problem.

STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS, &c.

Mr. Speaker: With leave of the House, I propose to put together the Questions on the seven motions on the statutory instruments—that is, items Nos. 1 to 7 on the Order Paper.

That the Local Government (Direct Labour Organisations) (Competition) (Scotland) Amendment Regulations 1988 (S.I., 1988, No. 956) be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.

That the draft Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.

That the draft Environmental Effects (Scotland) Regulations 1988 be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.

That the draft Environmental Assessment (Salmon Farming in Marine Waters) Regulations 1988 be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.

That the draft Environmental Assessment (Afforestation) Regulations 1988 be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.

That the draft Land Drainage Improvement Works (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.

That the draft Highways (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988 be referred to a Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments, &c.—[Mr. Alan Howarth.]

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY DOCUMENTS

Ordered,

That European Community Documents Nos. 6878/86 and 7946/87 on roadworthiness testing be referred to a Standing Committee on European Community Documents.—[Mr. Alan Howarth.]

Mr. Madden: I am very sorry to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I will not detain the House, but it relates directly to the point made by my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) about petitions presented to Parliament and referred to Ministers. Will you look into the situation very carefully and instruct Ministers and Departments that they should not divulge the names and addresses on such petitions to any third party?

Mr. Speaker: No names are ever disclosed by the Clerks or by Departments of the House to anyone else.

Opposition Day

[15TH ALLOTTED DAY]

Wales (Deprivation and Disadvantage)

Mr. Speaker: In view of the late start to this debate, I make a special plea for brief contributions. A large number of hon. Members wish to take part. I must announce to the House that I have selected the amendment in the name of the Prime Minister.

4.47 pm

Mr. Alan Williams (Swansea, West): I beg to move,

That this House deplores the unacceptable levels of deprivation and disadvantage in Wales; condemns those Government policies which either have failed to address these problems adequately or which have exacerbated them, like the recent changes in social security and housing benefit; and expresses growing concern at the widening gap between Wales and the South East of England.

I can well understand that perhaps commentators outside Wales might wonder why we need to have a debate in this form because they have been told by press release, which is a Welsh Office form of nouveau cuisine, that we live in "booming Wales" and that our battling Secretary of State has "won" enormous increases in Government money for Wales; that we have a Japanese industrial invasion that is leading to the establishment of a "little Tokyo on the edge of Cardiff".

We have to live with the real Wales. We have to face the reality that, welcome as all the Japanese employment is —and much of it was there in the 1970s—there are still only 5,000 people working for Japanese companies. We have to recognise that booming Wales as it is seen from Worcester is still the second poorest region of the United Kingdom. We have to see a Wales in which the increased public expenditure battled for so nobly by our Secretary of State was revealed by the Treasury to be a cut of £54 million over the next three years.

Mr. Dafydd Wigley (Caernarfon): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Williams: I have only just started a very short debate, but all right.

Mr. Wigley: It is to help the point that he is making. Is he aware that in my own constituency in Aberavon 43 per cent. of households have an income of less than £80 a week and this winter there was 24 per cent. unemployment? That is a reflection of what we are talking about.

Mr. Williams: I am, and I shall be dealing with that sort of issue a little later. I congratulate the hon. Gentleman on his ingenuity in managing to get into the debate so early.

Welsh Opposition Members represent 30 of the 38 constituencies in Wales. We see another side of Wales, which the Secretary of State is somewhat reluctant to talk about; a Wales where "Unfit . . . homes set a billion-plus poser";

a Wales in which

"Social-security changes leave 6,000 without school dinners";

a Wales that is

"The land that falls below average";

a Wales in which

"Sickness adds up to 41m lost days"

each year; a Wales in which a cancer survey "shows Wales at top"; a Wales in which we have what are described as "debts of despair", and people snared in the benefits poverty trap. This is the Wales that we see.

The symptoms of the north-south divide are well known to all hon. Members, and we have them all. The symptoms of deprivation are multifaceted, and we in Wales have all those too.

It is worth remembering, as we start this debate, that the circumstances that I have described prevail after nine years of a Government who have had nearly £100,000 million of resources from the North sea to help deal with social problems, if they wished to use them for that purpose.

The deprivation that we see in Wales, and which the Secretary of State prefers not to see, is represented by the increase of 28 per cent. in homelessness and by the record council house waiting list. But these are statistics, figures. We see that deprivation every weekend as faces across a desk in our surgeries in our constituencies as desperate people come to us in search of a solution to their problems. We have to explain to them that one of the reasons why they are on that waiting list is that we have had the lowest number of council houses built in Wales in the last 40 years. Only one house was built, in the last year for which there are complete records, for every five built in the last year of the Labour Administration.

We can hold out little hope. Having dropped to such appallingly low levels of construction of desperately needed houses, Wales is now told by the Government that it is to have no more council house building. People come to our surgeries and tell us that they live in one of the 400,000 houses in Wales that are in need of repair, or in one of the 70,000 houses that are unfit, or one of the 40,000 houses that lack amenities. We tell them that the Government have spent more money on house repairs, but they are spending only half as much on housing now as was being spent when they came to office.

The Government have said that the repair programme in Wales would cost £1·25 billion at 1986 prices. By a remarkable coincidence, the amount of underspend in the time between when we left office and now is also £1·25 billion. So £1·25 billion is needed for repairs, and there has been an underspend of £1·25 billion by the Government.

Mr. Gwilym Jones (Cardiff, North) rose——

Mr. Williams: I would normally give way, but this is a restricted debate.

No hon. Member on either side of the House condones violence, but the Government should ask themselves why there is such deep bitterness about the fact that outsiders can come into Wales and pay more for second homes than our people can afford for their family homes.

Deprivation is also evident in the inadequate provision for health in Wales. If any area deserves priority, it is health—we have the highest sickness rates in the United Kingdom. We have the highest incidence of cancer, heart disease and chest illness, yet the Secretary of State, far from giving health priority, has abandoned the inflation-plus formula used by his predecessor and produced an even more meagre formula. It will mean that over the next three years there will be an average increase in spending of only 1 per cent. If the right hon. Gentleman had only sustained the level of spending of his predecessor, £30 million more would have been spent on health in Wales this year. That would have been enough to provide the Mid-Glamorgan hospital that is needed. Over the next three years, it would have provided £190 million more for Wales—all this if the Secretary of State had merely kept spending at his predecessor's rate of increase, which itself led to the health statistics that I gave at the start.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I am sure the right hon. Gentleman wants to be fair about the changing performance in health in Wales. If the same level of spending increases when he was last a Minister had been maintained since 1979, how many fewer patients would now be treated in hospitals in Wales?

Mr. Williams: The hon. Gentleman must know that we went through these statistics with the Secretary of State when he tried to cook the books in the Welsh Grand Committee. Under the Labour Government the annual rate of increase was 4·6 per cent.; under the Conservative Administration it has been 4·1 per cent. Under the plans the Secretary of State has for the next three years the rate will average 1 per cent. So waiting lists would have been far shorter than they are now. The right hon. Gentleman attaches no priority to health needs——

Mr. Keith Raffan (Delyn): Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Williams: This is a short debate and no doubt the hon. Gentleman has put his name down to speak in it. Three times when he has made personal attacks on me he has refused to observe the conventions of the House by allowing me to intervene. I do not mind attacks; we are used to them here. But the hon. Gentleman ignored the rules of the House, and I shall extend to him the same discourtesy that he extended to me.

Wales now has the lowest number of hospital beds since the National Health Service was set up 40 years ago. Last year the number of urgent cases on waiting lists fell by only 12. No doubt the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State at the Department of Health and Social Security, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie), would tell our constituents on waiting lists and on income support to give up one of their holidays to have a private operation.

Only Northern Ireland has a lower income per head than Wales. We have the highest proportion of men on low pay of all the regions in Great Britain. Half our work force is on wages below the Council of Europe decency threshold. It is not surprising, therefore, that we have the highest proportion of people on social security benefits in Britain. Week after week we see in our surgeries the disastrous effects of the changes in housing benefit and income support on people who are already in desperate need. The problem is typified by the social fund. In the midst of budgetary largesse for those who have plenty, the Government have turned to the DHSS, which was giving £18 million in grants in Wales, and allowed it to give only £3 million. They cut down on the most desperately needy and give to those least in need.

In the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), one of the worst areas of deprivation in the country, 61 per cent. of households have incomes of less than £80 per week—three out of five. Yet the social fund has been cut there by almost £500,000 this year. It has been cut by about £500,000 in Merthyr and by £500,000 in Rhondda—the heartlands of the valleys initiative.

It is there that the people live whom the Government proclaim they want to help. The Government tell them that their need is so desperate that they will have to take out loans. At least they have something to look forward to; they are scheduled to be the worst hit victims of the Government's new purchase tax. As the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) said, it would be wrong to think that deprivation is confined to a limited urban area of Wales. It is just as much a rural phenomenon. The difference in the countryside is that the deprivation is dispersed and so goes unnoticed. It is easy in the pretty countryside to forget the inadequacy of the facilities in its cottages and houses.

It is worth noting that in Wales, the land of low pay, people in the county of Gwynedd are the lowest paid of all. There is evidence of deprivation in our unemployment figures. Unemployment is still double the level it was when the Government came to office. In the past four years, ours is the only region in which employment has fallen. We still have 125,000 fewer people in work, or in self-employment, than when the Government came to office—on the Secretary of State's own figures. The figures for the past month showed that only Scotland had a lower rate of change in unemployment in the past year than Wales.

As a result, we have lost high-paid jobs, only to have them replaced by low-paid, part-time and seasonal jobs. Earnings in retailing, hotels and catering in Wales are the lowest in the United Kingdom. That led the Low Pay Unit to make an ominous observation about the future of Wales:

"Poverty that in recent years has been caused by unemployment is gradually being displaced by poverty caused by low pay."

When people find work, more and more of them are getting low-paid, part-time work. A recent report has shown that the quality of employment in Wales is falling. We are getting the low value-added, low-paid, low-skilled, part-time work which will be easily engineered out within the next decade, while the high-tech, high-paid, high value-added work is staying in England on the other side of the Severn bridge along the M4. That led one trade union leader to speak of Wales as a coolie economy.

In his statement on the valleys initiative the Secretary of State boasted about the number of jobs which would be created by regional development grants, but that is the very policy which, against our advice, he has chosen to abandon. It is an interesting commentary on what industry thinks of his changed policy that more than one third of the applications for regional development grant in the last 15 months were made in the last month before abolition. Industry made it clear that it preferred the old grant sytem to the new.

Wales is developing a coolie economy. Let us contrast that with the position in south-east England where the average pay for men is over £2,500 more than the average pay for men in Wales; for women pay in south-east England is £1,500 higher. There are more second incomes in south-east England because more women work. Pay in the south-east is rising 25 per cent. faster than pay in Wales. So it is not just that there is a gap; as we have observed before from this side of the House, it is a widening gap.

Another concealed change has taken place. It has gone largely unnoticed, yet its impact on the relative fortunes of the south of England and Wales is massive. That change has virtually obliterated the effect of regional policy. I refer to the year-by-year tax changes that have been introduced by the Government. The tax changes have been geared to help the top income earners who are paying £24,000 million less in tax than would have been paid on the 1978-79 format when the Government came to office. Over half the people who benefit live in the south-east of England. Therefore, in comparison to the small amount of money which has been devoted to industrial generation and to refurbishment in Wales, there has been a massive cash infusion of over £12,000 million into purchasing power in the south-east.

Sir Anthony Meyer (Clwyd, North-West): Would the right hon. Gentleman care to compare housing costs in the south-east of England with costs in Wales? Will he also say a word about the problems, special to Wales, of derelict land clearance, which do not figure in the south-east? Can he tell us what progress has been made on that in Wales?

Mr. Williams: I understand the hon. Gentleman's point, but he has got it the wrong way round. Housing prices are very much demand-dictated. Because there is a finite quantity of housing, as virtually no new houses are being built, the high income reflects itself in high mortgage capacity, which reflects itself in higher prices. So there is a spiral. Indeed, in addition to the income gap between Wales and the south-east, there is an enormous capital gap so that people can hardly contemplate moving from Wales to England because of the differential in housing prices. [Interruption.] Muttering from a sedentary position is not constructive.

With £12,000 million extra spending power going into the south of England, it is small wonder that that area has been able to generate internal growth and internal demand in a way that we have not been able to do in Wales. Instead of the injection of purchasing power, Wales has lost £750 million in the cut in support for councils. By the end of the planning period, on the figures which the Secretary of State has given, we shall have lost £1,000 million in regional aid. While so much money has been going to the south of England, investment in Wales has been cut.

It is little wonder that we have a regional divide. The enormous cash infusion in the south of England is in addition to the natural advantage which that area has through easy access to the home counties, the London market and the EEC. That advantage will be greater when the Channel tunnel is built.

Perhaps the press will now begin to understand why Welsh Members fear for the future of Wales. This is only part of the story. My hon. Friends can give many more examples. Surely the picture of deprivation suggests that, with all the resources of the North sea available to them, the Government should have injected more resources into Wales. Might we not have expected that there would have been more when the Secretary of State boasted in The Observer that he received every penny he asked for? The money was there, and he got all he asked for. Contrary to the much-publicised growth in spending that he has boasted about in his press releases, we find from the Treasury figures that Government spending in Wales will fall by £54 million over the next three years.

[Mr. Williams]

So far as we can gather, even the valleys initiative will have to be paid for not by the cash-rich Government but by the communities which are represented on this side of the House. The expenditure will have to come out of the already depleted budget which the Secretary of State has for Wales. There is to be no new money; if there is any, we can be excused for not recognising it. When the statement was made, my hon. Friends and I asked the Secretary of State time after time how much new money there would be. We never got an answer. I tabled a question to the Treasury for answer on Tuesday. For some odd reason I got a holding answer and I still have not received the figure.

We are with the Secretary of State in one respect. We, too, want hope for the people of Wales, but we want real hope for all the people. We do not want a slick, hyped-up public relations mirage.

5.7 pm

The Secretary of State for Wales (Mr. Peter Walker): I beg to move, to leave out from "House" to the end of the Question and to add instead thereof:

"welcomes the success and achievements of Government policies and initiatives in Wales which have raised living standards, improved housing and environmental conditions and set Wales firmly on the path of economic growth and prosperity.".

When the motion was tabled, there was considerable speculation in the House about the reason for it. Was it because Opposition Members were so thrilled with the right hon. Gentleman's performance last week on the valleys initiative that they said, "We must have more of these brilliant parliamentary performances"? Or was it because the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) went to the Leader of the Opposition and said, "The awful thing is that I find it difficult when there is a lot of good news. Therefore, can you give me a Supply day when I can pour out all the bad elements"? Or was it because the right hon. Gentleman was being contacted by members of the Select Committee which was considering overseas aid, who said, "We must warn you that there is a great deal more inward investment in Wales"?

I regret to say that, when the right hon. Member for Swansea, West said that he and his colleagues represented 24 of the 38 Welsh Members, we counted and only 12 were there at the time. That was the extent of their rallying instinct to support the right hon. Gentleman. If he has problems in the future, may I suggest that he has lunch with The Independent rather than a debate in the House.

First, I should like to comment on the adverse effects of a speech like his on the prospects of attracting firms from the south-east and inward investment into Wales. Perhaps that is his objective. Perhaps he is rather disturbed by the growth of the Welsh economy into a free enterprise economy. In 1985, £158 million of overseas investment came into Wales; in 1986, £176 million and in 1987, £239 million.

A further piece of good news which I know will delight the right hon. Gentleman is that, whereas the figure was £239 million last year, in the first five months of this year £248 million of inward investment came into Wales. Obviously the investors had not read his speeches; they would not have ventured into the type of country he described.

The right hon. Gentleman talks about unemployment. I hope that he realises that Wales alone of the regions has had reductions in unemployment for every one of the past 24 months. Unemployment is 43,000 lower than it was two years ago. [HON. MEMBERS: "What about 1979?"] Again, the proportion of unemployed is lower than it was in 1979.

Let us compare that with the performance of the Government in which the right hon. Gentleman was a junior Minister. What were they doing to encourage diversity in the Welsh economy? They carried out their share of pit closures, as we all know. Consider the past 24 years. During 11 years of Labour Governments, 46 pits were closed. In 13 years of Tory Governments, we have closed 23 pits. They closed their share of pits but they did not do their share of creating the new factory letting that was required. In the last three years of the Labour Government 660,000 sq ft of factory flooring was let per year, on average. In the next three years 1·5 million sq ft of factories per year will be let. The figures have constantly been far higher than under the Labour Government.

The right hon. Member for Swansea, West failed to mention the clearance of derelict land in his speech about the dreadful state of Wales. In the valleys and in every part of Wales, house improvements are taking place, derelict land is being cleared and new factories are going up. He did not mention any of that. In the last three years of the Labour Government 208 acres of derelict land were cleared a year. Under this Government, the figure is 730 acres a year. In the next three years, the figure will be 1,267 acres a year—a sixfold increase on the Labour Government's clearance programme.

The urban development programme has been doubled. I do not understand how the right hon. Gentleman can say how appalling it is that 430 firms applied for regional development grants in the past three months. When we announced the changes, we said categorically that one of the good effects of moving from regional development grants to regional selective assistance and the use of the Welsh Development Agency was that it would massively accelerate the flow of investment into Wales. We have had 3,300 applications, involving £2 billion of investment and 59,000 new jobs. Yet the right hon. Gentleman decries our policy and says what a rotten policy it is.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan (Cardiff, West): The Secretary of State would sell world war 3 as a great opportunity for the Welsh undertaking profession. Suppose that the principle is sound and that one abolishes regional development grants to flush out more applications. Would it not have been far wiser to abolish the system over five years so that the beneficial effects would have come not over three months but over five years?

Mr. Walker: We abolished on the basis that, if approval was given, there would be a further two years to put in the investment. I am delighted that a lot of firms have decided to take advantage of the arrangements. The only party that is not delighted about the economic growth of Wales is the Labour party. It is pining for the old Welsh economy that was totally dependent on two or three major nationalised companies and upon the direct labour departments of local government. The Labour party does not know how to handle the diversified free enterprise economy that is coming to Wales. Opposition Members do not want to see that change because all their old political patronage is disappearing as a result.

Comparisons have been made with the south-east of England. I do not know what has happened to that older Front Bench spokesman, the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes). Perhaps he has been deposed. I am sorry that we shall not hear one of his jocular contributions this afternoon. The Opposition motion mentions the south-east. Opposition Members might have applauded the whole range of major institutions—both Government and free enterprise institutions—that is now moving from the south-east to Wales.

Mr. Morgan: One.

Mr. Walker: I could mention a whole range. If the hon. Gentleman thinks that it is only one, I suppose that he will oppose the 4·5 million sq ft of office space that is to go up in Cardiff. There is the Chemical bank, the Trustee Savings bank and a whole range—[Interruption.]

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Order. I deplore the constant comments coming at the Secretary of State from a sedentary position. What the Secretary of State has to say may be unpopular in some quarters, but he will be heard in the House.

Mr. Walker: It is only unpopular with the parliamentary Labour party. It is very popular with the people of Wales. The Company Registration Office is also involved in the move.

I thought that the height of remarkable political courage on the right hon. Gentleman's part—he was only a junior Minister in his Government—was shown when he dealt with health. We are spending 42 per cent. more in real terms on health in Wales than the last Labour Government thought was necessary. He mentioned waiting lists. Does he not remember the last 12 months of the Labour Government, when waiting lists for in-patients in Wales went up by 17·9 per cent. in a year? Does he remember what was happening to the disabled? We have had to improve benefits for the disabled in Wales by 70 per cent. in real terms.

Perhaps the right hon. Gentleman was pining for the nurses. When Labour left office, the pay of staff nurses was such that, if we had merely adjusted it for inflation, staff nurses would be getting £43 a week less than they now receive. We have 22 per cent. more general practitioners, 27 per cent. more dentists and the Health Service in Wales is treating many more in-patients and out-patients than were even envisaged by the Labour Government.

Mr. Allan Rogers (Rhondda): Given that the right hon. Gentleman proposes to spend so much money on health in Wales, will he tell me when we are likely to have a new hospital in the Rhondda area?

Mr. Walker: This year alone we are spending 10 per cent. more on Wales. Obviously, we shall consider carefully the applications from health authorities. With a Government who have increased real terms expenditure on health by 42 per cent., one can be much more optimistic for the future than one could be under the last Labour Government, who had a pretty dreadful record.

I have some more good news, so cheer up, folks. It affects a matter which is particularly worrying the hon. Members for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) and for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd) who constantly tell us about the very bad housing conditions in the valleys. The Labour party says that it is deeply distressed about bad housing and houses without basic amenities. What did the Opposition do when they were in office? In five years they improved only 44,000 of the many houses in Wales in need of amenities. Over the past nine years, we have improved 161,000 houses. When the Labour party—which so cares about the image of Wales, poverty and bad housing—left office after five years in power, there were 133,000 houses without basic amenities. After nine years of Tory Government, that figure has reduced to 37,000. Look how happy Labour Members are about that news; look at their smiling faces! The Labour party depicts itself as the party that cares about housing, but that has not been borne out by what has happened.

Much inward investment is being made in the Welsh economy. New company registrations increased more in Wales last year than in any other region. Further, more training is being given, the Cardiff bay development is to take place, we have the valleys initiative, and the development of the A55 in north Wales has opened up the area to much activity. Over the next few years we shall have a Welsh economy that will depend not on nationalisation but the free-enterprise economy.

I hope that hon. Members will not entirely blame the right hon. Member for Swansea, West for his speech. Much of it was written by Huw Edwards, who is a lecturer in social policy at Manchester polytechnic. I am sure that he is very knowledgeable about the subject.

Over the past few years, earnings in Wales have begun to increase. I know that the right hon. Member for Swansea, West will be delighted to hear that, according to the latest available figures, the average earnings per adult in West Glamorgan are greater than those in the east or west midlands. I hope that that trend will continue. The right hon. Gentleman might also like to remind himself of the dramatic change that has taken place with earnings. Average male adult earnings in Wales in April 1979 were £97 a week, but in April 1987 they were £204 a week. It is likely, with the increases of the past year, that they are nearer £220 a week. In April 1979, after five years of glorious Socialism, average female earnings were £61 a week, but in April 1987 they were £137. The average has increased from £87 a week to £183 a week.

Whether it be in housing, health or derelict land, this Government are succeeding as never before. I hope that that will not result in any damage to the reputation of the right hon. Member for Swansea, West. I am the president of the "right hon. Member for Swansea, West must stay" campaign.

5.22 pm

Mr. Donald Coleman (Neath): I was interested and amused by the rising temperature of the Secretary of State's speech. I may keep the level of my speech down, although from time to time my voice has been known to be rather loud.

Where one finds bad housing, high levels of unemployment and poor health, one finds people who are deprived and disadvantaged. The result is that their standard of living suffers. Whether Conservative Members like it or not, all those conditions are found in the valleys of south Wales. If the Secretary of State ever held a surgery in Wales, he would discover those conditions for himself. Perhaps he is aware of them; if not, what is the reason for the valleys initiative? I think that somebody may have been telling him that there is a need for something to be done in the valleys.

Last week the right hon. Gentleman spoke in Llandudno of his plans to make it easier for poorer council tenants to buy their homes, which we welcome. Even before I became the Member for Neath, councils in my constituency operated a policy of sales, provided they did not interfere with the right of people to be housed decently.

I remind the right hon. Gentleman that the level of owner-occupation in Wales has always been the highest in the United Kingdom. My hon. Friend the Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) recently told the House that the majority of his constituents were house owners. That is common throughout the valley constituencies.

In case the Conservative party believes that it is the promoter of something new in Wales, I must make it clear that it is not. By its past opposition to leasehold enfranchisement, it stands as a significant opponent of home ownership in Wales. Conservative Members must understand that the high level of home ownership in south Wales and its valleys was the means of escape from the tyranny of those who, in the past, found their political home and ideology in the Conservative party.

Welcome as the right hon. Gentleman's housing plans are to assist the poorer of our council tenants to buy their homes, the people of Wales would have been afforded more satisfaction if he had said in his Llandudno speech that he was concerned about the dramatic rise in homelessness that has taken place in Wales since the Government took office in 1979. The right hon. Gentleman may well counter my argument by saying that the figure for homelessness in Neath has decreased, but Lliw Valley also forms part of my constituency, and there the position shows my complaint about homelessness to be valid.

We would have liked to hear the right hon. Gentleman say that he will make use of the funds that have accrued from council house sales, and that a programme of new build by local authorities and housing associations in Wales was to be embarked on. If that were to happen, those bodies could begin to wipe out the problem of homelessness, which is rising so rapidly in Wales under this Government.

Poverty and low pay are major problems in Wales, especially in the south Wales valley communities. Government figures show that one fifth of the population in Wales has an income below or on the poverty line. Although recently there has been a decrease in unemployment in Wales, which we welcome, the problems of unemployment and low-paid jobs are still greater than in any other region of the United Kingdom.

My involvement in the work of the Council of Europe —a body that deserves more attention than it gets in the House—is known to the House. It describes the decency threshold for earnings as £135 a week, yet in Wales nearly half our work force earn less than £135 a week.

On Monday this week, The Times carried an article entitled "Breadwinners of Wales" by Sally Brompton, who has put her finger on the malaise in the Welsh valleys, which Conservative Members have shown by their behaviour they wish to ignore. In Wales, working women outnumber working men, a situation which has had a mixed welcome in Wales as a means of providing a livelihood. A Cardiff Business School survey shows that there are now 558,000 women in full-time or part-time employment, compared with 484,000 men in the Welsh valleys. That does not and will not create confidence among those who live in the valleys, especially as the women workers find themselves on low wages. One in four women working full time in Wales earns less than £100 a week, half the national average.

Last week, the Secretary of State announced his valleys initiative. He did a good marketing job and, in a way, it is a shame to attempt to reveal that it is not all that it seems. In The Times article we read:

> "Despite last week's pledge by Peter Walker, Secretary of State for Wales, to create 25,000 jobs in the valleys over the next three years, for the men who live there it is all a long way ahead. 'There's no real big employer coming to Wales, is there?' surmises 53-year-old Leslie Hall, secretary of the Ruperra Club."

It is no good the Secretary of State trying to pass off as something new, in a good marketing job, schemes which often, when looked at carefully, turn out to be nothing more than a regurgitation of schemes already announced, and sometimes completed and financed. The right hon. Gentleman must be aware—if he is not, he has much to learn about Welsh people—that many people in Wales like Mr. Leslie Hall are capable of analysing and assessing the worth of such plans and schemes.

In my constituency, the inclusion of the missing link of the A465 Aberdulais to Glyn-neath road in the three-year programme gives us nothing. My hon. Friend the Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones), when he was the Minister in the Welsh Office responsible for roads, gave us the year 1990. That time scale was confirmed by the predecessor of the present Secretary of State, the noble Lord Crickhowell, during a meeting with him in the Welsh Office some three or four years ago. The scheme is mentioned in some information I have had from West Glamorgan county council. It is listed in the Welsh Office publication "Roads for Wales in the 1990s and Beyond" and is to be carried out in the mid-term period before 1990.

At periodic intervals, the Welsh Office produces a review of the trunk road programme. It produced such reviews in 1980, 1983 and 1985. In the current publication, issued in 1985 and entitled "Roads in Wales 1985", the scheme was listed in table 4 among the schemes expected to start between January 1988 and December 1990, so the A465 road announced in the glossy book is nothing new. If the Secretary of State had said that building of the road would start next year and that he would assist by making known what progress had been made, this would have been something for us to welcome and a real initiative.

Again in my constituency, no one is going to persuade the people living in the Dulais valley that a new era is dawning, with schemes such as the removal of the Onllwyn aerial ropeway. It will mean nothing to them because they knew about it years ago, long before the Secretary of State became interested in Wales. The same can be said about the health centre mentioned for Gwaun-cae-Gurwen. That idea was accepted by the West Glamorgan district health authority and the community council. It was to involve money from British Coal. All this was way back in 1983-84, when Gwaun-cae-Gurwen became part of the Neath constituency.

A new dawn for the valleys of my constituency would have come from plans for opencast mining operations more compatible for those who have to suffer from the problems that such operations cause. The Secretary of State and his party have much more to do before there is any chance of our not pointing out to them problems that we know exist in our valleys and that sustain the charge that Wales suffers deprivation and devastation.

Mr. Keith Raffan (Delyn): The economic and industrial transformation, of which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State spoke, is no more evident than in north-east Wales. Over the past two years, unemployment in my constituency has fallen faster than in any other constituency in the Principality—by 36·4 per cent. It has fallen not just in my constituency but in the two neighbouring constituencies of Alyn and Deeside and Wrexham. I am sorry, but not surprised, that the hon. Members for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) and for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) are not present. Perhaps they realise how weak is the Opposition's argument in support of the motion.

A crucial aspect in the decline in unemployment in my constituency is that male unemployment is falling as fast as female unemployment. Wage levels have been rising for the past two to three years. House prices are rising too, but what is so bad in that? The hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Coleman) talked about the experience at his surgeries, as did the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams).

I remember an experience at two of my surgeries about three years ago. Two constituents came to see me because they had lost their jobs. There was massive structural unemployment in Delyn, with the decline in the steel industry and the closure of Courtaulds. Both constituents had been forced to take jobs far away, one in Dumfries and the other in Weston-super-Mare. Neither had been able to sell his house because the market was non-existent. By now, the value of their houses has greatly increased and I am glad to be able to say that neither has sold up because they have returned to work in the constituency.

North-east Wales is an area on the rise, as the chief executive for Delyn borough council, John Packer, said yesterday. That economic growth is making possible the public expenditure on communications, health, housing and education. The problems which we are experiencing are those of success—shortage of land for housing and for industrial and commercial development and the shortage of certain skills among the work force.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State so rightly said, the dualling of the A55 expressway, driving that road through north Wales, is transforming the area's economy. It has made my constituency accessible to commuters travelling to Chester and the north-west—to the Wirral and other parts of Lancashire—and enabled my industrialists and business men to transport their goods more easily. That arterial road is making possible the economic miracle in north-east Wales.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales would be surprised if I did not mention the need for a link road between the A55 and the A548 to increase accessibility to the Greenfield business park and to the Delyn enterprise zone. As my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, North-West (Sir A. Meyer) is here, I am sure that he will be grateful when I mention also the need for a link road to the towns of Rhyl and Prestatyn to ensure that those important tourists centres are not bypassed now that north-west Wales is so much more easily accessible. These link roads are not, however, primarily matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. I only wish that local authorities such as Clwyd county council would respond more speedily and effectively to the initiatives that the Welsh Office is taking.

Many housing statistics have been thrown around this evening. It might help if I referred to the experience in my constituency. I am enormously proud to represent the borough of Delyn. It has more sheltered accommodation units—1,300—than any other local authority in the Principality. That is 35 per cent. of the total number of sheltered accommodation units in Clwyd. Delyn has just introduced a care alarm system that will help many elderly people to stay in their own homes, which, in the past, they were unable to do.

There has also been a massive renovation of council houses; 300 of them have been completely renovated. A local house condition survey is being undertaken, with the object of targeting future improvement programmes. The waiting time for repairs has been cut drastically. Improved services for tenants have been introduced, including newsletters that have led to a beneficial dialogue between tenants and the borough council.

The borough council also has an ambitious scheme to replace all the doors and windows in every council house in the borough within three years with UPVC double-glazing. That may seem to some people to be a minor improvement, but it will have a dramatic downward impact on rents. UPVC double glazing will not only improve insulation but will require no maintenance for up to 30 years.

Mr. Win Griffiths (Bridgend): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Raffan: I shall gladly give way when I have finished this point. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will allow me to do that.

What is just as important is that the council has cleared the backlog of home improvements grants. I am now delighted to give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Griffiths: Is the hon. Gentleman able to say how much the Delyn borough council asked for from the Welsh Office to allow this housing improvement to take place? Is he able to compare that capital allocation with the borough of Ogwr? It put in a claim for £13·5 million to be spent on housing but its total capital allocation was fractionally over £5 million. The Secretary of State for Wales says that far more money urgently needs to be allocated to improving housing in our valley communities.

Mr. Raffan: The improvement of which I spoke, the double glazing of windows and doors, was largely financed by the raising of rents. Rents had not been raised substantially for a significant period. Perhaps other councils should take a similar initiative. Why should they always look to the Welsh Office? Why do they not look to themselves? I respond with that question, which I hope will not be treated as a rhetorical one. I look forward to hearing the answer from the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths).

I refer also to the improved facilities for rural communities in my borough. The hon. Member for Bridgend will be delighted to hear that that improvement has been helped directly by the Welsh Office. As part of its drive towards strengthening traditional village life in my constituency, the borough council plans to ensure that every single village—there are more than 30 of them—will have, within three years, its own sports field, children's play area and community hall.

The Opposition have been rabbiting on about health, but when they were in office they lamentably failed to improve health care, particularly during their last year in office when waiting lists soared. The right hon. Member for Swansea, West was a member of that Government. I do not know how he has the gall to come to the House and attack this side. Why did he not resign then? He might as well resign now before he is pushed by certain members of his own party. We know what is going on. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales was in his usual generous and benign mood this afternoon because he failed to mention the real reason for this debate: that the hon. Member for Newport, East (Mr. Hughes) went to see the Leader of the Opposition and told him what he thought about the right hon. Member for Swansea, West. The Western Mail said that the hon. Member for Newport, East was "thoroughly dissatisfied" with the way the Welsh portfolio was being handled.

As for health care in my constituency, the Mold community hospital is brand new and of a revolutionary design. The Japanese and the Swedes have beaten a path to its door. That new hospital cost £1·7 million. The first phase of a fully fledged community hospital in Prestatyn has been completed at a cost of £247,927. As for Holywell, that was not left out. The Government remembered Holywell hospital. It has a brand new out-patients department and its wards have been upgraded. The Government have spent £120,976 on that hospital.

I admit—one has to concede something to the Opposition because they have put forward such paltry arguments today—that Flint had to wait until the beginning of this year. Earlier this year I had a meeting with the chairman of Clwyd health authority, who told me that the hospital would have to be closed for three months to remove asbestos. I asked him to take this opportunity to upgrade the wards and the medical facilities there. Within 48 hours he came back to me and said that the authority intended to spend £60,000 on upgrading wards and medical facilities. In the event, it spent over £100,000. So Flint has been upgraded as well.

Now we have four superb cottage and community hospitals in my constituency which we did not have when the Opposition were in power. Yes, my constituency was deprived and disadvantaged when that lot were in power and did nothing. What really upsets the Opposition is that we have done far more for their political heartland in the valleys than they ever did. That is what has really got their goat and upset them so much.

I do not want to be accused of missing anything out, so let me turn to education. Clwyd has a proud record, because only 6·7 per cent. of its pupils leave school without any qualifications, the lowest percentage in Wales. I do not deny that the number of pupils who leave school without any qualifications is still far higher than it should be, but we are bringing it down. I believe that the Education Reform Bill and the establishment of a national curriculum will help to raise standards. I am sure that the Chairman of the Select Committee will not mind if I say in the broadest terms that when we were in Japan one of the lessons that the Select Committee learnt was the importance of improving education and training. I am sure that we shall have something to say about that in our next report.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State had to bear the brunt of the Opposition's gloom and doom about the GCSE. They continually described the early introduction of that exam as being disastrous, but yesterday the Western Mail quoted the Welsh joint education council and school heads as saying:

> "We are delighted with the impact of the new examination. . . . It has all gone very well indeed . . . has so far proven a success far greater than anyone could have predicted."

That is what those who are at the sharp end of education are saying. They are not pontificating about it in total ignorance, as the Opposition do. They say that the GCSE is a blooming good exam and is going very well.

I hope that my right hon. Friend will forgive me if I play down a little his valleys initiative. One has to concede that the Opposition have also been taking the initiatives. There was the initiative of the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies), who rang up Mr. Chris Moncrieff at 1 am. We wish that that initiative had succeeded in depriving us of the Leader of the Opposition. There was also the initiative of the hon. Member for Newport, East who went to see his leader and said, to quote from the Western Mail —I am sure it is accurate; I always believe everything that is in the Western Mail—how "thoroughly dissatisfied" he was with the way the Welsh portfolio was being handled. It was quite clear who he was getting at. We all know who he meant, but I shall not embarrass him by mentioning his name.

There has been a sad contrast in recent days between the vision of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, the imaginative scale of his valleys initiative, and the petty small-minded sniping with which it has been met by the right hon. Member for Swansea, West. When the right hon. Gentleman was elevated to the position that he now holds as Shadow Secretary of State, we had hopes that he would replace the mediocrity of the performance of his predecessor on the Labour Front Bench with an opposition altogether sharper, more acute and more responsible. However, far from the right hon. Gentleman rising to that challenge, he has sunk beneath it. He has lost the respect of the Government side of the House and lost the support of his own. It would be no deprivation to Wales and no disadvantage to his own party if he were swept aside when the autumn comes.

5.50 pm

Mr. Richard Livsey (Brecon and Radnor): It is time to inject a certain amount of objectivity into this debate. However, the amount of time allocated to the debate is a disgrace because we need more time to discuss Welsh problems.

Wales as a whole—industrial Wales and rural Wales —is undoubtedly deprived, but it is right to acknowledge that the Secretary of State is at least trying to do something about it. My leader, prior to the general election, my hon. Friend the Member for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Howells), stated that the Secretary of State—any Secretary of State—must utilise to the full the facilities and the functions that are available to him. They are the Welsh Office and the bodies responsible for industry—the Welsh Development Agency, Mid-Wales Development, the Wales tourist board, the Welsh water authority and the other bodies that cover education, health, housing and agriculture. The present Secretary of State is trying to do that. He is clearly an interventionist in the Welsh economy. Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen must recognise the fact that they could be faced with an out and out monetarist who, in the common parlance of Kensington at the moment, would be as dry as dust. They might get an even dustier answer than the one that they got this afternoon from the present Secretary of State.

Therefore, I welcome the valleys initiative and especially the inclusion in it of Ystradgynlais in my constituency. However, I offer a word of caution. Although there is a promise in the valleys initiative of 25,000 jobs and of £500 million of public money, that must be set against what has happened in south Wales during the past 15 years. In 1973, 107,000 people were employed in the coal and steel industries, whereas in 1988 only 32,000 people are employed in coal and steel in south Wales. That is a drop of 75,000 people. Is the Secretary of State's cock-shy satisfactory in trying to create 25,000 jobs because that number represents only one third of the jobs that have been lost in the past 15 years? I do not believe that that is a good enough cock-shy. It is not enough to replace just one third of the jobs lost. The Secretary of State should look at that again and redraft his initiative into a more ambitious plan.

Mr. Rogers: The hon. Gentleman said that he welcomed the valleys initiative. Why?

Mr. Livsey: I welcome the valleys initiative because it at least recognises that there is a problem and makes the rest of Britain aware of it. I am not saying that the problem has been addressed adequately or properly, but at least the initiative is a step in the right direction. We would be churlish not to acknowledge that.

Unemployment and low pay suggest that we have lost a great deal of quality in our male employment, especially in mining and steel. With the loss of jobs in collieries which have closed recently, such as Abernant and Lady Windsor, miners who, in some instances, have earned a decent wage of up to £150 a week, can do so no longer. At the age of 35, or younger, many miners are losing their jobs. Those jobs are being replaced by work done by women and, although one welcomes female labour, it is paid at only roughly half the rate of male labour, and that is a disgrace. That major problem must be addressed in Wales because, though female labour is increasing, it is poorly paid, and that is unsatisfactory.

I draw the notice of the Welsh Office to the fact that the GDP per head in Wales is the lowest in Britain. It is £3,922 per person as against £5,335 in the south-east of England. Those figures come from the third periodic report of the EEC. The GDP of Wales is 88 per cent. of the EEC average. Until it equals the EEC average, none of us should rest.

In Wales, half the work force earns less than the amount that the EEC has decreed as being the decency threshold—that is £139 per week. Wales has a higher proportion of low pay among men than any other region of Britain, and one quarter of Welsh women earn less than £100 per week. There is much low pay in the NHS in Wales, especially among ancillary workers. Some NHS ancillary workers in my constituency earn only £60 per week.

I draw the House's attention to the plight of mid-Wales, which is the lowest paid area of the lowest paid region of Britain. The figures produced by the Cardiff Business School have already been given and I draw to the attention of the House the conclusion of the hon. Member for Neath (Mr. Coleman) that at present, in Wales, more women than men are in work. We should ponder that fact.

Obviously, I welcome the EEC's integrated operations award for mid-Wales and Mid-Wales Development of £108 million. However, that is a drop in the ocean compared with the needs of rural Wales. I regard it as only a starting point. We must look at the overall employment situation and the deprivation resulting from it. There are 56,000 people on short-term employment schemes and 211,000 in part-time employment. In total about 400,000 people are on short-term schemes, unemployed or in part-time work.

The situation was illustrated in an article in The Times of 20 June, which referred to the case of Mr. and Mrs. Mills. Mr. Mills lost his job and Mrs. Mills is now the family breadwinner. That account should be read by every hon. Member because it is symptomatic of what is happening in Wales at present. We need higher quality and better-paid jobs. We do not want screwdriver operations; we want high-quality jobs. We need more skills training and further education for all our 16 to 19-year-olds.

There has been a slump in agriculture in Wales. Many farm incomes are now £6,000 per annum, which is very low. If one relates that to the creamery closures that have taken place in Felinfach, Ceredigion, and Anglesey, one realises that we are facing severe problems. The slump in rural Wales must be set against the £40 million of farm capital grants that have been lost in Wales in the past two years.

However, I believe that it is in housing that the most serious deprivation occurs. Hon. Members have already referred to the problems in urban housing. I should like to draw the House's attention to the crisis in rural housing. One reads in today's Western Mail that in Wales as a whole 56,000 council houses have been sold since 1979, and only 10,000 have been built. That is a shortfall in the rented sector of 46,000 council houses. In my constituency of Brecon and Radnor, one third of our council houses have been sold and that is reflected in towns such as Brecon and Hay. Half the council houses in Crickhowell have been sold. Many of those houses are now being sold for the second time, to wealthy people from the south-east. They can pick up a council house for £30,000 and, having sold a two-bedroomed house in the south-east for £150,000, they are still left with £120,000.

How can young people in my constituency, many of them earning between £70 and £80 per week, possibly afford to buy a house of their own? The council housing stock is now so reduced that it is impossible to find a council house to rent. There are 1,000 people on the housing waiting list in Brecknock alone. Those people want to rent a house, but they cannot find one. It is a serious state of affairs.

The Secretary of State should put a limit on the various abuses that are taking place. We have the yuppification of the second home syndrome and the woopification of the early retirers, who are coming into Wales and making bonanza purchases. Those two abuses are undermining the local housing sector. I believe that there should be a limit on the percentage of second homes available in any Welsh district council area. A crash programme of council house and housing association building must take place to house local people. The rented sector should be restored so that there are more houses available for rent. That means that another 50,000 houses must be built to compensate for those that have been sold. I am not against the sale of council houses, but they must be replaced by a new stock of rented housing to meet the demand.

The Welsh Office must launch a major investigation into what is happening to rural housing. It must consider how low-paid local people can find a house to buy or rent. That is a major problem which must be addressed or the Welsh language and our rural communities will be undermined.

The Secretary of State is trying his best, through a public relations exercise, to put over a fine picture, but he has a long way to go. His PR is good, but his achievements in the next three years will have to prove as good as that PR before I am fully convinced by his strategy.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. At the start of this debate Mr. Speaker appealed for short speeches. Unless speeches are dramatically cut from now on a lot of hon. Members will be extremely disappointed.

6.2 pm

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): I shall take note of your injunction, Madam Deputy Speaker, and I shall sit down in five minutes.

I listened with great interest to the opening speech of the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams). I travel across south Wales to reach my constituency in west Wales and I pass through Newport, Cardiff, Bridgend, Port Talbot, Swansea and Carmarthen. That gives me an opportunity to see what is happening to the Welsh economy. I do not recognise for one moment the picture of gloom, doom and despair that is so often painted by the official spokesman for the Opposition and other Labour Members. They will not open their eyes to see the new factories that are being built. They do not appreciate the new investment from the Welsh Development Agency or the investment from local authorities. They do not appreciate the investment that is coming in from England, Japan and Germany that is changing the whole base of the Welsh economy. The old days, when Wales depended upon steel and coal, have gone and it now has a much wider economic base. I should have thought that Opposition Members would welcome that, because it means that we will get out of the cycle of structural unemployment that has affected Wales for the past 60 years.

I welcome the valleys initiative that my right hon. Friend has introduced, which is a courageous policy. It is a unique initiative that combines, for the first time, public and private investment to tackle the problems of the valleys. Opposition Members representing the valleys criticise a Conservative Secretary of State, but Labour Government after Labour Government did nothing about the dereliction in the valleys. My right hon. Friend has had the courage to invest in an area where, in the short term, there are no political votes to be gained by the Conservative party—although in the long term I am sure there will be. I find it extraordinary that Labour Members criticise my right hon. Friend for his courage.

When we debated the valleys initiative, I read the report in Hansard of the speech by the official Opposition spokesman, the right hon. Member for Swansea, West. He painted a miserable picture and I am not surprised that he is now facing problems within his party. There are so many splits among the 24 Opposition Members for Wales that I find it extraordinary that they have any time to think about anything other than their own internal divisions and dissensions.

I congratulate my right hon. Friend on the fact that, two weeks ago, £108 million was provided by the European regional development fund for the counties of Powys, Dyfed and Gwynedd. It is estimated by Dyfed county council—the council for my constituency—that that money will create 8,000 new jobs. The press release issued by my council stated:

"Also at the request of the three councils, the Secretary of State for Wales, Mr. Peter Walker, intervened and visited Brussels to pursue the application."

That is a measure of the work that has been done by the Welsh Office to support the initiatives that are necessary not only for the valleys, but for the rural areas, such as my constituency.

Last week a number of us who are members of the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs went to Japan and Korea to discuss with business men why they chose to invest in Wales, which is attracting overseas businesses in their hundreds. Wales accounts for 5 per cent. of the population, but 20 per cent. of all inward investment comes to Wales. We were told that foreign businesses come to Wales because of the component supplies that we are able to provide. They come to Wales because of the tax regime, which is conducive to companies and which allows companies to make profits.

They come to Wales because of good labour relations. Mr. Norman Willis of the Trades Union Congress should note that one of the most important things that those businesses want is the single-union agreements that the Electrical, Electronic, Telecommunications and Plumbing Union has introduced. I warn the TUC that, if its intention is to destroy jobs, it should carry on with its internecine warfare against the electricians, and possibly against the engineers.

The Welsh economy contains the recipe for success. It depresses me that, time and time again, Labour Members, instead of talking up the prospects of Wales, instead of fighting for jobs, talk Wales down. They are miserable and depressing about Wales. The motion that we are discussing has more to do with the poverty of creative thinking within the Labour party than it has to do with the realities of life in Wales.

Mr. Ted Rowlands (Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney): Because of the shortage of time, I shall not follow the nonsense spoken by the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett). We have spent many years fighting for our communities and talking them up. We have gone wherever we needed to go to get money for our communities. The Secretary of State will be aware that that is why we made contributions and suggestions about his valleys initiative and that is why we have every reason and every right to assess how successful he has been.

I have not been churlish and I have welcomed individual items that have resulted directly from the right hon. Gentleman's efforts. I welcomed the Pentrebach-Dowlais road scheme, which was helped by the right hon. Gentleman's valleys initiative. We are right, however, to complain when the right hon. Gentleman claims credit for things that he has had nothing to do with. The Pant junior school has not been completed and is still not occupied because of cuts in the county council's education capital programme that were undertaken by the right hon. Gentleman's predecessor. If those cuts had not occurred, that school would have been built four years ago. The right hon. Gentleman cannot blame us for not welcoming such cuts. The £40 million that the brewers have spent is nothing to do with him, nor is the money that has been spent by British Telecom. That money had been spent before he arrived on the scene.

Why has the right hon. Gentleman missed out two vital factors? He is aware of the representations that many of us have made to unlock home repair grants. In my constituency there are 2,000 people who have been waiting since 1984 for that money. If the right hon. Gentleman got all the money he wanted from the Cabinet, why did he not allocate money for home repair grants? Many of our elderly owner-occupiers have been waiting for that money since 1984. When he comes to reply, I hope that he will tell us why he has not unlocked that money.

Why did he not get any money for our desperate Health Service? The hon. Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) spoke of the new community hospital. I give him a modest warning—in my constituency the brand-new unit for the elderly critically ill that was opened in April last year by the Queen Mother was closed in January because of lack of money to sustain it. His constituency might have a new hospital, but will it remain open? We failed to keep our unit open, because the Government did not allocate sufficient money.

In the few moments available to me I want to discuss something of immediate concern to my constituents. During the past week or so in Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney, people came to see me—not on my initiative—for advice on how to fill in a form called "Housing benefit new rules". The completed form is sent to a special unit in Glasgow to ensure that the applicant loses only £2·50 a week in housing benefit. Who is entitled to fill in the form? I know because I am helping some of my constituents to do it, and the form actually describes those eligible very well. It states:

"You may be able to get transitional payments if one of these descriptions apply to you:
you are bringing up a child or you are a widow who gets Widow's Pension or you are 60 or over, or your partner is 60 or over or you are a long-term sick or disabled person."

Those are the people who will lose a minimum of £2·50 a week in housing benefit.

What stand did the Secretary of State take in the Cabinet when those nonsensical proposals for the elderly and the poor were made? There is great concern about the rules, which have been introduced. While the Government are giving £2 billion to those at the top end of the taxpayer ladder, benefit is being taken from the poor and the elderly.

When the Minister replies, will he say why the elderly, the long-term sick and the disabled have to pay a minimum of an additional £2·50 a week in rent? I heard the Secretary of State for Social Services say that the dependency culture must be destroyed and that people must be made to be more independent. Does that mean that a 60-year-old or a long-term sick or disabled person must work part-time—perhaps scrubbing our schools? Will the Government withdraw benefit if those people do not return to the labour market? It is not a question of there being a dependency culture—those people have worked all their lives and many of them have fulfilled their service to the community.

How is the dependency culture destroyed and independence encouraged by taking £2·50 a week from such people? Where was the right hon. Gentleman when those nonsensical proposals were put to the Cabinet? Why did he not defend the people of our communities? He has described his valleys initiative as a programme for the people. How can it be that elderly and poor people have to pay an extra £2·50 while others receive enormous tax benefits? That is not the sort of society that we want, but unfortunately it is the sort of society that we represent.

At the 1987 general election, my majority rose by 6,000. Some people say that it is the traditional vote, and it is—yet 75 per cent. of the electorate voted for me, most of whom were taxpayers benefiting from the Government's tax policies. However, they rightly said that they would prefer that the money was spent on health, housing, their elderly parents, better education and better social services. That is the case that the Labour party put to the electorate and on which I gained the support of my constituents.

The phrase used for the scheme is "transitional protection". It is a good description of the Secretary of State. He was supposed to be our transitional protection against Thatcherism. I am sorry to say that he is failing.

Mrs. Ann Clwyd (Cynon Valley): Time is short, but I want to read a letter from a constituent. He typifies the problems that people in the valleys face and the sort of letters that I receive from those suffering badly under the Government's policies. My constituent wrote:

"Since September 1980 I have been redundant. I receive no redundancy payment. I looked for work . . . far afield. But to no avail. I am now nearly 61 years of age and have given up hope. My health has, because of this I am sure, suffered, and I have been treated for anxiety for a long time. But I don't think I'll ever be cured.

For a number of years I have been receiving invalidity and supplementary benefit and for approx. the last year I have been receiving £51·94 a week. This has now been dropped to £50·68. The DHSS say this is because the mortgage interest rate has dropped since last December. When I pointed out to them that for years the interest rate had been up and down like a yo-yo without affecting the allowances I was informed that they had been instructed to alter everybodies mortgage allowance every time the interest rate changed. This I find hard to believe, to put into practice I mean.

The result of the drop of £1·26 in my weekly benefit means that it is going to be difficult for me to exist.

My house is small, two down and one up. The water rates have gone up from £65·59 to £86·62. The house rates from £69·54 to £73·83. Even if I get a rebate on this amount, I will still have to pay 20 per cent. as you know. With Gas and Electricity at the present rate and most of my other commitments, my weekly payments, most of them that is, have gone up to £43·11 and they drop my money. Instead of being left with £10 to buy food and other home bills which always crop up, I am left with £7·57. How can one buy food on this amount. I do not eat meat. I can't afford it. A small tin of tuna, 57p is made to last three days and frozen kippers with frozen vegetables the rest of the week.

I had been giving myself a treat of fish and chips £1·10 on Saturdays that will now have to go. I don't know what to give up next. I sold my car and my motor-bike years ago, and gave up drinking and smoking when I became redundant. I no longer have a social life and have virtually become a hermit.

I have recently had repair work carried out on my gas fire, which will cost about £60. The only way I will be able to pay this is by Barclaycard. Between my house and the Barclaycard without any further use of the card I will owe them at the moment £760. I will be paying back until I am 70.

I can see no point in appealing to the DHSS. Because with the dealings I have had with them over the matter of the mortgage, both at the office and on the phone, I feel that it will be a waste of time.

I know that you are busy but if you can help me or advise me please do so urgently, as I am desperate.

I'm sorry about the writing. I assure you I could write better a few years ago, but my nerves are really bad."

That man, and many others like him, are typical of those who live in our valley communities and are affected by Government policies. In my constituency more than 60 per cent. of people live on a gross annual income of less than £4,000. I found that difficult to believe when I first saw the figures, but they are in official statistics. That is the extent of poverty in the Cynon valley and also in many other valley communities.

The Secretary of State visited the Cynon valley when he was first appointed, and he showed considerable interest in and sympathy for the plight of many people. I have repeated time and again the statistics for the Cynon valley. For example, more than half the privately owned houses are unfit for human habitation and there are very high levels of unemployment—28 per cent. for males. Those figures have remained more or less static during the past nine years.

There is very little change or hope for change in the current situation. The health statistics are well known to the Secretary of State, as are all the statistics. When he came to Wales and talked to people, they believed that he would do something about the situation and offer them some hope for the future. Although I welcome some parts of his valleys initiative, there is also a deep feeling of disappointment because he promised so much and has delivered so little. I am not being churlish; that is a fact of life.

Mr. Peter Walker: Will the hon. Lady name one promise that I made and have not kept?

Mrs. Clwyd: The Secretary of State gave the impression that the Government would do something about unfit housing. More than half the private housing in Mid-Glamorgan is unfit for human habitation. The Secretary of State has given the valleys initiative an extra £8 million for housing. The Cynon Valley council estimates that it will cost at least £64 million to put right that unfit housing. I do not think that that is an adequate response after the promise that he made.

Mr. Walker: I have seen the remark by the chief executive of the local authority saying that £8 million was not enough. As a result, the next day I put out a press handout to explain that the £8 million was an additional amount for this year alone on what had already been granted and that, over the three years of the valleys initiative, £430 million will be spent on housing.

Mrs. Clwyd: Will the Secretary of State explain how long it will take for Cynon Valley to right its unfit private housing under the progrmme which he has announced? He has not answered the question that my right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) has asked him time and again: how much new money has he announced in the valleys initiative?

Mr. Walker: Thirty-two thousand houses will be improved. As the hon. Lady knows, I took the initiative of ensuring that the Welsh Office went to her local authority to help a great deal to work out a housing strategy for the three years.

Mrs. Clywd: I am afraid that the Secretary of State has still not answered the question: how long will it take for the Cynon Valley, with all its unfit housing and with a bill of £64 million, to put that housing right?

Mr. Walker: It will be far quicker than under the minor programme of the last Labour Government.

Mrs. Clwyd: By our estimates, on the present level of Government expenditure it will take at least 50 years. I realise that the right hon. Gentleman is not prepared to put a figure on it. I quite understand why.

Mr. Rogers: The Secretary of State says that 32,000 houses will be improved, but in my constituency of Rhondda 18,000 houses are waiting for improvement grants now.

Mrs. Clwyd: People on low incomes do not have the money to improve their houses. The Secretary of State seems not to be able to understand that. [Interruption.]

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. One debate at a time in the Chamber, please.

Mrs. Clwyd: In 1986, 64 per cent. of people in my constituency said that they had no savings. The Government's reaction is to withdraw tax relief on home improvement loans. The Under-Secretary of State for Wales, in a letter to me a few weeks ago, stated:

"there has been much abuse which has needed to be curtailed."

But he could give no evidence of the alleged abuse in the valleys. Was the Minister saying that my constituents with poor housing, low incomes and no savings are applying for home improvement grants to take holidays or to buy furniture instead of installing an indoor toilet? I can tell the Minister that there is no evidence of any abuse in Wales. The Chancellor's statement was based on abuse in the south-east of England and it is not proper that people in Wales should be tarred with the same brush.

The Secretary of State said that his programme was bigger and better than anything that the Labour party had done. It is nine years since the last Labour Government, nine years of neglect and procrastination, during which time the Government have allowed the situation to deteriorate. In 1987, only Scotland and the south-west of England had average earnings lower than those of Wales. In 1978-79, wages in Wales were higher than in Britain generally. Even the Government are forced to do something about that.

While we welcome part of the valleys initiative, the Secretary of State must accept that it is far more packaging than content. It is a collection of current and proposed activities. It is not a strategy; essentially, it is more of the same.

Local authorities are pushed into the background to play a role only in education, housing and transport but not in economic development, tourism and social services.

I hope that the Secretary of State will correct me if I am wrong, but I think that Mid Glamorgan will get £1·15 million of the £500 million that he mentioned. There is no evidence that any more money has been won from the Treasury. Instead, it has been shifted around from other Welsh public expenditure.

Mr. Peter Walker: I confirm that the hon. Lady's figure is totally and completely wrong.

Mrs. Clwyd: Will the Secretary of State correct me?

Mr. Walker: A high proportion of the £500 million will go to Mid Glamorgan.

Mrs. Clwyd: Even when there are increases to councils, they are tied to clauses which increase the power of the Welsh Office and not that of local government.

The Secretary of State made great play with jobs. I have a right to question him closely about jobs as 28 per cent. of men in my constituency are still unemployed. It is worth commenting on the programme's claims about job creation and economic regeneration. The programme estimates that unemployment will fall by 25,000 to 30,000 as a result of the proposed actions. But by the programme's admission, and as my right hon. Friend the Member for Swansea, West pointed out, almost all those jobs will come from applications for regional development grants submitted in 1987 and the first quarter of 1988 which are expected to create 23,460 jobs through investment worth £620 million. Clearly, that is the main plank of the Government's job creation plans. The Government are abolishing RDG in favour of a discretionary scheme. If RDG provides almost all the new jobs expected, presumably the other proposals will have no impact at all, or the estimate is a conservative and easily achievable aim.

Finally, while an additional 25,000 to 30,000 jobs will be extremely welcome, that goes only some way towards alleviating the massive unemploymnt problems. In April 1988, 28,272 people were registered as unemployed in Mid-Glamorgan. That is a rate of 16·4 per cent. and is the fourth highest county unemployment rate in Britain. The recent improvements in unemployment in the west of Wales have not been experienced in Mid-Glamorgan, where unemployment is increasing. The Government should be truthful when they make claims about reducing unemployment.

In April 1986, unemployment in Mid-Glamorgan was 10 per cent. of the Welsh rate. In April 1988, it was 27 per cent. above the Welsh rate. That is the extent of deprivation in the valley communities and that is why we are angry, disappointed and frustrated with the Secretary of State's proposals, which do not go far enough. He hyped them up and he must now expect a very strong reaction to that hype. I described it as a hot air balloon. The hot air balloon came down to land and there was very little inside it.

Mr. Gwilym Jones (Cardiff, North): I join my right hon. and hon. Friends in questioning the need or relevance of the Opposition motion. It is hard to find a topical relevance. The right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) did not tell us why we were debating it. Perhaps the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) will explain why we are doing so. I shall not attempt to offer an explanation.

We could have debated the Health Service in Wales. I know that various hon. Members have referred to it, but it is not specifically referred to in the motion. I had the temerity to try to draw the right hon. Member for Swansea, West on that subject. I asked him how many fewer patients would be treated in hospitals in Wales if we had the same spending, with only an increase for inflation, as we had under the Government in which he was a Minister. He did not give us an answer. I shall offer the answer instead. Almost 200,000 fewer patients would be treated each year in hospitals in Wales if we were to return to the spending levels of the Labour party. To be specific, an additional 99,000 in-patients and 88,000 out-patients are being treated now and Government spending is 42 per cent. up in real terms since 1979. Of course, I did not get that admission from a member of the only Government ever to cut spending on the Health Service.

I welcome the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State just before the spring bank holiday recess about the setting up of a further two new kidney dialysis treatment units in Wales. One of them will be in my constituency in the University hospital of Wales and the other will be in Merthyr. The hon. Member for Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) said that he believed in welcoming additions, but he did not mention that unit. I have an interest in kidney treatment and it is important to welcome those two new units, not least because when the Government took office Wales had the worst record for kidney treatment in the United Kingdom. Now we have the best record in the United Kingdom and virtually the best in Europe.

The motion could have been about the valleys initiative. It has been referred to, but there is no mention of it in the motion. I was not here last week and I had to look at Hansard to find the questions asked of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State when he made his statement about the valleys initiative. Unfortunately, the same questions came from Opposition Members. They were negative and full of the same synthetic bitterness, depression, gloom and doom. Incidentally, I could find no reference to the statement in the Western Mail. Perhaps, with no disrespect to my hon. Friend the Member for Clwyd, North-West (Sir A. Meyer), that reflects the standard of some of the questions in the absence of those of us who were on Welsh Select Committee business.

In every sense that was a major statement, envisaging £1·5 billion being spent over the next three years. Outside the House it has been warmly welcomed. It has been welcomed in the newspaper articles and editorials I have read. Those articles give the impression that the people of Wales and their newspapers recognise the need for the most positive approach towards my right hon. Friend's statement.

Sir Anthony Meyer: Has it occurred to my hon. Friend that one reason why there is so much glumness about the valleys initiative from Opposition Members is that, if the conditions in their constituencies improve, they could become vulnerable? There are no fewer than 11 seats in Wales that are vulnerable to a swing of less than 2·5 per cent. or 2,500 votes for the Conservatives.

Mr. Jones: My hon. Friend makes his point so well that I will not take it any further.

When the Welsh Select Committee was in Japan last week we met Yuasa Batteries, which is already in Wales. The head of that company posed a question to the Select Committee—it is usually the other way round. He wanted to know how the British economic miracle could be applied to Japan. That is the perception abroad, very much in contrast to the way in which the right hon. Member for Swansea, West tried cynically to dispose of what he denied was booming Wales. The right hon. Gentleman tried to claim that Wales has one of the lowest incomes per head in the United Kingdom. After all this time, we know from looking at international comparisons of figures that such bald comparisons are pretty nigh meaningless. At the very least we need to take into account the buying power. When the buying power of people in Wales is taken into account, we see that the income level is above average for the United Kingdom. Again, that is conveniently missed by Opposition Members.

None of us can be completely satisfied with the progress that has been made under the Government. However, I am entitled to be at least equally worried about the perception that is being created by the Opposition as they try to claim that they speak for the majority in Wales. The right hon. Member for Swansea, West was worried that the new jobs in Wales would be "engineered out" within the next decade. He said that he feared for the future of Wales. My fear is that the image that the Labour party is projecting abroad is the most conducive to us being described as the "coolie economy", the phrase used by the right hon. Gentleman. Any foreign investor listening to what the right hon. Gentleman said would be interested only in establishing a screwdriver plant in Wales. There would be no interest in placing anything more substantial there.

Am I being unfair to the Labour party? Perhaps I should be criticising only the right hon. Member for Swansea, West. I notice that as other Opposition Members mouth the same phrases they have smiles on their faces. The right hon. Member for Swansea, West gives the impression that he believes what he says. Our Japanese investors and potential investors must surely feel that the kamikaze approach of the Labour party can only be worthy of a far higher cause than theirs.

More investment is coming to Wales, not just from Japan but from Korea. I have the impression of a common spirit among business people in Wales towards doing business with Japan and of a common approach that we share with the Japanese and other leading economies. I believe firmly that business men from Wales and the United Kingdom can hold their heads high as they seek to do business in any part of the world. We have achieved that spirit and we must overcome any remaining psychological barriers about difficulties involved in doing business with Japan. We are not interested only in further investment from Japan. We want an increasing slice of the Japanese market, which is one of the fastest increasing markets. Only by retaining the necessary spirit will we achieve an increased share of that market.

Unless we can compete for our fair share of the Japanese market—one of the foremost markets in the world and which may become the foremost market—we shall upset our share of the rest of the world market and the rest of our domestic market. We need the right spirit to achieve that.

I will not repeat the unemployment statistics that have already been given. I am privileged to represent the constituency of Cardiff, North. For a long time we have had the lowest unemployment rate in Wales. It is still too high. There are still more than 2,000 too many people unemployed in my constituency. We are not self-satisfied about having the lowest unemployment rate. More new jobs have been created in Cardiff, North since 1983 than the total number of people unemployed in 1983. If our new jobs had gone solely to residents of Cardiff, North, we would have eliminated unemployment. Of course that did not happen. We are not selfish about job creation. We see ourselves as having a role to create employment not just for Cardiff, but for the valleys and south Wales. That is typical of the new spirit abroad in Cardiff.

It is only from the approach that we display in Cardiff, North that the necessary prosperity can spread throughout Wales. Only a Conservative Secretary of State would come forward with the necessary comprehensive intitiative for the regeneration of the political heartland of the Labour party.

Mr. Martin Jones (Clywd, South-West): We are told how well we are doing in Wales under this Government and are showered with the usual plethora of statistics proving upward trends. We are told that unemployment is down, but that is due in no small part to extensive massaging of the figures, borne out by the number of my constituents who cannot claim unemployment benefit but must claim other benefits, training scheme allowances, and so on.

We still do not have in Wales the number of people in work who were employed in 1979. The Secretary of State says that he intends to remove Socialism from Wales. I do not believe that he will, because of the good sense of the Welsh. In any event, he has not said whether he intends to replace Socialism with Thatcherism or with Walkerism. Either will mean the majority of Welsh people being worse off and a small minority—mostly English—being better off.

Several Hon. Members rose—

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Mr. Paul Flynn.

Dr. Dafydd Elis Thomas (Meirionnydd Nant Conwy): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. It is a matter of some concern to me, as the leader of a party that has three Members in Wales and 8 per cent. of the popular vote, that I am not able to take part in this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Flynn.

6.40 pm

Mr. Paul Flynn (Newport, West): Our reason for selecting this subject for debate has hardly been mentioned. It is that never before in this century has the gap between the poor and the rich widened so much and so quickly as in the past two years. There are many people outside the House waiting for news of the debate, and who will rightly be angered by the self-indulgent, synthetic and snide remarks of Conservative Members, and their deliberate attempt to ignore the serious nature of the debate.

Many things have happened and will continue to happen in Wales. There has been a substantial improvement in unemployment levels, although it is difficult to discern because of the now routine fiddles and distortions, which have been evident for several years. Of course we should try to be optimistic. All of us in public life have a duty to build confidence and optimism in the Welsh economy, and my party has generously praised all those responsible for improving it.

However, there is no use exaggerating the improvement and pretending that there has been a boom. Sadly, it may be not a boom but a bubble—rather like the south sea bubble. Commentators have pointed to the fragility of the improvement. It does not help that we have a Secretary of State for Wales who has attracted a great deal of attention to himself—much of it not critical. In his task of reshaping the Welsh economy, it does not help if he vastly exaggerates job prospects, and if there are claims of instant regeneration or overnight miracles by a braggart politician using Wales as a rung in his own career ladder.

A report published by the Cardiff Business School a fortnight ago commented:

"It is still too early to consider that recent events in Wales represent a turning point and a shift towards a basically stronger economy. We still feel the fundamental weaknesses remain. Employment in Wales has declined significantly since 1979 and the performance of the Welsh economy in this respect is poorer than any other region. As a result the likelihood of becoming unemployed in Wales is higher than in any other standard region, whereas the probability of ceasing to be employed is the fourth highest of the twelve standard regions."

Good things are happening, but there is no use believing a public relations hype that goes far over the top.

Wales is deprived and disadvantaged. There may be a little ripple of improvement from the valleys initiative, and of course it contains many good local authority plans. However, as has been said, there is a great danger that the initiative will put all the goods in the shop window, leaving the store room empty. There is more to it even than that. The Secretary of State has taken all the goods from all the windows in town, and he has put them in his own shop window. It is likely that if anybody in the valleys paints his front door in the next few years, the Secretary of State will come along with a sticker proclaiming "Sponsored by the valleys initiative".

Following the social security changes in Wales over the past few months, many people have found their lives impoverished. A total of 350,000 households will be hit, with living standards falling as the combined result of those changes and the "loadsamoney" Budget. The ripple of improvement created by the initiative will be washed away by the tidal wave of hard Thatcherite legislation that is moving towards Wales. Why would the Secretary of State not answer my question about the poll tax? Why did the Prime Minister refuse to tell the BBC interviewer from Llandudno what will be the effect of the poll tax in Wales, and especially in the valleys?

The valleys will be hardest hit by every one of the Government's proposals. We have all heard about clause 28 of the Local Government Bill, but other clauses will cut a swathe of unemployment and reduce wage levels in precious local government jobs. The Housing Bill will also hit the valleys by increasing rents. All of the hard Thatcherite legislation will hit the valleys very seriously. There are no glossy publications and no hype about those matters.

All we have seen is the mean and muddled housing benefit changes affecting nearly 400,000 Welsh households. Islwyn borough council has published figures showing that 73 per cent. of the recipients of housing benefit—who are anyway the worst off in society—will be losers in a scheme that was supposed to simplify benefit. It is so simple that recipients must claim some money from the local authority, some from the DHSS, and some from Glasgow. There is now such chaos that the Cardiff office responsible for administering those changes has been closed to the general public for two weeks, while that at Newport has closed for a week.

Hon. Members say that the amount of reduced benefit involved is only £2·50 after the transitional payments have been made—and even they are a form of deferred robbery, because claimants will miss out on changes in inflation. However, if £2·50 represents one tenth of a recipient's disposable income, its loss is a severe blow. That affects not just one or two recipients but hundreds of thousands of people throughout Wales. No glossy publication heralds that situation.

Wales is deprived and disadvantaged by low pay, by a neglected Health Service, by unemployment being twice the level it is elsewhere, and by the alien free-for-all to which the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey) referred—the cheque book colonisation that is spreading from north Wales to every other part of Wales. The precious wedges of council housing in villages that give them a balanced community will now be up for grabs by the Porsche-owning yuppies from south Wales. There will be an extension of the cultural invasion from which the north and west have suffered for many years. We suffer from deprivation, and from the disadvantage of having a poor economy while being next door to a very rich neighbour.

I repeat that never before this century has the gap between the poor and the rich widened so much and so quickly. There is probably little point in repeating the question that was put last week and again today, and which has been put by the press to the Secretary of State, but we live in hope that he will answer it. Where is the new money, and how much new money will there be for the valleys initiative? I could quote many cases of hardship, of people suffering from the changes in housing benefit and social security, but I will give the House just one example, of a constituent who has expressed anger to me. She is a disabled pensioner and one of those the Government targeted to gain, but she, like so many others, is really a loser. Mrs. Dorothy Grear of the Bettws centre in Newport writes:

"The new system is unfair. Even those with a bit of works pension are losing. There are thousands of unhappy pensioners all over the country. Living here on a large council estate, I am right in amongst it. I hear the grumbles, I hear the worry, I hear the despair."

When will the Government hear it?

6.49 pm

The Minister of State, Welsh Office (Mr. Wyn Roberts): There are two views of Wales, one expressed rather pessimistically in the motion and the other expressed more hopefully in the amendment. Both views have been put forward in the debate.

Much of what has been said is attributable, as I think hon. Members will agree, to the Low Pay Unit report. Some of the LPU's findings for Wales are based on Great Britain estimates and appear to be at variance with the published figures. For example, we know that in 1979 there were 172,000 recipients of supplementary benefit in Wales, but LPU refers to 289,000 dependent on supplementary benefit in that year.

[Mr. Wyn Roberts]

While I am in a correcting mood, let me say that the hon. Members for Neath (Mr. Coleman) and for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey) referred to the Cardiff Business School report stating that more females than males are now in work in Wales. That is not the case. The latest data show that in December 1987 478,000 males were in employment, while the female total was 392,000. I shall not pursue the evidence.

There is of course a brighter side, which I feel obliged to draw to the attention of the House. Hon. Members will be interested to know that average adult full-time wages in Wales, at constant April 1987 prices, are now more than £19 a week higher than when we came into office. Between 1986 and 1987, average gross weekly earnings for adults working full-time rose by 7·7 per cent. in Wales, compared with 7·8 per cent. in England and 6·4 per cent. in Scotland. Earnings in west and Mid-Glamorgan rose by 8·7 per cent, the same percentage increase as in the south-east of England. Of the regions of England, only Greater London exceeded the increase in Wales.

Of course wages are higher in the south-east, but, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State pointed out, so is the cost of living. The average household in the south-east spends far more on housing than the average household in Wales—just over £40 a week, compared with £25 in Wales. We have the lowest domestic rates of any region in the United Kingdom, with the exception of Northern Ireland.

I was surprised to hear some comments on spending on the National Health Service. I remind hon. Members on both sides of the House that in the final year of the last Labour Administration the weekly spend on the NHS in Wales was £16·3 million at 1988-89 prices, whereas we are planning to spend £23·2 million each week in 1988-89. Expenditure on the NHS in Wales in 1978-79 was some £5·85 per person per week, whereas our plans provide for expenditure in this financial year of £8·25 per person per week.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones (Ynys Môn) rose——

Mr. Roberts: The hon. Gentleman has not been here, and I shall certainly not give way to him. I have very little time.

I am surprised that so many Opposition Members, including the hon. Member for Neath, should attack us on our housing record. After all, as my right hon. Friend says, Labour left us with 133,000 houses lacking basic amenities, and we have had to reduce the number to 37,000—just below 5 per cent. of our housing stock. I was also surprised that the right hon. Member for Swansea, West (Mr. Williams) referred to an increase in homelessness. The number of places accepted by local authorities fell by 11 per cent. last year to just under 5,300. I might say that the solution is not simply building more council houses; it is partly to do with making better use of existing stock.

Opposition Members must make up their minds about the valleys initiative. Do they now realise that it is only the parliamentary Labour party that does not like the initiative and has failed to welcome it? Do they not want the record factory building programme of 1·25 million sq ft, at a cost of £40 million? Do they not want a record derelict land clearance programme of 2,500 acres for the valleys? Do they not want a record level of urban programme allocations? That is £15 million this year for the valleys alone—I hope that the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) is listening to this—compared with £11·7 million, at today's prices, for the whole of Wales in the last year of the Labour Government.

Do Opposition Members really not want our plans to improve 32,000 homes and provide over 10,000 new ones? The truth is that, as my hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) said, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is doing something for the valleys, for the heartlands of the Labour party, which they did not dare—did not have the courage—to do themselves.

It is typical of the Opposition to have chosen to concentrate on disadvantage and deprivation in Wales. It is, I believe, an outward sign of their inner gloom and doom. I thought that the eschatological gloom and doom —the "end of Wales is at hand" approach—belonged exclusively to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) when he was on the Opposition Front Bench. Even the Leader of the Opposition became so depressed that he retired the hon. Gentleman to the happy hunting grounds of the Back Benches. But the gloom-and-doom approach is still with us, and the right hon. Member for Swansea, West and the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) are simply new prophets of the old terminal message. I suppose that the end of their world is at hand —the old world where masses of people were employed in nationalised industries, dependent on state subsidies to keep them going, or in the high-spending public sector, where employment could be sustained at the cost of ever higher inflation. All that is changing, and the Opposition are completely at a loss for policies.

Some of the brighter Opposition Members are trying to reconcile themselves to the change, and to adapt Labour policies to the new Britain of economic growth and falling unemployment. I am surprised that there are no Welsh Members among this avant-garde. They are members of the old guard to a man. Who do they really think will benefit from the dismal picture of Wales that they conjure up? Certainly not the people of Wales, who stand to lose investment and development to other parts of the United Kingdom where people are more hopeful about their future prospects. Nor do I think that the Opposition themselves stand to gain much. People simply do not like to hear endlessly how miserable they should be, especially when they are not.

I have given the House a choice between the Opposition's motion and the Government's amendment. I believe that the majority of people of Wales would prefer the amendment, and with unemployment falling for the 24th month in succession, including that in Mid-Glamorgan, and with job prospects still extremely good, Wales is indeed firmly set on the path of economic growth and prosperity. I commend the amendment to the House.

Dr. Dafydd Elis Thomas (Meirionnydd Nant Conwy): As I was not called earlier in the debate, I am now taking the opportunity to say in half a second what I would have said.

We have heard two constrasting views of Wales in the debate. Both views are right, but both views are wrong. The real future for Wales is to be a modern European economy which will develop on the basis of the skills and activity of its own people. To do that, it must have effective political control over its resources. Clearly, in this House, Wales does not even have a voice.

Question accordingly negatived.

Question, That the proposed words be there added, put forthwith pursuant to Standing Order No. 30 (Questions on Amendments) and agreed to.

MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER forthwith declared the main Question, as amended, to be agreed to.

Resolved,

That this House welcomes the success and achievements of Government policies and initiatives in Wales which have raised living standards, improved housing and environmental conditions and set Wales firmly on the path of economic growth and prosperity.

Mr. Wigley: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, arising out of the last debate. I put it to you that it is wholly unreasonable and unacceptable that all four parties that represent Wales in the House should not have at least five minutes to put their viewpoints in a debate that has to do solely with Welsh affairs. This matter has been raised before and there have been difficulties about it. In the past there has been agreement between the usual channels and the Chair that representatives of all parties would be allowed to speak. May we have an assurance now that what happened in the last debate will never be allowed to happen again?

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): I well understand the hon. Gentleman's disappointment. A number of hon. Members on both sides of the House could not participate in this very short debate. I can only express sympathy with all who were not called. It would have been so much easier if those who were called had made briefer speeches.

I should also make it clear that Mr. Speaker exercises his discretion to the best of his ability. He never makes any commitment before any debate begins to any individual hon. Member or party.

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I entirely understand your difficulties, and I understand that the Speaker cannot make such a commitment. In view of the difficulty created for you and Mr. Speaker, is not the solution for the Government to provide time in which to debate Wales's difficulties? After all, they created them. The Labour party provided time today and the Government should follow its good example. If they had the interests of Wales at heart, they would take notice of these comments and provide time in the near future for a full debate in which everyone can take part.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We should now get on with the next business.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing (Moray): Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I shall, of course, listen to the hon. Lady, but I must say to her and to the House that we are now trespassing on the time that has been allocated for the consideration of private Bills.

Mrs. Ewing: Would it not be possible to distinguish between hon. Members and parties? Surely minority parties have a right to be heard. That differentiation should be taken into account by the two larger parties, which are perhaps more concerned with safeguarding their own rights than with listening to the viewpoints of others.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the hon. Lady's point. I assure her that anyone who occupies the Chair has to listen to complaints by hon. Members on both sides, including Government supporters, who feel that they should have been called when unfortunately time did not allow. The Chair does its best in such circumstances.

There is a motion on the Order Paper for 10-minute speeches. At the moment, the Chair has not the power to limit speeches. If the House so decides, it will be easier to call more hon. Members from both sides in major debates.

Associated British Ports (No. 2) Bill

(By Order)

Order read for resuming adjourned debate on Question [11 May], That the Bill be now read a Second time.

Question again proposed.

7.20 pm

Mr. Alexander Eadie (Midlothian): I was coming near the end of my remarks when the debate was adjourned. The House will recall that the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Stewart) described the Bill as the destruction of the coal industry. There was a great deal of support on both sides of the House for that view.

The Financial Times international coal report spells out what should be the obituary of the Bill, which should not get a Second Reading. The Bill is a bad buy. I do not want to go into great detail on the Financial Times report but I wish to make one quotation which is relevant to the debate:

> "Much British deep-mined coal can compete well with imports in 1990—but by 1995 the mines should be competing so well as to restrict imports to the periphery of the power station market . . . By 1995 any saving made by an all-out import policy in 1990 would have disappeared and the electricity supply industry would be paying millions of pounds more for imported coal than by buying British . . . There is a severe risk that many deep mines which could compete with imported coal in 1995 will be closed by 1990 if the Government encourage an early free-for-all on imports."

Of course the Bill is about imports. That quotation from the Financial Times coal report should be the obituary of the Bill.

Earlier in my speech I said that the Bill was defective. The information which we have got since I said that to some extent makes a mockery of the private Bill procedure. I doubt whether any planning authority would have allowed the application to go ahead. I am not privy to the information, but I understand that Calor Gas has provided information which was not available to the House last time, or was perhaps misunderstood. One important point it makes is that we are talking not about 300 tonnes of liquefied petroleum gas but about 100,000 tonnes.

Mr. Tony Lloyd (Stretford): It was my comments which led to the erroneous information. I am not an expert on LPG. The possibility of 300 tonnes going up in flames alarms me, but if 100,000 tonnes were to go up in flames it would devastate the whole of Humberside and the surrounding area. I put the point to my hon. Friend so that he may press the sponsor of the Bill. The Health and Safety Executive has let it be known that it is unhappy about the development, as is Calor Gas. In the weeks that have gone by since the last debate, has the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) been in touch with the Health and Safety Executive? Can he reassure the House or has the debate moved no further? We should reject the Bill simply because of the danger inherent in the storage of that amount of gas.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I suppose you have heard the exchanges in the last few minutes. It appears that we spent a couple of hours a few weeks ago debating a Bill which involved the storage of 300 tonnes of Calor gas. My hon.

[Mr. Dennis Skinner]

Friend the Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) has just revealed that 100,000 tonnes are involved. I want to know whether the Examiners or anyone else——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. The hon. Gentleman may make the point in his speech if he is called.

Mr. Skinner: My point of order is that the Bill should be withdrawn. It is not the Bill which was brought before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Bill is in order; otherwise we would not be discussing it. The hon. Member may make his point if he is called.

Mr. Eadie: I am grateful for the intervention of my hon. Friend the Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd). I am also grateful for the point of order raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner). The point is material to the discussion on the Bill. I endorse everything that my hon. Friends have said. I note that there is no response from the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown).

Mr. Bob Cryer (Bradford, South): Does my hon. Friend accept that this is even more serious because one of the largest chemical explosions that ever occurred in the United Kingdom was at Flixborough in the constituency of the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown)? The hon. Member's predecessor repeatedly raised in the House the danger of vapour explosions such as the one that ripped through Flixborough, causing loss of life, injury and damage for miles around. Will my hon. Friend comment on the fact that the hon. Member for the self-same area is promoting a Bill which could have similar consequences to, if not greater consequences than, those of Flixborough?

Mr. Eadie: My hon. Friend may recall that I have already said that I know of no planning authority—Conservative, Labour or Liberal—which would have allowed this defective Bill to go forward. It is an abuse of our procedures that the Bill should be before us. I do not want to make a long speech, although I am tempted to do so.

Mr. Michael Brown (Brigg and Cleethorpes): The hon. Gentleman doubts whether any planning authority would give permission for such a development. He may be reassured to know that the Labour-controlled county council of Humberside raises no objection to the proposal of the promoters, nor does the borough council in which the development is to take place.

Mr. Eadie: The hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes is playing the role of the Artful Dodger. The detailed proposals are not with the authority. It would be different if the detailed proposals, as spelt out in the Bill, were before the authority. I know from 20 years of local government experience that no planning authority——

Mr. Eric Illsley (Barnsley, Central): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for the sponsor of the Bill suddenly to rise from his seat and leave the Chamber when my hon. Friend the Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) is answering a point that he made?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House would be best advised to get on with the debate.

Mr. Eadie: The hon. Gentleman may have a good reason for leaving the Chamber. It may appear to be discourteous but I do not feel offended in any way.

As I said, I want to make a brief speech——

Mr. Jimmy Hood (Clydesdale): Are not the individuals who have promoted the Bill in consultation with the local authorities? Are not they discussing it in detail? It is not that the authorities have not objected. They have agreed to consult on the issue.

Mr. Eadie: I want to place on record the objections raised by Calor Gas. I referred in a previous speech to the liquidation of capital already invested. I related my remarks mainly to the mining, railway and power plant manufacturing industries. According to my figures, the cavern cost £25 million to build. I find it difficult to think in terms of writing off that amount of capital.

The main concern of Calor is that it stores vast quantities of liquid petroleum gas and, as a result, the site has to be notified to the Health and Safety Executive in accordance with the provisions of the Notification of Installations Handling Hazardous Substances Regulations 1982. As the development falls within a distance of 400m of the site boundary, Calor is concerned about the lack of consultation. That may in part answer the point raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood).

In quoting Calor's objections, I must identify the hon. Member who is the sponsor of the Bill:

"Despite the assurances by Michael Brown MP that they are pressing the Health and Safety Executive for a definite statement to reassure Calor that it will not lose its consent as a result of the ABP's activities, after repeated reminders by Calor no guidance has yet been given by the Health and Safety Executive. Calor are very concerned that the advice likely to come from the Health and Safety Executive may have a serious detrimental effect upon the future operation and development of the facilities."

Secondly, Calor is worried about the presence of other ships docking, loading and unloading at the proposed new jetty as they will be in close proximity to the existing liquid petroleum gas jetty. The stern bow of an LPG tanker could be as little as 50m away from the proposed jetty head. The Bill is defective in that respect. It may affect shipping programmes and place restrictions on Calor's operations For example, the HSE may prohibit a ship from using the LPG jetty while another ship is loading at the proposed new jetty.

Thirdly, the Bill does not give Calor any ability to use larger tankers and limits them to only one berth. The Bill would effectively limit any future expansion plans. It is absurd to write off £25 million of capital—quite apart from the dangers that we have already discussed.

Fourthly, the existence of another jetty would increase the number of vessels in the vicinity of the liquid petroleum gas jetty. However, there is no provision in the Bill to install harbour surveillance radar.

Finally, if the Bill is passed and the result is that Calor's facilities are closed down, it would not be possible to find an alternative cavern storage facility in the United Kingdom with the right quality of chalk, in the right location and at the right depth.

As I said, I know of no planning authority that would have approved such a proposition.

Mr. Kevin Barron (Rother Valley): My hon. Friend's remarks will clearly be of great concern not only to people who live in close proximity to the site but to those in several areas. Does my hon. Friend agree that the way in which the Bill is being dealt with denies the residents of the area and the constituents of the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) the right to go to a public inquiry and express in person their fears about the Bill?

Mr. Eadie: I fully endorse that. I think that it is absolutely monstrous that the mother of Parliaments should do that. That is why I have suggested that the Bill is defective.

Mr. Allen McKay (Barnsley, West and Penistone): Would my hon. Friend agree that we are not qualified to reach a decision on the Bill? Only the local authority is qualified to consider representations from Calor and from all those affected in the area. This is especially important as the development would affect tides and the ecology of the whole area.

Mr. Eadie: I take my hon. Friend's point. However, many of us are very well qualified to discuss what would happen if there were an explosion. I worked in the mining industry for 30 years. I have some technical engineering qualifications and I know the danger of having a bomb a few metres away. I am qualified to say that that is a hazard. I very much regret that people will not have an opportunity to examine the matter in detail.

Mr. Cryer: There is a potentially sinister aspect to the Bill. In the Health and Safety Executive there are qualified people who could examine the proposals and those people ought to provide a report to the House before we embark upon the Bill. As my hon. Friend knows, however, the HSE is short staffed because of the Government's refusal to provide additional funds. We know that these so-called private Bills are actually hybrid Bills; they represent Government policy, and the Government are abusing the procedures of the House by giving them organised support. The Government may well be saying with a nod and a wink to the HSE, "Say nothing and do nothing until the Bill gets through."

Mr. Tony Lloyd: My hon. Friend makes an interesting point. In our first debate, the Minister told the House that the HSE would not be involved until after the installation came into operation. He said that the HSE had no locus standi. He said that the Bill was not of interest to the HSE. However, the HSE will have the problem of deciding whether the Calor installation should be allowed to continue once the new installation is built. That is why the Health and Safety Executive is not involved. Whether there have been nods and winks, I do not know. I know that it has not so far said publicly whether it accepts the Bill. Perhaps the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes will tell us.

Mr. Eadie: I shall bring my remarks to a close. I was prepared to make a very long speech but as it is my birthday, I shall not.

Mr. Andy Stewart (Sherwood): I wish the hon. Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) many happy returns of the day. On his birthday, it may comfort him to learn that my brother is the deputy leader of the Conservative council on Humberside. I have told him that I shall oppose the Bill until the end.

Mr. Eadie: The House respects the hon. Gentleman's integrity. Anybody who doubts the stand that the hon. Gentleman is taking should read the speech that he made on 11 May.

I think that I have advanced all the arguments that can be made against the Bill receiving a Second Reading. I have shown we shall be liquidating not millions but billions of pounds of capital if the Bill is passed. I have mentioned the safety hazards and shown how the private Bill procedures of the House are faulty. I have expressed concern that the Minister should recommend that such a defective Bill should be given a Second Reading.

Mr. Skinner: My hon. Friend has touched on a number of matters. History will probably record that if this time bomb goes up many people on Humberside will not see any more birthdays. Many people will weep crocodile tears and talk about the need for inquiries. They will ask, "Why was the Bill passed with a provision for a 100,000 tonnes capacity of Calor gas? What happened in Parliament? What were that lot doing down there?" There was an inquiry for Sizewell and we did not complain about that, but this site is being developed without a public inquiry. Post-Flixborough, we are talking about major industrial hazards, but Parliament is allowing this corrupt and bent procedure to continue on a Conservative two or three-line Whip——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. That is enough for an intervention.

Mr. Eadie: My hon. Friend has made the final point that I was about to make. Bearing in mind all the points that have been made, the House would be foolish and, to some extent, irresponsible to give the Bill a Second Reading. I hope that the House will reject the Bill.

7.42 pm

Mr. Henry Bellingham (Norfolk, North-West): I wish the hon. Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) a happy birthday. The points that he made about hazards and safety were dealt with at length by my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown).

I do not want the hon. Member for Midlothian to labour under a misapprehension. He thinks that there should have been a public inquiry, but if anyone decides to construct works in tidal waters he must obtain the authority of Parliament.

The one part of the Bill to which the hon. Member for Midlothian did not address himself was that which relates to my constituency. Many people forget that there are three parts to the Bill. The work to be undertaken at King's Lynn comprises a quay of solid construction, which will cost roughly £1 million, work on a wall—continuous sheet piling with anchors—costing £3 million and dredging. The total amount to be spent at King's Lynn is £4 million. Many hon. Members have ignored that part of the Bill, but I shall explain why they should pass it.

Mr. Illsley: Has it occurred to the hon. Gentleman that the reason why Labour Members have not mentioned King's Lynn is that there is less objection to the proposals for the hon. Gentleman's constituency? Does he think that it would have been better if the promoters of the Bill had brought forward a separate Bill dealing only with King's Lynn rather than tagging it on to the end of a Bill dealing with Immingham terminal?

Mr. Bellingham: I do not think that the objections that have been made to the part of the Bill relating to Immingham are sustainable. Why not allow the Bill to be dealt with in Committee and give petitioners a chance to put their case to the Committee? Surely that would be a democratic way of proceeding. We are talking as though this is the first Bill of its kind to have arisen for many years, but dozens of such Bills have been considered in Committee and petitioners have had their democratic right to put their objections.

Mr. Barron: Does the hon. Gentleman realise that we have little objection to the King's Lynn proposals or to those for Port Talbot because of the improvements that they will make and their job-creation opportunities? The hon. Gentleman must realise that the King's Lynn and Port Talbot provisions have been included in the Bill so that there can be a payroll vote to get what is not a private Bill passed. The hon. Gentleman is being used to push through a Bill to which there is a major objection.

Mr. Bellingham: I do not accept what the hon. Gentleman says about a payroll vote. Every Conservative Member has the option of voting; there is a free vote on the Bill.

My hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes dealt effectively and comprehensively with the part of the Bill relating to Immingham, and I support all that he said on 11 May.

The port of King's Lynn has grown considerably over the past few years. Last year its cargo throughput was 1·2 million tonnes, which was a record. Since the construction of the enclosed docks in the last century, there has been a restriction on the type and size of vessel that can enter the port. It is a tidal port and, given the restrictions imposed by the enclosed docks, the longest vessel that can enter it is 120 m, the maximum beam is 13·8 m and the draft maximum is 5·5 m.

There has been tremendous growth in the local economy because of the improvement in communications to East Anglia. We are pressing for better roads, more dual carriageways into this part of Norfolk and for railway electrification. The Minister knows well that we have been pressing for improved roads and he has been extremely helpful. About a year ago, his Department gave the go-ahead for a major new £7·5 million scheme for a flyover and dual carriageway into King's Lynn on the A10. That will cause more growth and development in King's Lynn, and the growth in port traffic will continue to increase. The restriction on the size of vessel is curbing that growth. If these works go ahead, the size of vessel able to enter the port will increase considerably from the present limit of 3,000 tonnes. The river can accommodate vessels of at least 140m in length.

Mr. Rhodri Morgan (Cardiff, West): The third part of the Bill relates to the extension of the dredging works to the entrance to Port Talbot harbour. All those who have the best interests of the steel industry in south Wales at heart very much want that to go ahead. Does the hon. Gentleman agree that it would have been more sensible for Associated British Ports to link the King's Lynn and Port Talbot provisions with the Associated British Ports (Barrow) Bill and not with a controversial Bill? Does he not think that there is something extremely mysterious in the fact that the Associated British Ports (Barrow) Bill, which is non-controversial, is standing alone, while the Port Talbot and King's Lynn provisions, which are non-controversial, are linked with the Immingham terminal provisions, which could not be more controversial?

Mr. Bellingham: The hon. Gentleman has made a forceful point. If I accepted his criticism and his fears about the Immingham part of the Bill, I should agree, but I do not. I support the case made so forcefully by my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes and supported by many Conservative Members.

Mr. Martin M. Brandon-Bravo (Nottingham, South): There are many who do not.

Mr. Bellingham: I accept that there are some who do not support the Bill, and they have the right to vote against it.

The port in my constituency has been expanding quickly. Various types of cargo go through the port—vehicles, containers, timber, steel, fertilisers, animal feed and solid fuels. Some coal is imported through King's Lynn, but it is only a small part of the cargo.

Just as there will be more facilities for importing coal, there will be facilities for exporting it. I hope that hon. Members do not forget that not long ago a great deal of British coal was exported. I look forward, as does my hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes, to the day when more coal is exported.

Mr. Hood: How can we export coal when the Government are effectively closing down the British coal industry? The Bill provides a way to bring in blood coal from South Africa, Colombia and elsewhere. The mainland industry is being destroyed, so we shall not be able to export coal.

Mr. Bellingham: Labour Members feel passionately about this subject because they represent constituencies that have many mining jobs and where mining is the life blood of those areas. I do not, however, accept their pessimism that Britain will never again be a coal exporter. The world coal market can change quickly. I remain fairly optimistic that there will come a day when we shall need facilities to export coal.

The Bill enlarges the capacity of the port of King's Lynn by bringing in a new dimension—the riverside quay—which will mean that larger vessels can come into the port. That will sustain the growth of King's Lynn. The number of jobs will increase. There will be jobs in constructing the quay.

Mr. Terry Patchett (Barnsley, East): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Bellingham: I shall press on—[HON. MEMBERS: "Give way."] The hon. Member for Barnsley, East (Mr. Patchett) will have a chance to address the House later, so I shall not give way.

The local area's prosperity will increase. I estimate that, in five years, at least another 100 jobs will be directly created in the King's Lynn docks and perhaps another 100 or 200 jobs will be indirectly created by the increased growth and prosperity.

Mr. Patchett rose——

Mr. Bellingham: I shall give way on that point.

Mr. Patchett: The hon. Gentleman has gone on at great length about the size and capacity of vessels. In a speech to the Institution of Mining Engineers, the Secretary of State for Energy declared that only the limitation of handling facilities cut imports. Is not that the real reason for the cry about "crocodile tears"?

Mr. Bellingham: I do not accept the hon. Gentleman's point. I am addressing my remarks to that part of the Bill that affects my constituency. My hon. Friend the Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes has made a powerful case for the part of the Bill that affects his constituency. If the Bill is not passed, the Opposition will effectively play a part in destroying jobs in my constituency. Norfolk is regarded as part of the prosperous south-east. I remind the Opposition that just recently unemployment in King's Lynn had increased to nearly 18 per cent., but it is now under 9 per cent. We are pushing ahead and creating more jobs. This development in the Bill is part and parcel of the growing local economy. The key to the Bill is the creation of new jobs and of prosperity.

The Bill is wholeheartedly supported by the local branch of the Transport and General Workers Union, which has told me that it will create jobs locally. Those workers greatly resent Opposition efforts to stop the Bill going into Committee, where petitioners and other objectors would have ample opportunity to put their objections. Surely the way forward is to give the Bill a Second Reading, let it go into Committee and let people with valid and, arguably, sustainable objections to put them, rather than for the Opposition to try to sabotage the Bill by voting against it, thereby destroying jobs in my constituency and others.

Mr. Geoffrey Lofthouse (Pontefract and Castleford): I am worried about the threat to the coal mining industry. I should like first, however, to comment on Calor Gas, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) referred. In the 11 May debate, the concerns of Calor Gas were acknowledged by hon. Members, including the Minister. Assurances were given by the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown)—they were cited today by my hon. Friend the Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) but he had no response from the hon. Gentleman—who said that the promoters were

"pressing the Health and Safety Executive for a definitive statement to reassure Calor that it will not lose its consent as a result of ABP's activities."—[Official Report, 11 May 1988; Vol. 133, c. 400.]

Why, after nearly six weeks and despite reminders to the Bill's promoters, has no advice been given by the HSE? Is it because the advice may have a detrimental effect on the operations and future development of Calor's facilities? The hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes seems to be well informed and involved with the company, so surely he is able to give some answers, or at least can nip out and get them.

If the Bill's promoters were truly concerned about safety, especially in relation to Calor's LPG jetty, surely surveillance radar should be installed before building commences. Calor is worried, rightly, about the presence of other ships docking, loading and unloading at the proposed new jetty, as those vessels will be very close. Is the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes aware that the stern or bow of a vessel docking at the proposed new jetty could be as little as 50m from the Calor LPG jetty and/or a gas tanker discharging? Does he realise what could happen? There could be a worse disaster than Flixborough. The hon. Gentleman is the Bill's sponsor and he should have some answers.

Mr. Hood: Does my hon. Friend, like me, find it strange that the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) threatened to resign his seat only a few years ago, when objecting to Nirex storing nuclear waste, and was worried about the safety of his constituents, yet he now promotes a Bill that could result in hundreds, if not thousands, of his constituents being blown up? Does not my hon. Friend think that the free trip to South Africa for the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes has influenced his enthusiasm for this measure?

Mr. Lofthouse: I fully agree with my hon. Friend.

On 11 May, the Minister said that the HSE was not able to deal with the proposals in the Bill, but could deal only with the risk item, which is Calor's LPG storage facility. The HSE would only be able to pass judgment once the Bill became law. If that does not sound like shutting the barn door after the horse has bolted, I do not know what does. It is not on. If the Bill receives a Second Reading, I hope that the genuine concern that has been expressed tonight will be given serious consideration by the Committee.

Mr. Michael Welsh (Doncaster, North): The Bill states that the duty of Associated British Ports is to pay due regard to efficiency, economy and safety. Does my hon. Friend consider that ABP has paid due regard to safety?

Mr. David Hinchliffe (Wakefield): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for hon. Members to be taking briefings from people in the Strangers Gallery?

Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Chair has quite a job keeping in order those who are in the Chamber. Those who are outside the Chamber have nothing to do with me, thank goodness.

Mr. Lofthouse: If I may reply to the question put to me by my hon. Friend the Member for Doncaster, North (Mr. Welsh), the promoters should be concerned about safety and the Bill should contain a provision to that effect. If large vessels are turning within 50m of a plant of this nature, that must be dangerous. That is why I should have thought that the Health and Safety Executive——

Mr. Skinner: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. My hon. Friend the Member for Wakefield (Mr. Hinchliffe) has just raised a point of order regarding the people who are sitting in the box under the Strangers' Gallery—people whom you do not recognise—passing material to hon. Members who are connected with the sponsorship of the Bill. Let us get it straight. There have been occasions when it has been made clear by the occupant of the Chair that those people whom you cannot see in the box should not write notes during the proceedings. They are prohibited from taking part in the proceedings at all times. They are not to be confused with those people who sit in another box and provide the Government with information. It may be that those outside the House will think that that is a bit cockeyed, but that is what this place is like. The Government can be given information but the Opposition cannot be given any information. I suggest that what is good enough for the Opposition should apply at all times, particularly if it happens to be Tories who are working for South Africa.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have already said that I am responsible for what happens in the Chamber. Any hon. Member is entitled to take advice, but if that advice comes from somebody who is outside the Chamber it should be as unobtrusive as possible.

Mr. Cryer: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. These are not genuine points of order. A number of hon. Members on both sides of the House wish to take part in the debate. Points of order merely delay the proceedings and make it almost impossible for me to call every hon. Member who wishes to speak.

Mr. Cryer: But there is a rule. The box under the Strangers Gallery is part of the public access to the Strangers Gallery. That is to make everybody feel at home when they reach that place. There is a rule that people in the Strangers Gallery, whether upstairs or in the box under the Gallery, are not allowed to write notes about the proceedings, or anything else. If people are seen to be writing in the box, the rule is that they should be seized by the attendants and removed. This is a genuine point of order. You implied that people could write notes and pass advice to hon. Members, but that is not the case. I asked Mr. Speaker a question about this matter. It was on the Order Paper. He made it clear to me that the rule still applies and that there has been no change.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take the hon. Gentleman's point. That is why I said that any advice that is received by hon. Members on both sides of the House—it happens at regular intervals—should be unobtrusive. I should feel more at home now if we continued with the debate.

Mr. Lofthouse: I was saying that I was greatly surprised, bearing in mind the safety hazard, that after six weeks the Health and Safety Executive had not yet investigated this matter.

Mr. Michael Brown: The hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) rightly suggested that it is important that the House should be fully acquainted with as many facts as possible. I want to give him some information. He rightly said that Calor is a petitioner. It is also a major customer of Associated British Ports. I assure him that Associated British Ports does not want to upset one of its best customers. The hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse) was correct to draw attention to the fact that there are concerns. That is precisely what the Committee stage would deal with. I assure him that Associated British Ports does not want to upset some of its best customers, Calor and Conoco.

Mr. Lofthouse: I am grateful for that information, but it does not take us very far. I should be grateful if the hon. Gentleman could tell us why the Health and Safety Executive has not yet been involved. The danger is real, and that question ought to be answered. We are debating the Bill without being given information about that matter. One wonders whether there is an ulterior motive for not providing that information to us.

Mr. Martin Flannery (Sheffield, Hillsborough): The hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) has a sublime belief in the importance of Standing Committees. I sat on the Standing Committee of a Bill for three months, as did many other hon. Members who are in the Chamber. The hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes said that we ought to allow the Bill to proceed to its Committee stage. In heaven's name, hardly a comma is altered in Committee under this Government. They rush everything through. This is clearly a Government-backed Bill and we shall not have a chance to change anything. The Government's majority is always used against us.

I do not know who the people who are sitting in the box under the Gallery represent, but we are trying to get rid of a Bill which is vicious, which favours Botha in South Africa and is trying to smash the mining industry in this country by elevating Botha and South Africa to a position that we know they should never occupy. I do not believe that the Standing Committee will be able to rectify anything in the Bill. It should be thrown out.

Mr. Lofthouse: I agree with my hon. Friend.

There will be devastating effects on the coal mining industry if ports are built to import foreign coal, to the disadvantage of our mining industry. The sponsor of the Bill is a member of the Select Committee on Energy which is investigating the privatisation of the electricity industry and its probable effect on the coal industry. The hon. Gentleman ought to tell the House whether he discussed the Bill with private coal mine owners, both in this country and South Africa. The hon. Gentleman is not listening to what I am saying and does not appear to be concerned about answering this question. I must inform the House —I am not giving any secrets away or betraying the confidence of the Select Committee, because the information has been widely published—that when the Select Committee first considered what subjects it should investigate, the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes bitterly opposed an investigation by the Select Committee of the privatisation of electricity. He did that after receiving strong representations to do so from the Secretary of State for Energy. That is what I understand. However, unfortunately on that particular morning one of his hon. Friends forgot to come to the Committee and Opposition Members were in the majority. Therefore, we took evidence and investigated the privatisation of the electricity supply industry and its effect on the coal industry.

Like several of his hon. Friends, the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes is familiar with South Africa's ability to export coal. As has been said many times, he went on an all-expenses-paid trip to South Africa earlier this year. However, the hon. Gentleman's time there would have been better served in putting pressure on the South African authorities to improve their safety standards. Is the hon. Gentleman aware that in one mining incident alone, at Kinross, 177 people died? The number of lives lost in that single accident exceeds the combined fatal accidents reported in British mines in the past five years.

The Secretary of State acknowledged the lack of port handling facilities in a speech on 13 May. In his evidence to the Select Committee on Energy on 9 March 1988, he gave as a defence the view that British Coal would not be affected by imports. In response to the questions put to him, he replied:

"we do not have the facilities in this country, they have never been developed, for handling large quantities of coal. They could not be developed quickly. The word "quickly" was omitted from a statement I made the other day. Of course they could be developed, but they could not be developed quickly. Therefore even if we could buy on the spot market the sort of quantities that are needed at the marginal price, and I doubt that, we could not actually get it into this country."

The Bill is an attempt to establish facilities quickly so that we can import coal at the expense of our mining industry.

Mr. Skinner: Before my hon. Friend leaves that point, I draw his attention to another important matter. We are running a balance of payments deficit this year of about £10,000 million. There is a real crisis because invisibles have been run down from £700 million per month to £400 million per month, which will add to the problem. There will be a balance of payments crisis, but we have a Government whose supporters promote Bills such as this with a view to importing South African coal from Rotterdam which will have Dutch labels stuck on it. We are going to have a balance of payments problem and every tonne that is imported will increase the problem. Every barrel of oil that is lost in the ensuing years will make the problem worse, yet we have a Prime Minister who talks about economic boom times being ahead. The Bill must be stopped because it will add to the problems that we already have.

Mr. Lofthouse: I could not agree more with my hon. Friend.

I understand that the proposed support will be capable of handling 100,000-tonne coal carriers or 30 million tonnes of new capacity. That 30 million tonne figure is a magic figure which has been talked about for a long time. It should solve the Secretary of State for Energy's problem and inject the so-called competition to which he referred in the Select Committee. If the Secretary of State's plans for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry are to succeed, he needs that. However, it is worth reminding the House that Britain and the European Community have rightly approved limited sanctions against the South African coal industry. Despite behind-the-scenes lobbying by those hon. Members who visited South Africa, they have not managed to persuade the Government to withdraw those sanctions.

Mr. Jim Lester (Broxtowe): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Lofthouse: In a moment.

Despite those limited sanctions, Britain imports 200,000 tonnes of South African coal each year from Rotterdam. It is disguised as Dutch coal. Does the sponsor of the Bill, if he is listening—he is again treating the House with total disregard—deny that? If not, I hope that he will join me in condemning the breaking of sanctions through the back door. Does he agree with breaking sanctions and importing South African coal? Did he have discussions about that when he went to South Africa? I have now asked him that three times. I shall give way to him if he would like me to.

Mr. Michael Brown: My position is quite straightforward. I am against sanctions.

Mr. Lester rose——

Mr. Lofthouse: I shall give way in a second.

The more answers we receive like that, the more we are led to suspect that, whatever the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes has stated in the Register of Members' Interests, he might have an interest in South Africa at some time in the future. I give way now to the hon. Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester).

Mr. Lester: The only reason I ask the hon. Gentleman to give way is that, although South Africa and sanctions are important issues, surely he agrees that the principal problem—the low price of international coal—is caused by Australian and Chinese coal? Although the question of South Africa is raised constantly—I support sanctions and want to see them work—there is also the problem of Chinese, Colombian and Australian coal being dumped on the market at far less than cost.

Mr. Lofthouse: I very much appreciate and understand that point and will come to it later. Wherever coal is imported from, it is a threat to the British coal industry.

There has been widespread speculation in the press that the City is preparing itself for a South African input into the sale of the electricity supply industry. We should treat South African investment in United Kingdom power stations with the contempt that it deserves. Again, did the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes and his colleagues have discussions, either in this country or on their visit to South Africa, about the interests, if any, of South African coal companies in purchasing shares in the privatisation of the electricity supply industry?

Mr. Tony Lloyd: As my hon. Friend knows, the hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) was invited to make his position clear last night about an article in the Daily Mail in which that paper's industrial correspondent had stated that the hon. Gentleman was one of the hon. Members who were encouraging the South African coal industry to purchase shares in the privatised Central Electricity Generating Board. I invited the hon. Gentleman to make his position clear last night and to deny that allegation if necessary, or the House would draw its own conclusions. The hon. Gentleman let the House draw its own conclusions.

Mr. Lofthouse: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for making that point.

If the Bill became law, the House would effectively have signed the British coal industry's death warrant. I wish to have no part in that. I beg for and rely on support from many distinguished people with great experience of the industry, and on in-depth research. Recently, the Institute for Fiscal Studies produced a report which no one could say was deliberately produced on behalf of those with mining interests. I do not want to bore the House too much, but the report outlines the problems that could face British Coal if imports amounted to the magic figure of 30 million tonnes that is talked about so often. Indeed, it is now considered that the figure could be in excess of that. Page 93 of the report states:

"The most important consequence of privatisation, outside the electricity supply industry is likely to be its effect on coal . . . The interdependence of electricity and coal is likely to survive privatisation, but the present price structure may not. The question is whether market forces will continue to point to a reduction in the share of the ESI's fuel input that comes from British Coal and, if so, whether the response of a privatised industry to market signals will differ from that of the nationalised ESI."

That report expresses the same worries as those expressed by people with mining interests, who have suffered in the past four years as mining communities have been completely wiped out and no alternative employment put in place.

The report continues:

"The major exporters are all looking to expand output. New producers, notably Indonesia and Venezuela, will have entered the market. And overshadowing everything is the prospect of a major expansion of US supply stimulated by the super-competitive dollar."

Mr. Alan Meale (Mansfield): Is my hon. Friend aware that of the 18 pits that have survived in Nottinghamshire, 13 would be at risk if the Bill and other associated Bills go through? That would mean a loss of 12,000 jobs directly to the industry and a loss of between 30,000 and 40,000 indirectly.

Mr. Lofthouse: Recently the Coalfields Communities Campaign published a report. It is a non-political organisation—its title may not suggest that, but I assure the House that it is. In its report it said that if 30 million tonnes of coal were imported it would result in 50,000 jobs being lost in the industry. The report also states that, by 1992, we would have only 48 collieries and 45,000 men in the mining industry who would be producing between 73 million and 80 million tonnes. If that happens, we will be faced with a completely different situation from that in 1984. Since 1984, a total of 80,000 men have been lost to the industry and the mining communities have suffered hardship, but that is not as bad as what we are facing now.

One must concede that, after the strike, a reasonable redundancy repayment scheme was made available. Most of those who took advantage of it were aged 50 and over. Today, the average age of the work force is 34. If 50,000 of that work force go, there will be no weekly pension payment to cushion the blow as there was under the old redundancy payments scheme. Surely no Government can allow that to happen without providing alternative employment.

Although Sir Robert Haslam did not agree with everything in the Coalfields Communities Campaign report, he said that it was a good report and that he agreed with a large part of it. He did not accept the figures that it had produced, but he has publicly expressed the need for some protection for British Coal. He said that if British Coal was not allowed to negotiate contracts with the CEGB prior to privatisation and it was thrown out to rely on market forces, there would be a free for all. Figures have been published in a British Coal press release to support that argument.

If the intention is short-term economic gains and if we leave ourselves open to foreign competitors simply because, in the short term, cheaper coal is available from overseas—much of that coal is subsidised by foreign Governments and mined by slave labour—our pits will close rapidly. It does not need an economist to tell us—a primary school kid could do so—that once we cannot meet national demand from our collieries, international competitors will not keep coal at its present price. We all know what will happen then.

At a recent sitting of the Select Committee on Energy, Lord Marshall was pressed about the consequences of electricity privatisation on coal. Although he would not commit himself fully, he said that 99 per cent.—I believe that was the figure—of the CEGB fuel requirements are met by British Coal. He did not believe that that would continue to be the percentage unless there was some form of protection for British Coal supplies. That was the evidence from an expert witness.

It is appropriate to refer the House to the Energy Select Committee report on the coal industry, which was published last year. I am pleased that the Chairman is present to listen to what that Committee said.

Mr. John Cummings (Easington): Is my hon. Friend aware that should the Bill be successful, the developments contained in it, along with similar developments for Liverpool and Southampton, will lead to the demise of five of the remaining six colleries in the north-east coal board area? We are seeing a manifestation of greed, the like of which I have never witnessed. It is greed to maximise profit at the expense of an industry that is producing more than it has ever done before. Does my hon. Friend agree that it is an absolute scandal that we have had to endure the hypocrisy that we have heard from the sponsors of the Bill?

Mr. Meale: Considering the chest beating that took place on the Conservative Benches during the miners strike, and considering the evidence that my hon. Friend has provided, does he agree that if any Conservative Member walks through the Lobby in support of the Bill, it will be a slap in the face for every miner in Nottinghamshire?

Mr. Lofthouse: Yes indeed.

I am a strong supporter of the Select Committee procedures. I have long complained that the Government do not take enough notice of those Committees or of the action that they recommend. I sometimes wonder whether a lot of our work is not in vain. The information received in the reports is always handy because a Select Committee has the opportunity to take evidence from witnesses with first-hand knowledge of a subject.

The report of the Select Committee on Energy published last year was not unanimous—part of it was a minority report. However, the Committee had reached a unanimous decision on——

Mr. Michael Brown rose in his place, and claimed to move, That the Question be now put.

The House proceeded to a Division——

Question put, That the Question be now put:—

Mr. Allen McKay (seated and covered): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. While we spin backwards across the whole of the privatisation of the electricity industry, the mining industry and the nuclear industry—all of which should be given more time—I wonder whether, on a private Bill such as this, those who have a particular interest in it and would have voted for or against it will be debarred from sitting on any Committee that will judge it, should the House agree that the Bill should be committed to a Committee. I would like your ruling on that, Madam Deputy Speaker, before making any decision on which way to vote.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): I am sure that the hon. Gentleman must have raised this point of order, as other hon. Members have, on numerous occasions. All those who have any interest in a Bill must, of course, always declare their interest. We are now in the middle of a Division. If there are any other points of order, it would be better for the Chair to hear them after the Divisions.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo (seated and covered): Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. Is it not the case that during such a short debate, with so few speakers, not one Conservative Member who wished to speak against the Bill has been given the opportunity to do so? It is quite wrong and most undemocratic that a closure should be granted at this time.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I have been very sensitive to this debate and to the entire passage of the legislation through the House.

The House having divided: Ayes 115, Noes 65.

Building Societies

9.5 pm

The Economic Secretary to the Treasury (Mr. Peter Lilley): I beg to move,

That the draft Building Societies (Commercial Assets and Services) Order 1988, which was laid before this House on 19th May, be approved.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): With this it will be convenient to discuss the draft Building Societies (Limits on Commercial Assets) Order 1988.

Mr. Lilley: The Building Societies Act 1986 spelt out societies' powers in schedule 8. The schedule gave a precise list of the new services that societies could undertake, but as it turned out most societies wanted to use the powers in slightly different ways from that envisaged in the schedule. Societies were therefore constantly frustrated by legal technicalities. Market conditions were also changing very rapidly, and societies had begun to make representations for extensions in their powers in a number of respects.

I announced a review of the schedule in October last year. The main conclusions were announced in my answer on 2 February 1988 to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash). Following detailed discussions with the Building Societies Association, those conclusions have been given legal form in the orders.

The orders will do two things. First, they will turn schedule 8 inside out. Instead of—as at present—banning everything except narrowly specified powers, it will permit societies to do anything within broadly defined areas except what is specifically prohibited. That will provide a more sensible and flexible regulatory environment in which societies can operate. Secondly, the orders will implement a wide-ranging extension of societies' powers to provide financial and housing-related services.

The Act was intended to provide scope for gradually extending the range of powers available to societies. However, it has become clear from societies' early experience of the Act that this step-by-step process is not really appropriate. Societies need to know the broad scope of their powers for some years ahead to make sensible long-term commercial plans. Different societies will want to exercise different powers, and each individual society will probably want to diversify into only a small number of new areas. So I concluded that the right approach was to open up a wide range of new powers now, while limiting the speed with which any individual society could diversify into new areas.

This restraint will be exercised in two ways: first through supervision of business plans by the Building Societies Commission, and secondly by easing only gradually over five years the overall limits on societies' holdings of non-traditional assets. Consequently, individual societies will be able to exploit the new powers only at a prudent pace.

There will still be restrictions on what societies can do. They will continue to provide services in the main to the personal sector rather than to companies, but the proposed measures will enable them to compete more effectively in their primary markets. Subject to certain limited restrictions, societies will be able to own or take an equity stake in a life assurance company, to take a limited stake in a general insurance company, to own or take an equity stake in a stockbroker and to undertake fund management—including management of unit trusts generally, rather than just for the provision of pensions.

Mr. Robert McCrindle (Brentwood and Ongar): In so far as building societies continue to operate as intermediaries, or even if they get involved in becoming insurance companies, what is the position regarding conditional lending? Some building societies in the past have been prepared to advance mortgages to prospective borrowers only on condition that some insurances be effected through the agency of the building society. Is anything in the orders set to confirm the position or, indeed, to reverse it?

Mr. Lilley: My hon. Friend has taken a close interest in this aspect of the matter for a long while. He will be pleased to know that the Director General of Fair Trading has said that he proposes to take an interest in the question of conditionality of services provided by building societies and, I believe, banks. So that will be covered. It will not, however, be covered by the orders that I am introducing tonight.

The other service that will be introduced is the provision of the full range of personal banking services that customers now expect.

Turning to the actual orders, the main one—the draft Building Societies Commercial Assets and Services Order—will replace schedule 8 of the Act with a completely new schedule. This new order will provide the following six broad service powers: banking services; investment services; insurance services; trusteeship; executorship; and land services.

A society will be able to provide any service within these categories unless it is specifically ruled out or restricted by other parts of the schedule. To undertake this wider range of business, societies may need to acquire new forms of asset. Schedule 1 to the draft order therefore contains provisions which will enable societies to acquire mortgage-backed securities and similar instruments; to undertake leasing and hire purchase; more readily to provide temporary bridging finance for house purchase; and to repurchase the residue of a securitised pool of their mortgages. This last measure will enable societies to participate in the secondary mortgage market.

Following on from this review of schedule 8, the Building Societies Commission will shortly consult societies and other interested bodies about making an order to permit societies to own or take an equity stake in companies involved in the acquisition of mortgages from other lenders.

The asset limits which constrain the rate at which societies can diversify will remain unchanged for the present, but it is proposed to increase these limits gradually in the future to provide societies with the scope they need to offer this wider range of services. The draft Building Societies (Limits on Commercial Assets Order), which is also before the House, proposes a gradual increase in these limits between 1990 and 1993 to the maximum extent possible within the primary legislation.

Two further orders are required to implement the conclusions of the schedule 8 review. These will be made by the Building Societies Commission, with Treasury consent, and come into force simultaneously with the rest of the package. The Designation of Qualifying Bodies Order will allow societies to invest in or support new subsidiaries. The Limits on Lending Order will, as previously announced, increase the limit on a society's unsecured lending to individuals to £10,000. These negative orders cannot be made until the orders which we are debating tonight are approved. But drafts were placed in the House Library last month, along with a summary note of the intended provisions of all four orders, so that hon. Members could be aware of the whole package.

These proposals will create a more sensible framework for societies and provide them with a clear basis for their future planning. Societies will have the freedom to develop and compete across a wide range of financial services and to provide a much more flexible and better service to their customers. If these orders are approved, I would not expect any need for such a comprehensive package of secondary legislation on this scale for some years.

I commend these orders to the House.

9.12 pm

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): The orders bring about fundamental changes to schedule 8 of the Building Societies Act 1986. They take virtually to the limit permissible under the Act the powers available to societies. They give increased flexibility and freedom and enable societies to offer a wider range of services to their customers.

It is perhaps worth recording a small note of sadness at seeing the old, trusted, familiar, heart-of-the-high-street face of the building society movement changing so dramatically as it has over the past few years. The orders accelerate that change. The trusty, stable, secure image of the building society movement, as part of the housing movement above all, is being modified rapidly before our eyes. We hope that the building societies will never become just any old financial institutions, like all the others. So we do have one or two regrets at the changes which are before us. We recognise, however, that the world is changing and that the building society movement has to change and adapt or it will lose out to less-scrupulous predators.

Before the October crash last year the building society movement was already losing out. Its market share of home lending had fallen below 50 per cent. It is now back up to about 70 per cent., but the movement faces fierce competition from banks and specialist lenders such as the Mortgage Corporation. Such lenders have readier access than the building societies to money on the wholesale market. Since October all that has become less of a problem because of the massive influx of funds into the building societies. Over the past four months they have averaged an inflow of funds of about £1 billion a month.

The movement remains large and is becoming larger. The largest 15 societies together hold about 40 million investment accounts and have about 6·25 million borrowers. We recognise the need for societies to be able to compete. Dramatic changes have been occurring and the orders will hasten more of them.

We shall not oppose the orders. Many of the measures are sensible and inevitable. It is right, for example, that societies should be able to offer proper bridging loans to people buying houses with building society mortgages. The involvement in the insurance business is a logical extension of much that has already been happening. However, we are concerned about the building societies offering customers too monopolistic a financial service. We, too, are concerned about the issue of conditional lending that was raised by the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle), and we welcome the information given us by the Economic Secretary that the Office of Fair Trading will look into that practice.

We sound a note of caution about the proposals on unsecured lending. We know that the Economic Secretary has not gone as far as the building societies wanted in that respect, and we are glad of that. The Government are right to be cautious. The level of unsecured consumer credit is rising too fast. In May, the volume of retail sales was 8·2 per cent. higher than a year before. Any thriving economy needs a healthy supply of credit, but it should not be lent at usurious rates of interest, as too often happens now. The same applies to the connected problem of rising levels of unsecured personal indebtedness. We hope that the Government will keep a watchful, cautious eye on what happens and on how cautiously the societies operate their unsecured lending powers.

We warmly welcome one positive change of recent years that has been enhanced by the orders—the issuing of current accounts and the direct competition for domestic business with the clearing banks. That does nothing but good for the consumer. The building societies have led the way in paying interest on accounts, in issuing higher-limit cheque cards and in increasing the use of high-technology banking systems. In all those respects, some building societies are beating the banks hollow, and a good thing too. It is about time some of our clearing banks earned the massive profits they have been making from domestic customers. The National Westminster bank, for instance, made a profit on its domestic business last year of £1 billion. It is about time we saw some improvements in service to justify that sort of profit.

We have one other powerful reason for supporting the orders. They make it less attractive to building societies to convert from mutuality to public limited companies. We are deeply sceptical about the rush by one society, the Abbey National, to convert and about the consideration being given to conversion by others. Certainly we welcome the change of mind that the orders and the expansion of powers under schedule 8 have brought about in some quarters.

I was interested to read in The Observer of 22 May, almost alongside a flattering photograph of the Economic Secretary, a quotation from the managing director of the Cheltenham and Gloucester building society, who had said last October that conversion was almost inevitable. However, in the light of the altered schedule 8 powers, he says:

"For a society of our size there are relatively few things that we want to do that we can't do as a building society."

That will be true for the great majority of building societies.

Our opposition to flotation is based on several principles. First, at present a society has a duty to operate in the interests of its members, investors and borrowers alike. After flotation, the interests of shareholders will be paramount, overriding all other interests. That cannot, in logic, be good for borrowers or for investors.

Secondly, building societies are remarkable and valuable financial institutions because they borrow short and lend long. That central feature of their financial operation is likely to be damaged by conversion. Thirdly, five years after conversion a plc can be taken over by anyone. Who then will protect the housing interests of borrowers?

Fourthly, after conversion, borrowers may find their mortgages being bought and sold over their heads without their being consulted. That is already happening in the operations of the Mortgage Corporation. I should be grateful for the Economic Secretary's advice on whether such an operation will be made easier for existing building societies under the orders.

Fifthly, we regret that no facility is built into the procedures for flotation for opponents to put their case to members at the society's expense. We hope that the Building Societies Commission will make it clear at the outset that it will use its powers to block conversion if proper facilities and funds are not made available to ensure that the opposition case to flotation is put to members at the same time as the directors' support for flotation.

Because of the orders, we have to ask what is gained when a mutual building society transforms into a plc, except the ability for the directors to gain executive share options. Could that perhaps be not a million miles away from the mind of the Abbey National directors? Doubtless, however, there will be other opportunities to air our concern about flotation in greater detail. The argument that clinches for us the need to reform schedule 8 is that it gives societies the flexibility they need without the new unnecessary process of conversion.

Building societies are a valuable and vital part of our national life. They are mutual societies, owned by their members and acting in the interests of their members, and primarily in the business of lending money for home ownership and providing security for small savers. Long may they continue to do so.

Mr. John Butterfill (Bournemouth, West): I welcome the orders and the increased scope that they will give to the activities of building societies. The orders will play a valuable part in increasing the general level of competition, which can only have long-term—and short-term—benefits for the consumers of their services.

I have every confidence that my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary has scrutinised these matters with his usual meticulous assiduity. I want to bring to his attention one or two points about which I have some concern. First, the explanatory note to the Building Societies (Commercial Assets and Services) Order—I am confining my remarks to that order—states:

"Article 5 varies Schedule 8 to the Act by replacing it with a new Schedule" which is schedule 5. My hon. Friend the Economic Secretary said earlier that schedule 5 replaced schedule 8 to the Act.

However, paragraph 15 says:

"parts of Schedule 8 (powers to provide services) to the Act are hereby varied so as to have effect as set out in Schedule 5 below."

That seems to imply that schedule 8 is not replaced in its entirety but is varied in part by schedule 5. However, the parts of schedule 8 to the Building Societies Act 1986 do not coincide with the parts of schedule 5 to the order. Many services set out in schedule 8 are not referred to in the order.

[Mr. John Butterfill]

Paragraph 1 of schedule 8, for example, refers to surveys and valuations of land and conveyancing services. I know that conveyancing services are dealt with in schedule 21 to the Building Societies Act 1986. One can see immediately that the two are not synonymous. I should be grateful for clarification. It is not clear to me or to some other hon. Members to what extent schedule 5 replaces schedule 8 and to what extent parts of schedule 8 will remain unchanged by the order.

My next question relates to the extension of the activities permitted under the order. It is a very broad and wide-ranging extension of powers into a number of activities in which building societies—at least in most cases—do not have an enormous amount of experience, such as banking services, unsecured lending, personal equity plans, collective investment schemes, the holding of investments and the establishment of pension schemes.

All those are very worthwhile extensions of the building societies' activities, and I have no objections in principle to those extensions. However, I am concerned that they should be properly regulated and I am especially concerned about investments, in view of some of the recent unfortunate circumstances relating to investments. We should be absolutely sure that regulation is as tight as possible. I hope that my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary will be able to assure me that the regulatory body set up by the Building Societies Association to monitor those activities will be equivalent to the other bodies that the Securities and Investments Board will be regulating under the Financial Services Act 1986 and that every possible scrutiny will be given to this particularly sensitive area.

I have a further concern about valuations. The House will recollect that there have been a number of scandals and alleged fraudulent activities relating to valuations carried out by building societies, especially when they have been connected with estate agency. I believe that this has been commented on recently by the ombudsman.

Mr. McCrindle: My hon. Friend is addressing himself to the question of surveys and valuations. Will he turn his attention to the first report of the building society ombudsman, who was set up by the Building Societies Act 1986, in which he draws attention to his lack of powers to investigate the many complaints about building society valuations? Will my hon. Friend refer to that report and to the desirability of embracing valuations within the ambit of the building society ombudsman?

Mr. Butterfill: The question of valuations has caused considerable public concern. I hope that additional powers will be given to the building society ombudsman.

I have some worries about what is permitted under the order. Under paragraph 5 of part III of schedule 5 there is a restriction on any employee of a building society, a subsidiary or associated body of which is carrying on estate agency work, whose duties include making reports on valuations or performing any other service for the subsidiary—the estate agency—or other associated body.

Clearly it would be wrong for building societies that might have two financial interests in the same transaction—especially the earning of estate agency commission—to be involved in such a conflict of interest. I should like the matter to be taken further, to include structural surveys and other matters that may be germane to whether the sale takes place. The ability to influence a sale or a purchaser on behalf of somebody providing finance could seriously prejudice the public interest and create unacceptable conflicts of interest for the employee concerned.

Given the incidence of fraud in this sector, I am more concerned that paragraph 5 of part III of schedule 5 is qualified by part IV, which deals with general powers. It gives a building society the power to arrange the performance of anything that it is not permitted to do under the preceding parts of the Bill. That commits building societies to getting other people to do things for them. One can foresee two building societies acting in collusion, with one estate agency arranging matters for the other. That is a danger from which the general public should be protected. They may not be adequately protected by the order.

The penalties in paragraph 6 of part IV of schedule 5 may not be adequate to deal with the possibility of particularly unpleasant fraud. The penalty is "a fine not exceeding level 4 on the standard scale."

I assume that that refers to the Criminal Penalties etc. (Increase) Order 1984. The maximum penalty under level 4 is £1,000. That may not be adequate, given that frauds have run into millions of pounds. Perhaps we should carefully consider whether that level of penalty is adequate.

I should like the margins by those selling foreign currency to be carefully monitored in general. Changing money has become an activity in which some people are not giving good value to the general public. I hope that my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary will give a general assurance that he will keep a careful eye on that aspect in relation not only to building societies but to all those who change money.

9.35 pm

Mr. Lilley: I am pleased that the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) has welcomed the broad thrust of the orders and most of their component parts. His motivation is slightly different from that of the Government, but there is some overlap and a community of regard for the building society movement and the importance of updating it and giving it the freedom to compete and provide services for its customers.

The hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury asked me to reply on two particular points. He asked whether the process of conversion or anything in the schedule would make it easier for mortgages to be sold over the head of the borrower once conversion had taken place. I assure him that members' agreement would still be needed under the normal rules that operate, so there would be no adverse change.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned the risk of takeover five years after conversion. The converted building society would then be no more or less likely to be taken over than any other bank of similar size and ownership structure. As a bank authorised under the Banking Act 1979—once converted, in effect a building society becomes a bank—the agreement of the Bank of England will be needed for anyone to control more than 15 per cent. of the voting rights.

The hon. Gentleman gave as his main reason for supporting the commercial assets and services order which transforms schedule 8 the fact that it would make it less attractive for building societies to convert. I should make the Government's position clear. The Government are neutral on whether any society should remain a mutual building society or should seek to convert. We have endeavoured, therefore, to remove unnatural obstacles and artificial incentives to conversion.

In the Budget, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor announced the removal of a number of tax obstacles, and this will come up before long in the Finance Bill. This measure removes an artificial incentive to convert. The hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury was right to say that some societies that felt impelled to consider conversion simply to escape from the straitjacket of the old schedule 8 now no longer felt the need to do so.

Once one has removed the artificial obstacles and inducements to convert, it is up to the members, because the members of a building society are its owners and must make the decision. The hon. Gentleman was correct to say that they should do so on the basis of full and proper information. It will be required, as the Building Societies Commission has made clear, that building societies inform their members fully and not just put facts representing and reflecting only one side of the case. I am not aware of any intention to go as far as the hon. Gentleman suggests and to require them to finance the distribution of views put forward by those opposing conversion.

In an intervention during the speech of my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West (Mr. Butterfill), my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) referred to the building societies ombudsman. I have already announced that we intend to review his powers and we hope to have the views of my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar and others on how wide they should be.

My hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West said that he is worried about whether the parliamentary draftsmen have exercised sufficient skill successfully to replace schedule 8 of the order with schedule 5. I have complete faith in the powers of the parliamentary draftsman. Article 5 says:

"The parts of Schedule 8 to the Act are hereby varied so as to have effect as set out in Schedule 5 below."

Schedule 5 is subtitled:

"The parts of schedule 8 to the Building Societies Act 1986, as varied by this order."

The original four parts of schedule 8 are to be replaced by the new four parts of schedule 5. We need not worry about anything having been lost or retained unintentionally, but within those parts different aspects have been shifted around. Matters relating to surveys and valuations are now included under the title "Land services". Personal equity plans and unit trusts are included under the heading "Investment services". Money transmission and arranging credit are included under the heading "Banking services". It is all there somewhere.

Mr. Butterfill: I am sure that the ingenuity of the parliamentary draftsman is such that he must be right, but I can find no reference in schedule 5 to surveys and valuations in the section headed "Land services".

Mr. Lilley: My hon. Friend is a page or two ahead of me. Subparagraphs (a) to (i) of the section headed "Land services" include that information. I am not a sufficiently fast reader to check that it is all there, but if it is not there it is somewhere else. If necessary, I shall write to my hon. Friend and follow up these points.

My hon. Friend referred to the fact that this is a very broad extension of powers at the same time as we are reorganising the structure of the schedule. He expressed concern that building societies may be inexperienced in many of these areas. That is true. However, it could become a self-perpetuating process. The only way for building societies to gain experience is to permit them to do so, but it is important that they should be properly supervised during that process. I think that my hon. Friend emphasised that point. We believe that, by and large, most building societies will wish to diversity into only one or two new areas at a time and to gain experience in them. If they were foolish enough to try to diversify right across the board and to take on more than they could possibly swallow, they would be prevented by the existing supervisory arrangements. The Building Societies Commission is required to vet their business plans. I do not imagine that it would accept a business plan that was not prudent and sound.

I agree that problems have arisen over investment advice. I assure my hon. Friend that, under the arrangements that obtain, investment advice supervision will be equivalent to and as tight as that in other areas that come under the aegis of the Securities and Investments Board.

I understand the point about valuations and, although it may not be correct, we can clarify that in subsequent correspondence. My hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West is concerned that building society employees may, although they are forbidden to work for the estate agent subsidiary of that building society, be nonetheless permitted to work directly for the client. I understand that that is prohibited by the fact that building societies are allowed to carry on their estate agency services only through subsidiaries and not through their direct employees.

Collusion between building societies to cross-transfer their valuations is exceedingly unlikely and I will investigate the measures that exist to prevent it. I am grateful to my hon. Friend for drawing that to my attention and, although I suspect that it is hypothetical, it is always important to investigate such things.

I shall look into the question whether penalties are sufficient. They are intended to match the offence.

On margins on foreign exchange dealing, we do not envisage building societies becoming major players in the foreign exchange markets. The provisions are to allow them to provide a service to customers who may want to obtain some foreign exchange for going on holiday, and so on. There is no direct control on margins on that. As in anything else, ultimately it is competition that is needed. By allowing more people to compete in the market, there will be more pressures to bring down the margins, and that is the important thing.

I hope that I have dealt with all the points raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth, West and by the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury who spoke for the Opposition. If I have not, or if on inspection any points need further elaboration, I shall write to them. Meanwhile, I commend the orders to the House.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

9.46 pm

Sir Philip Goodhart (Beckenham): In about six weeks, Her Majesty the Queen will visit St. Christopher's hospice in my constituency, which is celebrating its 21st birthday. Many people who have visited the hospice, which primarily looks after people who are terminally ill with cancer, have testified to the remarkable spirit—one might almost say the remarkable soul—of the hospice. It would not be an exaggeration to say that in the past 21 years St. Christopher's has become an inspiration and an example to the rapidly growing hospice movement both in this country and overseas.

The driving force behind St. Christopher's has been Dame Cicely Saunders, who celebrated her 70th birthday yesterday. I have described her in the past as a jolly saint. It is her humour, energy and faith which have inspired the place. However, it is not, of course, a one-woman show. At the moment St. Christopher's has a staff of 114 nurses who take care of the 62 beds, do the home support work and carry out much of the teaching. St. Christopher's is a teaching centre. That is why we are having this Adjournment debate.

A few weeks ago my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services announced a substantial pay award for nurses, which would cost the National Health Service £800 million in a full year. It was to be fully funded by the Exchequer. There was much rejoicing and a considerable amount of heat went out of the controversy about the National Health Service, at least temporarily. Shortly after the announcement was made I rushed round to see the Secretary of State and the Minister for Health and said, "Please do not forget the impact that the pay award will have on voluntary hospices." I am afraid, however, that the hospice movement was not included in the category that can expect full extra funding to meet the cost of the nurses' pay review.

Let us put the matter into perspective. There are 124 hospices with 2,000 beds and there are many more home care teams. National Health Service support for those 124 hospices varies from zero to 100 per cent. The pay review will cost those hospices an extra £6 million a year. The NHS provides, on average, 27 per cent. of the funds of each hospice, and St. Christopher's hospice comes pretty close to the national average. Last year St. Christopher's spent £3·33 million and received £1,052,000 from the NHS through the south-east Thames region. St. Christopher's reckons that the cost of the pay award will be £408,000, or exactly four tenths of its existing support from public funds. It is not surprising that that figure should be so high. The three most common groups of nurses employed at St. Christopher's are ward sisters, staff nurses and nursing auxiliaries. The average pay of a ward sister at St. Christopher's, with London weighting, is increasing by no less than £3,007 from £11,430 to £14,437. A staff nurse's salary will go up by £2,277 a year and a nursing auxiliary's pay will go up by £1,862 to a fraction under £8,000 a year.

What is the likely impact of that substantial increase in expenditure? St. Christopher's wisely budgeted for the increase in nurses' salaries, but obviously it could not foresee the extent of the increase that was to come. It had set aside £160,000 for extra pay, which would have been gathered in by further energetic fund-raising efforts. A long-awaited day centre will have to be postponed because the work would cost an extra £150,000. Perhaps the south-east region could be prevailed upon to increase its slice of support, which now stands at almost exactly £1 million, by perhaps £100,000 or so. If that does not happen, we are faced with the ugly prospect that, within a few weeks of the Queen visiting St. Christopher's, some beds may have to close.

What should happen? Naturally I believe that the Government should meet in full the nurses' pay award for voluntary hospices. I know that my right hon. Friend has great personal enthusiasm and sympathy for the hospice movement and I salute him for that. I am sure that he would like to be helpful. However, I expect that he will tell me that there is no extra money.

I must raise a sceptical eyebrow. The regrading process has not yet been completed and, until that happens, health authorities cannot tell with precision how much they may need or will receive. Within the global £800 million NHS settlement, I believe that there is an extra £6 million sloshing around somewhere. I note also that during recent months the DHSS has found £6 million or more for an AIDS publicity campaign which, in my opinion, is badly targeted and a faintly offensive waste of public money.

During recent weeks, to our dismay, the European Court has thrust National Health Service money into the Treasury by requiring it to extend VAT to certain areas, especially the optical sector.

I reiterate my hope that the level of financing of voluntary hospices will be considered within the NHS review. In the early days of its noble career, St. Christopher's received rather more than 50 per cent. of its income from the NHS; now it receives less than one third. I believe that 50 per cent. support is at the right level for an establishment that gives so much help to the NHS and to the people of this country.

9.57 pm

The Minister for Health (Mr. Tony Newton): I thank my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham (Sir P. Goodhart) for his kind words about me, and I reciprocate, with considerable fervour, by paying tribute to the assiduous way in which, over the years, he has supported the hospice movement in general and, not least, St. Christopher's in particular. It is barely 15 or 16 months since my hon. Friend last initiated an Adjournment debate about St. Christopher's, to which my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, South (Mrs. Currie) replied.

As my hon. Friend said, I have a strong interest in these matters and, indeed, have some connection with hospices in and around my area—especially the St. Helena hospice in Colchester, which I visited recently, and the prospective hospice in Chelmsford that is nearing completion. I wish all those concerned with the hospice very well indeed.

It is also pleasing to join my hon. Friend in paying tribute to Dame Cicely Saunders. I had not registered the fact that it was her 70th birthday yesterday, but now that I have that additional piece of intelligence, I hope that my hon. Friend will take my belated congratulations and good wishes to her. As my hon. Friend knows, she studied at St. Joseph's hospice in Hackney, where she developed drug regimes for pain and symptom control before she went on to found St. Christopher's hospice in Sydenham in 1967. It is fair to say that she is considerd by many people, and, in my view, rightly so, as the founder of the modern hospice movement. Not only has her work been copied around the world, but it has, literally, changed the face of death for large numbers of people.

St. Christopher's is by no means the only charitable organisation providing care for cancer patients. There are many other voluntary hospices; my hon. Friend has given the numbers around the country, and I have referred to one existing and one prospective hospice in my constituency.

It being Ten o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Peter Lloyd.]

Mr. Newton: For a moment I thought that I had gone out of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I thought that if what I have said was out of order, the rest of my speech is sunk completely. I am glad to know that it was simply the usual procedures of the House producing that otherwise extraordinary interruption.

I should refer also to Marie Curie Cancer Care which runs 11 homes in the United Kingdom and provides day and night nursing for cancer patients in their own homes. The Cancer Relief Macmillan Fund is becoming increasingly well known. It works very closely with the NHS and has provided the capital costs of a number of hospice projects which it has then handed over to the NHS to run. That organisation also helps the NHS with the cost of Macmillan nurses, and plays a major and important role in developing education for doctors and nurses in care of the dying.

It would be fair to say, not least as a further tribute to the work of Dame Cicely Saunders, that the combined total of the effort by the voluntary charitable sector and the NHS probably makes this country the world leader in providing much-needed care for a very important group of patients.

I wish to make one or two general observations before coming to the more specific points raised by my hon. Friend. I want to emphasise that terminal care in Britain is no longer provided exclusively by the voluntary sector, as it was for a time. The Government are firmly committed to providing a full range of good care services for people who are dying from any illness. Our initiative started in 1980, when we set up a working group of the standing sub-committee on cancer to consider the organisation of terminal care services for cancer. That working group was chaired by Professor Eric Wilkes, another widely known and respected personality in the hospice movement, who has done so much to develop it.

The working group's report stated:

"Terminal care is not a matter of new buildings or expensive equipment. It depends primarily on enlightened professional attitudes. Our objective now should be to ensure that every dying patient has access to professional staff who can provide the appropriate care."

The group's recommendation was:

"The way forward is to encourage the dissemination of the principles of terminal care throughout the health service and to develop an integrated system of care with emphasis on co-ordination between the primary care sector, the hospital sector and the hospice movement."

That report was circulated throughout the Health Service.

The Government then decided that it would be useful to bring together people from the NHS and voluntary groups to discuss how each can maximise its contribution to terminal care.

[Mr. Newton]

With that in mind, we organised with the National Association of Health Authorities a major conference in December 1985, which was opened by His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. My predecessor but one, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, opened the conference by saying:

"I would like to see every health authority drawing up comprehensive plans for providing services for those facing death. This means looking carefully at the range and type of specialist care which is needed in their district and, where possible, working with local and national voluntary groups to provide the necessary services."

By the time the conference took place, my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for Brentford and Isleworth (Sir B. Hayhoe), was the Minister responsible. In his address to the conference he said that the Health Service should make a most careful assessment of the services the voluntary sector is providing and can provide in the future, and that where the voluntary sector was fulfilling part of the need health authorities should make an adequate contribution to the costs involved.

Another speaker at the conference, one of our regional general managers, outlined practical ways in which regional and district health authorities could help the hospice movement. One suggestion was the provision of a more secure financial foundation.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham will be aware, that was followed by collaboration between the Department and the National Association of Health Authorities on a guide for health authorities on good practice in care of the dying. That was issued to health authorities in January 1987. By that time, I had become Minister for Health and it was my privilege to launch that publication, in which there is a chapter of guidance for health authorities on funding terminal care services.

We sought to buttress and support that in February 1987, with a Department of Health and Social Security circular on terminal care—HC(87)4—which asked health authorities to examine their current plans for terminally ill patients and to plan to fill any gaps, where possible in conjunction with the voluntary sector. We have asked health authorities to describe their plans for terminal care in their planning statements, which we expect to receive next month. I assure my hon. Friend that we shall be examining those with care to see whether further action will be necessary.

I have emphasised that because it sets the scene and I hope that it illustrates the effort we have already put in and the commitment that we can claim to have shown to provision for terminal care, based on greater collaboration between the NHS and the voluntary sector. I am glad to say that many health authorities are providing terminal care services of their own and are working well with the voluntary sector.

My hon. Friend is entitled to say, in a rather old-fashioned phrase, which he did not use, that fine words butter no parsnips. Good relations are important but, faced with increasing revenue costs and the problem of competing with many other worthy charities to raise money from the general public, the security of some guaranteed statutory funding for hospices would be welcome.

Hospices are essentially providing a local service, and it is right for the health authority concerned, or a number of health authorities where that is appropriate, to decide the correct level of funding for a hospice or any other voluntary services in support of local health services, according to their judgment as to the right pattern in that locality. It would not be right for us to attempt to second-guess that judgment from the centre. If we did, we would face considerable difficulties.

My next point picks up something said by my hon. Friend the Member for Beckenham and echoes something that I have said in the House in recent weeks. It seems clear that if the Government were to fund hospices in the same way as they fund health authorities—there was an element of that in what my hon. Friend was suggesting about the way in which the consequences of the recent pay award should be funded—the risk, at the very least, is that the voluntary hospice movement would lose that special voluntary factor which makes it so special and which has been such an important part of its contribution.

Having said that, I acknowledge that, although many health authorities already help hospices financially in one way or another, there are many in the hospice movement who believe that some health authorities do not give them enough. I repeat: we have told health authorities that they should be providing the full range of terminal care services, in-patient beds and home care and day care services, and that where a voluntary group such as a hospice is already providing some of those services locally the health authority should agree with it a contribution to its cost. We have asked health authorities to provide us with information about those arrangements in the planning statements that we expect next month.

It is difficult for me to go further than to repeat that statement of Government policy in my speech tonight. However, I promise my hon. Friend that we shall carefully consider the information we receive from health authorities and will assess the need for any further steps we might appropriately take in the light of the provision which health authorities tell us they are making in terms of hospice support.

I acknowledge the point made by my hon. Friend, that the nurses' pay award could affect many homes run by charities, concerned not only with terminal care but with a whole range of problems, disabilities and medical conditions, where nursing staff need to be employed. I hope that health authorities will be particularly conscious of the impact of nurses' pay on hospices' revenue costs, where there tend to be higher than usual nurse-patient ratios. I trust that health authorities will bear that point in mind when considering the provision they make from the money available to them for 1988-89 as a whole, including —as was emphasised by my hon. Friend—the very large additional sums which have been made available to health authorities for the nurses' pay award.

My hon. Friend said that, last year, St. Christopher's received a little over £1 million from the National Health Service and that of that the South East Thames regional health authority donated more than £900,000 towards the hospice's running costs. I am not sure that my hon. Friend acknowledges that in the present financial year, 1988-89, the region has already increased its allocation by 4·5 per cent. to take account of inflation, which is the same as the inflation element in the region's extra allocation from central Government. That is in itself a significant contribution to the costs of the pay award, in the same way as the 4·5 per cent. inflation element has been treated as a significant contribution to the costs of the nurses' pay award to the National Health Service as a whole. The Government have made money available to meet that part of the bill that is above that percentage.

I am glad to tell my hon. Friend, who expressed some hopes about this, that my clear understanding is that, over and above the extra 4·5 per cent. that the South East Thames regional health authority has already agreed to provide, it plans to make available this year extra money to help cover the cost of the nurses' pay award. I am not in a position tonight to put any figure on that because that must be for the regional health authority to decide. However, I have its authority to say that it plans to make an additional allocation. I hope that that encourages my hon. Friend in his efforts on behalf of the hospice.

Apart from the substantial help that St. Christopher's receives from the South East Thames regional health authority, it receives assistance from a number of health districts in the South West Thames region, most of which try to relate their funding of the hospice to the costs it incurs in treating patients referred to it by that health authority. I frankly acknowledge that, having looked at the figures, I can see some scope for—how shall I put it?—further discussion between the hospice and some of those health districts about whether their contributions adequately reflect the costs incurred. It would be unwise of me to go beyond that from the Dispatch Box tonight, but I will say that I believe that the South-East Thames region has set a good example, which I hope will be followed by other health authorities concerned with the hospice. I also hope that they will consider the matter carefully in the light of what my hon. Friend has said.

There are a number of other points that I could touch on, and a number of other difficulties that hospices have experienced in some of their financial affairs—in relation, for example, to the cost of drugs, and their dealings with the income support part of the social security system. I hope that some of the work that we are doing will enable us in due course to take steps that will be of additional help to hospices. There is, however, nothing that I can announce tonight. I think that those concerned with the hospice movement know that these are difficult and complex matters, which take time to consider and which need to be considered in a wider context—for example, that of the Griffiths review of community care and its application to income support.

I shall not speculate on any of that tonight; I shall conclude my speech by returning to the central theme which my hon. Friend has raised, and to which I have sought to respond as helpfully as I can. It is our firm policy that health authorities should take full account of the contribution made by hospices to the important aspect of providing our people with health care. While we do not feel it right to go down some of the paths that my hon. Friend has invited me to tread tonight, we strongly wish to urge on health authorities the need to take account of all the factors affecting hospices in considering the amount of financial help that they give. Not least, we urge them to take account of the sort of problems to which my hon. Friend has referred—together with the additional money that the Government have made available for the nurses' pay award this year—in considering how they should respond to those needs, not only in my hon. Friend's constituency but in all the other locations where hospices flourish up and down the country, when considering the pattern of their policy for the remainder of the year.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at sixteen minutes past Ten o'clock.

Policing (London)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn. —[Mr. Dorrell.]

9.35 am

The Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hurd): The last time the House debated the policing of London was in July 1986. Last year, the general election came in the way and there was no debate. I am glad to return to these debates in circumstances which are, at least in some respects, more hopeful than those of two years ago.

Policing in 1988 is a hard job. It always has been, and it always will be. Every day of the year, we expect our police officers to face the different consequences of human failure, anger, violence, jealousy and greed. They are backed by the uncertain protection of their uniform and their own human qualities, and we ask police officers to protect us from the daily calamities of our existence. Nothing of that has changed since 1986.

The events of 1986 still cast their shadow. The pictures from Wapping illustrated just what modern policing demands of its officers. Men and women are expected at one moment to be Dixons of Dock Green, and at the next to don protective gear against a barrage of missiles, yet remain restrained and disciplined. Hon. Members will know that the actions of some officers are being investigated by the Police Complaints Authority because of allegations made at Wapping. I cannot comment on cases under investigation, and I do not wish to give the impression that any malpractice—if it turns out that there was any—is excusable, but I emphasise that the pressure faced by Metropolitan police officers then and today should be remembered by all those of us who, often unthinkingly, enjoy their protection.

It is right to be cautious about recorded crime statistics, but it is possible for necessary caution to become unnecessary fatalism. It is too easy to treat rises in recorded crime as signs of some inevitable deterioration, while dismissing falls as quirks in the data. The figures fluctuate—we must remember that—but better figures are still better than worse ones.

I welcome the 4 per cent. fall in recorded crime in the Metropolitan police district in 1987. That does not mean that I claim that crime is defeated or that the tide has firmly turned. I am well aware that the figures for the first quarter of this year were less encouraging, but, despite the first quarter's rise, recorded crime in the 12 months to the end of March was 2 per cent. lower than in the preceding year. Having made all the cautionary points about statistics, I may say that 4 per cent. less crime in 1987 is an indicator of progress, for which the police and members of the public deserve some credit.

Overall figures can mislead. The 4 per cent. reduction masks more spectacular decreases, and increases, in particular crimes and at particular places.

The most disturbing trend was in offences involving violence. In 1987, there was an 11 per cent. increase in offences of violence against the person. Such offences still account for a very small proportion—about 3 per cent. —of the recorded crime total, but the fear they engender and the suffering they cause is especially severe. That is why the police and the courts have to concentrate on them. Crimes of violence can occur at any time and almost anywhere. That means that prevention is especially hard.

The Metropolitan police has issued guidance on ways in which members of the public can reduce the risk of attack, but we cannot eliminate that risk. We can, however, reduce it by increasing the police presence on the streets.

The additional manpower that I have authorised for the Metropolitan police has been granted with the specific intention of increasing street patrols. In 1987, the Commissioner targeted 16 divisions in London in which there was a particularly acute street robbery problem, and made a special effort to provide them with additional resources—particularly manpower. These divisions—despite having severe crime problems—performed better than average. While robbery over the rest of the Metropolitan police district rose by 17 per cent., in the 16 chosen divisions it rose on average by 9 per cent. and in three of the most difficult—Brixton, Clapham and Battersea—it actually fell. The Commissioner was right to target his resources in that way.

Not all groups of violent offences showed an increase. It was especially heartening to note a fall of 11 per cent. in the figures for rape and a small decrease in the number of homicides.

The figures for non-violent offences are more encouraging. In particular, the reduction of nearly 5 per cent. in domestic burglaries must be connected with the efforts that people are increasingly making to reduce crime in their own communities. That investment of effort—usually in the form of neighbourhood watch schemes—was reflected in outstanding local results. In Highbury vale, Holloway, between March and September 1987, two excellent watch schemes on council estates showed burglary figures 20 per cent. and 50 per cent down on the same period in the preceding year. These trends can be maintained. They are not necessarily short term. The 131 schemes in Wimbledon cover almost 44,000 households, and the number of recorded burglaries is almost a fifth lower than in 1983.

Theft of and from cars accounts for almost 30 per cent. of notifiable offences. I find that an amazingly high figure. Our cars are much more vulnerable than our homes or ourselves. We take much less trouble in protecting them, although perhaps we are changing our ways. Theft and the unauthorised taking of motor vehicles fell by 15 per cent in 1987. Like burglary, this a crime that the public can help to prevent by taking fairly simple precautions.

Levels and trends in crime vary not only between types of crime, but also between divisions. The Metropolitan police district covers an immense diversity of communities, from the tourist and financial centres of the west end and the City, through inner-city divisions, to the outer suburbs and the rural fringe. That is why it makes sense that local chief superintendents consult their communities and set local priorities to meet the varying needs of their divisions.

[Mr. Douglas Hurd]

In 1988, burglary, rowdyism and autocrime appear in the divisional objectives of divisions like Barkingside, Bexleyheath and Hayes while in divisions such as Peckham, West Ham and Hackney, robbery, drugs and violent attacks are included. The spread of the Metropolitan police district is catered for by the discretion granted to local management. That means that the concerns of outer divisions are not made subservient to those of inner city, or vice versa.

The Metropolitan police is responsible for maintaining the Queen's peace in a capital city. It is an organsation of about 40,000 people, costing about £1 billion each year. That is a huge effort and a huge resource. The Metropolitan police deserves, and I am determined that it should continue to receive, the resources that it needs, but we must be clear that those resources must be used to the best possible effect.

Let me deal with the provision of resources in a little more detail. The main resource is manpower—men and women, civilian and uniformed. Manpower accounts for about 80 per cent. of police spending. The strength of the Metropolitan police has never been greater. At the time of the last bulk intake of recruits on 6 June, the strength of the force stood at 27,786, which is a record. The figure is 5,550 higher than it was in May 1979. That means greater cost, because one cannot police on the cheap. The consequences of policing on the cheap were all too plain 10 years ago in the lowering of morale and in the number of police forces way below establishment.

The provision of proper pay for police officers has improved matters immensely. Ten years ago, forces simply could not recruit up to their establishments. Today, we have not only increased those establishments; we have provided the resources to realise them. The Met is no exception. Today, its strength is about 99 per cent. of establishment and it expects to reach before the end of the year the increased establishment that I announced in April. Provision has been made for a further 300 officers next year. That shows that we are talking not about paper figures and rhetoric but about real support for the police.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I apologise for missing the first couple of minutes of the Home Secretary's speech. I accept that he is making efforts to increase establishments and to recruit. Will he tell the House whether the problem of the retention of police officers in London has been dealt with equally successfully and progressively? The great concern of London Members is that the established force in a particular division or district may be reduced when key people leave suddenly to take up another position in the force. Policing London is difficult, and young people especially find it difficult to stay. They are tempted to go to quieter parts of the country. Is the Home Secretary confident that we are dealing with that problem, because people in London consider the retention of police officers to be one of the signs of a coherent and committed police force?

Mr. Hurd: The hon. Gentleman is quite right. We have managed to achieve record strength in the Metropolitan police despite the problem he mentioned, which is a very real one. That is why, in the Police Negotiating Board, the official side is trying to work out a reorganisation of the London arrangements to concentrate the extra resources available on retention rather than on the London allowance, which covers everyone. That proposal is in the negotiating machinery at the moment, and no doubt we shall return to the matter.

Spending on the Met has increased by 59 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79. That is a huge increase. Taxpayers and ratepayers in London strongly support that increase, but they are entitled to ask whether the money is being well used. In the foreword to his annual report for 1987, which was published earlier this month, the Commissioner wrote:

> "Quite rightly we must, along with other public bodies like education, health and social services, show that we give value for money."

In an organisation of the size of the Metropolitan police, which has a huge range of tasks, it is not at all easy to measure value for money. However, the police are beginning to do that more effectively.

Some portray the Met as an uncontrolled bureaucracy with too many expensive officers stuck behind desks. Let me give some facts to refute that. Last year, there was a reduction of 344 in headquarters staff and an increase of 752 in the number of officers on area. More than 400 additional constables were on divisions between March and the end of the year, and 13 per cent. more hours were spent on street duty by divisional police constables. There were 6 per cent. more arrests. That push of resources into the field—it is not easy to achieve—is a tribute to the present Commissioner, who has made an outstandingly good start, and to his predecessor, Sir Kenneth Newman.

People want more officers out in the streets. Street duty is up by 13 per cent. People want criminals arrested. Arrests are up 6 per cent. People want officers in their areas, not in distant headquarters buildings. The number of headquarters posts went down by more than 300, and posts on areas rose by over 750. The average division of the Metropolitan police had five to six more uniformed police constables at the end of last year than at the beginning. Civilianisation is steadily releasing officers from desk jobs. In the first two years of the manpower programme that I announced in May 1986, around 200 officers were released by civilianisation to operational duties.

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): I refer the Home Secretary to resources and the expansion of requirement. Is it not a fact that a considerable proportion of the £1 billion comes from existing ratepayers, with a national proportion from the Exchequer, to deal with the national responsibilities of the Metropolitan police? Therefore, when we change to a poll tax, persons will literally pay for the protection of persons.

Is it envisaged that a significant proportion of money will come from the national commercial property tax to pay for the protection of property? The Home Secretary is quite properly talking about value for money, but it is not at all easy for the voter who pays poll tax to evaluate it. These are important, fundamental issues, and perhaps the Under-Secretary of State will refer to them in his winding-up speech. The poll tax payer will pay a significant amount of money.

Mr. Hurd: Yes, but we do not intend to reorganise the way in which the policing of London is financed. Therefore, there will be a continued contribution from the business rate. Perhaps my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State will elaborate on that.

I was about to refer to the importance of special constables. They are not substitutes for regular officers, and they are not used to offset demands for increases in police establishments, but they are an invaluable additional resource and a link between police forces and the community. I am glad that the Commissioner has undertaken a scrutiny into the Metropolitan police special constabulary, and I look forward to hearing the results. I hope that all police officers, and also those outside London, will respond constructively to recommendations to strengthen the role of specials. I understand that there are historical misgivings about using part-time volunteer officers. If there is a lingering traditional view in some quarters that, in some way, specials are a threat and hindrance to the regular force, it does not bear examination in 1988 and should be abandoned.

I am aware also of the need to prevent the Metropolitan police from being regarded as a force entirely by itself. It is important that the best practices of provincial forces can be spread to the Met, and vice versa. We have takena big step forward. With my full support, the Commissioner invited Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary to start a programme of inspections of selected parts of the Metropolitan police. That has never happened before. The first inspection of community involvement and crime prevention branches has been completed, and we are studying its findings. Further inspections of particular areas of London and of particular functions will follow. That is an important advance in securing further gains in the effectiveness of policing the capital.

That big organisation—40,000 people and £1 billion—will always have areas in which its effectiveness can be improved, but I am sure that important work has already been done. I commend the initiatives that I have mentioned and others as examples of what the Commissioner described as efforts to achieve a force. But, of course, they are not objectives in themselves. They are improving the means to an end. The Commissioner and the police authority at the Home Office quite rightly put emphasis on the end to which resources are aimed. That is why the Commissioner has continued the priorities about force goals. I shall spend a little time on that matter, as each priority directly affects the quality of life of Londoners, and each one concerns activities that can injure or frighten people.

"leaner, fitter and better integrated"

The first priority is the reduction of criminal opportunity. The involvement of members of the public in crime prevention is the key. I have already mentioned neighbourhood watch schemes. They are the most popular example, illustrated by the striking fact that more than 1 million London households have joined them. There are professional doubters. Of course the quality of schemes varies a good deal—it is bound to vary—but the professional police assessment of the Commissioner is:

"I have no doubts whatsoever about the effectiveness of Neighbourhood Watch; my support is unequivocal".

Of course, the Government have a part to play in creating the right structures for crime prevention. The various Government-funded schemes that are available for crime prevention—the community programme, the urban programme, and the housing investment programme—are well used in London. We have just invited the boroughs of Lewisham and Tower Hamlets to become part of the first group to join our new safer cities initiative. I hope that they will give me a positive response to that invitation. They know that the Metropolitan police will fully support the programme. As the House knows, we are building on the success of our five town-Home Office initiatives in the past year or so and some excellent crime prevention work that is already under way in London.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): Does the Home Secretary agree that the safer cities initiative is actually an admission by the Government that just putting more police on the streets is not the way to solve the rising problem of crime within inner-city areas?

Mr. Hurd: I do not know whether any sensible person has ever argued that putting more police on the streets is the only way. It is not a sufficient way. It is a necessary part of it, but I do not think that anyone has argued—certainly I have never argued—that, by itself, it is sufficient. The safer cities project, with the full backing of the police, is based on the idea that we make progress by bringing together—locally and specifically—all the different agencies that can help towards the prevention of crime. For example, the hon. Gentleman knows of the Government-funded task force in north Kensington, security improvements to shop fronts and homes around All Saints road, the crime prevention shop, and better street lighting. That is just one example. There is another task force in north Peckham, employing 150 people—mostly local people—to improve the security of pensioners' homes. Once again, the police are closely involved.

But crime prevention is not concerned only with physical security. Methods of policing, which can forge closer links between officers and local residents, can be invaluable. We do not usually find a commendation of our efforts in the magazine "Time Out", but hon. Members may have read a striking article in it earlier this month, describing the system of policing the Pepys estate in Deptford and the impressive reductions in burglary and motor vehicle and street crime. Estate policing, which means a team of officers dedicated to a certain estate, has been tried in several London divisions, and the Commissioner is exploring the scope for extending it.

They are the informal police-community contacts that help to bind the police and the community more closely together. There is also a need for more formal arrangements that have been laid down by the House. I refer to the rather fraught history of police-community consultative groups in London. In the past, those who are opposed on doctrinaire grounds to any constructive contact with the police have sought to thwart the formation of such groups, and those who desire to control policing for their own ends have tried to distort their purpose. As every hon. Member knows, it has been uphill.

I am glad to say that we have now reached the stage at which all London boroughs except one—Newham—now have consultative groups. I understand that a group may soon be established in Newham. The police have persevered in establishing these groups. It must have been discouraging—they met hostility from time to time—but it is a considerable achievement for them and for people of good will in different political parties who have helped them.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Does the Secretary of State concede that the establishment of the consultative groups was foreshadowed many years ago by the policies of the Greater London council, which wished to see more democratic control of the police? The response of the police was eventually to agree to the establishment of those consultative groups, which, I am glad to say, now operate in all but one London borough. Surely the Home Secretary should give some credit to the Greater London council for the work that it did in trying to bring the police closer to the rest of the community in London?

Mr. Hurd: No, it was precisely the doctrines of the GLC —which, unfortunately, lasted beyond its demise—which got in the way of the process that I am trying to describe diplomatically. People tried to use the fact that there were to be consultative groups to assert, by the back door, political control over the policing of particular boroughs. That is what happened, and that is what has eventually been worn down. I do not want to upset what in some places is still a delicate situation, but the hon. Gentleman has provoked me into doing so. As the shadow of the GLC ceases to hang over these deliberations, we have been able to move on a bit.

Through consultative groups, Londoners can make a contribution to the realisation of the police service that they want, and the police can tailor their effort to gain public co-operation and satisfaction. I hope that that process will continue.

From prevention, I turn now to detection. Some difficult decisions are bound to have to be taken on this. Clearly the police have to set priorities because the demands on them are almost inexhaustible. That is why the Met has now introduced crime screening, a technique which concentrates detective resources on those crimes where clear-ups are most likely.

I should dispel two misunderstandings about this. First, all serious crimes are automatically investigated—none is screened out. Secondly, there is no screening out of categories of crime simply on the grounds that they are minor. There is no question of an "amnesty" on, for example, the theft of cars. What crime screening does—it is an honest and cost-effective way of dealing with the problem—is to divert effort away from crimes where a solution is unlikely, to those where the chance of a conviction is higher. That is bound to create occasional disappointment if crimes are not followed up because there are insufficient leads. However, that is better than going into a whole series of mechanical investigations which will not lead anywhere, when the resources—the police officers involved—could spend their time solving, preventing and detecting crime.

Tucked away on page 52 of the Commissioner's report is the appalling statistic that assaults on officers on duty rose by a third in 1987. That fact should be in all our minds because officers continue to perform their duties in a professional manner in such circumstances. That is an impressive testimony to the force.

Government and public must work together to clean violence out of the atmosphere of London, because I think that we would all agree that violence is the worst form of pollution. We cannot allow this city to degenerate to the level of, say, Los Angeles, New York or Miami. That is why we have asked the House to approve changes to the laws on firearms and offensive weapons. The use of knives in crime in London, and elsewhere, remains unacceptably high.

I need not rehearse the discussions that we have had on the Criminal Justice Bill, except to say that, when the Bill completes its stages, as I hope it will next week, it will be an offence to have any knife except a folding pocket knife in a public place without good reason. The onus will be on the possessor to show that he has a good reason. That will make the job of the police easier in dealing with people they find in possession of knives. It means that people who casually carry knives should take note that they will no longer be able to evade the law; they should leave knives at home.

I turn now to another form of violence——

Mr. Corbyn: Will the Secretary of State give way on the issue of knives?

Mr. Hurd: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman once more, but that is his ration.

Mr. Corbyn: In that case, I am deeply grateful to the Home Secretary. Like everyone else, I welcome any attempt to reduce the number of knives that are carried in public because they can be used for crime. Has the Home Secretary considered whether there is any possibility of reducing the number of outlets that can sell open or sheathed knives; is he prepared to introduce any regulations for the curtailment of such points of sale, or to follow up those people who buy large quantities of those knives for later private sale?

Mr. Hurd: I was generous in giving way to the hon. Gentleman for a second time. As only four Labour Members are in the Chamber it seemed reasonable to give him a second go as a reward for assiduity. Of course we have looked at that possibility. We have adopted it in respect of certain types of martial arts weapons, and under the Criminal Justice Bill the sale of such weapons will be outlawed. However, we have not adopted it for the wider range of knives—that is the problem—for which there are perfectly legitimate uses. It would be difficult to find a way of restricting such knives at the point of sale. Therefore, we have turned, I believe with the support of the Opposition, to operating on possession in a public place.

I turn now to racial attacks. I know that the House has always wished us to concentrate on them, because they are a particularly ugly form of violence. A year ago, the force adopted a new policy and new guidance on the recording and monitoring of racial incidents, and many divisions have made racial attacks an essential priority. The increase of 26 per cent. in racial incidents in 1987 has been at least partly attributed to the encouragement which the police have given the community to report incidents, and arrests have increased by 28 per cent.

As the hon. Members for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) and for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) will know, in Newham a dedicated squad has been established to counter such attacks. In Newham and Ealing, and recently in Redbridge and Tower Hamlets, extensive campaigns have been mounted to provide information in different languages, advice on reporting racial incidents, and simple measures to avoid them. The training for new recruits emphasises the importance that the force attaches to tackling racial incidents.

Organised crime often hits the headlines, and it is right that it should do so because it poses a particular threat to society. The various forms of organised crime, particularly drug trafficking and robbery, must be given high priority. I hope that the new confiscation provisions in the Criminal Justice Bill will help in that effort.

Policing the Underground is the responsibility of the British transport police; but the Commissioner and I know there is considerable public conern about crime on the Underground. I have discussed this with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, and he has undertaken a number of measures to improve policing on the Underground. I am especially concerned, as is the Commissioner, about the need to ensure that, although there are two forces, they work so closely together that there is no effective division between them.

I have been into this issue carefully in recent months, and I believe that liaison is generally excellent. I hope that hon. Members will share with me their impressions on that issue. When I opened the new Uxbridge police station the other day, I was impressed to find a British transport police officer serving there in liaison and on attachment to the Metropolitan police station to ensure the total co-ordination of police operations dealing with crime in that busy part of the Underground.

Neither the police, nor we in this House and the Government should or can forget the victims of crime. They are one of the Commissioner's priorities. We have shown our commitment to victim support through a substantial and expanding programme of funding for local schemes, which will rise to £4 million a year by 1989-90. Several London schemes are taking part in special projects, funded from this source, to look into the needs of the families of murder victims and victims of racial attacks, in close co-operation with the Met and other agencies. The police have excellent relations in London with the many victim support schemes. They have made special efforts in the last few years to provide a sympathetic service to victims. That includes the provision of eight suites for the victims of sexual offences, five of which are operational.

The final target of the Commissioner's strategy is the maintenance of public tranquility and the policing of public disorders. That is one of the hardest areas of policing in London. Whatever tack the police follow, they are sometimes criticised. If they police too lightly, the atmosphere in our streets can become insecure and intimidating; if they police too heavily, young people in particular will complain of aggressive policing. It is satisfactory that major public disorder in London has mercifully been less frequent recently, but we should not be complacent. The levels of minor disorder in London are still unpleasantly and uncomfortably high, even though, through a lot of hard work by many people, we have managed to avoid a repetition of the disastrous riots of 1981 and 1985.

Mr. Paul Boateng (Brent, South): Will the Home Secretary give way?

Mr. Hurd: I have been quite generous in giving way. I do not think that the hon. Gentleman quite merits it. Of course, that will not prevent him from speaking in the debate and I shall conclude so that he and others can do so.

Mr. Simon Hughes: I am surprised that the Home Secretary has not mentioned alcohol. One of the threats to tranquillity and the preservation of security, is the enormous amount of crime and vandalism occasioned in London and elsewhere because people drink too much and then misbehave. On a Saturday night in the Old Kent road, the entirely sober citizen has to run the gamut of hordes of people spilling out of pubs, having had far too much to drink, and police vans with sirens racing up and down as if it were an American inner-city highway. Will the Home Secretary tell the House what can be done in London to make sure that alcoholism is reduced and security increased?

Mr. Hurd: The hon. Gentleman is perfectly right to say that far too high a proportion of crimes in London and elsewhere are committed by people whose natural self-control has been destroyed or weakened by drink. That is particularly true of the young, and it is certainly becoming a substantial problem. It has always been a problem, and it is now becoming more substantial. That is why, in the Licensing Bill, for example, while permitting adults to have a glass of beer or wine in the afternoon, we are tightening up on under-age drinking. That is why we are looking at the powers available to licensing justices and the police to clamp down on particular places—not necessarily pubs, as supermarkets are one of the main sources of this stupid alcohol abuse—so that the existing powers can be used more effectively to solve specific problems.

We shall certainly need to return to that subject. I agree that it is not peculiar to London; it is a national subject. We have to move fairly cautiously not to appear hypocritical or over bossy. The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) is certainly entitled to draw attention to that subject, which requires a response from the Government, law makers, parents, teachers and all those who can influence people towards sensible rather than stupid drinking.

Mr. Tony Banks: This is an important matter, and while we have the Home Secretary at the Dispatch Box it is useful to direct his mind to the issue. I have the leave of the House to introduce a ten-minute Bill on the labelling with health warnings of all alcohol products for consumption. There has been some demand from hon. Members from all sides of the House for control on the advertising of alcohol products. Do any of those proposals appeal to the Home Secretary?

Mr. Hurd: I am not sure that those particular proposals appeal to me, but my right hon. Friend the Lord President chairs the ministerial group which the Prime Minister set up to examine all those proposals, and he is looking particularly at the proposals of Lady Masham's report on the subject; the Government will reach conclusions about them.

I do not think that Opposition members would argue that it was easy to get the balance right. We do not want to tip over into bossiness, which would simply antagonise people and not advance the position at all. We cannot avoid the need to steer people away from the stupid drinking which undoubtedly lies at the heart of a good deal of minor and major crime.

There are a number of matters that I have not mentioned, because we have other occasions to discuss them. I have not mentioned the work of the Metropolitan police against terrorism, because we shall be discussing our efforts against terrorism in the next Session. I have not talked about its work with schools, although I believe that it is crucially important. I have stuck to the main priorities mentioned by the Commissioner, which I believe are the right ones, and I fully support the goals that he has set.

The right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) has been speaking on these matters to the electors of Kensington in the past few days. I expect that we may get the same analysis from him today, and I find it particularly confused. The electors of Kensington may not have heard the old gospel. So the new gospel may appear convincing to them. But to those of us who have heard the old gospel, the new gospel does not make very much sense. We remember when it was the Labour party's view that the Prime Minister was responsible for crime because she had created poverty and unemployment. Now the right hon. Gentleman is saying that she is responsible for crime because she has created prosperity and affluence.

In the old gospel, the Labour party believed that the police were responsible for many of the problems in London and therefore should be treated with hostility and at arm's length.

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): Will the Home Secretary tell me when I said that the police were responsible for crime in London?

Mr. Hurd: I am not saying that the right hon. Gentleman said that. The hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) referred to the GLC. The whole tradition of GLC thinking, which we easily can document from the past, was precisely that the police were part of the problem and not part of the answer. We have constantly heard that theme not from the right hon. Gentleman but from his predecessors. There are hon. Members present today who know that to be perfectly true.

Mr. Harry Greenway (Ealing, North): I am grateful to my right hon. Friend for giving way. The House should know that, in Ealing, the Labour councillors have always refused to sit on the police consultative committee. But they spent £600,000 on what is as much an anti-police committee as that conducted on the GLC by the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng).

Mr. Hurd: Many of my hon. Friends could corroborate what I have said; it is perfectly true. The right hon. Member for Sparkbrook is now trying to make up for the years of neglect and hostilty towards the police. But he does not seem to have told the London Labour party, which continues, in vestiges, to obstruct. I mentioned the borough of Newham and the consultative groups. In several areas it continues to obstruct the formation of neightbourhood watch schemes, the putting up of signs and so on.

Mr. Spearing: Will the Home Secretary give way?

Mr. Hurd: No. I have given way to the hon. Member twice.

Mr. Spearing: No—only once.

Mr. Hurd: I stand by the main point that I am making, that vestiges of the London Labour party have not received the new message.

I welcome the new message, because I have set out to drain the politics out of policing issues. I welcome the fact that in most parts of the country, we have made substantial progress. We have made some progress in London. We are draining the venom out of some of the issues. The very sensitive reaction from the small number of Labour Members here today shows the truth of that. They have a considerable way to go, as I think all Londoners understand.

Mr. Spearing: I should be grateful if we could get away from the venom that the Secretary of State has mentioned. Will he accept that whatever may have occurred in the past, the protracted discussions, which have now been concluded, in the London borough of Newham to set up the statutory consultative group will produce the sort of group and the sort of debates that he and I, and my hon. Friends, will welcome? Therefore, Newham can now be excluded from his strictures.

Mr. Hurd: I know that the hon. Member has worked hard in the direction that he favours, and I pay tribute to him for that. I am not complaining about him, but he knows that in the London borough of Newham, part of which he represents, there have been precisely the elements, with precisely the message and attitudes, that I have described. That is one reason why the process has taken so painfully long.

This is the first debate since the new Commissioner took over from Sir Kenneth Newman. In an organisation the size of the Metropolitan police force, expected to perform an ever more complicated range of duties, there will occasionally be weaknesses. We require our police to be managers, accountants, personnel officers, social workers, detectives and comforters. They are committed, across this huge range of duties, to the highest professional standards, and a single misdeed by one officer can tarnish, for a moment, the reputation of his or her 28,000 colleagues. That is why the Commissioner, with my backing, is committed to dealing firmly with all cases of misconduct.

There is an absolute need to maintain the highest professional standards. Whatever our other disagreements, we can all agree on supporting the impressive efforts that the police carry out in London to do that. It is a tribute to the Commissioner, the 28,000 officers under his command, and the 13,000 civil staff that, in the difficult circumstances that I have described, and that he describes in his report, they are striving with increasing success to deliver an increasingly efficient and effective service to the people of London.

Mr. Roy Hattersley (Birmingham, Sparkbrook): The Home Secretary addressed us for a little less than 50 minutes. I make no complaint about that. As what passes for a police authority in London, he has the duty, as well as the right, to give what amounts to a report to the House on the crime in the capital over the past year and the prospects for policing in the next. However, he might have spent just a little of those 50 minutes, or have added a few minutes to them, by saying something about the reasons for the causes of crime inside and outside London. He gave an analysis of crime in the capital but said not a word about why crime is here and why it has increased over the years, apart from a single sentence in refutation of what I said last Thursday—I am pleased and gratified that the Home Secretary described it as likely to impress the electors of Kensington. We had nothing whatsoever about why crime has been steadily on the increase over the past decade.

Mr. John Wheeler (Westminster, North): And before.

Mr. Hattersley: Yes, but not as fast as in the past decade.

I have an explicit point to make about the Home Secretary's allegation about my right hon. and hon. Friends. When challenged to give examples, he said, rather feebly, that it could be easily documented. If it can be, what a pity that he did not bring with him a document which would have given him one example. The most recent example of the attitude of hon. Members towards the Metropolitan police comes from the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman), who has spoken in support of ticket touts, many of whom are operating illegally. That is one example, and no doubt civil servants will now run around in the next four hours to find an example that the Under-Secretary can give in the other direction at 2 o'clock.

As we are on to the trivial matters raised by the Home Secretary, I hope that when the Under-Secretary tells us of the assaults by the GLC on the Metropolitan police, he will also tell us whether, in the immortal word used by the previous Home Secretary, the right hon. Gentleman proposes to "disown" those members of his party who support illegal action. Does he propose to disown the hon. Member for Billericay, who has supported ticket touts, who often are acting illegally?

I shall now deal with more serious matters than those raised by the Home Secretary. It is necessary to say something about the causes of crime. I do not doubt that two of its principal causes are unemployment and poverty. Nor do I doubt that those causes are particularly potent here in the capital, when grinding poverty in some parts of the city exists cheek by jowl with great affluence. Nor do I doubt that an additional cause, and one that makes it difficult to attack the symptoms, is the physical condition of the places where many London citizens live. The condition of London estates, the dilapidation of tower blocks and the absence of adequate lighting could be improved by additional public expenditure, but they have been ignored or neglected by the Government, who have even positively prevented such improvements.

On the other hand, and this is the point to which the Home Secretary was kind enough to draw attention, I equally have no doubt that a new cause of crime, which is, according to the Chief Constables' Association, a new form of crime—the crime committed by the affluent young—is the result of values that are increasingly fashionable in society and which have been advocated and encouraged by the Government. A Government who have spent almost a full decade extolling the virtues of getting rich quick, of abandoning responsibility for other people's health and housing, and making a profit out of medical and community services, ought not to be surprised when some young men translate that philosophy into the belief that they have the right to do whatever they choose on Saturday night, as long as they pay for the damage afterwards.

Like the Prime Minister, those young men believe that there is no such thing as society, only individuals. Anyone who has seen on television young brokers, bankers and commodity dealers celebrating a financial killing in the City wine bars must realise two things. The first is that those young men are the direct product of a society that the Government have created.

Mr. Terry Dicks (Hayes and Harlington): They were born when you were in control, you berk.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Harold Walker): Order. I hope not to have to listen to the use of that word in the Chamber again.

Mr. Hattersley: I do not want to offend your ears by using the word again, Mr. Deputy Speaker. When I am talking about hooliganism being the direct product of Conservatism, the fact that a Conservative Back Bencher uses a word that you and I consider improper, but no doubt is the common parlance of his normal conversation, illustrates my point better than I can illustrate it with second-hand examples.

I was saying that those young men whom we see on television celebrating financial killings in the City wine bars are clearly the product of the Government's philosophy, and in philosophy and spirit they are not very different from the upwardly mobile hooligans who drive out from London on Saturday nights and tyrannise home county market towns. I have little doubt that often they are the same people.

In short, a Government who base their philosophy on Mr. Ivan Boesky's philosophy that there is nothing wrong with greed ought not to be surprised when one of its byproducts is an intolerable increase in the crime rate. The Government exalt the City of London, but when so many of their friends and supporters there are prosecuted, allegedly for trying to get too rich too quickly, we must not be surprised if that sort of idea becomes contagious. It simply cannot be a coincidence that crime increases under this Government; the Government have created the climate in which it breeds.

Yesterday at Question Time, whenever the Home Secretary said anything remotely enlightened about race relations and immigration, he was heckled, chivveyed and chased by mutterings and mumblings from his Back Benchers. If that is the philosophy and ethos that Tory Back Benchers create, should we be surprised when there is an increase in crimes of racial violence and racial attacks?

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): I am fascinated by the right hon. Gentleman's thesis that all the increases in crime can be laid at the door of the Government, whom I support. As in my judgment the largest single factor in the increase in crime is drunkenness, will the right hon. Gentleman give evidence of where the Government advocate getting drunk?

Mr. Hattersley: I was about to give another example of the Government's behaviour. They give brewers what they want by extending licensing laws——

Mr. Wilshire: That is nothing to do with it. One can get drunk without going to a pub.

Mr. Hattersley: The hon. Gentleman says that that is nothing to do with it; the ability to drink on Sunday afternoons has no influence on Sunday afternoon violence. The Government gave brewers the licensing laws that they wanted and said that if we were patient we would soon hear their proposals for preventing the abuse of alcohol and the increase in crime that comes from it. That is an exact example of the Government giving in to vested interests without caring whether it affects the crime rate.

Mr. Boateng: I regret that the vagaries of London Transport prevented me from hearing the Home Secretary expressing his concern about racial harassment. I am glad that he did so and I am aware of his concerns about it. A number of Labour Members went to see the Commissioner of Police only the other day precisely to reiterate our concerns and alarm at the 26 per cent. rise in the incidence of racial violence in the capital.

Does my right hon. Friend agree that not only the police but all of us have an important role to play in creating a climate in which there is no room in our communities for those who engage in racial attacks? A responsibility falls on politicians to set the tone and on local authorities to adopt a multi-agency approach to the issue. Does my right hon. Friend agree that it is not enough simply to talk about it and that we must apply the resources to address the problem?

Mr. Hattersley: I agree with my hon. Friend. If the immigration policy of this country has at its root the suggestion and implication that a few more Asian husbands entering the country is a bad and dangerous thing, it is bound to breed a climate in which the far, dangerous and unacceptable end of the philosophy turns into attacks on Asians who are already here.

I move from what I regard as the only possible conclusive explanation of why crime has continued to increase to discuss and describe the assault on its symptoms, which was the burden of the Home Secretary's speech. He spoke explicitly and specifically about the two measures, relating to knives and guns, that he has taken during the lifetime of this Parliament. He was kind enough to say that the Opposition had facilitated the passage of the parts of the Bill that reduced the prospects of knives being employed and freely sold for the wrong purposes. Of course we did, and we similarly supported his attempts to reduce the damage and death that might be caused by the improper use of guns. The problem that the Home Secretary had over the Firearms (Amendment) Bill was not with Labour Members but with Conservative Members. A Government with a majority of over 100 who have such problems with their own supporters cannot claim to be competent in managing their business, and certainly not competent in producing the right sort of Bill.

Clearly, the crime rate in the capital is causing its people increasing apprehension—greater than at any time this century. I do not think that we should be surprised at the concern that has been expressed, because, despite the marginal improvement in the figures, which I shall discuss with the Home Secretary in a moment, crime in London continues at a terrifying rate. I know that the Home Secretary says that overall, year on year, there was a marginal reduction, but he conceded that it has been a bad first quarter this year. I hope that he will agree that the claims for a marginal reduction are based on the number of notified crimes. The problem with that statistic is that a large proportion of the crimes committed in London are not being notified because of the policy of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Hurd: The right hon. Gentleman is right; the figures, by definition, are for recorded crime. As the British crime survey showed, a substantial body of crime is not recorded, but that has always been so. My impression—this is also the impression of the police—is that the proportion of crime getting on to the books is increasing. As we increase police numbers and improve police relations with the community, the proportion of crimes such as sexual crimes, which previously might have been kept hidden, getting on to the books is increasing. I turn the right hon. Gentleman's point in the other direction.

Mr. Hattersley: That may be the Home Secretary's impression, but it is not mine and it is not borne out by the facts. I shall give one of the reasons why I believe him to be wrong. Crime screening, which the Home Secretary endorsed at Question Time two months ago, is causing great concern. It is a policy whereby the Metropolitan police say, "Short of resources as we are, there are certain kinds of crime that we cannot respond to quickly and there are some crimes that we cannot respond to at all." The net result, apart from its effect on relations between police and public, is that people say, "Since they will not come round even if we phone them and since they believe that this is the sort of crime that goes on round here and that there is nothing they can do about it, there is no point in reporting it." I believe that that attitude has led to a fundamental change in the statistics.

Even if the Home Secretary's guess is right and the evidence as I have tried to describe it is wrong, we have had a bad first quarter, and in some areas there have been substantial increases year on year. Robbery, racial attacks and offences against the person, including assaults and woundings, have increased. Those problems are matters for great concern, not complacency.

The clear-up rate has not improved at all; it is exactly the same this year as it was the year before. [Interruption.] The Home Secretary is producing more figures out of the hat, but I shall rely on the Commissioner's figures rather than the political judgment of what the Commissioner should have said.

It is extraordinary that, years after it was claimed that more policemen were being devoted to the task of crime prevention and detection, that they were being put on the beat and that civilians were being used to ensure that the police were used for their primary task, the clear-up rate has not improved. Again, that is in part why the Commissioner introduced what he called graduated response or crime screening—a system of not replying to crime calls immediately and not replying to some complaints at all. The phrase "crime screening", which has slipped into jargon, is a decision to take no action against some offences and to give such low priority to others that it amounts to no action.

The police and community must work together to combat crime. I can think of nothing more likely to undermine people's faith in the police than somebody phoning the police because an offence has been committed but being told when a reply is eventually obtained, "This is not something to which we give high priority. If you live in this area this sort of thing is bound to happen. We do not have the resources to deal with these crimes."

In his annual report, the Commissioner said:

"Simply we must decide at a Force level where the priorities lie and concentrate upon them. We cannot meet every demand and make every demand a priority."

I have some sympathy with the Commissioner because I believe that he is short of manpower. I hope that the Under-Secretary will say, according to the Commissioner's analysis, exactly how short of manpower the Metropolitan police are. The assistant commissioner for personnel and training, Mr. Sutton, wrote to me about that subject in December last year. The Home Secretary said that force levels are now almost up to full strength. In December they were 400 below the full establishment of nearly 28,000, which is as near to being at full strength as a large force can probably be at any one time. The assistant commissioner for personnel and training said in his letter:

"force levels ought to be judged against the 1986 judgment written into the annual report that an extra 4,000 men were needed to meet basic day-to-day policing demands and increasing workloads."

In 1986, the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis believed that 4,000 additional policemen were necessary. As I understand the additions that have been obtained and approved since then, and as I understand the confirmation of those decisions, as descried by the Home Secretary, the force level has increased by about 1,600. That means that the Metropolitan police are still 2,500 men short of what they need if they are to fulfil their responsibilities.

I emphasise again that if the Metropolitan police are so short of manpower that they cannot meet many of the calls on their services—which they may not regard as high priorities but that people who have had minor offences perpetrated against them certainly regard as of the highest priority for them—the loss of faith and confidence in, and respect for, the Metropolitan police will have an appalling effect on the proper relationship between police and people.

If the Commissioner believes what he says, and I am sure that he does, about the importance of that relationship, he must go out of his way to attempt to improve what he called a "steadfast confidence in the style of policing"

in the capital and to convince many people, who now believe that they are neglected, that they will not be neglected and that their calls on the police will be dealt with at the first possible opportunity.

I have some sympathy with the Commissioner when he says that existing force levels make it impossible for him to meet all the demands made on him. The Commissioner lays the blame for that fairly and squarely on the Government. He says in his report:

"it is difficult to impact violent crime significantly with our present resources and, simultaneously, to maintain an adequate standard of service across the full spectrum of other responsibilities."

I have no doubt that that is right, but I was deeply depressed by one of the Home Secretary's responses to the dilemma, as revealed last Thursday in his speech to the House. He spoke about compulsory identity cards as a means of reducing crime. Inevitably that proposal received a great deal of publicity. I am opposed to compulsory identity cards. It involves a denial of civil liberties that I regard as intolerable. My main objection to the flotation of that idea is that it does not have a chance of being implemented. Not even this Government would introduce such a measure. It is an alternative to serious thought about how crime in London can be reduced. At its best it is a counsel of despair. What we want, particularly from the Commissioner, are not headlines but action, and that action has to be encouragement of the police and people to work together.

My basic thesis is that for the police and people to work together the police must be seen to be doing the job that the people want them to do. I want to pursue for a moment how capable the police are of performing that task in the light of their present manpower shortages. I have already asked the Under-Secretary about total numbers, about the 1986 estimate that 4,000 more police were needed and about the calculation that fewer than half of them have been recruited. I want to ask him another question, which I understand applies to London and I know applies to other police areas. I shall ask both questions together and perhaps the Home Secretary will answer them at the same time.

Do more men necessarily mean more policing? Does an increased establishment automatically mean more police hours?

I am told by some authorities outside London, and I suspect that it is true of the capital, that one of the net results of the extra recruitment has been a massive reduction in expensive overtime. Although there are more men on the force, there are no more policemen on the beat or anywhere else, because policing hours have not been changed by the much-vaunted increase in recruitment. If the Home Secretary wants to answer both those questions now, I shall give way. Alternatively, the Under-Secretary of State might like to reply later.

Mr. Hurd: I shall answer the right hon. Gentleman's first question and leave the second one to my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary. The right hon. Gentleman will want to be fair about manpower in London. A constraint on manpower in the Metropolitan police force has not been imposed by me for some time. I have been increasing the establishment ahead of what the Metropolitan police, despite all their recruiting efforts, have been able to match. The right hon. Gentleman was perfectly right that when he received that letter last December the deficit was 400. It is now below that figure. We are now approaching the time when the Metropolitan police will have managed to recruit and maintain the force up to the level that I fixed, so we have to consider the force level for the future. In the recent past the constraint on manpower was not imposed by me.

Mr. Hattersley: I take the Home Secretary's point, but I hope that when he has time to consider it the Under-Secretary of State will deal with the direct point that although in December 1986 the assistant commissioner for personnel and training said that, to fulfil the task adequately, 4,000 men were needed, only 1,600 of those additional 4,000 men have been recruited. It is difficult not to conclude that the officers and the Commissioner and his staff believe that the estabilishment is too low. I hope also, because the two questions go inexorably together, that the Under-Secretary will tell us how my analysis of police manpower applies. I fear that the reduction in overtime has been so great that, in terms of men at work and hours of policing, the increase in London, and outside it, of available police time has been not nearly so great as is sometimes suggested.

Mr. Spearing: On an associated topic that I hope to raise in the debate, but it would be appropriate to raise it now, is my right hon. Friend aware that because of the misguided value-for-money policy, limitations have been placed on vehicle mileage? When my constituents have phoned the police about a certain matter that is not considered by the police to be of sufficiently high priority they have been told that insufficient mileage is available and that the police have run out of their mileage ration. Is not the Government's value-for-money attitude counter-productive in public relations terms and in every other aspect?

Mr. Hattersley: That is another example of the crime screening policy that I was astonished to hear the Home Secretary fully endorse when I asked him about it two months ago.

To respond to what people need is an essential element in obtaining their co-operation. I want to see a partnership and co-operation between the police and the public. I know that that is important to the Home Secretary, who would never find himself totally at home in the run-of-the-mill political battle that portrays the Labour party as violently anti-police. I make it absolutely clear that I want to see co-operation between individuals and the police in the schemes that the police may propose: the safer cities initiative, crime watch schemes—I am a member of such a scheme—and co-operation between the people's representatives and the police.

I shall continue to argue about the importance of an elected police authority that has no day-to-day control over police operations but is able to guide the police on the priorities of the people for whom they provide protection. My reason for wanting such an authority is that without it I believe that there will never be the co-operation between police and people that I want to see. I remember very well the days of the watch committees outside London. They were considered to be not a Red revolution but a simple, sensible practice. Watch committees that could forge a relationship between police and people would be right both inside and outside London. As with all other aspects of policing, they would make possible the most important ingredient: a successful partnership between police and people.

I want the consultation groups to prosper. The reason why they are beginning to take hold is that the Home Secretary—like his predecessor—has begun to give them some marginal functions. The more functions such groups have the more they are likely to achieve the purpose that the Home secretary wants.

Mr. John Bowis (Battersea): Will the right hon. Gentleman acknowledge the Commissioner's regret that, although there are consultative groups in the boroughs of Brent, Ealing, Hackney, Haringey and Lambeth, the majority party in each of those boroughs—the Labour party—does not take part in them? Will he tell his hon. Friends that?

Mr. Hattersley: I should like them to take part, and if the hon. Gentleman wants me to repeat that, I am happy to do so. However, I understand why people are reluctant to play a part in organisations that they believe have inadequate power and purpose. I repeat that the greater the real powers given to such groups the more likelihood there is of people with real concern for the community's welfare taking part in them.

I have gone on for almost two thirds of the very long time that the Home Secretary took to make his speech. In London, we want a proper partnership between police and people. There will be no lasting or significant reduction in crime rates until that happens. The Home Secretary deludes himself if he believes it will ever come about while the police in London are so savagely restrained by the cost limits he has imposed on them and by their inability to perform all the tasks that the people of London want them to do.

More importantly, even when the police have the manpower, facilities and resources they want, crime in this country will increase until we encourage a different standard of values, based on the needs of the whole community. The Government are incapable of encouraging such a standard, so crime will go on increasing until the Government go.

Mr. John Wheeler (Westminster, North): In due course I shall refer to some of the points made by the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) but I must say first that he should be awarded nought out of 100 for his knowledge of criminology. He, alas, has little real understanding of the causes of crime. He has a long way to go. Should he remain with us in his present capacity for a little longer, he may well profit in the course of his journey.

This is the first debate on the Metropolitan police under the commissionership of Sir Peter Imbert, who succeeded Sir Kenneth Newman in August 1987. It behoves the House to pay a warm tribute to Sir Kenneth for the excellent service that he gave the people of London. We shall look back on his commissionership with gratitude in the knowledge that he set the structure and administration of the force in good order. I know that Sir Peter intends to carry on that policy and ensure that the force succeeds in its ultimate objectives.

The right hon. Member for Sparkbrook once again drew out the Labour party's policy of what he called an elected police authority. It might be helpful if we considered for a moment the nature of the Metropolitan police district, because it involves more than just the policing of London.

The boundary of the Metropolitan police district includes the 32 London boroughs and eight outer districts. I am glad to see my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire), who represents one of these districts, here today. All told there are 84 London members of Parliament, and eight Members whose constituencies are included, in whole or in part, in the eight outer districts of the Metropolitan police area. Thus, 92 hon. Members in all represent constituencies in the area.

There is an excellent relationship between Conservative Members and the Commissoner. We look forward to our regular discussions with him and his senior policy group on policing objectives for London.

Contact takes place not only at the top; it exists with my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary in his capacity as the police authority. No one could be more available or accountable to hon. Members who represent the Metropolitan police district than my right hon. Friend, whose ear is always inclined to us when we wish to communicate our concerns or interests about the progress of the force.

More importantly for us all and for the people who reside in the Metropolitan police district is the burgeoning contact at local level between the divisional chief superintendents and their staff and the local community in the London boroughs and districts, the neighbourhood watch schemes and local residential associations. Those are the contacts that really matter and it is by means of them that the public can communicate the order of their concerns and priority. As my right hon. Friend has already said, the police must plan their priorities locally.

It is also important to consider why the Home Secretary is the police authority. It is not only because of the size of the Metropolitan police; it is also because of their additional functions at national and international level. For example, the Metropolitan police have an anti-terrorist branch, a special branch, a royalty and diplomatic protection branch, a national central office for the suppression of counterfeit currency and a national identification bureau. They liaise, on behalf of the police service of the United Kingdom, with Interpol. The serious crimes branch still provides support for major investigations overseas and for murder on the high seas. That is one significant reason why the Metropolitan police, alone among British police forces, must be under the control of, and accountable to, my right hon. Friend who reports directly to this House.

The cost of the Metropolitan police in the current financial year is more than £1 billion. It is worth considering how that sum is funded. The Home Office police grant provides 51 per cent. What is still quaintly referred to as the imperial national services grant provides 2 per cent. to cover the special services to which I have just referred. Those two items, plus the block grant total 70 per cent., leaving the ratepayers of the 32 London boroughs and the outer districts to find 30 per cent. The Metropolitan police precept for the London boroughs and districts for 1988-89 is more than £309 million, which is 16·5p in the pound—a 9 per cent. increase over 1987-88. Broken down, the figures mean that a Metropolitan police officer costs more than £25,000 a year, which is a great deal of money.

The force must therefore, in the words of Sir Peter Imbert,

"place an emphasis upon economy, efficiency and effectiveness."

We are all realists. We cannot expect the costs of the police to go on rising without regard for the importance of other services. The Commissioner is quite right to emphasise efficiency. I know, too, that the London Boroughs Association is concerned about the increase of 9 per cent. in the precept. It, too, wants value for money of the same kind that it is required to give in the services it provides to its electorates.

I particularly welcome the Commissioner's 1988 strategy document, which deals with issues that people in London want to be addressed. His reference to continuing to improve the quality of service provided to the public is important, and his reference "to improve the support to, and the use of that support by, the operational arm of the Force in order to assist all officers in providing an improved quality of service to the public" and a reduction in crime of all kinds is the objective that should be achieved in the year ahead.

The force's establishment is at a record high of 28,115. That, together with the civil staff ceiling of 13,701, provides a total of 42,000. That makes the Metropolitan police one of the largest police forces in the western world. I welcome the recent increases in the establishment, but I think that future increases must depend upon proven need. As the problems of recruiting in the London area are difficult because of the rising employment prospects, we must be realistic. The force will find it increasingly difficult to find both police and civilian manpower to take up future vacancies. With that in mind, it is essential to examine the existing use of resources and practices.

I want briefly to discuss two areas that might be considered, one of which lies within the sphere of influence of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to consider with his colleagues in Government, and the other within that of the Commissioner. The first is the use of police resources on what is called the operation of radar guns and radar speed traps in the Metropolitan police area, which takes up a fair amount of the time of the police traffic department.

I have carefully inquired about what effect those random activities have on the speed limits on our roads. I think that the House will agree that there is no discernible impact on speed. However, the consequence is that a great deal of time, money and effort is spent on what amounts to a giant lottery. Motorists are stopped on a random basis, are prosecuted and fines imposed with little profit either to the police or to the public. The Commissioner should reassess the use of high-cost resources on that task. I venture to suggest that it is so absurd that we could create a sort of premium bond arrangement at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre and just select the names of motorists at random, for all the good that those operations achieve in the reduction of speed.

The second area, which is within the scope of the Government, is the use of the police for the collection of vehicle excise duty. I am advised that the Metropolitan police annually sends some 250,000 reports of vehicles apparently not having an excise licence to the Department of Transport. That is a large number. In addition, the special exercises carried out from time to time take away the services of expensive police officers on what is essentially a revenue-raising activity. The time has come to transfer the collection of that duty from the excise licence to the price of petrol, thus removing at a stroke no fewer than 12 criminal offences, which also take up the time of the police and are a substantial cost. The police recognise the importance of maintaining a register of the keepers of vehicles, but there are other ways of protecting that position. For example, in Australia and West Germany the identity of the vehicle keeper is tied to the number plate that is obtained on an annual basis, when both the insurance and, where appropriate, the test certificate are checked. It would be possible to create such a system in the United Kingdom. It would be both self-financing and cost-effective, and would, at a stroke, reduce the misuse of police resources, thus releasing existing resources for proper policing duty, which I think the House wants.

In part, that answers one of the points raised by the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook, who spoke about the need for about 4,000 more police officers. I think that we should concentrate more directly on how we can make better use of existing resources, and the two proposals that I have made to the House are, perhaps, worthy of consideration.

Mr. Hattersley: I have a small correction. It was not I who referred to 4,000 more police officers; it was the Commissioner. That is a significant distinction.

Mr. Wheeler: I was quoting the right hon. Gentleman's speech, but it was indeed the previous Commissioner, when assessing potential police needs, who made that point. I am sure that the right hon. Gentleman understands my argument about the better use of resources.

One of the outstanding stories of recent years has been the involvement of the public in crime prevention. We all agree that the reduction in opportunist property crime, especially burglary, has been brought about by the combination of the police working with the public at all levels—in the local community through the increasingly successful neighbourhood watch schemes, with the business community, with local authorities and so on. That has helped to reduce that part of the crime problem. Most crime in London is petty, random and opportunist, so it is what the public do to help themselves that will reduce the burden of that crime, not necessarily the number of uniformed police patrols.

The Commissioner has been talking about the special constabulary and he has another idea of how the public can be better involved in helping to reduce crime. The use of the Metropolitan special constabulary should be re-examined to determine what special role it could play as part of the overall package of crime reduction in London. Alas, at the moment we have only about 1,500 special constables for the entire Metropolitan police district. It seems that an increase in public interest in that force would enable the policing of London to be improved still further.

The Commissioner has studied the special constabulary in Hong Kong, where a bounty is paid to encourage people to participate in its work. A few years ago, on a visit to Singapore, I studied the policing structure there. As the House knows, Singapore is a modern, confined city, with tower blocks, and it has many of the social ingredients of London. In each of the residential tower blocks one resident is a special constable. He is equipped with a uniform; he provides the liaison with the neighbourhood watch scheme; he helps to organise it; he relates to the local beat patrol; and he provides a very effective form of communication.

We could use and develop the special constabulary in London to perform in a similar way. It could be done without causing the regular police officer concern about non-professional or unpaid people absorbing part of his duties and responsibilities. The special constable does not usurp the functions of the highly trained regular police officer; he or she is merely an aid to the police.

Despite what the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook said, I believe that the Metropolitan police are making considerable progress in dealing with those crimes that cause great concern to people in London. For example, I welcome the Commissioner's active involvement in dealing with child abuse, and in examining the complex and difficult problems of domestic violence and racial attacks. The mere fact that police have begun to focus more attention on that subject alone means that more of those offences will, of necessity be reported to the police. There has not necessarily been an increase in crime, but it is now being reported and considered as part of the police target and concern.

The police, too, say that despite advertising about the different ways to make complaints about the police, they are actually receiving more compliments, in writing and by telephone, than complaints. That suggests that the people in London do not view the police in the same way as some Opposition Members.

I am glad to note that there have been 200 more arrests for crimes of violence this year. It is worth remembering that, again, such crimes are often random. The fact that the overwhelming majority do not involve serious violence does not make these crimes easier to bear for the victim, but they need to be put into perspective. They are random and opportunist and, therefore, even more difficult to clear up, but the police are making progress. Last year, the clear-up rates for crimes involving serious wounding or rape had a 50 per cent. clear-up rate. Those high clear-up figures betoken great effort by the police as well as co-operation from the public. Crime prevention work, through the use of radio and television programmes, helps the public to communicate information to the police.

Fear of crime can be as damaging as crime itself. Many people, especially the elderly, believe that it is not safe to use the streets of London and that going out in the evening or after dark is somehow more dangerous than going out at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. All that is nonsense. The facts from the police are that those most at risk from violent crime are those whom we would describe as able-bodied young men. Most of these crimes take place in the middle of the afternoon rather than the evening. That is not to say that there are not pockets of London where serious crime affects the elderly and women. This crime is confined to 16 of the 75 Metropolitan police divisions. About 50 per cent. of the serious crime occurs in those areas. The reasons are complex. I do not have the time to go into the details. Suffice it to say that the police are increasingly targeting those specific areas and carrying out a much more detailed analysis into who is at risk, why and what environmental factors contribute. Through that approach, we shall begin to reduce serious crime in some parts of our capital city.

I conclude on an optimistic note. By any test, the people of London and its millions of visitors live in and visit one of the safest capital cities in the world. Despite what we have heard in the debate, crime rates here remain the lowest in the world, serious crime is contained and, where it occurs, is more certain of being detected than anywhere else in the world. That is a remarkable achievement. All hon. Members subscribe to the aim of continuing that achievement. I thank the Metropolitan police for their service to the people of London in the expectation that its quality will continue in the year ahead.

11.12 am

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): I welcome the opportunity to debate policing in London, as it is two years since our last proper debate on it. It is regrettable that there are not more hon. Members here to participate.

I welcome the debate because London is unique in Britain in that it does not have a democratic police authority. Indeed, the police authority—the Home Secretary—has just left the Chamber. It is high time the House addressed this matter. The Greater London council argued forcefully and consistently for the right to have an elected police authority for London that could decide policing policy and tactics. I strongly support the idea of an elected police authority. If it is good enough to have police authorities in other parts of the country—albeit with the limitations that many have—what is it about London that requires it to have a police authority who represents Mid-Oxfordshire and not even a London constituency?

The money spent by the Metropolitan police is not accountable in any way to Parliament, and that is not good enough. [HON. MEMBERS: "It is accountable."] Conservative Members claim that it is accountable. Unfortunately, it is not directly accountable. We are debating a motion for the Adjournment of the House. There is to be no vote, and there will be no opportunity for us to go through present or planned police expenditure in detail, and there has never been such an opportunity in the past. The only opportunity to do this is during the debate on the Home Office Estimates.

Mr. Simon Hughes: There may be good reasons why the Home Secretary has had to leave the Chamber, but does the hon. Gentleman agree that it is evidence of the problem that the police authority for London, who is the Home Secretary, cannot devote the time to be present during the debate on the police for London? Clearly, the right hon. Gentleman, as with any other person in charge of any police authority, should be here for the whole debate. This is not a personal criticism; I am talking about a structural problem—that the police authority for London is the Home Secretary as well.

Mr. Corbyn: It is extraordinary that, in the first police debate in two years, the police authority for London is apparently unable to remain here for the whole debate. He has left us with the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg), and I do not know whether we should be grateful for that. Presumably the hon. Gentleman has some influence on what the Home Secretary says.

Page 115 of the annual report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis shows that the income last year for the Metropolitan police was £9[illegible]5 million. That is nearly £1 billion, far more than for any other local authority in London—far more than for the Inner London education authority or for the GLC. Is it satisfactory that this level of public expenditure can go ahead in such an unaccountable way?

The annual report refers to manpower and establishment levels. The Home Secretary said that the police in London were under establishment. The force establishment this year is 27,815 and the force strength is 27,434, so there is only a minor difference. It allows for people leaving, so the force is not seriously under establishment.

I note that the force establishment has increased consistently year on year. In 1977, it was 26,628, and in 1983 it was 26,915. Conservative Members consistently claim that local authorities in London are over-staffed for the decreasing population, yet the police force in London has gone up year on year for that same decreasing population—and, frankly, there has not been an enormous improvement in the crime clear-up rates.

Mr. Dicks: Surely there is a distinction to be made. An experienced officer may resign or leave to join another force, and it takes time for his replacement to get the necessary training and experience.

Mr. Corbyn: I well understand that, when a senior officer resigns and joins another force and is eventually replaced by a younger recruit on promotion, the force has lost one person of great experience and possibly gained one of less experience. Nevertheless, the force is near its establishment level, which has consistently gone up.

I have not been able to work out by what means police establishment figures are fixed. Deployment of officers was one point made in the arguments for democracy and control of the police force. Many of us would argue that there should be many more officers on the beat and more local involvement by the police force, yet I detect within the police expenditure figures a greater propensity by the police to spend more money on high technology and to undertake more motorised policing, which is far less effective than other means and often becomes intimidatory. When I hear sirens at midnight on police cars screaming up and down Seven Sisters road, keeping me awake, I wonder what on earth they are doing of value when there is no traffic hold-up through which they need to make their way.

I should also draw attention to the clear-up rate for crimes in the Metropolitan area. Table D on page 92 of the report shows that the rate has remained consistently at 16 per cent. In some areas, it is much higher and that is very welcome, but the basic clear-up rate has not improved much at all.

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): The 16 per cent. clear-up rate for London must be put into perspective. The national rate is 33 per cent., and even that is poor compared with 1980, when it was 40 per cent. The clear-up rate has decreased substantially since the Government came to office.

Mr. Corbyn: My hon. Friend is absolutely right. Conservative politicians seem to spend every weekend making speeches about the problems of law and order. Next year, unfortunately, will be the 10th anniversary of the Conservatives coming to office. It is not good enough for them to complain that everything wrong in society is due to what happened before 1979, when they have been in office for 10 years, during which violent crime and crime generally have increased and the clear-up rate has not improved substantially. We need some straightforward honesty from Ministers and their supporters.

Mr. Bernie Grant (Tottenham): Some hope!

Mr. Corbyn: As my hon. Friend rightly points out, that may well be a faint hope. Nevertheless, we should at least see some humility on the part of the law and order lobby, given that lawlessness and serious crime have increased. Commercial crime and City fraud have increased exponentially since the Government came to office, but the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) probably favours that, as she seems to support a free-enterprise economy in ticket fiddling at Wimbledon.

The Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) mentioned various forms of crime and follow-up rates. My hon. Friend the Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng) rightly drew attention to the increase in the reporting of racial incidents and attacks in London and to the slight increase in the clear-up rate. I still believe strongly that a large number of offences which clearly come within that category are not reported or recorded as such, either because people are not aware that they can report them as such if they believe them to be primarily racially motivated or because of reluctance on the part of police officers at certain stations to do so.

I believe that there is serious under-reporting of racial incidents and attacks in London. In this debate, we must make it absolutely clear that racial attacks and racism in any form are totally unacceptable and that it should be the highest possible priority for the police to ensure that the culprits are brought to book at the earliest possible opportunity. Unless the police make it clear that this is a high priority, the signal will go out to the racists in society that the police do not regard it as a major crime or a matter of the highest priority. It must be made absolutely clear that racial violence is not acceptable at all in this city or anywhere else.

Another important issue mentioned by the Home Secretary is the incidence of rape, other sexual violence and domestic violence. The number of cases reported has increased in recent years, but I believe that a substantial number of women who suffer rape or other sexual attack still feel, for various reasons, unable or unwilling to report the offence to the police. It thus does not appear as a recorded offence and cannot be followed up because the police do not even know about it. Far more thought needs to be given to the protection of women on the streets of London at night and to a system of reporting, following up and investigating incidents which does not put the woman concerned under further stress or difficulty. The police could then be encouraged to follow the matter up, as I believe that there is still serious under-reporting of such offences.

A related but no less important issue arises from the fact that local authorities in London have suffered badly from Government policies and expenditure cuts. Women's refuges and women's aid and advice centres have been seriously affected, and many are having difficulty making ends meet. The funding problem for them is as serious as it is for law centres and other advice centres. The continual increase in police establishment and expenditure without a corresponding increase in the clear-up rate throughout London should be seen in comparison with central Government's continual criticism of local government and the cuts in expenditure which have destroyed local authorities' ability to provide many necessary services.

That must be brought to the attention of the House, because crime cannot be separated from social factors. It is time that the Government realised that high unemployment and homelessness have an effect on drunkenness, alcoholism, drug-taking and crime. It is no use the Government preaching against a lawless and criminal society if they encourage crimes such as commercial fraud, as the hon. Member for Billericay apparently does, and do nothing about the awful social divisions and deprivation which are increasing year by year and day by day in London.

Just a short distance from the House, by Waterloo station, a little bonfire burns every night as a group of homeless men try to keep warm. That is the only place they have to sleep, just as others sleep in cardboard boxes under Charing Cross station. Those are the social divisions that now exist in London.

Mr. Wilshire: The hon. Gentleman makes a fascinating argument, but he should get his act together with the Labour Front Bench spokesman. We were told earlier that the problem was caused by affluence and prosperity. We are now told that it is due to poverty and deprivation. The Labour party should think its policies through and speak with one voice.

Mr. Corbyn: The hon. Gentleman has made his point, and mine as well. He seems not to appreciate that there is a correlation between crude yuppies buying Porsches in the City and the number of people sleeping on the street. The tax rip-offs that are used to buy second homes, swimming pools and extended holidays mean an increase in the number of people sleeping on the street because there is insufficient public expenditure to provide housing for them. The Tories have always supported the creed which blames poverty on the poor. We believe that the poor are the victims of the society created by the Conservatives and the Government whom they so avidly support.

Mr. Wilshire: Last time the subject of homelessness was aired, the Salvation Army in London said that there was no need for anyone to be homeless.

Mr. Corbyn: There would indeed be no need for anyone to be homeless if a large number of previously privately rented houses were not deliberately kept empty by property speculaters as a result of Government policies. It is sheer hypocrisy for Tory Members to blame the poor unfortunate people who have to sleep in cardboard boxes when they themselves put those people on the street, splash them every night as they drive past in their Porsches and kick dirt in the faces of the poor. They are the people to blame for the situation faced by so many people in London, and it is a matter of grave concern.

In my constituency and in those of my hon. Friends there is a terrible homelessness problem. What has the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) to say to the homeless men thrown out of bedsits in which they had lived for years and forced to sleep in the street in the most undignified way because they cannot afford the private sector rents that the Conservatives are so keen to jack up to extortionate levels? I appreciate that the debate is about policing in London, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but other matters are revelant and I do not apologise for digressing, as I am sure that you understand why I feel so strongly about this subject.

Discussions have taken place between Labour Members and the Home Secretary and the Commissoner of Police of the Metropolis, and various other meetings have taken place about the events which occurred during the printing dispute at Wapping. The background is that the subsidised entrepreneur Rupert Murdoch came in and destroyed 5,000 jobs, moved his printing industry to Wapping and was then surprised that there were objections to this and a year-long dispute with the printing unions.

The activities of the police during that year merit close examination. I often attended the picket line at Wapping and I saw what happened on 24 January. A large crowd gathered peacefully, most of it at a rally to hear the problems suffered by print workers because they had lost their jobs. We heard how they were being treated after giving a lifetime of service to newspaper printing in Fleet street. There was continual police provocation throughout the evening. Police horses were consistently ridden straight into the crowd, which was hemmed in by gates. The violence was disgraceful and shocking.

We know that there have been investigations within the Metropolitan police, and I understand that the findings have been reported to the Home Secretary. Complaints were entered against more than 100 officers. They were sifted by the Northamptonshire police, and some cases have been referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions. We understand that the DPP is now considering what action to take against certain officers.

This is the appropriate time for the Minister to tell us what action will be taken. It does the public's confidence in policing in London no good still to have no public statement 18 months later. If police officers wantonly committed acts of violence, we need to know about it. It is in the interests of the police that the officers' names should be made known, and that we should know what action is to be taken.

We have raised with the Home Secretary and the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis the influence of freemasonry in the police force in London. The Home Office is well aware of that influence, and it must be aware of the article in The Independent of 19 February by James Dalrymple, who explained in some detail the Manor of St. James's Lodge, which is composed entirely of members of the Metropolitan police.

Many of us are gravely suspicious about the influence of freemasonry. I am utterly opposed to it and to the influence of other secret organisations because I believe them to be a deeply corrupting influence on society. That influence has been highlighted by the case of Chief Inspector Woollard who investigated allegations of incompetence and misconduct by a building contractor working for the London borough of Islington. During his investigation, he discerned considerable masonic influence among officials in the company and in the local authority. As he came closer to concluding that the influence of freemasonry in the administration of the contract had been great, he was removed from the case and sent to the Metropolitan police's equivalent of running a power station in Siberia.

Masonic influence is serious. The Commissioner, Sir Peter Imbert, has made it clear that he is not a mason and that he is concerned about masonic influences. I have here a list, for 1986, of members of the Manor of St. James's Lodge, No. 9179 of the masonic order, which starts with the right hon. Lord Farnham, who is the leader of the lodge. There are many people on the list. I shall not read it all, as it would take too long, but I shall give the first few names, as I assume that they are highly placed in the hierarchy, although I cannot pretend to be an expert on masonic procedures. The list begins:

"The Rt. Hon. Lord Farnham, Sir Peter Lane, Norman M. Jacobs, The Rev. Dr. Michael Morgan, Cdr. Michael B.S. Higham, Peter G. Lowndes, Peter C. Neivens, Lt. Cdr. Norman J. Nuttall."

There are 30 other names of people who I understand to be employees of the Metropolitan police or senior officers in it.

Is it not a danger to society that such a lodge exists, and apparently has great influence? I am worried that Chief Inspector Woollard was able to uncover what appears to have been serious corruption. He strongly believed that masonic influences were at work, but when he was about to bring his inquiry to a conclusion, he was pulled off it. He is no longer a member of the police force.

We need a clear statement from the Home Secretary in which he makes it clear that he opposes masonic influences of any sort and that police officers should be asked to sign a declaration of interests and membership of organisations such as many local authority officers and councillors are asked to sign, Freemasonry is incompatible with being a police officer.

Mr. Harry Greenway: I am not a freemason and know nothing about freemasonry, so I have no axe to grind, but when the hon. Gentleman talks about "masonic influences", he draws enormous inferences. He ought briefly to explain what he means by masonic influences.

Mr. Corbyn: I am suggesting that the power of a masonic lodge on any organisation is sinister and insidious. If an organisation decides to discipline an employee or one of its members, and that person happens to be a freemason and others in the organisation are also freemasons, they decide to get together to sort the problem out among themselves, and the person involved gets off scot free. Although that is a hypothetical example, it illustrates the power of secret organisations such as freemasons.

Conservative Members are concerned about justice and integrity, so they should be anxious about the power of freemasons. I ask them to join me in suggesting that membership of a lodge is incompatible with being an officer in the Metropolitan police.

Ms. Diane Abbott (Hackney, North and Stoke Newington): Does my hon. Friend agree that one of the reasons why such a high incidence of membership of a lodge gives rise to concern is the allegation, which goes back many years, that because senior police officers are members of the same lodge as criminals, some criminals get off?

Mr. Corbyn: My hon. Friend has highlighted the problem. If people get together in secret organisations, they are open to any form of blackmail. Any decision made by that body is not in the public domain, and cannot be, by that body's very nature.

Mr. Wilshire: Let me make it clear that I am not a freemason, either. If the allegations that the hon. Gentleman makes are true, I share his concern. But, if he makes wild allegations and says that they are hypothetical, it is incumbent on him to give us the facts so that we can judge. If the hon. Gentleman is so worried about secret organisations and their influence, perhaps he would care to condemn Militant while he is about it.

Mr. Corbyn: Although interventions take time from my speech and from the debate, I shall readily give way to any hon. Member who cares to announce that he is not a member of the freemasons. Some interesting declarations have been made. If any of the few remaining Conservative Members present wish to say that they are not freemasons I shall happily give way.

I remind Conservative Members that what I have said about the case of Chief Inspector Woollard and the influence of freemasonry on the police is not particularly new. The case was made in The Independent and there was a "World in Action" programme on the subject. The matter has been raised several times with the Home Secretary and with the Commissioner, and the London group of Labour Members is due to meet Sir Peter Imbert again to discuss this very subject.

I referred to the Manor of St. James's Lodge. A report prepared by the police committee support unit of the London borough of Islington, which deals with freemasonry in the Metropolitan police, says:

"The Manor of St. James's Lodge (No. 9179) was consecrated on 27 January 1986, after the Commissioner's advice had been issued."

The House will note the word "after".

"It has been suggested that this lodge was established as a direct snub to the Commissioner. Appendix A shows a meeting of the lodge in November 1986 and includes a list of its members. These papers have been placed in the House of Commons Library.

The Manor of St. James's Lodge was founded by Brethren, all of whom had served as police officers in 'C' or St. James's District of the Metropolitan Police. The term Manor was the colloquial expression used by police officers when referring to the District of place of duty. The lodge was sponsored, appropriately, by Prior Walter Lodge No. 8687, a lodge comprised by members of the order of St. John which has a close affinity with the police service."

These matters are very serious and I hope that the Minister will condemn the influence of freemasonry and the police officers of the Metropolitan police who are members of freemasonic lodges and that he will state once again that membership of the freemasons is incompatible with public service in the Metropolitan police or anywhere else. It is an insidious force in society.

My constituency, like those of other hon. Members, suffers considerable social deprivation and problems of crime—housebreaking, violence and burglary. It is important that policing resources should be made available to deal with those problems. I am not convinced, however, that the resources are necessarily directed towards solving those problems or that sufficient sensitivity is shown by the police in dealing with public complaints, or in their attitudes.

I shall conclude as I started: if we are to have in London a police force that costs nearly £1 billion a year, it is perfectly right that the people of London should have some say in the way in which that force is run, in the direction of resources of that police force and in the tactics, policies and methods used. That is not posible while the police authority for London is one person—the Home Secretary, who cannot even find time to stay for the one debate that we have had in two years on policing in London. Perhaps it is a vain hope, but I ask the Government at least to consider the need for an elected police authority for London. But perhaps the return of democracy in London will have to await the return of a Labour Government.

Mr. Nigel Forman (Carshalton and Wallington): The House will be relieved to hear that I have no intention of following the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) into his Mozartian fascination with masonry. My only comment on his speech arises from an interesting point that he made near the beginning, which was more germane to our debate. He spoke of the declining population of Greater London and argued, by implication, that Conservative Members need no longer be so concerned about police establishment levels and the attainment of those levels. He tried to give the impression that the ratio of police to population was bound to improve and, hence, that law and order would improve because of the declining population of Greater London. That may be true in general, but in parts of the very large Metropolitan police area—notably in the Wallington sub-division, which is more or less conterminous with my constituency—the population has been expanding rapidly in recent years and, with that, the opportunities for crime have increased. We need to consider different parts of the Metropolitan police area in their own right, rather than considering the area in aggregate.

The right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) spoke at length about the new crime-screening procedures recently introduced by the Commissioner. While I did not agree with much of what the right hon. Gentleman said, a number of my constituents share his anxiety about the crime-screening procedures. Relations between police and public must be good and the public must have confidence in the police. Therefore, it is important that those procedures, necessary as they may be, should be fully explained to the law-abiding public. If they are not, public confidence in the police may be undermined.

I associate myself with the tribute that my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) paid to the previous Commissioner, Sir Kenneth Newman and welcome the well-deserved honour given to Sir Peter Imbert, the new Commissioner. I very much approve of Sir Peter's major force goals for the coming year, especially the emphasis on reducing criminal opportunity, the enhanced detection of robbery, burglary and vandalism, and the enhanced support for the victims of crime, as well as his determination to achieve further improvements in public order.

My remarks will fall under four separate headings. First, I shall consider the sort of crimes that are being committed in the Metropolitan police area, particularly in the Wallington sub-division. Secondly, I shall consider the sort of people who seem to be committing those crimes. Thirdly I shall examine how well the Metropolitan police seem to be dealing with the problems, and, finally, I shall express a few thoughts on what more could and should be done.

I shall deal first with the crimes that are being committed—particularly those of most concern to my constituents. Between 1986 and 1987 street robberies increased by 13 per cent. In hard figures in my area that meant an increase from 64 such notified offences to 96. That is a matter of great concern because it helps to breed the feeling of personal insecurity that has already been mentioned. I welcome the fact that the burglary figures fell by 4 per cent. in the Metropolitan area in the year in question and that in my sub-division they fell from 1,840 notified offences to 1,521 in the same period. However, the figures are still far too high. The offence of burglary is of intense concern to those who live in the nice residential areas—indeed all residential areas—of my constituency, who feel insecure because of it.

The third aspect of crime, and one which I cannot stress too much, is the importance of dealing with vandalism and criminal damage to property. Again, I welcome the fact that the figures show a small fall in the metropolitan area of 2 per cent. for the period in question. However, they are still far too high. In the Wallington sub-division, crimes of vandalism increased during 1986-87.

The fourth issue on which I should like to concentrate is what we might call alcohol-related offences, including drinking and driving, assaults on persons, street disturbances and various forms of damage to property. All those cause serious concern to my constituents, especially when they appear to be related to under-age drinking. I should like the Government to be tougher and to give even more of a lead on this problem.

When we consider who seems to be committing most of the crimes about which my constituents are most concerned, it is absolutely clear from the official statistics that young people commit a disproportionate number of offences—by that I mean those under the age of 21, and principally young males.

On page 43 of the Commissioner's report for this year, and under the heading, "Characteristics of offenders", an interesting short paragraph states:

"People aged under 21 years accounted for a disproportionate number of notifiable offences. Consistent with a long-established pattern, the age group 10 to 20 years, which is about 15 per cent. of the population of London, was recorded responsible for almost half (44 per cent.) of the notifiable offences. Clear majorities of people arrested in the offence groups of robbery, burglary and going equipped and motor vehicle theft were 20 years or under. In excess of two-thirds of those arrested for motor theft were 20 or under and almost one-third were 16 years or under."

The House should pay great attention to that serious point. More specifically, many of those young people are under the influence of alcohol when they commit such offences. As my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) said, many are opportunist offences. However, too often the perpetrators are found to be carrying knives and, regrettably, in some cases—by definition with those under the age of 16—are out of school without permission. They are playing truant and are, as it were, absent without leave. That is serious because when one examines the figures more closely one finds that this young age group, representing 15 per cent. of total notifiable offences, is responsible for 26 per cent. of all notifiable offences of robbery, for 24 per cent. of burglaries, and for 27 per cent. of motor vehicle thefts.

How well are the Metropolitan police seeking to deal with those various priority problems? The answer is that the police are doing their level best in difficult circumstances. I know that from my personal experience, because I take great pains to stay in close touch with the police officers at every level in my part of south London, as I am sure do all my hon. Friends in their constituencies. I also attach great value to our frequent and useful meetings with the Home Secretary, the police authority, and the Commissioner himself.

However, the most pressing problems still seem to be growing. To present a balanced picture, one must congratulate the Metropolitan police on the high clear-up rate that they manage, especially in some of the most critical areas, and for the more serious offences. For the year that we are considering in this debate, the 1987 report states that 180 out of 194 homicides were cleared up, and for drug trafficking, the figure is 1,905 out of 1,906. Therefore, only one such offence was not cleared up. That is an admirable record and a tribute to the effectiveness of establishing a clear scale of priorities in line with the seriousness of the offences.

However, on the other side of the coin, and as the hon. Member for Islington, North stated, it remains disappointing to me and to my constituents that in other vital areas about which there is equal public concern, the clear-up rates remain low. I do not say that in an anti-police sense, but we—police and public together—must find ways of improving the clear-up rates in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. Wheeler: It is very good of my hon. Friend to give way on this point. I think that he will agree that there is one important factor which the House should bear in mind on the question of clear-up rates. The difference between the Metropolitan police clear-up rate and that of the provincial forces is that the Metropolitan police do not seek to pursue other offences in prisons, thus increasing the clear-up rate, whereas the provincial forces do. That changes the distortion of the clear-up pattern in London.

Mr. Forman: I am grateful to my hon. Friend and am aware of the distinction which is drawn in the Commissioner's report between the so-called primary clear-up rate and secondary clear-up rates. That bears upon the point which he has helpfully made.

I am seeking to speak on behalf of the vast majority of my constituents, from all walks of life, and must place on record for the benefit of the House the fact that the clear-up rates in the Metropolitan police district of 12 per cent. for robbery, 9 per cent. for burglary and 11 per cent. for criminal damage, still cause great concern. I am sure that when my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department replies to the debate, he will be able to offer to the House some reassuring words to show the serious way in which the Government view the figures.

Therefore, it is welcome and all the more important that the Metropolitan police themselves have made special efforts to deal with those offences where the record of clear-up seems to be least satisfactory. I was particularly pleased to see in the report, which I read carefully, that arrests for robbery increased by 27 per cent. during the year in question, and that there was an increase of 6 per cent. in arrests for burglary. Clearly, arrests are part of the answer but we all realise that in the complexities of justice, it is one thing to secure an arrest but it is much more important and, in many cases, much more difficult, to secure clear up and conviction.

As the Member of Parliament for Carshalton and Wallington, which, as I have already said, is almost conterminous with the Wallington subdivision of the Metropolitan police area, I am especially pleased that Chief Superintendent Peter Lockley has stated in his divisional report, which I read in advance of the debate, that he intends to make special efforts to combat the problem of vandalism. It is a serious problem in the Wallington sub-division and one to which he intends to give high priority in the coming year. I support him entirely in that objective. Although offences against property are not as serious as offences against the person, one never knows whether the kind of behaviour that gives rise to offences against property from young people acting in a loutish and irresponsible way might not spill over into terrorising old ladies or possibly even offences against the person.

What more could and should be done? We need a three-pronged approach. First, we need to encourage and assist the general public to pay even more attention to crime prevention than they are doing already. We know of the efforts made by the Home Office, and I commend the Home Office for launching a series of useful initiatives in this area. However, more could still be done by insurance companies, ordinary householders, motorists—indeed, by all involved. We can make our homes and cars more secure. We can make efforts to keep children in school and combat the problem of truancy to which I have already referred. We can deal more firmly with the social problems of alcohol and drug abuse. We can continue the welcome trend about which my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary spoke earlier of getting more officers more visibly on the beat, because that is an inherent part of crime prevention.

The second prong must be to make sure that we have enough police with more either on the beat or available for effective quick response in targeting special needs and using specialist squads to deal with acute crime problems. It is obvious that the vast swathe of the most serious crime which shows up most noticeably in the statistics, especially in my part of south London, is perpetrated by a small number of villains. There is a good deal of circumstantial evidence to suggest that.

When the police are able to catch and charge a particularly active villain or gang of villains who have committed a robbery or burglary, it is amazing how, for a period at any rate, the crime figures go down encouragingly as a result of all the other offences that often have to be taken into account when the matter goes before the court. There is therefore an important role for specialist squads and the reassuring presence of the officer on the beat.

I am glad to hear that the Metropolitan police is now nearly up to its full establishment level and that the Home Secretary has been successful in securing more resources for effective policing. He and his ministerial colleagues are absolutely right to insist on getting better value for money and better distribution of the available resources, whatever may be on offer at any time. In that context, my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North was right to draw attention to the two or three matters of which he has special knowledge, to deal with the treatment of potential motor offences. I hope that my hon. Friend's proposals will be seriously considered.

With changes in society in modern times and changing public attitudes to law and order, which go together with increased opportunities for crime, we shall need even higher and more effective policing levels in the Metropolitan area. I refer to officers on the beat and specialist squads in particular.

I shall not enter into the controversy to which the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook devoted some time about whether or not an extra 2,500 officers are needed. The Commissioner has a clear duty to make the most efficient possible use of the manpower and womanpower at his disposal and to continue the process of civilianisation, which is obviously necessary. At the same time, when he makes a case to the Home Secretary and, through him, to the Government for increasing establishment levels, he must ensure that his case is made unimpeachably and on the best possible basis. The combination of increasing affluence—affluence which has increased greatly in the 1980s—juxtaposed with declining social attitudes towards law and order among some groups in society, is a potentially explosive mix. Although it is a controversial subject, more thought should be given to it. If we can get more detections, arrests and convictions, we shall make the point to the general public that the surest deterrence is greater certainty of being caught and punished for an offence.

The last prong of my argument is that, obviously, Parliament has a duty to make great efforts to ensure that the legislative framework that is provided for the police is appropriate, so that they have the extra powers they they need to police our streets and the great city of London. I am pleased with the recent initiative in the Criminal Justice Bill about the carrying of knives and sharp instruments. It is good that the Government recognise the critical importance of providing the courts with the widest possible range of appropriate penalties—everything from non-custodial sentences to stiff, long determinate sentences for those who are convicted of the most serious crimes. The Government have been doing that over the past nine years. I commend my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and his colleagues for their excellent initiatives in that regard.

Combating crime is everyone's responsibility. Our excellent police in the Metropolitan area cannot achieve the desired results without the full support of politicians, the judiciary, magistrates, the media and the general public. I pledge my support to the police serving this large area. I commend them on their efforts during the year in question.

12.3 pm

Mr. Nigel Spearing (Newham, South): Few people could disagree with the worthy generalisations of the hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) whose speech I endorse. But, alas, the Government's philosophy and that of the great majority of Conservative Members is not capable of fulfilling his worthy generalisations. The majority of members of the ruling party consider that, in itself, public expenditure is bad or, at least, too great. That philosophy is becoming all-pervasive and destroys the quality of many things in our lives. There is some unity in the House about the need for more resources and more effective policing activity, even though we may criticise some aspects of how it is conducted. I refer Conservative Members to the fundamental philosophical jam into which they have got themselves.

The Secretary of State for the Environment is disrupting local taxation and introducing a poll tax, to focus people's minds on local expenditure, when rates in London provide a big chunk of Metropolitan police expenditure, which we now know is about £1,000 million. That is why I intervened during the Home Secretary's speech. I hope that the Under-Secretary of State will return to that theme. Unless remedied or, at least, assisted by the central business rate or the Exchequer, the imposition of the poll tax will put a stopper on some of the things that nearly all hon. Members have called for today. It is a central anomaly of the Government's policy that Conservative Members should seriously consider. That anomaly is serious in respect of the police and even more serious in respect of other services.

I shall be something of a vox-pop. Many of the things that I say will echo what the man or woman in the street say in respect of the Metropolitan police. I do not wish to be unfriendly, as the vast majority of policemen try to do a good job. I shall express how I believe the police often appear to those whom they serve. I shall try to introduce some constructive suggestions about how things can be improved. The theme is from the pavement up, rather than the other way round. Often, in every sphere of life, there are big generalisations at the top, but we should start the other way round.

A large proportion of the time spent by most policemen, including senior people, involves talking to other policemen. We see young policemen and policewomen in fast, expensive motor cars full of electronic equipment, and groups of younger policemen in vans. That must be—things are changing—but we must examine what happens to the ordinary person who goes into a police station. What arrangements are there for his reception?

I recall going into a police station that was designed in 1938. It has far superior reception arrangements than a police station in Plaistow, which has just been built at enormous public expenditure in the middle of my constituency. What thought has been given to the public-police interface, when the public go to the police, rather than when the police go to the public? There are training courses at Hendon to instruct police on how to approach the public in the street. There must be proper arrangements for the public to go to police stations. Some years ago, I asked the police to set up a little sub-police station in Freemasons road, Custom House, in my constituency. They said, "Yes, it is a jolly good idea. We shall try to do it." There were money complications. They had to get permission from the local council to try to rent a shop, and then there were security problems. The matter has been dragging on for three or four years. We are now to get a little police sub-station in the area, cut off from the rest of Newham, but in another road, and it will be rather bigger and probably more expensive than would have been necessary. All the correspondence and meetings that I have had with junior and senior policemen about the matter appear to make some fuss. I do not make a great complaint, but, when it comes to the nitty-gritty of administration, one often has to ask why it happened like that.

Like many hon. Members, I have the privilege of occupying a room in Norman Shaw north. That room was occupied about 100 years ago by Inspector Lestrade and, perhaps, some of his colleagues. It was purpose-built and designed by the architect Norman Shaw. I understand that Scotland Yard No. 3 was taken over as a converted office block. I have met many senior policemen who make great complaints about the modifications and the difficulties that they have had with Scotland Yard No. 3. Why is it that in the 1870s or 1880s a purpose-built building, which is still a magnificent place, was designed for the police, but in the latter half of this century they have a building which had to be adapted and in which there was a bit of a cock-up? That does not produce a great deal of confidence in what I would call the macro-organisation.

I shall return to the micro-organisation. The Home Secretary and I had a bit of a spat about Newham and about the statutory borough consultative committee which we are about to set up. I understand why the Home Secretary said what he did. But he has to understand that if there is to be an effective consultative committee, the constitution of that committee and the basis on which it works must be effective. It is no good having a shapeless, formless organisation, which meets every month or so for a natter and nothing really happens, or one to which everyone can come and in which there is no continuity and no degree of responsibility. I must tell the Home Secretary, albeit in his absence, that that was proposed.

I have been to many police public relations exercises. I do not blame them for taking professional advice from public relations advisers for their campaigns. They lay on exhibitions or hold conferences and invite everyone. I have been to quite a few of those events. There is a lot of good will around but it does not really get anywhere.

The constitution that we have worked out in Newham, after a lot of discussion, will get to grips with local problems. There were difficulties in deciding that constitution. Of course strong personalities are involved and differences of opinion. A certain senior police officer who is a well-known personality in east London has played some part in the protracted negotiations, which, fortunately, have now reached a conclusion. I put it to the Home Secretary, and I am sure that my hon. Friends will agree, that the time taken will pay off. We now have a structure which will really get to grips with some local matters and therefore it will be more successful than if we were to start off with an airy-fairy, fuzzy organisation which, quite frankly, would not have done the job.

When hon. Members attend an organisation or committee which has to thrash out some difficulty, when we meet the people with whom we thought we were wholly in opposition, over a cup of tea or a chat we find that we were under some misapprehension, and they find that they were under some misapprehension. Over some time spent getting to know each other, we can reach some commonsense results, which would not have happened without that institution. That will develop in the local groups, if they are given a good start.

I shall now turn to some of the practical problems that will face our committee in Newham and other Committees throughout the country. The hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington mentioned the problem of young people. That problem is not new. For centuries, young people have tended to group together. That has existed throughout history; it existed when we were young. It is nothing new. however, some of the activities in which young people indulge are new—motor cars, drugs, alcohol and so on. At least, the problem of alcohol is very much to the fore. I recall sitting on committees considering licensing Bills when people were not too concerned about our control of that problem. My hon. Friend the Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks), who I am glad to see present, has introduced a Bill. But I am sure that my hon. Friend and other all hon. Members will agree that much of this is a matter of local common sense.

Let us consider the management of licensed premises. The quality of the management of licensed premises varies a great deal. In the Committee considering the Licensing Bill I made the suggestion, which was recived with interest, that one condition of a licence is that a licensee puts up a list of 10 or 20 people, one of whom will be nominated to be in charge in his absence. I did not press it in the most recent Licensing Bill, but it would be helpful if that idea were put into statute at a later date. The law is not always the answer, it is a matter of commonsense discussion as to how we can ensure that the badly managed houses, which are in a minority, do not add to social disruption when the majority of houses and clubs are very well managed. How can we make sure that we maintain and improve that level of management? It cannot be done entirely by statute. The local statutory availability must be used to deal with local situations.

Mr. Forman: Is the hon. Gentleman aware of the scheme known as pub watch which has some relevance to this and which is referred to in the Commissioner's report?

Mr. Spearing: I am not entirely aware of the details of it, but I would hesitate to introduce yet another organisation. I am advocating that the discussions in local committees in London should find out the administrative pinch points. I shall give the hon. Gentleman an example. Not long ago I found that there was an administrative difficulty in the serving of warrants when people had not surrendered to bail, particularly when they had been charged with actual bodily harm. If a person who is charged with that offence does not surrender to bail, something is very badly wrong. I am not criticising magistrates for granting bail, because we know the difficulties of accommodation, but the police have to take action. It may be that in some circumstances the police, or the new public prosecution service, are not as swift as they might be. The citizens then quite rightly get hot under the collar. They say, "The public ought to get at that tearaway. What will he do next?"

When people come to me worrying about capital offences, I say that some people may be at risk from their own feelings or, in a situation which is fuelled by alcohol, at risk of committing a capital offence. We must prevent that. A great deal of commonsense work can be done on the ground to prevent the spread of violence, through the identification of situations where violence is likely to break out. That should be done in committees by people of good will who have authority getting together to deal with it. We should improve the quality of communication, administration and action.

Following what the Prime Minister said at Toronto, the quality of society is not dependent on the market. One cannot get a consultancy in quality of the community or in the quality of family life. The essence of the quality of our community life is not susceptible to market forces. Alas, in sphere after sphere, the Government are introducing the intensification of market forces which will increase the tendency towards difficulties and violence.

Let us take housing as an example. I shall not take this too far, as we shall discuss it on Monday, but difficulties in housing cause pressure on families and problems between parents and young people, which add to local problems. The Government are not assisting community life through many of the economic pressures which they are now introducing and which did not exist before they came into office. As a result, the police and the public have to clear up the mess.

There is a logical and practical example of that which involves housing. I understand that the Metropolitan police force is now under orders from the Government to sell off police housing. There is a lot of police housing in Newham, scattered around and in groups. I understood that police housing—not section housing but housing in streets—was provided to give a start to policemen who wanted to do a good job, live in the community, and send their kids to the local schools. I see the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) is indicating dissent. If he wishes to intervene I will give way later. I understood that this is what many policemen wanted to do. Like many of us, they may want ultimately to buy their own houses. However, when they start off in a new area, or are moved around as a result of promotion, police housing is a useful social tool.

The Government's order to sell off such housing seems to me to be designed to reduce police quality. It reduces the options available to senior policemen when they want to move their people around. It reduces the choices for policemen when deciding whether to rent, take a tied house, go for sectional housing, buy, or go in with their in-laws. Therefore, it prejudices good policing, morale and the consistency and experience of older policemen that we want so badly in London. In any occupation, experience of the job is vitally important, and the Government's policy of selling off police housing is contrary to their stated aim of improving the quality of policing in London.

Mr. Dicks: Is the hon. Gentleman aware that one of the reasons why experienced policemen are leaving London is that they have better housing, better education for their children and a better life away from the city? Why should they be expected to live, for example, in the middle of Brixton if their natural way of life does not tie up with the culture of Brixton? It does not mean to say that they are bad policemen or policewomen if they do not want to live there. They have a right to choose where they live as against where they are sent to work.

Mr. Spearing: The hon. Gentleman has misunderstood my point. It is that if the police have at their disposal a range of accommodation that can be made available to policemen, the choice for policemen is greater. The more housing is available, the better the choice of community in which to live. Policemen may not wish to live in the area in which they carry out their duties. If their duties are in Brixton, they may want to live in Croydon—that is up to them. I am glad to see the hon. Gentleman nodding.

No doubt, the Under-Secretary will tell me whether the Metropolitan police have chosen to sell off these houses rather than being ordered to do so by the Government. I suspect that it is the latter, because of the Government's overall barmy philosophy of selling off anything that is publicly owned. They are fundamentally reducing the quality of policing in London. It will show up well in the accounts, and it may even show value for money and all that nonsense. We must have value for money, but good will and loyalty cannot be priced. Even the Prime Minister would agree with that. The Government must look at this, and I hope that they will reverse the policy.

One aspect of policing that is rarely talked about, particularly in the House, although it is an important part of the responsibility of the Metropolitan police, is traffic management. When we think of traffic management and the Metropolitan police, we think of royal occasions, the opening of Parliament, public processions, blokes on motor bikes and all the rest of it. I have had the experience of seeing how Commonwealth countries do these things, and visiting Members of Parliament are often given a motor cycle escort. If one talks to the chaps afterwards, they say, "We were trained by the Met." The Metropolitan police force is excellent at doing this—it is probably the world leader—but when it comes to traffic management in general, things go wrong, and I am not sure that it is so good.

East London has many traffic problems, largely because of the Government's terrible neglect of strategic planning. I will not go into that, but it shows a terrible lack of civic pride. The Blackwall tunnel is frequently closed for repairs and on other occasions, for some reason, the traffic cannot use it in both directions. The Under-Secretary of State for Transport has explained to me why that is so, but it is a great pity. When it happens, it causes immense problems. I cycle, so it is not bad for me, but many people are frustrated, and there is not a policeman in sight. Flyovers are closed, and there is not a policeman in sight. Surely it is not beyond the wit of the local authority to tell the police when there is to be a difficulty so that someone can sort out the trouble and stop the traffic from jamming.

If something happens in the streets around here, in two ticks, because of the traffic management, everything clogs up. That is not surprising because 15 or 20 years ago, the Greater London council organised traffic flows in London so that about 20 or 30 per cent. more traffic could move through the existing streets. That was a good thing. The GLC introduced parking controls, clearways, gyratory systems and other schemes in a skilled operation. However, if a lorry breaks down at the crucial point, or the lights go wrong, or there is an accident, everything jams very quickly. The police are not good at making sure that there is somebody not too far away so that when that happens the traffic is unjammed as quickly as possible.

There is a lot of talk about London jamming up, but there is no scientific evidence to suggest that in normal circumstances it is. However, when there is an abnormal circumstance, the repurcussions are great. The police should pay more attention to clearing away those breakdowns and dealing with accidents or jams caused when roads are up for repairs or so that adjustments can be made by the traffic boys at Scotland Yard.

Mr. Tony Banks: I would favour much stricter penalties being imposed on lorry operators who badly load their lorries, or badly maintain them with the result that they break down or shed their load, causing traffic congestion. The penalties imposed on lorry contractors bear no relationship to the costs that they have imposed on Londoners.

Mr. Spearing: I agree and I can give two examples about which the man in the street should know. I assume that when a lorry breaks down, the police have some arrangement with a contractor—they do not have heavy breakdown vehicles of their own—so that the lorry can be moved as quickly as possible. Even those of us who take an interest in this matter do not know what this organisation is. However, this is a critical matter, and if matters were organised properly, people would know that such and such a squad was responsible. We all know the contractors who move badly parked cars, because they are visible, but we do not know what happens when there is a lorry breakdown. Those are commonsense matters in which the people of London want a visible improvement.

We have a problem in east London with local parking because of bad planning. Many people are driving to and parking at the local underground station. In Plaistow many people from the new docklands development are causing difficulties for residents by parking in residential streets around the station and going up to London to work. That is fair enough; one would expect it to happen. It leads not only to traffic congestion but to other problems.

At present, the Metropolitan police controls traffic wardens. Discussions are going on about how borough councils can co-operate with, or ultimately take over, that service. When traffic wardens were first introduced, senior policemen were against the use of lady traffic wardens. I mention that to show how, in retrospect, such attitudes can appear extraordinary. Mrs. Jane Phillips, the then chairman of the GLC's highways and traffic committee, and Mrs. Barbara Castle, who was then a Minister at the Department of Transport, had to bully Scotland Yard to accept lady traffic wardens.

We must decide how much traffic wardens can co-operate with local officials. It is one of the matters that I hope our well-constituted committee in Newham will consider. On that constructive, wholly friendly and non-venomous note I close my remarks.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Eight hon. Members, most of whom have been present since the beginning of the debate, still wish to speak. I understand that the Under-Secretary and the Front Bench spokesman for the Labour party hope to catch the eye of the Chair at about 2 pm. That leaves 90 minutes; the arithmetic is obvious.

12.32 pm

Mr. Gerald Bowden (Dulwich): I have not worked out the arithmetic, but I shall try to be brief.

I take this opportunity to welcome the optimistic tone of the Commissioner's report and the hopeful trends outlined by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary.

There are signs that the police in London are coming to grips with London's problems, but clearly there are still problems. It is little consolation to a crime victim to discover that, although the statistics and trends suggest that there has been an improvement, there is no quick response or police activity for the injury that they have suffered.

That raises the question of what constitutes good policing in London. Clearly there must be crime prevention and detection, but the public must also have confidence in and must co-operate with the police. It is to that aspect of good policing in London that I should like to address a few remarks.

It is essential that the Metropolitan police should represent, and in many ways reflect, the communities of London. Clearly those communities should have confidence in and be able to identify with the police. Police recruitment must ensure that, as the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) said of traffic wardens, there should be clear representation of women in the force doing proper police work. At the same time, ethnic minorities should be seen to be active as policemen and should identify with those they serve, of whatever racial origin or ethnic group. Only with such widespread appeal will the police of London effectively gain the confidence and co-operation of those who live in and serve the community.

Much could be done for police recruitment if only the schools in London, especially inner London, recognised that the police force is a career prospect to be offered to children considering a career for when they leave school. It is a matter of regret that, over the years, ILEA has not given prominence to the police force as a likely career. In the past, it has positively dissuaded police from entering its schools—if not positively forbidden them. I am reassured that that is no longer the practice and that the police are able—I shall not say welcome—to enter all schools in inner London. On occasions, police officers have been able to enter only if they did not wear uniforms. ILEA's authorities have suggested that they would prefer the police not to be seen in schools in a positive police role.

To be more constructive, I shall refer to the beneficial effect of neighbourhood watch schemes in making connections with and establishing good relations between the police and the community at large. When neighbourhood watch and crime prevention schemes were first introduced, their primary function was crime prevention. My limited experience of those schemes in my constituency leads me to believe that it is too early to evaluate the success of the crime prevention function, but it is evident that they have led to the establishment of a rapport between the local community and the police.

When a neighbourhood watch scheme is set up, a home beat officer calls at one or two houses and seeks to advise the occupants on crime prevention. He is followed in turn by the crime prevention officer. Locks on doors are then changed, and burglar alarms appear on those properties. That has a knock-on effect. First one property owner does it and then another. The people in those communities are not nosey parkers, but such schemes lead to the community being aware of what is going on in the locality. That is beneficial and it should be fostered and encouraged.

I attended a recent meeting of the co-ordinators of neighbourhood watch schemes in one part of my constituency. I had never before been to such a well-attended meeting that involved people who live in a very limited area. I had never before seen such a lively response from the people who live there or such a constructive rapport between the police and the local community. I welcome such developments, because they will lead to better policing and to a decrease in crime.

Hon. Members on both sides referred earlier to the difficulties that had been experienced over the police consultative committees. My observations of the police consultative committee in my area lead me to believe that there is a conflict of objectives. When police consultative committees were first established, the intention was that they should follow what one might call the Scarman model and defuse tension between the police and the community. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will correct me if I am wrong, but I understand that, by encouraging the establishment of such committees, the Home Office felt that they had a major contribution to make to crime prevention. When Socialist authorities became involved in setting up these committees, they believed that, at the very least, they would act as a watchdog and that they would monitor police operations with a view to taking over political control of the Metropolitan police.

Such conflicting views meant that it was difficult to establish police consultative committees. In Southwark there was an agonising period during which efforts were made to establish a working relationship. I am pleased to be able to say that recent evidence suggests that at least some consensus has been reached. Although there may be be different objectives, it is now thought to be beneficial for the various groups to work together. It is another optimistic sign.

I am worried about the fact that there are some no-go areas in my borough. They are to be found on some of the more deprived and rundown estates. Milkmen have refused to deliver milk, postmen have refused to deliver mail and doctors have refused to make home calls. Even the police have felt intimidated about approaching those estates. It bodes ill for regeneration of the inner city if, within a mile or two of this House, there are areas about whose safety the staff of public services have misgivings.

Ms. Abbott: Would the hon. Gentleman care to name the estates he has referred to and say how recently he heard those allegations about police and milkmen not going into them?

Mr. Bowden: A month ago, postmen refused to deliver mail to the Dog Kennel hill estate because they were being assaulted and girocheques were being removed from their sacks. For the last few years, doctors have refused to carry out calls in, milkmen have refused to deliver to, and postmen have refused to enter, the North Peckham estate —except in twos or threes. I am prepared to give more instances if the hon. Lady wants them, but if she is satisfied with those, I shall continue.

If the inner city is to be regenerated, we must ensure that these public services are provided, and that they are supported by the police. The hopeful signs in the Commissioner's report and my right hon. Friend's speech show that progress can be made.

In the context of manpower and police morale, it is important that police on shift do not see members of their shift being withdrawn and so feel undersupported. In many cases this is the result of redeployment; members of a shift are withdrawn to be put back on the beat as home beat community police officers. That is done for the general benefit and improvement of life and policing in communities. Alongside public confidence in the police, the police must be confident that the public support them and recognise the good work they are doing. Bad police practices must be condemned and good ones congratulated. This debate gives us an opportunity to do just that.

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I welcome the opportunity of this debate. I am happy to speak after my political neighbour in Southwark—the hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden)—whose constituency is the only borough that spans the political divide in the Metropolitan police district.

I, too, congratulate the new Commissioner on his appointment and wish him well. I have known him for a long time, ever since he served in Thames Valley and, in my previous incarnation as a lawyer, I did some work for him. I also pay tribute to the retired Commissioner for all that he did for Greater London. Londoners have good cause to place great confidence in both men. I share the general goals set out by the Commissioner: they are appropriate, although I might quibble about some details.

I also pay tribute without hesitation to the police in my borough. Two police divisions are based there—the Southwark division in Borough high street, and the Rotherhithe and Tower Bridge division in Carter street. The latter covers part of my constituency and part of that of the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman). Both forces are extremely co-operative and helpful. There are occasional complaints, some of which are serious and need dealing with seriously, but in general I pay tribute to the police's work in a difficult part of London. I agree with the hon. Member for Dulwich that policing in places such as Southwark is often far from easy. Police cadets and young officers have told me that they feel afraid when going into certain estates, not only in the south and middle, but in the northern parts of Southwark, too.

I have raised before with the Home Secretary, and I repeat now, the need to do everything possible to encourage police morale. One of the things that makes them unhappy is that, having pursued lawbreakers and made an arrest, they never ultimately discover what happens to them. Prosecution is now out of their hands and in the hands of the Crown prosecution service. The Home Secretary has been responsive to my concern that the police should be given more information and be able to feel rightly proud of what they successfully do on behalf of the community. I hope for better progress in this area. The CPS is still in its early stages and still makes mistakes, as the case of Robert McHale is proving at the moment. That is partly a Home Office and partly an Attorney-General matter.

Another matter that causes me even more concern is the wastage of police officers. I raised it in my intervention, but it is also worth drawing attention to the report. Pages 48 and 49 state:

"Wastage again was disappointingly high in 1987. A total of 1,621 officers left the force, 6 per cent. more than in 1986. The real strength of the Force rose by only 433 which was, nevertheless, an improvement on 1986 . . . The number of officers who left with less than two years' service (probationers) rose from 122 to 141 which was disappointing . . . Transfers to other forces continued to be a major cause for concern with 302 officers (19 per cent. of all wastage) transferring compared with 249 in 1986 (16 per cent.)"

The graph supplied with the report shows that the number of officers lost is almost the same as those recruited, especially at senior and middle rank level. When a community has become accustomed to its police officers and then they leave—a point already made several times—it undermines the belief in community policing, because the police officers that the community gets to know, and with whom it shares responsibility, suddenly move on. That is a serious defect in the system.

Housing is certainly a problem. I am troubled that we still do not provide adequate housing opportunities. I accept that police officers cannot be forced to live in the area in which they work, but I am even more concerned when, for example, just behind the police station in Rotherhithe, flats owned by the Metropolitan police—they were formerly police flats—remain empty, which is entirely undesirable in a borough where there are thousands of homeless people. Perhaps, in the short term, the flats could be given to other people in need, although housing police in the community enhances their commitment to it.

The Home Secretary has rightly said that the cost of policing London is high. Therefore, it is unfair when other Government Departments allege that the cost of other services in London are so high—for example, the Health Service, social services and education. One of the reasons for abolishing ILEA is that it costs so much but, in fact, it costs less per head than the Metropolitan police. We should remind people that, given such high costs, the results, although in some ways encouraging, are still not good.

The hon. Member for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) made a thoughtful speech, and I agreed with everything that he said—as, indeed, I did with other hon. Members. The hon. Gentleman said that the clear-up rate is still poor, and in terms of cost benefit is not a matter for complacency. We must ensure that there is no let-up, so that the police clear up a far greater percentage of crime.

Why should citizens of London, who pay a substantial amount towards its policing, have only half as much chance as the rest of the country of the offences committed against them being dealt with? The individual citizen's rights are the same in London as elsewhere. He should have the same chance of good policing. In that regard, the London police need to do better.

I want briefly to reflect on the theme of the speech of the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley). The causes of crime are clearly complex, and no one can pretend that there is an easy analysis. However, I am persuaded that, if there is a disadvantaged and derelict community—one that looks vandalised before anyone does anything to make it worse—it does not enhance the chances of people feeling committed to it. For example, in my road, next to my house, there are five squatted properties. They have broken windows and are derelict outside. When people smash up other buildings on the road, it makes hardly any difference, because no one has a real commitment. I am the only person with a secure tenancy in my terrace. Bollards are broken and windows smashed, and there is litter, which all become just part of the community; the incentive to improve it is almost neglible.

We need community investment in the inner city that brings about community responsibility. When people feel proud of their community, they will act as police officers. There will be more self-policing. People know who lives in an area and are concerned about that community.

In a society such as inner London where there is high unemployment, poor schooling in secondary schools and much truancy, policing is more difficult. Almost half of all offences are committed by 10 to 20-year-olds, many of whom either should be at school or have no training or work available. Unless we give decent schooling, training and working opportunities, there will be no incentive to have a good community which is self-policing.

Parents and families must play their part. Often, they do not play a sufficient part and take responsibilities, but leave them to others. This is not helped when there is such a sense of dereliction and despondency in one area, while elsewhere people are doing well. My borough is typical of the two nations. A massive number of my constituents live in appalling conditions while next door extraordinarily expensive housing is being built—costing £200,000, £300,000, £400,000, £500,000, £1 million and, as advertised just last week, £2·5 million. It is not surprising, when people believe that there are two nations, that they have no commitment and feel that they are outsiders while others are clearly insiders.

The annual report of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis refers to the work of the Metropolitan and

[Mr. Simon Hughes]

City police company fraud branch. It is a reflection of the society in which we live that it has had so much more work. The report states:

"1987 was unparalleled in terms of media interest in the work of the fraud branch . . .

A total of 462 cases involving £1,545 million continued from 1986; in 1987, a further 590 cases were accepted for investigation with a total cash at risk figure of £3,295 million. During the year, 366 people were charged or summonsed.

Multiple share applications and mortgage frauds formed a large part of the workload of the branch.

The Government's privatisation programme led to an increase in the number of those who submitted multiple share applications using a variety of names and addresses. Neither the severity of the sentences imposed, nor the attendant publicity impacted on the desire to make large illegal profits . . .

Mortgage frauds showed a considerable rise during the year."

In a self-centred and greedy society, we are producing a cash-and-grab community. It is not surprising—whatever the rights or wrongs of it—when young and relatively inexperienced 14, 16 and 19-year-olds living on social security in bed-and-breakfast hotels or grotty council estates see in the windows of others expensive equipment that they have no chance of obtaining and so turn to crime, with thefts of videos and electronic equipment. They are encouraged by advertising and the idea that one can profit for oneself—the free enterprise society gone mad.

I was saddened yesterday by the fact that the Prime Minister when asked about ticket touts at Wimbledon said that she had no responsibility for them. She does. Like the Home Secretary and all other Ministers, she has a responsibility for curbing the selfishness in our society that allows people who profit selfishly and illegally at the expense of others to go about unhindered. Those people are now encouraged by Conservative Members, as the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) made clear she did the other day.

We need an attack on the two nations to make one nation, so that the two communities become one and young people are given the opportunities to grow up as law-abiding and respecting citizens. The youth service in London is under threat. We do not know whether it will have security of funding. Without a decent youth service, adult education service and nursery education, the chances of people living in a well-regulated society will be small.

I pointed out in an intervention that alcohol is a major problem. A substantial number of offences, both minor and major, are committed by people under the influence of drink and drugs.

Proper education and regulation are needed to avoid the situations so often seen in our society, whether on the way to or from football matches, discotheques, clubs and pubs, or in and out of supermarkets. If we do not curb the acceptability of drinking in such large quantities, we shall not deal with the vandalism and criminality that so often results. We must ensure that alcoholism is as high and vivid on the agenda as drug taking. Together they are lethal, but far more people fall victim to drink than to drugs and commit offences as a result, and it is a far more prevalent evil, conspiring towards the vast number of offenders who appear in the courts and the many others who do not.

I hope that this debate will show the police on the beat that they are respected and appreciated for what they do, but the authorities responsible for the police should be aware that we are still far from being a harmonious and well ordered society. The police must listen and respond more to the needs of the community and share with it the responsibility for policing. Only in that way will the quality of life of a capital city, which could be like Toronto but is not yet, become acceptable for the many citizens who, sadly, have to live in a city in which crime, vandalism and dereliction are the orders of the day.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg (Hampstead and Highgate): I differ in just one respect from the views expressed by the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes). I believe that he spoke of Conservative Members—in the plural—supporting touts. I believe that the singular would be more accurate.

I begin by apologising for the fact that, like so many hon. Members, I had constituency business earlier in the day and I have a further constituency appointment later. I hope that the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) will forgive me if I miss his mellifluous words of wisdom, and that the two Douglases—major and minor—will forgive me for having missed their contributions. I shall read the Official Report with great interest over breakfast.

I wish to make four brief points. First, I believe that neighbourhood watch schemes are among the most helpful and useful innovations and I was delighted at the support expressed by all hon. Members who mentioned them. If we can encourge those who give up their own time to help to keep crime off the streets and to report it, we shall be performing a very valuable duty. My one concern is that the effect is to move crime to areas without neighbourhood watch schemes. That must be a major reason for adding to the number of schemes in existence.

Allied with that is the question of home beat officers. The last Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis began to reverse one of the most unfortunate developments in London—the fact that officers remained on home beat posts for too short a time. The job can be done properly only if they are there for three or more years, so that they get to know the people and the people get to know them. I welcome the new Commissioner and hope that he will continue that trend.

The courts will also have to be less lenient when guilty verdicts are delivered. Most of us must have heard people asking why Parliament does not increase the penalties, but it is no use increasing them when the courts so often do not use the existing maximum. I make no further comment on that, save to say that one day Parliament will have to take notice of the overwhelming demand of our electors to bring back the death penalty.

I wish to comment on two points made by the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley). I welcome his comments about neighbourhood watches and his assurance that he supports the police in the work that they do. I do not doubt that that is true of the right hon. Gentleman, but he must admit that his party in London has, in most cases, given a wholly opposite impression. I do not believe that London ought to have an elected police authority. We have a unique opportunity to question Ministers about the police in London, which is far better than leaving it to politically inspired local authority control.

As the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) said, the consultative committees, which got off to a bad start, are beginning to work well. In Camden, the Labour party, after a public split, now supports the consultative committee, which is doing remarkably good work.

The hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) commented on the freemasons. I am not one and have not been one, but in view of the charitable work that they do, I would be proud to be one, and I do not agree that freemasonry is incompatible with being a policeman.

On page 24 of his report, the Commissioner talks about the special constabulary. I am worried, and have been for a long time, that the special constabulary is not doing the job it should be doing because of inadequate numbers. I should like to pay tribute to the recently retired Chief Commandant, Arthur Hammond, an old friend, who did very good work. I hope that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary will insist that the new Chief Commandant rides a horse, which Arthur refused to do during his many years of service.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) said, we must get more members of the community involved with the specials. There is a job of work to be done, and we must try to overcome the unease that has for a long time been felt by some full-time policemen.

I hope that the Commissioner will pay more heed to the views of local police than to the traffic branch when it comes to discussing matters of traffic. It is highly frustrating for good chief superintendents, who have a good rapport with their local community, to have to tidy up the mess created by the traffic branch. Of course the traffic branch is only doing its job, but it often does it unthinkingly and unfeelingly.

People in my area have immense problems with towings away and clampings where, frankly, it is unnecessary. The police have to do it because there are yellow lines. I hope that, as a result of the efforts of Councillor Spence, there will be a review of yellow lines and that the unnecessary ones will be removed. Such difficulties do more harm to police-community relations than almost anything else.

The House needs an opportunity, from time to time, to discuss the Metropolitan police's good work. It is not surprising that there is far less division in the House about the police than there used to be. One of the reasons for that is the opportunity for discussion. We can now meet the police in a larger forum, rather than on a one-to-one basis with chief superintendents or superintendents.

The consultative committees are doing a valuable job. I hope that the Home Office will find it possible to maintain and perhaps even increase the allocation to the Commissioner to enable him to support consultative committees and neighbourhood watch schemes. There is a danger that, as the number of neighbourhood watch schemes increases, the Commissioner might not be able, with existing manpower, to provide the number of policemen necessary to maintain active liaison with neighbourhood watchers. I warmly welcome the Commissioner's report.

1.4 pm

Ms. Diane Abbott (Hackney, North and Stoke Newington): First, I should like to place on record my commitment—and that of all London Labour Members—to fighting crime and helping to make London a safe place for people to live in. I am a single woman and live on my own, so I understand the fears of women of all ages, whether single or married, about crime, sexual violence and being alone at home at night.

It is absurd to argue, as some of the more disreputable Tory Members have argued, that the Labour party in London is pro-crime and pro-disorder. It is our people who suffer most from crime. All over the world, it is the poor who suffer most from crime, whether council tenants, single parents or pensioners, so the Labour party in London, which endeavours to represent working people and the poor, is worried about crime. It is our people who are hit worst and hit first by the effects of crime. Crime is a very big issue in my constituency of Hackney North, and Stoke Newington.

I shall touch on Tory hypocrisy about law and order. Hypocrisy characterises the Tory party in the 1980s, and on the matter of law and order the hypocrisy is particularly gross and stinking. Since the Prime Minister has been in power, crime has increased by half. My hon. Friends have mentioned how, in general, the Conservative regime has contributed to the rising tide of lawlessness and disorder by promoting a climate of materialism and grasping rampant individualism. Spiralling poverty and homelessness, have also been the consequences of eight years of Tory misrule. There have also been cuts in social security. There is no doubt that all these create the climate for the rising tide of crime under the Government. In 1979, the Tory party said in its manifesto:

"respect for the rule of law is the basis of a free and civilized life."

That comes ill from the Tories. If they want to give lectures about respect for the rule of law, they should give them to Ernest Saunders and other leading Conservative voters who were involved in the £1 million Guinness scandal, and other City frauds.

I shall touch on the Home Secretary's closing remarks in his introduction to the debate. He talked of the importance of the highest professional standards in the Metropolitan police. I feel that I can speak for every London Labour Member in saying that we agree with him wholeheartedly about that. When we discuss those matters, when we meet our local police commanders and when we speak to our local communities, tenants' associations, community groups and young people, that issue is always top of the agenda. That is why we have raised the issue of freemasonry.

There was a lot of spluttering and noise from Tory Members when we brought up the subject of freemasons. Hon. Members talked about proof. Books and television and newspaper investigations have given rise to considerable concern. The point, above all, about the Metropolitan police and freemasonry is that, like Caesar's wife, the police force should be above reproach. There is no doubt that the continuing drip of allegations, cases and investigations about freemasonry in the Metropolitan police does not leave the Metropolitan police above reproach.

I was interested to hear the hon. Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) say that membership of the freemasons was not incompatible with carrying out police duties. That is not quite the view of the Metropolitan police. Even it acknowledges that membership of the freemasons can cause a problem—if only a problem in public perception. That is why the Metropolitan police itself in 1985 officially advised officers that they should consider the advisability of membership of the freemasons.

[Ms. Diane Abbott]

If those at the highest levels of the Metropolitan police are aware of the problems caused to the public's perception of the police by the fact—it is a fact—that one in five police officers in London are freemasons, I am amazed that Conservative members are so smug about it. Not only are one in five police officers in London freemasons, but they include members of the fraud squad and the complaints investigation branch.

With the best will in the world, there can be no doubt that that causes problems when it comes to public confidence. All kinds of possibilities can arise from such high levels of police involvement in freemasonry at senior levels, including the questions of promotion within the force, and corrupt collusion with freemason contractors. I need only touch on the case of chief inspector Brian Woollard who, unfortunately, has recently had to resign from the Metropolitan police. He alleged throughout his period of suspension and in many interviews that it was because he, as a loyal dedicated policeman, chose to investigate what he suspected might be corrupt connections between contractors who were freemasons and the policemen who were awarding the contracts also being freemasons, that he was suspended and forced out of the police.

Freemasonry in the Metropolitan police also causes problems with internal investigations. How can a senior policeman who is a freemason possibly be seen as adequately investigating a complaint against another policeman who is also a freemason, and even if he is doing so, how is that situation perceived? As I said earlier, it is possible that the public might think, because senior policemen are members of freemasonry lodges along with known criminals, the criminals might escape the long arm of the law. Those are only possibilities, but the problem of the Metropolitan police connection with freemasonry is one of perception. As I said earlier, the Metropolitan police should be seen to be above reproach.

I want to continue my theme of the highest professional standards. One area in which the Metropolitan police may have been slipping from the highest professional standards is in collusion with the media. I refer to a case in Hackney. When a raid was made on a club in Clapton, both national and local media were tipped off about it in advance. A photographer from the Evening Standard went along and photographs of police in riot gear were splashed in the papers. All the stories in the papers referred to the Yardies, the Jamaican mafia which is supposed to control every crime in the London area, from a bank robbery in Brixton to a mugging on Croydon high street. About 70 people were handcuffed during the raid but only five charges were brought. Several Jamaican politicians have been in and out of London in the past few months and I have discussed the issue with them, with Jamaicans in this country, and with my constituents. People are alarmed that inflated media propaganda about the Yardies, the non-existent Jamaican mafia, reflects badly on the Jamaican community, both here and abroad the vast majority of whom are law-abiding people. If the police have been colluding in that media propaganda and media hype, that is wholly irresponsible and will undoubtedly damage police-community relations.

I should like to touch on another case of media collusion and to talk about a woman who is a personal friend and whom I have known for many years. She is called Dolly Kiffin and is a community leader on the Broadwater Farm estate in Tottenham. I have known her since before either of us moved in the public domain and know her to be a principled, hardworking woman who is committed to her community. She has done an enormous amount of work to turn Broadwater Farm around from a sink estate to an estate which people from all over the world now visit to see the community initiatives and the things that have been done to bring young black and white people together and to see the way in which the estate has been improved and employment generated.

Dolly Kiffin was subjected to a slanderous campaign in the newspapers, especially in the Mail group of newspapers. It was implied that she was involved in instigating the Broadwater Farm riots; that she even ordered the killing of PC Blakelock, and that she was financially corrupt. I am pleased to say that in the last few weeks Dolly Kiffin has received damages and compensation running into six figures from the Mail group of newspapers, which has had to admit that all those allegations were downright lies. The problem is that—it reflects on the Metropolitan police—it is alleged that the stories that appeared in the Mail newspapers have now been admitted to be slanderous. They appeared in the Mail newspapers with police collusion. Such collusion with the media does nothing to enhance public esteem of professional standards in the Metropolitan police.

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms. Abbott: I shall not give way. I shall develop my arguments.

I wish to talk further about professional standards and about the Broadwater Farm trials. As Conservative Members will remember that, at the end of investigations, six people were charged, three of whom were juveniles. Of the three juveniles, two were acquitted. I remind Conservative Members of what the judge said in acquitting them. The judge found that the treatment of one juvenile, who was 13 years of age, was oppressive on three points. He spent 48 hours in a police cell, isolated from his family, and cut off from the outside world. When he was interviewed, he was clothed only in underpants. After a change in interviewing tactics, the child broke down emotionally and cried. The judge found his treatment to be oppressive, and directed his acquittal.

There was another child, aged 15, with a mental age of a child of seven. Again, the judge found that the police treatment of that little boy was oppressive. Such cases call into question the professional standards of at least a minority of Metropolitan policemen.

Mr. Cohen: My hon. Friend will recall that the policing of the Broadwater farm estate and the subsequent trial was the subject of a report from such an esteemed body as Amnesty International. That report has not been widely reported in the national media or taken up by the Government and commented on. Does my hon. Friend agree that Amnesty International has made a serious report and that it should be given due weight?

Ms. Abbott: I thank my hon. Friend for reminding me of the Amnesty International report. [Interruption.] I can hear the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) sniggering. Of course, torture and the oppressive treatment of young people is of no concern to him. I put it to the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington that we shall not have effective policing in this city until——

Mr. Dicks: Will the hon. Lady give way?

Ms. Abbott: I shall not give way. I wish to complete my point.

I put it to the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington that effective policing and law and order in this city depend on wide public consent to the activities of the police. The cases that I mentioned call into question the professionalism of at least some Metropolitan police officers.

Mr. Dicks: Rubbish.

Ms. Abbott: It will do the hon. Gentleman no good to say, "Rubbish." I am merely quoting a judge's remarks. If the hon. Gentleman considers that the judge's remarks are rubbish, he should take up the matter with the judge concerned.

I now refer to the police in my constituency of Hackney, North and Stoke Newington. Unfortunately, there have been several disturbing cases of police behaviour in Stoke Newington, and in Stoke Newington police station in particular. I remind hon. Members of the case of Colin Roach, who died from a shotgun blast while in custody in Stoke Newington police station. In the eyes of the community, how Colin Roach was shot and died has never been satisfactorily explained. There was the case of Derek Pascall, a 25-year-old, who was beaten up and burnt with cigarettes on his stomach by two policemen. He was eventually awarded £3,500 damages against the police. There was the case of Danny Rama and Brian Donovan, two London printers, who won their appeals against conviction during the Wapping dispute. They alleged that they were badly beaten in a police van. The police said that they could not explain their multiple injuries.

There was the recent case of Trevor Monerville who was arrested by police at Stoke Newington police station. He turned up in Maudsley hospital suffering from a swollen brain and his body was covered in bruises. To this day he suffers from paralysis and his family have had no answers to questions as to how he received the brain damage and why his body was covered in bruises. Two pensioners were assaulted by Stoke Newington police and eventually gained damages in the High court.

I am not saying that such instances are the norm. If Conservative Members take seriously issues of law and order in London, and if they are concerned about the reputation of the Metropolitan police force, it is not enough for them to snigger and sneer and to shrug off instances of brutality which have resulted in court rulings in the complainants' favour. If hon. Members' wives, mothers, sons, had been assaulted and had to go to the court to get damages, they would take it seriously. On behalf of the citizens of London we are obliged to take seriously such cases, which reflect poorly on the reputation of the Metropolitan police force. When I and my hon. Friends raise such cases, we are accused of being anti-police. That is absurd. It is pro-police to expect the highest possible standards from the police.

While on the subject of absurdity, it is only fair to mention a motion on the Order Paper signed by a large number of Conservative Members, entitled, "Hackney police operation against muggers". I note that none of the Conservative Members who have signed the motion have anything to do with Hackney. Some of them have never been to Hackney. The two Labour Members of Parliament for Hackney, the Hackney council and the Hackney police committee are united in wishing to fight crime and mugging in Hackney.

I wish to place on record my respect for the work of the police committee support unit, which is denigrated in the motion. It has done a great deal of work on crime prevention on estates. The police committee support unit has been quoted as saying that the police operation was inappropriate. It has been quoted out of context. One aspect of the police operation against muggers, which in some respects was successful, was the suggestion that there should be mounted police in Ridley road market as a deterrent against muggers. The police committee support unit merely pointed out that, given the packed nature of Ridley road market, mounted police were not the most effective way of chasing muggers. The police committee support unit has been quoted out of context in the motion. The motion is foolish. It has been signed by people who have no real interest in the problems of crime in Hackney.

In conclusion, I hope that all hon. Members are united in wanting effective policing in London. Effective policing needs broad popular consent. Some boroughs and people were unwilling to become involved with the police consultative committee. They were not against police consultation in principle, but they did not believe that the police genuinely wished to consult. They considered that the committees were a sham and that there would be no genuine consultation and that there would be no practical result. Where it can be proved that those committees can result in genuine consultation people have been willing to join them,but there is no doubt that the unwillingness of people to join the consultative committees was because the consultative committees did not conform with the blueprint laid down in Lord Scarman's report and did not have the powers that were suggested. People genuinely doubted the commitment of the police to genuine consultation.

If we are to have effective policing with broad popular consent, we must be open-minded and we must face some of the problems over the puplic perception of the Metropolitan police. We must face the problem that the high level of police involvement in freemasonry poses to confidence in the police. We must face the problem of recurrent instances of abuse of police power. We must face the problem of the taint of racism attached to some activities of some members of the Metropolitan police force, whether in individual cases or in general attitude. Anyone who is genuinely for law and order and who wishes to protect the life, property and well-being of the people of London must wish to see the Metropolitan police force stand in the highest public esteem. That is particularly so of those of us who genuinely believe in these issues, and are not merely trying to gain cheap political advantage, and who live in inner London among the communities that we represent. The Metropolitan police force will stand in the highest public esteem if the force itself and its political masters are seen to pursue with rigour and seriousness some of the abuses and problems which I have touched on.

1.25 pm

Mr. Terry Dicks (Hayes and Harlington): I have never heard such a load of codswallop in all my life as the words of the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott). She claims to represent the working class, with her middle class accent, yuppie media background and visits to Champneys. She says that she lives in her constituency, but does not say that she is living in a house that most of her constituents could not afford.

Ms. Abbott: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Dicks: No, I will not give way to the hon. Lady under any circumstances. We had not one word of regret from her about the death of P. C. Blakelock, which showed her one-sided views. P. C. Blakelock was butchered by a load of West Indians bringing their tribal behaviour on to the streets of Broadwater farm. He was butchered and cut into dozens of pieces, but there was not a word of apology from the hon. Lady for that.

Ms. Abbott: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Dicks: No I will not give way. I want to get on to the main issue of policing of London.

Ms. Abbott: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. What does the hon. Member mean by "tribal behaviour"?

Mr. Dicks: I will treat that intervention with the contempt that it deserves. The hon. Lady knows very well what I was talking about.

Policing in London is a major problem, as has already been said. Crime is at a high level—far too high to be acceptable. The increase in establishment referred to by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is not having an impact on policing, and the move to civilianise some of the posts is not leading to a large number of bobbies being back on the beat. In 1985, the previous Commissioner called for 3,000 more police officers to be appointed. Two years ago, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary agreed that there should be 1,200 more police officers, with the increase being spread over four years. That is hardly an effective response to those demands.

Public order is a huge drain on both public resources and manpower. Like me, many people in London are annoyed that the issues for which the police are used are often not related to Britain. There are demonstrations by Arab against Arab about problems in their own countries and police manpower is used to ensure that the demonstrators keep moving through the streets of central London. Police officers on the beat want to know why such demonstrations should be allowed on the streets of London at the taxpayers' and ratepayers' expense. A recent demonstration involving middle east factions cost the taxpayers and ratepayers £6,000, with people walking through London causing chaos to the traffic and chanting words that most people in England could not understand. There have been demonstrations on Indian and Eastern European matters, all of which cost time and money and take policemen away from the job that they should be doing—preventing and finding the answers to crime.

A continuous police presence has to be maintained outside the South African embassy because the anti-apartheid groups want to go on about rights. These people have good solicitors and are able to show that they are blocking only part of the pavement. There is a constant noise and the constant potential for violence, so police have to stay on duty. If these demonstrations were taking place outside the Foreign Office or the Home Office, regulations would be introduced within 24 hours to get them stopped and to get these people removed. Instead, we have to waste police resources to allow these anti-apartheid groups to cause bedlam around the clock.

The Notting hill carnival, which takes place once a year, locks up the best part of Kensington for two days to allow a handful of West Indians to bring their culture and way of life on to the streets of London. Last year, policing of the Notting hill carnival cost about £1 million, of which £56,000 was spent on feeding the police. There is no reason why the streets of Notting hill should be blocked off to enable people to behave in the way that they do and to encourage petty crime. Ordinary decent people who have lived there many years longer than the immigrants want to go about their normal business. Why should not they be allowed to drive through Notting hill just because there will be a West Indian culture concert and rabble-making throughout the weekend? I have written to the Secretary of State about this, but he replied that it is a good social occasion and that it should not be stopped. I find that amazing, as do most ordinary people and, of course, the police.

Sometimes junior police officers have been instructed to turn a blind eye to drunkenness, petty thieving and minor drug-taking. If they carried out the letter of the law it could lead to a massive uprising of the local inhabitants. It seems that there is one rule for my constituents but a different one and different interpretation of the law for the constituents of Kensington and the West Indians of that area. I want people from that area to be treated in exactly the same way as my constituents who are picked up for drunkenness, smoking pot or petty thieving. It is most unfair that there is this one-sided approach to the maintenance of law and order in some parts of London.

Football and other sporting activities are a tremendous drain on police resources. The best time to be a criminal, especially in London, is Saturday afternoon. If the police are not at demonstrations they are at football matches. Most weekends police stations are undermanned because police must cope with football matches or demonstrations. Mention has been made of London's responsibilities for processions. It is perhaps necessary for various processions to take place, and various heads of state come here and must be protected. But the other activities that I have mentioned are completely unnecessary.

I have a letter from the Under-Secretary dated March 1987 saying that there were not any no-go areas in this country. That is untrue. Does he have the courage to go with me—I am not sure whether I have—to go along All Saints road, the home of the Mangrove club? He will know that policemen are not allowed to make arrests at that club unless they get permission from senior officers. Those senior officers must talk to community leaders to ascertain whether it is all right to send the police in to make arrests. If they do not talk to community leaders there must be a large police presence to ensure that the officer making the arrest can get out safely. That is only one no-go area of which I am aware, but there are many others, and my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) mentioned some. Those are areas where not only milkmen or postmen cannot go but where there must be special policing. That is positive discrimination. Normal police duties cannot be undertaken because the ethnic community might not like it and cause trouble. Why is there special policing for primarily the West Indian communities in the capital city but different policing in the rest of London? I cannot understand it but, more important, nor can people outside. Apart from All Saints road, there are no-go areas in Brixton and Broadwater farm.

Mr. John Fraser (Norwood): That is not true. Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Dicks: No, I shall not give way. The hon. Gentleman has just come into the Chamber, but some hon. Members have been sitting here since 9.30 am. I could go on and on about no-go areas. [Interruption.] I shall take no notice of the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) who has just popped into the Chamber to sit on his backside and grin. I believe the police officers who are at the sharp end, day after day, all over London. I take their word for what is happening.

It has been suggested that civilianisation will have a massive impact, that 1,500 posts could be civilianised so that bobbies could return to the beat. That figure is to be found in the 1985-86 Session report of the Public Accounts Committee. With 150 posts being civilianised every year, it will take 10 years to get policemen back on the beat. Some serving police officers in London also say that they have yet to see a bobby being taken off a job that has been civilianised. They have great doubts about the speed at which civilianisation is taking place.

The Crown Prosecution Service is one of the best services that many policemen know for the successful villian. The chance of cases being withdrawn or dismissed is higher now, because of having to resort to the Crown Prosecution Service, than ever before. Communication between the police and the CPS is very poor. To process cases before they are passed from a police station to the CPS leads to an enormous drain on the resources of local police stations. Why on earth can we not return to the old system under which a policeman arrested a suspect and took the case right through to court? Why should the CPS act as a buffer between the police and the courts? We are getting nowhere very slowly.

The equipment used by the Metropolitan police is deteriorating. According to some police officers, the cuts have led to a reduction in the number of vehicles. They say that maintenance standards are not what they were and that there is now a directive to buy British. I am sorry to have to say that the British car is still not the best car in and around town. The police should be allowed to reconsider the directive to buy British if British cars do not serve the general needs of the Metropolitan police. I am also told that the police experience problems with their radios. They are often defective, and that leads to inefficiency. Furthermore, it can lead to the police being put in danger.

Policemen are not gaolers and they should never be gaolers. Last year, 1 million man hours were lost in London, the equivalent of 700 officers on the beat, because they had to look after prisoners who were on remand in police cells. It is wrong that police manpower should be taken off the streets of our cities so that policemen can act as gaolers in their own police stations. There is something wrong somewhere.

Let me put the other side of the coin. Since 1979, two new prisons have been built, at Frankland and Wayland, and £1 million has been spent on providing sports facilities for the prisoners. They have floodlit facilities and up-to-date sports halls. Everything is provided for them. It seems strange that we have allocated £1 million for sports facilities in those prisons when people on remand have to be placed in police station cells. A priority of that kind leads me to believe that there is something wrong with the system.

There is disillusionment among police officers in the Metropolitan police. They are leaving every week for better jobs in county forces, or they are just resigning. The official side on the negotiating board suggests that rent allowances and the London allowance should be reduced. What a way to encourage police officers to stay in London. Police officers leave London because there is cheaper housing elsewhere and better schools and more agreeable living conditions outside London. Most important of all, as one young policeman said to me, there is less abuse by Labour party politicians—and some Conservative ones—if they move to the counties. The police hear nothing but criticism from the Labour party, from its leaders and from some of the militant Left-wing members of the Labour party, about their role in London.

Many of us have seen disgusting literature from organisations funded by the now defunct Greater London council, which did nothing but run down the Metropolitan police. The police look for understanding of the problems of their work and for some respect for what they do.

Mr. Bernie Grant: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Dicks: The hon. Gentleman has been here for only two minutes; he can sit down again.

The Metropolitan police are doing a marvellous job in trying conditions. They are continually under attack by liberal do-gooders, some of whom are in the Home Office, where hands are wrung and brows creased, but, in some cases, no action is taken. The Home Office must support the police, for that is what the police want. They sometimes worry about whether that support exists. I believe that it does, but we need further evidence of it from the Home Secretary and the Home Office.

The police should not be expected to be social workers or community relations officers. Their job is to maintain law and order. That does not necessarily mean that they should have to put their arms round the shoulders of potential villains or worry about the community relations effect of law and order decisions. The sooner we realise that the police are there to do their job—not to worry about the impact that that might have on West Indians, Asians, Englishmen, Irishmen or Scotsmen—the better. Drastic action to improve manpower and conditions is called for. Until it is taken, policing London will remain a problem.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. Three hon. Members are still hoping to speak before the winding-up speeches at about 2 o'clock. I hope that they will divide the time between them.

1.42 pm

Mr. Harry Cohen (Leyton): Racism is a serious source of friction which hinders the important work the police must do to protect communities of all races, colours and beliefs—including the black community. That friction is not helped by the sort of speech made by the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks). He fosters that sort of racism, and I hope that the Minister will dissociate himself from the hon. Gentleman's remarks. If crime is to be tackled, the black community must work with the police, and vice versa.

I recently caught a television programme, one of the series called "C.A.T.S. Eyes", in which Jill Gascoigne goes about with a couple of other girls and catches criminals and spies. She reports to a black boss, who is presumably head of the security services in Scotland Yard. Although it was difficult to table the question, I recently asked the Prime Minister how many black people there are in management positions in the security services in Scotland Yard. I asked whether "the security services are an equal opportunity employer".

Today, I received the answer:

"The legislation governing equal opportunities recognises the need for exceptions in relation to members of the armed forces and the safeguarding of national security."

That almost certainly means that there are no black citizens in management positions in Scotland Yard or similar services. The implication of the Prime Minister's answer is that they are not to be trusted. So this racism extends to the Government, who do not provide equal opportunities in this respect.

Racism goes much further. For example, on the "South Bank Show", Lenny Henry went to New York and made a speech in which he said:

"We have black people in London, too. They are generally known as 'the accused'."

I am afraid that there is more than a grain of truth in that. A disproportionate number of our black citizens are in gaol or mental hospitals. We complain about Eastern bloc mental hospitals, but a disproportionate number of our black citizens have been put in them by the predominantly white police and judiciary. that has to be sorted out if we are to deal with the problems of racism that have been touched on by the last couple of speakers.

Rising crime in London is generally non-racial; it affects all Londoners. there has been a substantial rise in virtually every major category of notifiable offence since 1979. It shows the Tory manifesto pledge to be a myth. It states:

"Yet respect for the rule of law is the basis of a free and civilised life. We will restore it."

That pledge was another trick on the electorate.

Violence against the person is up 49 per cent. since 1979; sexual offences are up 16 per cent.—that is a rapidly growing category—burglary is up 65 per cent., robbery is up 161 per cent., theft and handling of stolen goods are up 45 per cent., and fraud and forgery are up 13 per cent. —although that figure does not include the city slickers in the City of London who are getting way with millions. They are not caught because the police are not properly equipped. Criminal damage is up 84 per cent. and other offences are up 119 per cent. There is now 53 per cent. more crime than there was in 1979—more than half as much again. While the crime rate has accelerated, the clear-up rate for the entire country has gone down—from 40 per cent. in 1979 to 33 per cent. The clear-up rate in London is even less. As my hon. Friend the Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) said, it is down to about 16 per cent. That is an abysmal record for the Government.

It is all part of the tout philosophy enunciated by the hon. Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman) earlier this week. She said how wonderful the touts were—all part of the free market economy, which we must respect in everything. What it really means is that someone can make a quick, large buck without earning it. Of course, other people adopt the free market philosophy, for example the plying of the drugs trade and the increase in prostitution, including child prostitution. There has been a large increase in Thatcher's Britain; it is part of the free market economy. The arguments that apply to the touts also apply to those sorts of free markets.

Since 1979 there has been inequality combined with greed. There has been a massive increase in desperation arising from hardship. There are people on the make who, perhaps, have too much money in their pockets, yet they literally kick everybody out of their way so that they can make more. They have learnt a lesson from the Government—if they are powerful enough they can make the laws and get away with committing crimes. That philosophy, which the Government have created, has resulted in a large increase in crime, especially violent crime. That is reflected not only by racial attacks but by crimes against women, which have also increased substantially, and against children. As the House knows, I am a campaigner for animal rights. The incidence of violence against animals has increased; they are being treated appallingly—dog fights are an example. That is all part of the syndrome of life being treated as cheap and worthless which, again, stems from the Government's philosophy.

I know that Sir Peter Imbert has a difficult job, but I do not think that that was helped by his comment quoted in The Guardian this week, which said that Sir Peter was trying to appease some Tory hardliners. That is not a sensible way for a Commissioner to go about the task. Sir Peter is reported as saying:

"I have heard it said that the way to empty prisons is to threaten to fill them up."

That is an empty phrase, which would result in magistrates and judges sending more people to prison, causing overcrowding. Sending more people to prison will achieve exactly the opposite effect to what Sir Peter wishes. That is an empty phrase but it will not mean empty prisons.

The problem will become worse because prisons are a breeding ground for crime. We need to empty our prisons as much as possible and leave them for the violent offenders—the rapists, murderers and the like who must be in prison. We should not throw everyone else in there. We need another version of community care to deal with prisoners so that when they are released they have jobs, homes and a proper place in society rather than becoming isolated and desperate, and thus likely to reoffend. Sir Peter's suggestion is not helpful as a way to alleviate the problems in prisons or the problems of crime.

Police numbers should be evident, as this is an important part of police accountability. One problem of which London Labour Members complained when they met the police about events at Wapping was that the police in riot gear were not wearing numbers. Civil liberties are important and police numbers must be on show at all times.

The Government have a blind spot about the role of local authorities in tackling crime. When the Prime Minister had her crime prevention review, she did not invite anyone from the local authorities. In my area, people are involved in this work on the Cathall estate. I paid tribute to the police when I consulted them about crime prevention on that estate. They were helpful and came up with useful solutions, but solutions require local council finance. The Government are cutting local authority expenditure and cutting grants to organisations involved in victim support schemes.

It has been said that capitalism presents us all with a wonderful opportunity, if only we take it with both hands. That phrase came not from Ministers or professors of capitalism but from Al Capone. It shows that when we have the Prime Minister's brand of free market capitalism we get the rise in crime associated with it.

Mr. John Bowis (Battersea): At least two Opposition Members have sought to undermine confidence in the police. Conservative Members prefer to support our police, especially in London, in their dedicated and courageous job. We salute their work and achievements as portrayed in the Commissioner's report. We salute the 4 per cent. reduction in crime and the 13 per cent. increase in the time spent on the beat. We salute the 100,000 more neighbourhood watch schemes, which have taken the number of schemes over the 1 million mark.

There are problems. One is street robbery. Arrests have increased by 45 per cent. and the clear-up rate by 25 per cent. Nevertheless, robberies are up by 13 per cent. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary referred to some achievements in my area of Battersea. I should like to highlight that, because the Battersea street robbery figures show a decrease of 19 per cent. Arrests have doubled and clear-ups have risen by 117 per cent. That shows what can be done.

That has been achieved by deploying street crime squads. That means more men. It has been achieved by targeting known streets and criminals. That, too, means more men. It has been achieved by bringing in the territorial support group. That also means access to more manpower. Because fewer men have had to be sent to pickets and demonstrations—there has been a 65 per cent. decrease since last year in that respect—more are available to deal with street crime. It has also been achieved by shifting resources and concentrating on this rather than on other aspects of crime. That is good news, but it shows that good news comes only when we have the manpower and resources to achieve it. There is good news, too, on motor crime, vandalism and sex offences, but figures for house burglaries have risen, which I suspect is due to the transfer of manpower to concentrate on street crime.

The lesson is clear. If we have the men, we can win the war against crime. More men means less crime, more arrests and more clear-ups. As has already been pointed out, having so many police officers guarding prisoners in police cells, on remand or already sentenced, means the loss of 950,000 man-hours per year which should have been spent on the beat. The increasing complexity of fraud and the number of officers taken from the CID to concentrate on that type of crime has an effect right down the line, leaving fewer men available to solve crimes on the streets.

We must declare war on crime and there must be no hiding place for criminals. It is fine to have the neighbourhood watch, the shop watch, the pub watch, the cab watch and all the other exciting developments about which we have heard today. It is fine to have better lights, locks and alarms and greater vigilance by the public, by car owners, by home owners, by shopkeepers, by neighbours and by cameras. But we still need the manpower, both in the Metropolitan police and in the transport police.

Not long ago I went by Metropolitan line tube to Wembley with my son to see the final between Luton and Arsenal. We were appalled at the behaviour of drunken louts urinating in the carriages, setting fire to paper and insulting and abusing passengers, many of whom were young children travelling with their families. All that the police could do was to force more people into the carriages at Baker street and then let the train go on to Wembley Park. When the train arrived, there was not one police officer there to arrest the offenders and stop them going to the match. The police should be stopping such louts going to matches, and the transport police should be stopping them going on tube trains, but sufficient manpower is not available to make it possible to travel safely in London. We know of the problem on the Northern line and the black hole of crime which is such a danger to passengers, assuming that it is possible to get a train and thus to become a passenger.

The crime rate has fallen by 4 per cent., but there are still 737,000 offences, of which 120,000 are cleared up, so in more than 600,000 cases the criminals get away with it. For burglaries, the figure is 97,000 with only 7,000 clear-ups, so in 90,000 cases the criminals get away with it. We need to recruit more police and to pay them properly. If housing is a problem, we should consider some kind of shared purchase scheme to assist recruitment.

There is much to be said about traffic policing and many other areas which require additional manpower, but above all we need the police to stop crime. It is a simple question of what is required and the simple answer is more police. Sometimes the simple answer to a simple question is the right one. I urge my right hon. and hon. Friends to meet that answer.

1.59 pm

Mr. David Wilshire (Spelthorne): I am appalled that the House cannot organise its business better. It is insulting to my constituents and to my local police, on whose behalf I wish to speak, that, having put my name in a week ago, I have had to sit here for four and a half hours, through 75 minutes of Front Bench speeches, one speech lasting 30 minutes and three of more than 20 minutes, only to be told that I have only three or four minutes in which to make my speech.

This is the first time since becoming a Member of Parliament that I have had to focus my mind on the Metropolitan police. I am proud to say that my previous incarnation in local government was in a provincial police area.

There are three issues on which I had hoped to speak, but I cannot now go into any detail on two of them. I thought about the basics of policing, and the conclusion that I reached was that the accountability argument, which the Labour party deploys, is bogus, irrelevant and, on some occasions, when it is argued in respect of London, downright dangerous.

The second subject on which I focused my mind was the significance of London having different policing relations. My conclusion, on which I cannot elaborate, is that it is quite right that the capital should be policed separately and differently but that it is vital that standards throughout the Metropolitan police area should be the same. That thought would have led me, if I had had time, to develop an argument about whether the current Metropolitan police boundaries are correct.

I shall concentrate on what local experience in my constituency has taught me in the year that I have been Spelthorne's Member of Parliament. My conclusions are that I am lucky to be where I am and that, in that part of the Metropolitan police area, there are some tremendous policing successes to report. I suggest that the House takes some of that experience on board. The rest of the country could learn from what is going on there.

Community co-operation and a multi-agency approach to policing are the keys to beating the rising tide of crime. The important thing now is to focus on the effective use of existing resources, although we should consider providing new resources. In my little bit of the Metropolitan police area, the local community, particularly local community leaders, has been positive, enthusiastic and progressive about combating crime, and successful. The local police have provided me with a briefing note which says:

"The community of Staines through its local consultative committee has itself accepted its responsibility for crime prevention. The results could not be achieved by police acting in isolation but serve to demonstrate what can be achieved when police have the full confidence and support of a community and council all working together towards a common goal."

I have time to highlight only a few of the things that are going on. The formal framework is fully in place and operational. There is a consultative committee which has flourished and found a real job to do. It has produced a crime prevention panel, which is claimed to be the best in the Metropolitan police area. It has produced a junior crime prevention panel which, I am told, is the first in the Metropolitan police area. There is also a drug and alcohol abuse panel. One of its initiatives, taken with the help of a national brewery, is the establishment of the Metropolitan police area's first alcohol-free pub.

There have been several notable initiatives. The police have organised business watch successfully. They have set up the first non-retail business watch scheme in the United Kingdom on the Poyle trading estate near Heathrow airport, and emphasised road safety campaigns. Spelthorne borough council has financed security packages for the elderly. It provides locks and fits them free. The council has also combated juvenile crime. Last summer, it set up a "summer safe" campaign which attracted 400 children to take part in activities ranging from water skiing to snooker, with which police staff helped.

All that has produced dramatic results; and this is the lesson to be learnt. During the "summer safe" campaign, vandalism fell by 34 per cent. and cycle theft by 26 per cent. W. H. Smith reported a 50 per cent. reduction in shop lifting during that period. The security package for the elderly has resulted in burglaries of the elderly dropping by 40 per cent. and the road safety campaign has reduced death on the roads by 60 per cent.

The size of police territory is critical. May I therefore press the Minister to tell me whether he is now prepared to urge the Commissioner to accept the report that divided the current Twickenham division into two separate divisions so that Spelthorne borough has its own police station. Secondly, will he undertake that when the Staines police station is rebuilt, it will be situated in the middle of the community and that he will not give way to the temptation to build it outside? Policing by consent—high profile policing, the full and enthusiastic support of the borough council, which puts a large amount of money into policing in its community—is the only way to beat crime. What has happened in Spelthorne is magnificent, and the rest of London and the rest of the country can learn from it.

2.5 pm

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): I sympathise with the hon. Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) but I remember how, in an earlier debate on the Commissioner's reports, I have been squeezed out entirely. He has been luckier than I have been in the past, although I have been more fortunate this afternoon.

It has been an interesting debate, in which plenty of crimes have been committed by Conservative Members. We started with a bad case of political fraud and deception perpetrated by the Home Secretary, who described the activities of the GLC so as to give a completely misleading impression of the GLC's attitude to the police. I am a forgiving person. I still proudly wear a pair of GLC cuff links, and I have a spare pair at home. If the Home Secretary promises to wear them at a Cabinet meeting and flaunt them in front of the Prime Minister, I shall give him the spare set.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): What about the silver?

Mr. Banks: I am keeping that.

We have had an incitement to violence from the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks), who gave us his customary blend of racism, vulgar abuse and dementia. We have had incitements to boredom from many hon. Members and I suspect that the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department will be committing his usual crime of being inebriated by his own eloquence.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) is looking at me somewhat askance. Presumably, he is wondering whether I shall be arrested for dangerous political driving at the Dispatch Box. I shall do my best not to let him down.

The Opposition associate themselves with the congratulations to Peter Imbert, both on his appointment and on his knighthood. The London group of Labour Members has regular meetings with the Commissioner. At times we find them very illuminating and at times very annoying but they are always useful and we intend to continue those meetings and our meetings with the Home Secretary.

Let me say to the hon. Member for Spelthorne and others that the annual debate on the Commissioner's report is no replacement for a democratically elected and publicly accountable police authority in London. If such a system can operate outside London, why cannot we have it here in London? Why cannot we have a police committee? The City of London has its own police authority with a committee structure, and what is good enough for the City of London and good enough outside London should be good enough for Greater London.

I am glad that my right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook laid it firmly on the line that it remains the Labour party's position to establish a directly elected police authority for London when we are next in Government. That authority will have nothing to do with control of the day-to-day operations of the police but it will determine the overall operational policies and practices.

The biggest difference between the speeches of the Home Secretary and my right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook was the willingness of my right hon. Friend to examine causes as well as the effects of crime in London. That marks the great difference between the two parties. As I said in an intervention, even the Government are beginning to realise that the root causes of crime must be addressed. However, with this Government, and the policies that they are pursuing at the moment, crime will never be eliminated nor will any serious indentations be made on the levels of crime in our society. I accept that the Prime Minister cannot be personally blamed for all the crimes that are perpetrated in London, although she might be an incitement to riot should she walk the streets of London. However, she must take some indirect responsibility. She summed it all up when she said:

"There is no such thing as society. There is only a collection of individuals and families."

The Government's whole philosophy and all their policies are based on selfishness, greed, a sneering attitude to the public services and the caring professions, and an ideological hatred of publicly owned assets. We believe that the Government have done great damage to the concept of community. It is little wonder that our society is increasingly violent and divided. The decline in moral standards in this country is a reflection of the Government's immorality, espoused by their "devil take the hindmost" economic and social policies.

We are concerned about all crimes in London and in our society as a whole. We are concerned about the crimes of poverty, homelessness and unemployment. All those crimes have been perpetrated by the Government on the people of London. At the next election the Government will be called before the court of the people, and we believe that they will be pronounced guilty. The Home Secretary did not say anything about those crimes. He did not say anything about the other crimes that are prevalent in London at the moment, such as fraud in the City of London, involving tens of millions of pounds. The Conservative Government seem soft on such crimes, but tend to be hard on social security fraud.

The Home Secretary did not say anything about the collapse of the football hooligan trials, involving the possible fabrication of police evidence. I am glad that Commissioner Imbert has promised action. We in this House have a right to demand that action, because the collapse of those trials has resulted in a serious undermining of public confidence in police evidence procedures. We must be careful about putting excessive political pressure on the police to secure prosecutions and increase clear-up rates. As the hon. Members for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) and for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) have said, we need to improve the clear-up rates in London but we must not follow the bad example of the Kent police in apparently doing deals with convicted prisoners and getting them to admit to previously unsolved crimes.

My right hon. Friend the Member for Sparkbrook directed the House's attention to the causes of crime. Unemployment, poverty and ignorance are not excuses for crime, but they are factors in criminal activity. We bombard our young with images of affluence on television, and in films and advertisements. Then we deprive many of them of the wherewithal to share in the affluence that they see around them. It is not really surprising if so many of them fall foul of temptation. The yobbos in the Stock Exchange with their "Hooray Henry" attitudes give the lead in many ways to the sort of street crime that we have to suffer in London.

My hon. Friend the Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) talked about the alarming rise in drink-related crime. Again, the advertising of the drink manufacturers is aimed specifically at the 18 to 24-year-old group and it is in that age group that instances of crime are at their highest. Alcohol abuse in London and in the country generally is now rampant. We demand more Government action on that. There should be health warnings on all alcohol products and a total ban on advertising drink on television, in the cinemas and newspapers. Consumption in public places should be banned and there should be much stiffer sentences for alcohol-related crimes.

My hon. Friend the Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbott) made a thoughtful and eloquent speech. She was foully abused by the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington, who is not in his place for me foully to abuse him, so I shall move quickly on.

My hon. Friends the Members for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington and for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) referred to freemasonry. We have raised that matter with the Home Secretary and the Commissioner. There is public concern, particularly about Mr. Woollard's report and his subsequent fate. The police must not be perceived as having some higher loyalties than the impartial and even-handed enforcement of the law. Opposition Members believe that, because of its rites and oaths of brotherly loyalty, freemasonry is incompatible with police membership.

Policing in London is highly complex, not least because of the proliferation of specialised national functions that Metropolitan police must take on and which detract from local policing needs. Many local policing needs could have been mentioned during the debate. I am particularly concerned about the failure of the Metropolitan police to enforce traffic regulations in London. They say, "We cannot do that because we have insufficient resources." Quite frankly, if Parliament wills the ends, it should also will the means to enforce the ends. It is not acceptable for force orders to be pronounced by the Metropolitan police, in effect saying what parts of the laws that are passed in the House shall be enforced by the police. That is not the duty of the police. The function of the police in London, as elsewhere, is to enforce the laws that are passed by Parliament. That must be done even-handedly, impartially and with resolution in respect of all forms of crime, including street offences, parking offences and related matters.

It is a fact that the police are regularly used by the Government in an overtly political fashion. That is seen most graphically during a strike, particularly in Wapping. The police officers whom I know have expressed privately and, on certain occasions, publicly, their dissatisfaction with being caught like the contents of a sandwich—between two sides who are set against each other, often incited by the political policies of the Government. That was particularly true in Wapping, and it remains true in Dover and other strike situations.

The Labour party in London is far more concerned than Conservative Members about law and order in the capital city. We support the police in London, and we shall continue to support them while they pursue the interests of Londoners. It is our intention to support the police by giving them far less to do on the streets of London. We shall do that by creating a socially and economically just society. That will be the task of the next Labour Government. The sooner that happens, the fewer occasions there will be to have inadequate debates about complex policing matters, but, of course, we are given only rare opportunities to do so.

2.17 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Home Department (Mr. Douglas Hogg): I shall not follow the example of the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) by accusing my opponents of crimes in this place. It would be difficult to do so, if only because so few members of the Labour party are present to commit such crimes. In view of their frequent criticism of policing in London, their complaints about accountability, and their newly disclosed adherence to some of the principles of law and order, it is remarkable that only three Labour Members from London seats were in their places at the start of the debate.

Mr. Tony Banks: We do not have ministerial cars.

Mr. Hogg: I understand that the hon. Gentleman is extremely venal, but the ordinary people who walk the streets will not find that explanation particularly attractive, especially from somebody who liked riding around in the Greater London council official car.

The other point that I regard as unattractive is the denial of the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) that certain Labour Members are profoundly hostile to the police. We all know that that allegation is true. I can prove that fact conclusively with quotations from the hon. Members for Tottenham (Mr. Grant), for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone), for Barking (Ms. Richardson), for Edinburgh, Leith (Mr. Brown), for Preston (Mrs. Wise) and for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng). If any hon. Member challenges me, I shall read them out.

Not only do I find the denial by the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook of the hostility of some parts of his party to the police surprising, but I find his analysis of the problem less than persuasive. When unemployment was rising, the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook attributed crime to that. Now that unemployment is falling he attributes the increasing crime to prosperity. That is a remarkable case of facing both ways. However, as he has some personal political problems at the moment, I do not find that wholly surprising.

The right hon. Gentleman's command of detail was less impressive than I would have expected from the Opposition Front Bench spokesman. He congratulated his party on the support that it gave to the firearms legislation. I know that the right hon. Member was not able to be present at the Report stage of the Bill. I make no criticism of that, but had he been there, he would have known that a number of his hon. Friends were among those who opposed the Firearms Bill in Division after Division and on Third Reading.

The right hon. Member for Sparkbrook was one of those who called for a complete ban on self-loading rifles. He nods in agreement to that. Perhaps he does not know that his fellow Front Bench spokesman the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) voted in favour of an amendment to permit some classes of self-loading rifle to remain on section 1 control.

Mr. Hattersley: The position is absolutely clear and well-documented. We were in favour of the proposals that the Home Secretary gave to the House. We voted for them on Second Reading. Then, in Committee, we discovered —and perhaps the Under-Secretary is responsible—that the Government's definition of self-loading was so incompetent that the trade could not run it.

Mr. Hogg: I am afraid that that is not the case. The truth is that Opposition Members could not make up their minds. They saw a bandwagon rolling past them and they hopped on it. That is neither attractive nor laudable.

The right hon. Gentleman should also bear in mind that his comments on clear-up figures disclosed less than his customary control of detail. When he said that the clear-up figures in 1987 were the same as those in 1986, broadly speaking he was correct. However, he failed to point out that in the first quarter of this year, the clear-up rate had increased from 16 to 18 per cent. Much more damaging to his cause was that he failed to draw the House's attention to the important provisos contained in the Commissioner's report. On page 41 of the report the Commissioner drew attention to the contrasting trends between primary clear-ups and secondary clear-ups.

Primary clear-ups are those where the offence is dealt with by a charge, a summons or a caution, the most significant test. Had the right hon. Gentleman quoted those figures, he would have observed that there was an increase of 7 per cent. in the clear-up rate in 1987 in comparison with 1986. If the right hon. Gentleman comes to this place to make broad criticisms, it would be better by far for his reputation, not to mention for the knowledge of the House, if he were a little fuller in his comments.

There was some difference of opinion between Opposition Members about manpower. The right hon. Member for Sparkbrook approves of increases in police establishment. Some of his hon. Friends do not. I have grave doubts whether the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) favours such increases. He made some comments about policemen with sirens late at night which suggested to me that he lacked support for increases in manpower. Moreover, to criticise the Government——

Mr. Corbyn: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hogg: No, I shall not, as I have only six minutes.

Mr. Corbyn: The hon. Gentleman has made a charge against me and should give way.

Mr. Hogg: No, I now have only five minutes left and I shall continue.

It is extraordinary that the right hon. Member for Sparkbrook did not draw attention to the fact that in the present year we shall spend 59 per cent. more in real terms on the Metropolitan police force than was spent in 1978-79. Moreover, by the end of this year, the manpower of the police force will have increased by 5,500 since May 1979.

The right hon. Gentleman went on to say that, notwithstanding the various increases in the manpower figures, the efficiency of the police and their ability to deploy people on the streets had diminished. This suggested to me that the right hon. Gentleman had not read the Commissioner's report, so let me remind him of page 13, where the Commissioner says that as a result of more efficient use of manpower, arrests have increased by 6 per cent. in the current year, and the number of police officers available for street duty, which one would think would be one of the paramount tests to be applied, has increased by 13 per cent.

Mr. Hattersley: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Hogg: No, I shall not give way. The right hon. Gentleman grumbled away about these points and, when I reply to them clearly and precisely, he grumbles again. I am sorry, but there it is. Perhaps next time before a debate of this kind, he will read the Commissioner's report a little more fully.

I agree entirely with what my hon. Friends the Members for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) and for Carshalton and Wallington (Mr. Forman) said about the more effective use of manpower. My hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North made two important and specific points about police attitudes to road traffic, which will be considered. The broad message from my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North, supported by my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington, and it is also the view of the Commissioner, was that the Metropolitan police force needs to make yet more efficient use of its manpower.

The hon. Member for Islington, North made an important point about sexual offences. He is right to draw attention to the incidence of such offences, particularly rape. I am glad to say—the hon. Member may know—that there was an 11 per cent. decrease in the number of rape cases.

Mr. Corbyn: Reported cases.

Mr. Hogg: Yes, reported rape cases decreased by 11 per cent. The hon. Gentleman will also be aware that the Metropolitan police force is attaching more significance to this class of offence and to the methods used to deal with it and with the victims. Clearly, if policemen are not sympathetic, people will not come forward with complaints. Last year, four dedicated rape suites were opened and, in the coming year, another four will be opened. About 1,300 officers have received specific training in this sector, and the number of female police surgeons has been increased, so that 15 female doctors are available to deal with such complaints.

My hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington understandably focused on street robbery. It was partly to combat that crime that we incorporated the knives provision in the Criminal Justice Bill. About 56 per cent. of all robberies take place in 16 divisions of the Metropolitan police force. Over the past year, the Metropolitan police transferred additional resources to those 16 divisions, which resulted in a substantial reduction in the rate of increase of robbery offences. Police in London are conscious of the need to tackle robbery on the streets.

The same applies to burglary. I was interested by what my hon. Friend the Member for Carshalton and Wallington said about burglary. He stressed what crime prevention can do, and my hon. Friend the Member for Spelthorne (Mr. Wilshire) echoed that, though in the slightly different context of the involvement of the police in community action and what the community can do.

It being half past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

Southwark (Archaeological Heritage)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Alan Howarth.]

2.30 pm

Mr. Simon Hughes (Southwark and Bermondsey): I am pleased to have the opportunity to debate the subject of the protection of Southwark's archaeological heritage. I hope that the Under-Secretary of State for the Environmemt will be especially sympathetic as he, like me, represents a south London constituency.

Many people are excited by the opportunity of preserving the heritage of what is rapidly being discovered to be one of the most interesting archaeological areas in Britain. The concern that motivated the debate is to ensure that hon. Members and the Government now act to protect and preserve this archaeological treasure trove.

Southwark is one of this country's oldest settlements. It was a key settlement because two highways—Stane street from the south coast and Watling street from Dover—converged and became at Southwark the crossing point of the Thames, where London bridge is now situated. Southwark was the southern suburb of Londinium. The excavations are revealing much of great importance about Southwark and its past.

In a few minutes, I shall make specific propositions about what needs to be done, but, first, I shall identify the two key issues. To protect Southwark's heritage we need, first, money and, secondly, time.

I shall list the sites that have emerged as being of particular importance to show the breadth and diversity of our heritage. Bermondsey abbey was a Cluniac priory of the 11th century and was one of the major, if not the major, Cluniac settlements in England. It was a huge abbey located at the junction of what is now Abbey street and Tower bridge road. Yesterday I returned with my younger brother who is a Southwark councillor for the Abbey ward, to the part of the site being excavated and we looked with archaeologists at the exciting excavations that are going on at that borough council-owned site.

The Bricklayers Arms site is almost immediately outside my front door. It is in private ownership and is about to be developed for housing. Recently, an article appeared in The Standard headed,

"Official: Bermondsey really is prehistoric. Archaeologists have discovered the first positive evidence that prehistoric man once inhabited inner London.

A team from the Museum of London has found wooden structures and tools dating back to between 2000 and 3000 BC in an area which until now has been something of a mystery."

I do not think that the area has been a mystery to many of us, but archaeologically that has been the case. The site is the former Bricklayers Arms goods depot. The museum's archaeologist, Michael Hammerson, said:

"This is the first real proof of what might be regarded as a permanent habitation. It does suggest a quite intensive occupation of the area. It is an important find and there is no doubt whatever that other unexplored parts of greater London have a similar or even greater potential for transforming our knowledge of the region's history."

Planning permission was granted last week by the council to Ideal Homes, and any day now there may be a large-scale private housing development.

Hay's wharf is a large site that is also in private ownership. It is owned by St. Martins' property company. The site is opposite the Tower of London and adjacent to Tower bridge. There have been amazing and wonderful discoveries on that site in recent weeks that have rightly commanded great press attention. First, there was the discovery that the Rosary palace of Edward II might have been built on that site. It is also probable that the house of Sir John Fastolf was built there. Shakespeare took the name to create one of his greatest characters. His residence was moated and contained gardens and pools. I was on that very site yesterday in hot sunshine. I spent the whole morning there and at the Bermondsey Abbey site. They have found wonderful things there—for example, a leather male vestment, probably from the middle ages, and children's shoes in perfect condition because they have been preserved by the moist clay. They have also found a piece of stained glass. I wish that I could have brought it to the House, but I could not do so because they dared not allow it to leave their possession. It is an example of very early stained glass that contains a beautiful representation of a lion. In all probability it came from a window of the royal palace on that site. They have also found fascinating timber work and foundation work that identify the pattern of what must have been the early moat and dockyard.

The developers, St. Martins' property company, have given the archaeologists six months to explore the site. They are using that time to great advantage, but one needs to ask how much time should be given to them and how much guaranteed protection there should be for the site. The developer is not compelled to give the archaeologists that amount of time. The amount of time that has been given is quite generous and I applaud the company for that. A public inquiry is now scheduled, which may lead to more time being allowed to the archaeologists.

The last of the major sites is the Courage brewery site, just off Southwark bridge road. That led to a long article in The Times on 11 May, headed "The Docklands of the Caesars."

It said:

"The latest piece of Roman London to emerge from the mud could be the most significant archaeological find for years—yet may be lost to new building."

What was discovered during Easter weekend this year was a warehouse, 15 ft, by at least 30 ft. It was a wooden structure and the first suggestion that the Southwark side of the Roman Thames was an international commercial port before AD 200. I shall read what was said to make clear the excitement that the importance of the site generated. The warehouse was found by a team of Museum of London archaeologists, led by Harvey Sheldon, whom I know well and to whom I have often spoken. The British Museum's Romano-British curator, Dr. Potter, who is an international authority on the subject, was ecstatic about the discovery and said that he had never seen anything like it:

"'It is terribly important. To find a Second Century wooden warehouse . . . with the floors as perfectly preserved as any modern building, it is quite extraordinary. We now know there were a lot of Roman settlements in the Southwark area, and I would think that you're getting a whole series of warehouses. It is emerging as a sort of Docklands of Roman times.

The building was constructed using the finest carpentry skills: no nails have been found. The floor, made from great oak sheets, has been preserved, along with a ramp down which barrels would have been rolled to just below ground level, where they could be kept cool. The floor is surrounded by the sloping remains of wooden walls, with mortice-and-tenon joints still intact.' Potter enthused: 'The simple fact is that we need to know more, more, more. When you've got a state of preservation like that, it offers an exceptional chance of answering a lot of long-posed questions.'"

I have taken an interest in these things for many years, and not only in Southwark, but that site prompted a reawakening of my interest. I wrote to the noble Lord Caithness and received a courteous reply. I wrote to English Heritage, too. That site needs only another six weeks or £40,000 worth of work to ensure that what can be found and preserved, is dealt with.

I shall now list the other sites, and then discuss the politics and policies that relate to them: Phoenix wharf is in private hands; Platform wharf, by Cherry Garden pier in Rotherhithe, is in the control of the LDDC, which has so far done a good job for Southwark archaeology. The previously lost palace of Edward III is there. There is a chance to preserve it and open it to the public, thanks to the LDDC. There is an archaeologically important site in the grounds of Guy's hospital. Yet to be discovered is the original site of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre, which is thought to be on a larger site currently being developed. There are various exciting discoveries on Southwark street.

The length of this list shows the importance of Southwark in British archaeology. It is all the responsibility of English Heritage, or the Historical Buildings and Monuments Commission, as it is more formally known. The House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment, in its first report of 1986-87, to which the Government responded on New Year's Eve last year, examined ways in which English Heritage and the Government should be more responsive.

There clearly needs to be guaranteed protection for areas of such significance. At present, if a site is scheduled, a delay is allowed before development can go ahead, but there is no guarantee of money. The danger, in areas such as Southwark, of waiting for sites to be scheduled lies in the rapid pace of development in the regeneration of the inner city. All sites must be dealt with in time, so it is vital that time and money are provided for publicly and privately developed sites.

The Courage site is in Southwark council's hands. For reasons that I will not go into now, the council has a tight budget. Its leader is supportive of the archaeological rescue operation. If Southwark has no available money we must none the less ensure that it does not lose the opportunity of co-operating—as the landlord—with the Government in getting the archaeological work done. The same applies to any local authority or public authority, such as the LDDC. The same applies also to private sites. Apart from a four-month delay in certain circumstances, there is no statutory guarantee that the developers such as St. Martin's at the Hay's wharf site will carry out archaeological rescue. I have been given a letter which makes it clear that some developers resist any such rescue proposal. They are asked whether development can be deferred and often say that that is not worth while financially. Then the site in question is lost for all time.

I quote a letter from Regalian, developers in south London, to the Museum of London:

> "I have considered all that was said at our meeting and I regret to say that we are not swayed by the arguments in favour of developer funding. We believe that this type of work which is undertaken for local or national purposes should be paid for out of local or national funds."

So, although there are some powers in planning law to impose planning conditions on private developers, they might well say that the profit motive forced them to go ahead—and the rescue operation cannot be secured.

The same sometimes applies to public bodies. The Department of Transport often finds itself involved with archaeologically important sites, but in 1987 it donated £100,000 to English Heritage—hardly enough to cover any of the sites.

I propose, first, that Southwark, or, more narrowly, north Southwark, which happens to be conterminous with my constituency, should be urgently designated an area of outstanding archaeological importance. I know that the Government are carrying out a review, but I earnestly hope that, as this is not one of those debates where we are just going through the motions, it can be completed quickly and the area added to the five already listed and designated in Britain.

Secondly, there should be no differentiation between public and private sites, because they should both be eligible for Government funding through English Heritage as the appropriate agency, but the funding should be increased to ensure that the necessary money is forthcoming.

Thirdly, financing to English Heritage should be increased. One of the tragedies is that although it is doing some good work, much of its resources are being spent on post-excavation activity and not on the major recovery activity. Bids in 1985-86 for excavation work totalled £3·8 million, but the grant was only £0·3 million. Its budget is £7·2 million, but it is clear that it needs more funds as it rejects an enormous number of sites for listing.

It has been assessed that 10,000 archaeological sites are being destroyed countrywide. An article in The Independent on 8 January, only six months ago, stated:

> "According to the Council for British Archaeology there are now about 15,000 archaeological sites being destroyed without excavation throughout the country through lack of funds".

I hope the Minister will accept the urgency for more funding and more control to allow time for the rescue operations to be put in train. Above all, the Government need to reconsider the special and urgent case for Southwark archaeology to be protected.

People may ask, "Is it equally important to preserve and protect the archaeology as it is to build houses, hospitals and schools?" The local paper that the Minister and I share—the South London Press—recently polled a random sample of local people from south London. Its headline stated:

> "You have your say on keeping heritage alive."

There was not one person who did not think that preserving the heritage was vital, because the heritage of Southwark, as of any other community, is what people treasure and want to know more about. It should be preserved and the Government must act immediately to ensure that it is.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mr. Colin Moynihan): If the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) has seen The Guardian today, he will not be surprised to see me here rather than at the launch of the Scottish unleaded petrol week. It is the stamp of bad journalism to report only part of a story. He will be the first to understand that my priorities as a Minister should at the Dispatch Box. I am grateful to his hon. Friend the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) for standing in for me in Scotland. It is good that there is an all-party approach towards persuading more motorists to use unleaded petrol.

I am also grateful to the hon. Gentleman for putting his case so fully. I am sorry that the problems that beset the world of hooliganism precluded me from joining him yesterday morning. I promise him that I would have much preferred to view the archaeological sites to which he referred than do the work that I was, in fact, undertaking. I make it clear straight away that the Government attach great importance to this country's extraordinarily rich and varied archaeological heritage. We are fully conscious that our present civilisation is only possible because of the achievements of our predecessors over many generations. If we ignore this part of our heritage, we deny ourselves an important understanding of how this country has become what it is, and archaeological remains and discoveries are a constant source of wonder and interest to many of us. Historic Southwark clearly played an important part in the history of London, and the hon. Gentleman is justly proud of that. We all know, I am sure, of Chaucer starting his famous pilgrimage to Canterbury from the Tabard inn at Southwark; of Shakespeare and his companions drawing the crowds at the Globe theatre, which is to be reconstructed. We can see Southwark cathedral standing proudly by the river, surrounded by the borough market and the Victorian railway line, to testify to continuing values in a constantly changing world.

In recent years archaeologists have shown us that Southwark has even more to offer. As the hon. Gentleman has pointed out, there is increasing evidence that historic Southwark, far from being the less-favoured south bank, where nothing happened, is busy and alive. Indeed, it is largely our present wave of development in the City, following the big bang, that is spreading over into the south. That is showing us that Roman London did exactly the same. Perhaps we can seek to draw a parallel between Southwark's past and its present. It is certainly good to see new developments coming to the south of the river, with the prospect of future prosperity, which our descendants may look on with as much respect as we regard our medieval heritage.

As the hon. Gentleman rightly point out, we now have evidence that prehistoric men once lived on the Bricklayers Arms site—one of the first signs of human habitation in inner London, and some of us are becoming increasingly aware that once, long before that, hippos roamed over what is now Trafalgar square. We find increasing signs of the Roman occupation, at the Bricklayers Arms site and on the waterfront at the old Courage brewery site. We see signs of extensive medieval occupation, for example, in the influential Bermondsey abbey—the site of which has recently been scheduled—and the reputed palace of Edward II at Hay's wharf, London Bridge City. This is a significant batch of archaeological discoveries, in a short time, for any area or any constituency.

Now we come to the difficult problems. They are both philosophical and practical. How much of this archaeological heritage can we, as a country, preserve? Indeed, how much should we preserve? Which takes precedence —the needs of the present or the needs of the irreplaceable, fragile heritage? How far will future generations wish us to preserve their past for them? Who should pay for the archaeological work?

It is sometimes said that we need more development and more conservation. There is a genuine dilemma here. The pressures for development have never been greater than they are today. Equally, the public awareness of the desirability of conservation and the value of the heritage of attractive countryside and historic buildings has never been higher. Archaeology gives rise to particular problems; the increasing sophistication of archaeological technique means that finds may be discovered which, perhaps, a generation ago, might not have been made, and such finds may now be interpreted with greater accuracy.

That is an exciting advance in knowledge and skill. It is also, to be frank, a practical problem for the developer. A listed building can be seen and identified, and its value assessed. The archaeological find is unpredictable. It is probably not exaggerating to suggest that in historic urban areas each new development site may overlie valuable archaeological remains, and there may be two very different attitudes to that fact.

Government must, as so often, seek to find a balance between the different sides. We have the mechanism for protecting archaeological sites and monuments by placing them on the Secretary of State's schedule of ancient monuments, compiled under the Ancient Monuments and Archeological Areas Act 1979. These are, by definition, monuments of national importance and, because of that, the Secretary of State keeps for himself the power of granting or withholding the scheduled monument consent which must be obtained before any works are carried out which would affect or damage such monuments. As I said, we have recently scheduled Bermondsey abbey, because of the considerable remains there and the importance of the abbey to medieval London.

Scheduling, however, does not mean that the monument must be left untouched for all time. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman agrees that in many cases that would not be in the monument's best interests, for often the work for which scheduled monument consent may be sought will be desirable repairs to the fabric. The great majority of applications for scheduled monument consent are granted, although conditions may be attached to them. The procedure does, however, ensure that a close look is taken at the effects of the proposals on the monument and the relative merits of allowing it to be altered, developed, investigated before development or preservation in its entirety. Each case is different, and I cannot—indeed, I must not—prejudge what the decision would be on any individual application.

Scheduling will be appropriate only for a fairly small proportion of the known monuments. English Heritage is embarking on a programme of assessing all the known monuments and considering on a comprehensive basis which ones merit scheduling. We expect that, as a result, it will recommend a large number of additional schedulings to us, but the total proportion will still remain small. I am sure that it is right that, since scheduling imposes additional restrictions over what a landowner can do with his land, it should be imposed only where it can be justified archaeologically by the application of stringent criteria.

Other monuments are not left without protection, but it is right that monuments or sites of more local importance should be considered primarily at the local level. We have made it clear, however, in a circular to local authorities that where development would be likely to affect an ancient monument, whether that monument is scheduled or unscheduled, the desirability of preserving the monument and its setting is a material consideration to be taken into account in determining planning applications. Indeed, that approach has been backed by the courts. Although planning considerations are many and varied, and the process of balancing them all, each with their due weight, can sometimes demand the skills of an expert juggler, the archaeological considerations must be included in the balancing act.

There is a third mechanism for taking account of archaeological considerations which the hon. Gentleman mentioned, although at present its practical extent is comparatively limited. This is the designation of areas of archaeological importance—AAIs for short—introduced by the 1979 Act which I have already mentioned. Five areas have so far been designated—the historic town centres of Canterbury, Chester, Exeter, Hereford and York.

The significance of designation—although a local authority may designate, such a designation takes effect only if confirmed by the Secretary of State—is that there is then an opportunity for a nominated investigating authority to enter a site and carry out archaeological investigations for a period of up to four and a half months before development can take place. I know that many elements in the archaeological world value this legislative provision and would like to see it extended. English Heritage is currently reviewing the operation of the scheme so far. I must point out, however, that the AAI procedure does not allow for preservation of finds or monuments —it allows only a breathing space, effectively for rescue archaeology. In that respect, before we designate more such areas we perhaps need to think through carefully and, I agree, as speedily as possible how we should best protect archaeological remains under towns—bearing in mind, as I said earlier, that there will be some areas in which one may expect valuable finds every time one puts in a spade —while at the same time not putting unreasonable restrictions on much needed development.

All the points that the hon. Gentleman raised were significant in this respect and I shall bring them to the attention of English Heritage. Perhaps I may also ask him to pursue in conversation or in a meeting with me any other ideas that he may have, so that we can ensure that they are fully considered in the current review. I emphasise and respect the need for there to be no hesitation or foot-dragging in the consideration of these very important details so that a decision can be reached as soon as possible. The hon. Gentleman will also accept that digging everything up may not always be the best solution; that may be better left to the more advanced techniques of future generations.

With regard to where the money comes from, I should point out straight away that, as the hon. Gentleman knows full well, we have no bottomless pot of gold. For the avoidance of doubt, I should put straight a misapprehension which sometimes occurs. The scheduling of monuments and the designation of an AAI does not bring with it any financial resources to the owner or authority concerned. It is up to the investigating authority to decide its own priorities as to what, within the AAI, it wishes and has the resources to investigate, and to stimulate local developers' or authorities' interest in the work being done and its importance. AAI designation is an opportunity for the archaeologist—not a burden. There is no immutable law as to who should pay for archaeological investigations, and nor should there be. The archaeological heritage belongs to all of us, individuals and companies and local and central government, and it is right that each sector, public and private, should be willing to contribute as appropriate.

It is a hard fact of life that we all—central Government, local government, firms and individuals—have to determine our own priorities. Fortunate indeed are the bodies or individuals whose resources are adequate to meet all the demands that they can anticipate. I am extremely encouraged, however, to see how far the private sector is responding to the needs of the archaeological heritage by providing facilities, time and financial support for archaeological investigations. Indeed, I understand that a recent report by the British Archaeological Trust shows that public and private sector developers contributed some £3·37 million for rescue archaeology in Britain in 1986-87, in contrast to a mere £58,000 in 1978-79. Much credit here must go to the constructive relationships that have been forged between developers and archaeologists, which have borne fruit in the code of practice issued in 1986 and sponsored jointly by the British Property Federation and the standing conference of archaeological unit managers. The code not only encourages developers to provide financial support to enable worthwhile archaeological investigations to take place but provides valuable and sensible guidelines for mutual co-operation and communication between the two. I believe that central Government should be fully involved, and we achieve that by looking to English Heritage to provide financial help with rescue archaeology. English Heritage is constrained by the need to determine its own internal priorities as well as by its total grant in aid from the Department, which itself must be balanced against other demands on the public expenditure purse.

The hon. Gentleman referred specifically to Bermondsey abbey and the Courage brewery site, both owned by Southwark council, and suggested that they were examples of cases in which more central Government funding might be appropriate. With regard to the Courage site, I understand that the Greater London council, before its abolition, gave £120,000 for archaeological work there and that the proposed development was to be undertaken jointly by Southwark and the GLC. English Heritage, since its establishment, has given a further £71,000 and has committed £75,000 more for post-excavation work. That is indeed a generous contribution. At Bermondsey abbey, too, the excavations which have been going on for several years have been financed generously by English Heritage.

I will bring to the hon. Gentleman's attention more detail on important issues such as the Bricklayers Arms and London Bridge City sites and other areas that he mentioned. Suffice it to say that he and I share the same conviction as readers of our local paper about the importance that we should attach to this work. I assure the hon. Gentleman that the thrust of his remarks is well taken and we shall pursue the individual points that he has raised. I hope that through further discussion outside the Chamber we can reach a satisfactory conclusion in the interests of both the hon. Gentleman and his constituents.

The Motion, having been made at half-past Two o'clock and the debate having continued for half an hour, MR. DEPUTY SPEAKER adjourned the House without Question put, pursuant to the Standing Order.

Adjourned at Three o'clock.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 13 June 1988

HOME DEPARTMENT

Health and Safety Legislation (Prosecutions)

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to raise the maximum penalty in the magistrates' court for prosecutions under the health and safety legislation.

Mr. John Patten: We have no present plans to do so.

Terrorism

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many individuals arrested under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts 1974, 1976 and 1984 were subsequently convicted on the basis of confession evidence only; and how many of those convictions were contested by the defence.

Mr. Hurd: This information is not available.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many times access to a solicitor has been delayed under section 58(13) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act to individuals being held in police custody under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984 since 1 January 1986; and for how long;

(2) how many times section 56(11) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 has been invoked since 1 January 1986 to delay action to inform a relative, friend or person interested in the welfare of an individual being held in police custody under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984, and for how long.

Mr. Hurd: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will list the occasions on which he has met Sir Basil Feldman since 1 January and discussed Sunday trading deregulation;

(2) on what occasions his departmental officials have met Sir Basil Feldman since 1 January; and which officials were in attendance at these meetings;

(3) what information was available to his Department before it agreed to meet Sir Basil Feldman, concerning the nature of his fiancial involvement in the campaign for Sunday trading deregulation; and whether he will make a statement;

(4) whether he will make it his policy to refuse to meet persons involved in the campaign for the deregulation of Sunday trading who are contracted to receive success fees in relation to that campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Sir Basil Feldman called on me on 25 January and on my right hon. Friend on 25 May to discuss Sunday trading. Private secretaries and officials concerned with this issue were present on each occasion. Officials have not otherwise met Sir Basil Feldman except at a conference organised by him on 17 February, which I also attended. Sir Basil Feldman has informed my right hon. Friend that his involvement in the Sunday trading campaign is voluntary and that he is under no contract to receive either a fee or a success-related fee in connection with the campaign.

Mr. Stuart Holmes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the South Yorkshire constabulary as to when the Sheffield police will return to Mr. Stuart Holmes his extendable banner, seized outside the Crucible theatre during the world professional snooker championships; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of South Yorkshire police that the banner is being retained for evidential purposes and will be returned to Mr. Holmes when the legal proceedings are complete.

Police Complaints Authority

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to grant the Police Complaints Authority powers to carry out itself the investigation of serious allegations against police officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. My right hon. Friend is not persuaded of the need to extend the powers already possessed by the Police Complaints Authority, to which I referred in my reply to the hon. Member's question on 18 May, at column 462.

Sex Discrimination Act

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will bring forward legislation to amend the Sex Discrimination Act to bring private clubs with both male and female members within the scope of the Act.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) on 14 March, at columns 422-23.

Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions involving wildlife trade have been taken under (a) the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1985, (b) the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 and (c) the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979; and in each case what penalties were imposed.

Mr. John Patten: Records available to me for 1986, which may be incomplete, show no prosecutions under the Control of Trade in Endangered Species (Enforcement) Regulations 1985 and one prosecution under the Endangered Species (Import and Export) Act 1976 which resulted in a conviction and a fine of £600. The number of prosecutions under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 which involved wildlife is not available separately.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes there were in the Chelmsford local authority area in each year from 1982 to the latest available year.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the chief constable of Essex police that at the end of 1987 there were 160 neighbourhood watch schemes in the Chelmsford police sub-division, the boundary of which is roughly conterminous with that of Chelmsford borough council. The first scheme in Chelmsford was established in October 1984. There were seven schemes at the end of 1984, 49 at the end of 1985 and 108 at the end of 1986.

Member's Representations

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects that the private office of the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton), will respond to the telephone query of the hon. Member for Stretford of 6 June and the subsequent telephone calls of the hon. Member concerning the case of the passports of Mr. S. A. H. (Home Office Ref. Nos. H209976 and H 392426) and of his relation Mrs. A. B.

Mr. Renton: My Private Office supplied the information requested by the hon. Member on 10 June.

Police Interviews (Tape Recording)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue a code of practice on the tape recording of police interviews with suspects, in accordance with section 60(1)(a) and section 67 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Mr. Hurd: In accordance with sections 60(1)(a) and 67(3) of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, I have today laid before Parliament a draft code of practice on the tape recording of police interviews with suspects at police stations.

The draft code published today has been produced after extensive consultations, but publication affords an opportunity for me to consider any further representations about the draft, which should reach my Department by 11 July.

The Act provides for the code to be brought into operation by an order made by statutory instrument and approved by both Houses of Parliament. I propose to lay such an order before each House as soon as possible after 11 July.

After the code has come into operation it will need to be applied in separate orders to particular police force areas. It is my intention to make the necessary orders, under section 60(1)(b) of the 1984 Act, in relation to individual police force areas, or parts thereof, when chief officers, in consultation with other agencies in the criminal justice system, have made satisfactory arrangements for the tape recording of interviews in the areas to be covered by the order. The effect of such an order will be to require the tape recording of interviews with persons suspected of specified offences in accordance with the provisions of the code. But police forces may proceed with arrangements for tape recording in advance of an order applying to their area, and most forces are already doing so.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Departmental Staff (Education)

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the proportion of senior civil servants in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: One third of the Department's staff at grade 3 and above attended state schools and two thirds attended private schools.

GCSE

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to review the current standards and administration of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Secondary Examinations Council (SEC) and the GCSE examining groups are collaborating to review experience of the first GCSE examinations this summer and to make any necessary improvements quickly. My right hon. Friend looks to the SEC and its intended successor body, the School Examinations and Assessment Council, to report on the outcome of the review by the end of this year, and to recommend changes as necessary.

Higginson Report

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the Higginson report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend on 7 June, at column 436, to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey), in which he announced the publication of the report.

School Leavers

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of 16-year-olds leave school at the first legal opportunity.

Mr. Dunn: The proportion of pupils aged 16 at the end of August 1986 in England that had left school by January 1987 was 70·5 per cent.

Derbyshire (Expenditure)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will meet a deputation from Derbyshire county council to discuss its education capital expenditure for 1988-89 to 1990-91;

(2) how many requests he has received from Derbyshire county council to discuss its education capital expenditure for 1988-89 to 1990-91.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received one substantive request. A meeting has been arranged for 27 June.

Head Teachers (Early Retirement)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimates have been made of the cost of early retirement of head teachers during 1988-89 and 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's expenditure plans for 1988-89, set out in Cm. 288, provide for spending of £80 million on the costs of premature retirement compensation in the schools sector. The costs of early retirement of head teachers cannot be separately identified within this sum. Detailed plans for 1989-90 have yet to be settled.

Irish Citizens

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many citizens of the Republic of Ireland are attending United Kingdom universities and colleges of higher education.

Mr. Jackson: In 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 1,042 students from the Irish Republic on higher education courses in the United Kingdom.

Teacher Training

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what evaluation studies will be carried out on the bursary schemes for initial teacher training in shortage subjects; what are his targets for the proportion of persons in receipt of such bursaries to take up a first appointment in the maintained sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: An evaluation of the bursary scheme is being carried out by Bath university school of education as part of a review of the major Government initiatives introduced to combat teacher shortage. A summary of phase 1 of the review, which was completed this spring, will be published this month and a copy will be placed in the Library.

The evaluation confirmed that the bursary has made an important contribution to the increased numbers of students entering initial teacher training in the shortage subjects.

All those in receipt of the bursary have to sign an undertaking that they intend to teach in the maintained sector on qualification and we expect all those who satisfactorily complete their training to do so.

Mr. Paul Gray (Letters)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is undertaking a leak inquiry into the leaking of the briefing given to him by civil servants about leak inquiries relating to the unauthorised disclosure of a letter from Mr. Paul Gray to Mr. Tom Jeffrey, regarding educational testing, in relation to questions for answer on 17 May from the hon. Members for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) and for Linlithgow.

Mrs. Rumbold: All unauthorised disclosures of information are investigated by whatever means seem appropriate.

Education Reform

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from schools in the north-west in response to his proposal that state schools should be permitted to opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Dunn: All individual schools which have approached the Department have done so on the basis that their interest will be treated in confidence.

Senior School Population

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his latest estimates of numbers of 19-year-olds still at school.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1987 the number of pupils aged 19 and over in school was 2,707.

"The Bangladeshis in Britain"

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will arrange for the document published by his Department "The Bangladeshis in Britain" to be made available in Bengali; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: "Bangladeshis in Britain" was not published by my Department. It was a report of the Home Affairs Committee in the 1986-87 Session.

Technological Studies

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his assessment of the effect which the proposed technological studies course will have, if implemented, on the standard of technical drawing and on the number of students qualified in technical drawing.

Mrs. Rumbold: With the introduction of technology as a foundation subject in the national curriculum, all pupils will be introduced to the principles and practice of good design, the application of theoretical knowledge to practical problems and, within that context, the practical craft, design and communication skills needed for realising their designs in a range of materials. My right hon. Friend believes this will increase the opportunities for students to obtain qualifications in all aspects of design and technology and provide a sounder foundation for the development of specialised skills such as technical drawing.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is aware of any proposals or plans for a city technology college in Sunderland.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has as yet received no proposals to establish a city technology college in Sunderland. If there is support in industry and in the local community for doing so he would be pleased to consider any proposals which are put forward.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the amount of public funds payable to the City Technology Colleges Trust for each year since its establishment; what grant is planned for future years; for what purpose this grant is payable; and what proportion the grant represents of the total income of the City Technology College Trust for each year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Grant is being paid to the City Technology College Trust to support work in obtaining premises for CTCs and in briefing prospective sponsors. It is envisaged that the trust will also provide support for individual CTC bodies, for example, in curriculum and staff development. If so, the Department is prepared to make a temporary contribution to the cost of these activities.

I envisage that grants to the trust for these purposes will not exceed £200,000 over the next three years, including the current financial year, and that the amount of grant will be limited to a maximum of two thirds of the trust's total relevant expenditure. The trust has secured money from private sources to meet the balance. The trust has submitted claims totalling £20,140 in respect of the financial year 1987-88 and is expected to submit claims totalling £90,000 in the current financial year.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list respectively, how many officials at what grade, and at what estimated cost (a) comprise his Department's city technology college unit, (b) work outside this unit but in respect of city technology colleges, (c) work on the abolition of the Inner London education authority and (d) work on grant maintained schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: (a) The city technology colleges unit comprises:

1 Grade 5
1 Grade 5 HMI for approximately ⅓ of his time
2 Grade 7s
1 Higher Executive Officer
1 Executive Officer
2 Personal Secretaries
1 Administrative Officer

The unit's salary cost is currently about £14,000 per month.

(b) Staff in the architects and building branch are working on design and refurbishment of buildings for CTCs. Currently this involves:

0·75 Grade 6
1 Grade 7
4 Senior Professional and Technology Officers
1 Administrative Officer

This level of commitment is recent and is likely to decline after the summer: the salary cost is currently about £11,000 per month.

(c) The team working on the abolition of ILEA currently comprises:

0.75 Grade 5
1·5 Grade 7
1 Senior Executive Officer
1 Higher Executive Officer (Development)
2 Higher Executive Officers
2 Executive Officers
1·5 Administrative Officers
1 Personal Secretary
1 Typist
1·5 Casual clerical support staff

I expect there to be a modest increase in the staffing of the team if and when the Education Reform Bill is enacted, but the staff salary costs are at present running at about £16,000 per month.

A considerable amount of the time of many other senior officials and their staffs within the Department is also devoted to matters arising from the abolition of the ILEA.

(d) The team currently working on grant-maintained schools comprises:

0·33 Grade 5
0·75 Grade 7
1 Higher Executive Officer (Development)
1 Executive Officer
1 Administrative Assistant

The staff salary costs are about £6,000 per month.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science of what plans he is aware for the establishment of any trust or other body to support or encourage the development of grant-maintained schools; and what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards such trusts or bodies receiving finanical assistance from public funds.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am aware that there are plans to establish an independent trust with the aim of supporting the development of grant-maintained schools. I welcome this initiative. If such a body were in due course to make an application to my Department for financial assistance towards specific activities intended to provide support or advice for schools which had acquired grant-maintained status, the Department would be prepared to consider it.

Student Finance

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to be in a position to make a statement on the conclusion of the review of student finance and on when it will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The student support review has not yet completed its work. The Government's proposals for the future of student support will be published in due course.

Universities (Expenditure)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give central Government spending on universities per head of univerzity population since 1979 at constant prices, including planned expenditure per head for 1988-89 to 1990-91, together with the intake to universities of undergraduate students for each of these years.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 10 June 1988]: In the following table Government expenditure has been taken as University Grants Committee recurrent grant to universities in Great Britain plus home student fee income. Per capita figures for each financial year have been derived by dividing by full-time equivalent home student numbers. The figures are at constant 1986-87 prices as measured by the gross domestic product deflator. The full-time home undergraduate student intake shown relates to the corresponding academic year.

1980-81	5,773	76·4
1981-82	5,589	74·0
1982-83	5,796	71·6
1983-84	5,830	69·2

	Government expenditure per student £ (constant prices)	New Undergraduate entrants 000's
1984-85	5,790	70·5
1985-86	5,606	70·3
1986-87	5,552	70·7
1987-88[1]	5,753	72·0
1988-89[1]	5,829	73·6
1989-90[1]	5,741	75·7
1990-91[1]	5,621	74·2

[1] Based on estimated figures.

Schools (Expenditure)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the average expenditure per pupil in local authority schools on (a) books, (b) scientific equipment, (c) computers, (d) sports facilities, (e) school meals and milk, (f) teachers, (g) in-service teachers training and (h) school buildings, at constant and current prices, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The available information is set out in the following table:

Average expenditure (£) per pupil[1]
(Maintained, Nursery, Primary, Secondary and Special Schools—England)

Year	Teacher salaries[2]		Seconded teacher salaries		Repair and maintained buildings		Text and library books		Educational equipment[3]		School meals and milk

[1] Based on returns of expenditure to the Department of the Environment and of pupil numbers to the Department of Education and Science.
[2] Excluding seconded teacher salaries.
[3] Expenditure levels for different types of equipment are not available. The figures in the table show the overall expenditure on educational equipment.
Note: The case figures for the earlier years have been repriced to 1986-87 real terms using the Gross Domestic Product (Market Prices) Deflator.

Village Schools

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number of (a) village schools closed since 1979 and (b) the capital spending on local authority schools falling within metropolitan areas, in each year since 1979 at constant prices.

Mr. Dunn [holding answer 10 June 1988]: In the period from 1979 to 1987, 590 primary and 27 secondary schools in rural areas were approved for closure as a result of proposals published by local education authorities under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 which were either approved by my right hon. Friend or his predecessors or determined by the local education authorities. Local education authorities have a statutory duty to implement all such proposals which have been approved or determined.

The gross capital expenditure on schools by metropolitan district councils (excluding Greater London) in England is as follows:

Year	Expenditure at 1986-87 Prices (£000s)
[1]1986-87	82,350
1985-86	96,242
1984-85	97,639
1983-84	99,278
1982-83	107,628
1981-82	86,268
1980-81	129,475
1979-80	124,297

[1] Provisional.

PRIME MINISTER

Scotland (Ministerial Visits)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Prime Minister to which Department is allocated the responsibility for publicity relating to (a) prime ministerial and (b) other ministerial visits to Scotland.

The Prime Minister: The prime responsibility for publicity in connection with prime ministerial and other ministerial visits to Scotland rests with the office or Department of the Minister concerned. Scottish information office provides valuable support.

Graffiti

Mr. Favell: To ask the Prime Minister what is her estimate of the cost of removing graffiti from all statues, vehicles, buildings, and other structures; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The information is not available.

Psychological Operations (Ministerial Responsibility)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister which Minister in Her Majesty's Government is currently responsible for psychological operations activities in (a) Northern Ireland and (b) Great Britain.

The Prime Minister: "Psychological operations" is a military term. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has primary responsibility for military questions.

President Reagan (Visit)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the total cost of the visit to London by President Reagan on June 2; and what official gifts were given to the President.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Since President Reagan came on 2 June as a special visitor rather than as a guest of Her Majesty's Government, the Americans were responsible for most of the costs. Her Majesty's Government's expenditure amounted to about £14,600.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about United Kingdom contributions of aid to Ethiopia during the last five years.

Mr. Chris Patten: United Kingdom public expenditure on aid to Ethiopia through bilateral and multilateral channels, over the calendar years 1983 to 1987, has been as follows:

£ thousands

1983	3,433	11,920
1984	7,004	14,150
1985	28,058	23,200
1986	9,627	n/a
1987	8,554	n/a

[1] United Kingdom share.
n/a—not available.

The bulk of this aid has been in the form of assistance for famine relief and rehabilitation. Information on the United Kingdom share of multilateral expenditure in Ethiopia in 1986 and 1987 is not yet available. Since January 1987 the United Kingdom has committed over £45 million for famine relief in Ethiopia, including our share of European Community assistance.

Budget

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current Overseas Development Administration budget expressed as a percentage of gross national product.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of overseas development spending.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Administration budget for overseas aid for the current financial year is £1,337 million. What proportion of gross national product this will represent depends on developments in the economy during the year.

Project Evaluation (Women)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department will institute the practice of evaluating the development projects it supports for the impact they have on women.

Mr. Chris Patten: Since 1986 it has been the practice when evaluating projects to consider their impact on women. The terms of reference for all projects evaluations include this issue.

WALES

Public Library Service

46. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on his Green Paper entitled "Financing our Public Library Service" from individuals or organisations in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: At 1 June comments had been submitted by six individuals and organisations in Wales.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many unemployed people have started businesses in Wales in 1987 under the enterprise allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: In 1987, 6,438 unemployed people started businesses in Wales under the enterprise allowance scheme. Since the scheme began in August 1983, over 21,000 unemployed people have joined in Wales.

Long-term Unemployment (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to eliminate long-term unemployment in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of long-term unemployed people in Clwyd has fallen in each quarter since January 1986. At April 1988 there were 6,358 long-term unemployed people in Clwyd, 3,770 less than in January 1986.

The reduction reflects the Government's comprehensive range of measures to help long-term unemployed people find jobs. In particular, employment training, which begins in September 1988, will offer a flexible training programme designed to meet individual needs, and is specifically aimed to give longer-term unemployed people the skills they need to get and keep jobs.

Channel Tunnel (Job Creation)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of jobs that might accrue to Wales-based companies in the building of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: There are no available estimates of the total number of jobs directly resulting from construction of the Channel fixed link. I am keen that industry in Wales should be involved whenever possible and the Welsh Office is actively informing companies of construction opportunities that arise.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many manufacturing jobs have been lost in (i) Clywd and (ii) Wales since May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: While comprehensive information regarding jobs lost is not available, Department of Employment estimates show that there were 109,000 fewer employees in employment in manufacturing industry (SIC 1980 divisions 2-4) in Wales in June 1987 than in June 1979.

Equivalent information is not available for Clwyd, but my Department's regional data system (which is restricted to companies of over 10 employees and uses a slightly different definition of manufacturing industry) indicates there to have been a fall of 7,800 in the numbers employed in manufacturing in Clwyd between 1979 and the latest available results.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many young people who are in employment in (i) Clwyd and (ii) the Shotton travel-to-work area are participating in YTS.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information is available only at Training Commission area office level. The most recent information relates to the end of April 1988 when 6,688 trainees were participating in YTS in the Clwyd, Gwynedd and Powys area.

Restart

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many people in Wales in the restart scheme are disabled and mentally handicapped; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is not available.

Skills Shortages

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his plans to tackle skills shortages in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The strength of the economy is leading to increasing demand for skills. The Government have made a massive increase in investment in training since 1979, when the Training Commission's expenditure in Wales was £31 million. Estimated expenditure in the next two years will be over £200 million.

The Training Commission is continuing to develop its programmes, and employment training, which begins in September 1988, will provide unemployed adults with the skills employers need.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Singapore

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the use by the Singaporean Government of the internal radio transmitter formerly controlled by the British Forces Broadcasting Service.

Mr. Eggar: We are aware of no internal radio transmitter, formerly controlled by the British Forces Broadcasting Service, and now used by the Singapore Government. The former BFBS transmitter at Tanglin was handed over to the BBC in the early 1970s and replaced in 1987 by a new FM transmitter which is used exclusively to relay the BBC world service to Singapore listeners.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Singapore concerning the statements made by the Prime Minister of Singapore concerning possible legal action against a former President of Singapore.

Mr. Eggar: This is a private matter between Mr. Lee and Mr. Devan Nair.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will review the instructions given to British diplomatic staff at the Office of the United Kingdom high commission in Singapore following the recent expulsion of the first secretary of the United States embassy in Singapore for alleged political interference.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Hendrickson's expulsion is a matter for the Governments of the United States and of Singapore. The British high commissioner and his staff will continue to discharge their duties in the normal manner.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make representations to the Government of Singapore concerning the arrest, detention and re-arrest of Singaporeans involved in political activities in the run-up to the 1988 Singapore general election;

(2) if he will make representations to the Government of Singapore concerning the use of the Internal Security Act during the 1988 Singapore general election.

Mr. Eggar: We are not aware that any date has yet been set for the next general election in Singapore. Singapore's record on human rights has in the past generally been good. However, the recent detentions have caused concern to friends of Singapore. In the margins of the meeting of Foreign Ministers of the countries of the European Community and the Association of South East Asian Nations in Dusseldorf on 2 and 3 May, the 12 EC countries made their concerns known to the Singapore authorities. We have since heard that three detainees were released on 18 May, although the others of course remain in detention.

Nicaragua (Arms Exports)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all approaches made to Her Majesty's Government since 1984 by the United States administration for help in securing the export of arms directly or indirectly to rebel forces in Nicaragua; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As the hon. Gentleman knows, it is our well established policy not to comment on matters of this kind. We have made it clear that we have never supplied arms to the Contras directly or indirectly, nor have we ever had any intention of doing so.

Hong Kong

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the import of worked ivory into Hong Kong in each of the last five years, by weight and value, and what were the countries of origin.

Mr. Eggar: The Hong Kong Government's records of the importation of worked ivory are currently collated on the basis of value and of the previous country of export. Imports, by value, in the last five years are:

	Hong Kong dollars million	£ million
1983	22	1·6
1984	26	1·9
1985	39	2·8
1987	61	4·4

The bulk of this ivory was imported into Hong Kong from China, Macau, Japan and Singapore, all of which are party to the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to ensure that Hong Kong complies with the provisions of conf. 6.16 of the CITES regulation agreed in Ottawa in 1987.

Mr. Eggar: CITES resolution conf. 6.16 adopted in Ottawa in 1987 made a number of recommendations for the tighter control of worked ivory. The Hong Kong Government plan to introduce subsidiary legislation to implement these recommendations during July.

We are in close and regular touch with the Hong Kong Government about this matter.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the Hong Kong authorities intend to ban the sale of all medicinal products containing rhino horn as from July; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Hong Kong Government will ban the internal sale of rhino horn in July. They intend to implement a ban on the internal sale of medicinal products claiming to contain rhino horn as soon as possible. They have concluded that such a ban cannot be achieved administratively, as they had earlier intended, but will require new legislation, which they plan to introduce later this year.

Elephants

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being given to east African countries to combat the poaching of elephants; and what information he has about the current levels of the elephant population in Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: Our aid includes the provision of Land Rovers for anti-poaching patrols in Tanzania, and three technical co-operation officers in the Kenyan Wildlife Department. We understand that wildlife experts put the current level of the elephant population in Africa at some 750,000.

ENVIRONMENT

Dangerous Emissions

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution has as to the number of sites in England and Wales that have dangerous emissions of carbon dioxide and methane.

Mr. Moynihan: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution has received replies to its letters on landfill gas of 18 December from the majority of English and Welsh waste disposal authorities, and is processing the responses. I await its report.

Hedgerows

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the interests of the preservation of the habitats of many species of wildlife, he plans to introduce measures to reduce the destruction of hedgerows.

Mr. Moynihan: We believe the preservation of hedgerows depends on the voluntary co-operation of farmers and others. Agricultural advisers from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food encourage farmers to retain hedgerows wherever possible and to manage them effectively. MAFF gives grants for the planting of new hedgerows and for hedgerow laying. Where appropriate, the Countryside Commission and Nature Conservancy Council can also offer assistance.

Local Authorities (Spending)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities whose budgeted total expenditure for 1988-89 exceeds their total expenditure for 1987-88 by more than 6 per cent. and those authorities whose budgeted total expenditure for 1988-89 exceeds their grant-related expenditure assessment by more than 5 per cent., ranking the authorities according to the amount by which their budgeted expenditure exceeds their grant-related expenditure assessment, and showing for each authority (a) the authority's grant-related expenditure assessment, (b) its budgeted total expenditure for 1988-89, (c) its total expenditure for 1987-88, (d) the percentage by which its budgeted total expenditure exceeds or falls below its grant-related expenditure assessment and (e) the percentage by which its budget total expenditure for 1988-89 exceeds or falls below its total expenditure for 1987-88.

Mr. Howard: I have today placed the information in the Library of the House. The total expenditure information for 1987-88 (revised budget) and for 1988-89 (budget) has been taken from the 1988-89 returns of expenditure and rates (RER89). Where these returns have not been received, the latest information available has been used and the figures are provisional.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department conducted any analysis of the achievements and difficulties of the London Docklands Development Corporation and the Merseyside Development Corporation, before deciding to establish more urban development corporations.

Mr. Ridley: My Department continuously monitors both London Docklands Development Corporation and Merseyside Development Corporation. I took account of their experience when I decided to establish more urban development corporations.

Right-to-Buy Forms

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will investigate the reasons why his Department has told Lichfield district council that it is out of stock of right-to-buy forms; how many other local authorities who are pursuing right-to-buy policies have been similarly informed; how long these forms have been out of stock; and what steps he is taking to have fresh supplies printed forthwith and to ensure that this situation does not recur.

Mrs. Roe: Supplies were unavailable between 6 May and 7 June, and local authorities which ordered forms during this period were so informed. The difficulty arose from a defect in the reordering system, which is being remedied, coupled with a greater than expected demand for the form earlier this year.

House Sales (Corby)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the sum raised by sales made by the New Towns Commission in Corby for each year since 1980.

Mrs. Roe: The sums raised from the sale of property in Corby by the Commission for the New Towns have been as follows:

Year ending 31 March	£'000
1980	615
1981	952
1982	580
1983	5,840
1984	2,517
1985	1,506
1986	1,826
1987	4,464
1988	10,564

Clinical Waste (Disposal)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what regulations govern the disposal by hospitals of clinical waste; what measures exist to prevent accidental infection being caused to waste disposal operatives by hypodermic syringes and similar articles; and if he has any proposals for establishing clinical waste incinerators as an alternative to the use of the normal public waste disposal arrangements.

Mr. Moynihan: Arrangements for the disposal of clinical waste from hospitals are a matter for health authorities. The Health and Safety Commission guidance document of 1982, and waste management paper No. 25, give guidance on disposal of clinical waste.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to provide a substantive reply to the letters dated 7 March and 9 May from the hon. Member for Slough to the Minister for Housing and Planning about a right-to-buy case.

Mr. Waldegrave: I sent my hon. Friend a substantive reply on 9 June.

Civil Servants (Outside Activities)

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pontypridd of 23 May, Official Report, column 77, he will list the names and Civil Service grades of the 16 civil servants appointed as directors of public liability companies, building societies or other outside bodies specified therein; and of which such companies or other outside bodies they have been appointed;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pontypridd, Official Report, 23 May, column 77, by what means and for what departmental purposes the 16 civil servants were appointed as directors of the outside bodies specified in the question.

Mr. Ridley: Following is the answer:

	Grade	Company
Mr. P. C. McQuail	2	Generation Securities Ltd.
Mr. F. A. Osborn	2	Trafalgar House Oil and Gas Ltd.
Mr. J. P. G. Rowcliffe	2	Bradford and Bingley Building Society
Mr. C. J. S. Brearley	3	John McLean and Sons Ltd.
Dr. D. J. Fisk	3	Hydraulics Research Ltd.
Mr. P. J. Fletcher	3	John Mowlem Homes Ltd.
Mr. R. J. Green	3	Butterley Brick Ltd.
Miss D. A. Nichols	3	John Laing ETE Ltd.
Mr. B. D. Ponsford	3	Smiths Industries Medical Systems Group
Mr. R. J. A. Sharp	3	ARC Concrete Ltd.
Mr. K. E. C. Sorensen	3	Balfour Beatty Construction International Ltd.
Mr. N. W. Summerton	3	Redland Bricks Ltd.
Miss E. C. Turton	3	Woolwich Equitable Building Society
Mr. A. G. Watson	3	Denco Ltd.
Mr. R. Johnson	6	Salveson Homes Ltd.
Mr. M. Tucker	7	Thamesmead Town

Dr. Fisk's appointment as a non-executive director of Hydraulics Research Ltd. arises directly from his official duties. The appointment of Mr. Tucker as a non-executive director of Thamesmead Town followed an approach to him by the directors of the company; he currently serves on secondment to the company. The other appointments as non-excecutive directors listed in the table were arranged by senior departmental officers with a view to providing opportunities for civil servants to obtain direct experience of the operation of the private sector.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the number of planning appeals made to his Department in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available, (b) the number of such appeals that were allowed and (c) the percentage that (b) represents of (a).

Mr. Waldegrave: The table shows the number of planning appeals received, withdrawn prior to decision, decided and allowed. The success rate given is the number of appeals allowed as a percentage of the total number decided in each year.

Year	Appeals received	Appeals withdrawn	Appeals decided	Appeals allowed	Percentage allowed of those decided
1978	11,609	2,671	8,952	2,504	28·0
1979	12,990	2,485	8,933	2,602	29·1
1980	16,208	2,921	13,130	4,044	30·8
1981	16,637	3,305	14,451	4,721	32·7
1982	13,900	2,591	12,915	4,003	31·0
1983	13,699	1,611	11,221	8,633	32·4
1984	16,192	2,475	11,643	3,773	32·4
1985	17,053	2,110	14,639	5,477	37·4
1985-86	17,839	2,143	14,130	5,581	39·5
1986-87	19,856	2,533	15,613	6,208	39·8
1987-88	22,482	3,173	18,474	6,955	37·6

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether 19-year-olds still at school will receive any assistance with poll tax by way of rebates, student discount or total exemption; and from what resources he expects any residual liability to be met.

Mr. Ridley: Individuals aged over 18 who are still at school and in respect of whom child benefit is payable will be exempt from the community charge. Child benefit is not payable in respect of 19-year-olds still at school. They will be eligible for rebates of up to 80 per cent. of the community charge according to their incomes. The residual liability will be met from the same sources as their other living expenses.

Companies (Local Authority Involvement)

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals for regulating local authorities' involvement in Companies Act companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has today published a consultation paper setting out proposals for a statutory framework for local authorities' involvement in companies. Copies of the paper have been placed in the Library.

The report of the committee of inquiry into the conduct of local authority business (the Widdicombe committee) highlighted a number of concerns about companies used by local authorities, under their control or influence, to conduct various activities. In the light of these concerns, the Government have examined the policy issues involved, with the help of specialist assistance from Coopers and Lybrand. As background to this work, my Department conducted a survey of local authorities about their involvement with companies, the results of which are set out in the paper. The survey found that companies are being used by authorities for a very wide range of activities and that their number and the scale of operation is tending to increase.

The Government do not wish to prevent local authorities from becoming involved in companies where there are operational advantages in doing so. Local authorities' use of companies has proved useful in a variety of cases, particularly in joint ventures with the private sector.

The Government have, however, concluded that it is anomalous that local authorities' interests in companies, and the control of influence that these can give, are outside various rules governing the conduct of local authority business, which are intended to ensure that local authorities demonstrably conduct their affairs in accordance with the principles which should govern all public authorities. The proposals set out in the consultation paper are designed to remove this anomaly.

The essence of the proposals is that where a local authority or authorities control a company or have a dominant influence on it, there should be, and should be seen to be, accountability and propriety in the conduct of its affairs; and that such companies should not be capable of being used as a means of avoiding the controls imposed by Parliament on local authorities. These objectives are more difficult to achieve in cases where local authorities do not control a company. It is therefore proposed that local authorities will be able to hold a minority interest in a company only in circumstances where an important policy end is served. The paper sets out the circumstances proposed by the Government.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is consulting separately on these proposals.

Plumbers

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that unvented hot water storage systems are installed by registered plumbers under the terms of the scheme operated by the British Board of Agrèment.

Mr. Trippier: The installation of an unvented hot water system is covered by the safety requirements set out in part G3 of the Building Regulations 1984. Guidance has been given that such a system should be installed by an approved installer, but there is no legal requirement to this effect, although there are requirements that the building control authority must be told whether or not the installer of a system has been approved. We have taken steps to make building control authorities aware of the dangers arising from improper installation, and we have actively encouraged plumbers to seek registration as approved installers. Nevertheless, I am aware that the British Board of Agrèment remains concerned about this issue and my officials will be meeting it shortly to consider whether the present arrangements need to be reviewed.

American Waste

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the danger of importing vermin with American domestic waste proposed to be dumped in the north-west and south-west of England.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 9 June, at column 654.

Merseyside Task Force

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the future of the Merseyside task force.

Mr. Trippier: The task force has played a major role in the regeneration of Merseyside. My right hon. Friend has no plans to change this role.

Pollution

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those landfill sites identified by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution officials as emitting methane and/or carbon dioxide; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will estimate how many homes have been evacuated because of concern at the level of methane and carbon dioxide gas given off at sites (a) where new housing has been built on landfill sites and (b) where housing is built close to landfill sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution has received replies to its letter on landfill gas of 18 December from the majority of English and Welsh waste disposal authorities, and is processing the responses. I await its report.

Rating Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) Official Report, 1 March, columns 560-62, he will retabulate those tables taking into consideration the 15 per cent. rebate taper and any other relevant modifications to the rebate scheme.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 9 June 1988]: The tables give the requested update of the figures provided by my right hon. Friend on 1 March 1988. As before, the figures should be treated as indicative only. They show that, as a result of reducing the community charge rebate taper from 20p to 15p in the pound, around 400,000 extra households are expected to contain individuals entitled to a rebate. Households where someone is presently projected to be entitled to less than the maximum rebate will also benefit from the reduced taper, with a total of 5 million adults gaining. As before, the estimated value of rebates does not include the benefit of uprating of income support in respect of the 20 per cent. minimum contribution to rates in 1988-89. The net cost of community charges to tax unit types is not therefore simply the difference between gross community charges and the value of rates. These figures relate to England only and are in 1986-87 prices, like the earlier table.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give the asset value of the land, buildings and capital equipment for each of those categories at the National Engineering Laboratory, East Kilbride;

(2) if he will list the Government Departments and non-Government agencies permanently on site at the National Engineering Laboratory, East Kilbride, listing the work undertaken by each of the organisations on site.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster has today placed in the Library an information pack which contains the requested information which is currently available.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the male and female rate of unemployment in each (a) development area and (b) intermediate area in April for Great Britain.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The tables show the number of unemployed male and female claimants, expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed for each development area and intermediate area in Great Britain on 8 April 1988.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of job vacancies advertised in each (a) assisted development area and (b) intermediate area in April.

Mr. Lee: The table shows the number of unfilled vacancies, excluding vacancies on the community programme, registered at jobcentres approximately corresponding to each of the development areas and intermediate areas in Great Britain on 8 April 1988. Nationally only about a third of all vacancies are reported to jobcentres; this proportion is likely to vary between areas.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many job vacancies were registered at jobcentres in Tameside at the most recent available date.

Mr. Lee: On 8 April 1988 there were 548 unfilled vacancies, excluding community programme vacancies, at jobcentres covering an area closely corresponding to the Tameside local authority district.

Engineering Industry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his assessment of the effect of the removal of the Manpower Services Commission grant for industrial placement training on the engineering industry.

Mr. Nicholls: There need be no significant effect. This grant, which amounted to £850,000 in 1987-88, represented a small proportion of the total support the Training Commission gives to the engineering industry. Research indicates that many employers would have made a sandwich placement available without it. Moreover, I understand that the Engineering Industry Training Board has now introduced a modified scheme of grants for sandwich grant placement training for engineering undergraduates.

ENERGY

Oil and Gas (Field Development Approvals)

10. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many field development approvals there have been for (a) oil and (b) gas in each month since January 1987.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In 1987, 11 oil and two gas projects were approved. So far this year 11 projects have been approved; two oil projects in March, two oil and two gas in April, two oil and one gas in May and two gas in June.

Electricity Privatisation

11. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Scretary of State for Energy when he expects to complete his consultations about statutory obligations and supply regulations in the electricity supply industry following privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A large number of responses to the supply code consultation document have been received, and these are being considered.

40. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what effect he expects the privatisation of electricity will have on the numbers of people employed in the supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Manning levels after privatisation will be a matter for the industry, as is the case now.

41. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will have further planning discussions with representatives of the area electricity boards prior to presenting future legislation on privatisation, in respect of the forthcoming operational framework for the boards' respective retail outlets.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairmen of the area boards from time to time to dicuss a number of privatisation matters. The operational framework for the boards' retail outlets is still under consideration.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further representations he has received about the proposals for privatisation of the electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I continue to receive many representations on electricity privatisation.

24. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his answer of 9 May, Official Report column 3, he will itemise all additional costs arising from his proposals in relation to the operational control of the national grid; what estimates of each of these costs he has received from Lord Marshall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government believe that any additional costs arising from the transfer of ownership of the national grid to the distribution companies will be outweighed by the benefits from increased competition.

Power Stations (Gas Burn)

16. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what applications for permission to burn gas in power stations he has approved; and if he will make a statement.

32. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received an application from Thames Power and the Central Electricity Generating Board to establish a 1000 MW gas-fired power station at Barking Reach in east London.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Proposals to establish gas-fired power stations have been made by Thames Power Limited and Leicester Energy Limited.

I am pleased to say that I have approved both the 990 MW combined cycle plant at Barking and the 290 MW combined heat and power plant at Leicester, in accordance with section 14 of the Energy Act 1976 and the relevant European Community directive.

Hinkley Point C PWR

18. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received the outline statement of the case, published by the Central Electricity Generating Board, in advance of the public inquiry into the proposed Hinkley Point C pressurised water reactor to commence this October, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I received the Central Electricity Generating Board's outline statement of case on 13 May. I also received an outline statement of case, on the same day, from Somerset county council on behalf of itself, West Somerset district council and a consortium of opposing local authorities.

Oil and Gas Production (North Sea)

19. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what the current level of oil and gas production is in the British sector of the North sea; and for how long he expects the United Kingdom to maintain self-sufficiency.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Oil production from the United Kingdom continental shelf averaged 2·5 million barrels per day in the first quarter of 1988, while, according to provisional figures, gas production averaged 181·2 million cu m per day in the same period.

On current estimates, the United Kingdom is likely to remain self-sufficient in oil and gas well into the 1990s.

Coal Industry Privatisation

20. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has had meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss future investment in the light of his policy towards future privatisation of the coal industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet the chairman to discuss the corporation's capital programme.

Fawley B Power Station

21. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has fixed the date for the public inquiry into the proposals by the Central Electricity Generating Board to construct the Fawley B power station and coal jetty.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In making arrangements for the inquiry my right hon. Friend is statutorily obliged to make a statement of matters which he considers likely to be relevant to his consideration of the application. It is therefore clear that he must study the objections he has received very carefully before announcing the inquiry.

Offshore Petroleum Licences

22. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he will announce a further round of offshore petroleum licences.

28. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is now ready to launch the eleventh round of offshore petroleum licensing.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department is still consulting interested parties about our proposals for an eleventh round of offshore petroleum licensing. My right hon. Friend hopes to launch the round formally before the summer recess.

Power Stations (Coal Burn)

23. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has recently met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss future coal burn in power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of the CEGB to discuss all aspects of the electricity supply industry.

Coal Industry Dispute

25. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will now make it his policy to enter into discussions with the chairman of British Coal regarding the reinstatement of the miners sacked during the 1984-85 strike; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 15 February 1988, at column 695.

Paper Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consultations he has had recently with representatives of the paper industry concerning, and what steps his Department has taken to achieve, greater energy efficiency within Britain's paper manufacturing industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Departmemt, through the Energy Efficiency Office, continues to work closely with the paper industry to improve energy efficiency in paper manufacturing.

Offshore Supply Industry

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps his Department is taking to encourage the United Kingdom offshore supply industry to increase its share of overseas markets.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend and I are actively promoting the industry by visiting selected markets accompanied, where appropriate, by an industrial mission. In addition, my Offshore Supplies Office has substantially increased the resources it devotes to identifying export market opportunities and is encouraging and supporting the industry's efforts to increase its share of these markets.

31. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action he has taken in the last year to provide work opportunities for the United Kingdom offshore supply industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Last year my Department approved development plans for a total of 13 projects including seven new offshore oil and gas projects. So far this year 11 offshore, onshore and incremental projects have been approved. These developments will provide our supplies and fabrication industries with considerable work opportunities over the next few years.

Fast Breeder Reactors

29. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his policy towards investment in fast breeder reactors and fusion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department funds a large programme of research and development on the fast reactor. This programme is currently under review. No decisions have yet been taken.

The United Kingdom is making a major contribution to the Community fusion programme, including the Joint European Torus (JET) project at Culham.

Energy Efficiency

33. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress has been made in improving energy efficiency in cities.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A large proportion of the £700 million gross annual savings attributable to the Energy Efficiency Office's programmes arises in cities. The EEO has also helped to launch 11 energy action cities, which harness a variety of resources to a broad campaign aimed at improving energy efficiency throughout the local economy.

34. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what further efforts are being made to improve the energy efficiency of buildings.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Our research development and demonstration programmes in domestic buildings will continue to sustain the momentum which has contributed to savings worth £1·1 billion per year. I have also recently asked the building societies to encourage investment in energy efficiency. In non-domestic buildings our programmes will continue to promote increased market awareness by developing energy targets and by supporting professionals in this field.

Sullom Voe (Oil Throughput)

35. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the volume of oil throughput at Sullom Voe in the first four months of 1988 and the first four months of 1987.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In the first four months of this year, Sullom Voe handled 18·2 million tonnes of crude oil, compared with 17·3 million tonnes over the same period in 1987.

Dounreay Fast Breeder Reactor

30. Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to take a decision in relation to future funding of the fast breeder reactor at Dounreay.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The fast reactor programme funded by my Department is currently under review. No decisions have yet been taken.

36. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the expected life of the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay; and what plans there are for constructing a commercial fast reactor on that site or elsewhere.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The design life of the prototype fast reactor at Dounreay, when commissioned in 1974, was about 30 years. The Government have received no application to construct a commercial fast reactor.

Fuel Disconnection

37. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received on the operations of the code of practice on fuel disconnection.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The code of practice is monitored by the electricity and gas consumers' councils, and by the Office of Gas Supply. In responding to the paper on a "Proposed Supply Code for the Electricity Supply Industry", a number of bodies have made general comments about the code of practice. These are being considered together with all other comments received on the paper.

Hinkley Point A Power Station

38. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the Hinkley A power station is likely to reach the end of its useful life.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the CEGB, and I have asked the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

British Gas

39. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many British Gas shareholders have now paid the third instalment; and what is the total sum collected.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Of nearly 3 million payments due in the British Gas third instalment, 99·5 per cent. have been received. The total sum collected amounts to £1,589 million.

Continental Shelf (Gas Shares)

13. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the prospects for further sales of gas from the United Kingdom continental shelf; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A number of gas sale contracts on the United Kingdom continental shelf have recently been agreed and others are under negotiation. There is a good prospect of gas from the United Kingdom continental shelf meeting our needs well into the second half of the 1990s.

Research and Development Projects

15. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many research and development projects were approved for support by the Offshore Energy Technology Board in the last financial year; what was their total value; and how much the Government will contribute to them.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In 1987-88, 41 new projects were approved for support. Their total cost was £17 million, and the Government contribution was £4·4 million.

Natural Gas Imports

42. Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy on imports of natural gas from Norway.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Gas imports can have a major effect on the rate and pattern of the development of the United Kingdom continental shelf. In recognition of this, and of the importance the Government attach to maintaining the rate of activity on the United Kingdom continental shelf, British Gas has undertaken to consult the Government on any import plans as these develop. Any imports from Norway would be subject to the normal consent requirements for laying pipelines on the United Kingdom continental shelf and, where appropriate, the conclusion of intergovernmental treaties.

Association of Independent Electricity Producers

43. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the Association of Independent Electricity Producers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend last met the association on 28 October 1987. Our officials are in regular contact with the association.

Electricity Industry (Regulatory Framework)

44. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy, when drawing up the regulatory framework for the electricity industry, to require distributors to show that they have investigated all possibilities, including energy efficiency schemes, in order to meet their customers' requirements at the least cost.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The future regulatory framework for the electricity supply industry is still under consideration.

Dumping at Sea

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what efforts are being made by his Department to show that there are no practical land-based alternatives to dumping fluidised sea and that flyash does not cause harm to the marine environment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the CEGB. I understand that it has already embarked upon studies into alternative disposal methods for its wastes. If sea disposal is to continue beyond 1989, the CEGB will need to satisfy the licensing authority (MAFF) that there is no practical land-based alternative and that the waste will not cause harm to the marine environment.

Coke

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what were the total imports of coke for each of the last five years; and what were the amounts from each country of origin.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Imports of hard coke for each of the last five years by total and by country of origin are as follows:

'000 tonnes

Country of origin	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
German Democratic Republic	1	107	117	109	86

Plutonium (Japan)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what provision there is for review of the permission for the export of plutonium to Japan during the period of the proposed contract, should Japan decide that its proposed fast breeder reactor programme has no commercial future;

(2) if he has made an independent assessment of the quantity of plutonium required by Japan for its fast breeder reactor and MOx fuel programmes to ensure that the conditions for the export of fissile material to a non-nuclear weapons state are adhered to.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has not made such an assessment. The return of plutonium from the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel at THORP to its country of origin or to any other destination will not take place for several years and will be made only on receipt of assurances covering peaceful use, application of safeguards, physical protection and controls on retransfer in line with the statement by the then Foreign Secretary, now Lord Callaghan, on 31 March 1976, at columns 514-16.

Nuclear Safety

17. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to meet the chairman of the advisory committee on the safety of nuclear installations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I meet the chairman of ACSNI from time to time.

Fluidised Bed Project (Grimethorpe)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much money was spent (a) from 1976 to 1984 and (b) from 1985 to date by British Coal and the Central Electricity Generating Board on the fluidised bed project at Grimethorpe; what proportion of this money was foreign investment; and from which country it came.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Between 1976 and 1984, under the auspices of the International Energy Agency, the United States of America, Federal Republic of Germany and United Kingdom each contributed £20 million to the fluidised bed combustion project at Grimethorpe. Of the United Kingdom share, British Coal contributed £3 million, and the Department of Energy £17 million. British Coal also made contributions in kind. From 1985 to date the project has been the responsibility of British Coal together with the Central Electricity Generating Board. I understand from British Coal that during this period the United States of America contributed £10 million, in addition to expenditure by British Coal and CEGB of £28 million.

SCOTLAND

Acute Beds

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the numbers of acute beds in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table.

Average available staffed beds in acute specialties in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland, year ending 30 September 1987 (provisional figures)

	Number
Scotland	17,108
Argyll and Clyde	1,214

Rating Reform

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has received on the usefulness of including dates of birth in helping assessors establish the community charge liability of individuals.

Mr. Rifkind: The requirement in section 13(1)(d) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 that dates of birth are to be included in the community charges register was added to the Bill as a result of representations made by local authority practitioners on the desirability of the provision being included and the information is being included in local authority systems as an aid to identification.

Power Stations (Coal Burn)

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a further statement on the level of coal burned from pits in the Scottish coalfield in South of Scotland Electricity Board power stations.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that coal burn in the fiscal year 1987-88 was about 5·6 million tonnes, all from indigenous sources, both British Coal and private workings. For the fiscal year 1988-89, the board estimates that the total coal burn could be at a similar level, but the quantity and sources will be dependent on a number of factors, including the competitiveness of coal prices and the level of electricity trading.

Social Workers

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions his Department has undertaken with the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work about the funding of social workers from voluntary organisations who wish to undertake professional training leading to the certificate in social services or the certificate of qualification in social work; and what is his policy towards provision for such students for the academic year 1988-89.

Mr. Rifkind: Since 1987 support of social workers from voluntary organisations undertaking professional training for the certificate in social services has been administered by the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work. The level of resources allocated for this support is under review by my Department following representations by CCETSW. I cannot predict the outcome. Support is not available for social workers in voluntary organisations wishing to undertake the certificate of qualification in social work.

Radioactivity (Monitoring)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take on the recommendations of the Committee on the Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment in respect of (a) a series of detailed studies of leukaemia cases, (b) increased monitoring of diet, air, sea spray sediment and dust and (c) whole body monitoring and the measurement of radioactivity in placentae; and whether such action will relate to the areas around Chapelcross, Hunterston and Torness and those affected by the Sellafield drift, as well as Dounreay.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) on 8 June. This set out the responses of the Government to the report of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) on the possible increased incidence of leukaemia in young people near the Dounreay nuclear establishment. So far as action relating to other areas containing nuclear establishments is concerned, we will continue to be guided by the advice of COMARE.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of beds per hospital for (a) each hospital completed since 1979 and (b) each hospital approved in principle since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Lothian Regional Council

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many organisations have made representations to him regarding his decision to enforce a reduction in Lothian regional council's 1988-89 budget, showing how many (a) supported and (b) opposed his decision; and if he will list them.

Mr. Lang: The table lists 11 organisations that have written to my right hon. and learned Friend on his proposed rate reduction in Lothian region. Some opposed the proposal and some supported it. Others have written on points of detail and on what the consequences might be for them.

Lothian Region Joint Trade Union Committee
Scottish Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux (and individual Bureaux)
Lothian Marriage Counselling Service
Edinburgh Council of Social Service
Edinburgh Chambers of Commerce and Manufacturers
Lothian RAGE
Wester Hailes Representative Council
Lothian Rights Group
Edinburgh and Lothian Women's Aid
Sneddi Merchandising Ltd.
Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the implications for the Scottish economy of proposals to privatise the National Engineering Laboratory, East Kilbride; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Following the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry's announcement on 7 June, interested parties now have until 22 July to submit proposals for taking the National Engineering Laboratory into the private sector. Each proposal received will be carefully assessed by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in consultation with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards the expenditure of public funds through the Scottish Development Agency or any other Government supported agency in support of a management buyout of the National Engineering Laboratory.

Mr. Lang: Any approach to the Scottish Development Agency by the management of the National Engineering Laboratory for assistance in support of a management buyout will be dealt with by the agency in accordance with its industrial investment guidelines. A copy of these guidelines was placed in the Library of the House when they were issued in 1980.

THE ARTS

Public Library Service

53. Miss Lestor: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on his Green Paper "Financing our Public Library Service."

55. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from public librarians on his Green Paper "Financing our Public Library Service."

66. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received from local authorities on his Green Paper "Financing our Public Library Service".

Mr. Luce: I have received about 200 letters, including a large proportion from public libraries commenting on the Green Paper and I expect to receive many more by 30 June, the closing date for representations.

57. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many complaints he has received in the last 12 months from library users that public libraries are not sufficiently client-orientated.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) on Tuesday 7 June, at columns 512-13.

59. Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Arts what external economic expertise was available to him in the preparation of the Green Paper on the financing of public libraries.

Mr. Luce: The financial and statistical data contained in the library Green Paper were obtained from sources published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. The economic expertise available within Government was adequate for my purposes in relation to the Green Paper.

67. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts what evidence he has on the extent of demand for competitive tendering for renting videos in public libraries.

Mr. Luce: Competitive tendering is, I suggest in my library Green Paper, one way of enabling library authorities to use their resources more effectively. No library authority in England has, I understand, put out to competitive tendering any direct service to its library users. I wish them to consider doing so.

69. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the Library Association to discuss the Green Paper "Financing our Public Library Service".

Mr. Luce: Yes. I met a delegation from the Library Association on 25 May and had a useful discussion with the association about the Green Paper.

70. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he consulted with the Library Association on the contents of his Green Paper on financing the public library service prior to publication.

Mr. Luce: No, but I met a delegation from the Library Association on 25 May to discuss, among other matters, my Green Paper on financing the public library service. The association intends, I understand, to make a substantive submission to me shortly on the Green Paper.

Public Libraries (Cost-effectiveness)

71. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister for the Arts what evidence he has on the cost-effectiveness of public libraries.

Mr. Luce: There are at present limited means for assessing the cost effectiveness of public libraries. However, my office has recently published a costing model, "A Costing System for Public Libraries". I am also currently funding, through the British Library, production of a manual of performance indicators for public libraries.

72. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether the premium book subscription scheme, proposed in the Green Paper "Financing our Public Library Service", will apply to new children's books.

Mr. Luce: No.

Haymarket Theatre, Leicester

54. Mr. Janner: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to visit the Haymarket theatre, Leicester.

Mr. Luce: I hope to visit the Haymarket theatre, and other arts bodies, when I visit the region this autumn.

Arts-History Link

56. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister for the Arts what initiatives are planned by his Department to promote greater appreciation of the links between the arts and British economic history.

Mr. Luce: The collections in our museums and galleries and the work of artists, both living and dead, are influenced by the social and historical contexts in which they were created, and may be used to illustrate many aspects of British history. Their contemporary interpretation is a matter for individual institutions or artists.

58. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether his Office has any plans for an arts festival to celebrate the year 2000.

Mr. Luce: I am sure that the nation will want to celebrate the year in some special way, but I have not yet embarked on detailed discussions with the arts world.

South Bank Board

60. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what assessment he has made of the effects of the recently completed independence of the South Bank Board Ltd.

Mr. Luce: It is too soon to be clear about the effects of independence, but first indications are encouraging. I am confident that the South Bank Board Ltd., under the chairmanship of Mr. Ronald Grierson, will continue to manage its affairs efficiently and economically and to present arts events of the highest standard.

Public Lending Right Scheme

61. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much public funding has been allotted to the public lending right scheme in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Funding for the public lending right scheme is as follows:

1986-87	2·75
1987-88	2·75
1988-89	3·5

The 27 per cent. increase in 1988-89 brings the fund to its highest level in real terms since its inception.

63. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many authors are presently registered under the public lending right scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The number of authors currently registered for public lending right is 14,635.

Acceptances-in-lieu

62. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the outcome to date of the acceptance-in-lieu-of-tax scheme since its inception in July 1985.

Mr. Luce: In July 1985 the Government announced new arrangements which permit an annual call on the Reserve of around £10 million a year, taking one year with the next. This has greatly facilitated such offers. The table sets out the financial position and highlights those items whose acceptance was made possible by these arrangements. Additionally, the scheme has benefited from two further changes introduced in 1987. It is now possible to have interest charges on an offer waived while negotiations are proceeding towards acceptance of an item at the original agreed valuation, and it is also possible to offer an item whose "special price" is greater than the tax liability on the estate, if the institution for which the item is intended is prepared to make up the difference. Both the Picasso and the Gainsborough paintings were accepted in this way. There is no shortage of items in the pipeline—an indication that the scheme is proving an attractive one, and one which plays a vital role in preserving important items and land for future public benefit.

Year	Amount of tax satisfied £	[1]Call on the Reserve £	Item
1985-86	2,366,707	520,000	The Portland Archive
1986-87	2,947,842	440,000	Matthew Boulton Clock
		725,000	Bellini "Madonna and Child"
1987-88	8,627,464	1,200,000	Picasso's "Weeping Woman"
		5,500,000	Constable's "Stratford Mill"
		638,444	Gainsborough's "Captain Wade"

[1] Although the total agreed call on the Reserve since July 1985 was £9,023,444, because of underspends in each financial year on the annual Vote of £2 million the amount actually spent from the Reserve was £7,942,013.

Museums and Galleries Commission

64. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much extra funding the Museums and Galleries Commission will receive in the next three years specifically for the purpose of promoting improvements in the management of non-national museums and galleries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Over the next three years I have provided £270,000 within the Museums and Galleries Commission's grant-in-aid to be used to encourage improved management and marketing in non-national museums and galleries. The commission recently announced an exciting programme of seminars, courses and studies for the coming year.

Good management and effective marketing skills are vital if museums and galleries are to make the best use of resources. In addition to my allocations to the Museums and Galleries Commission to encourage improvements in the management and marketing of museums, I have provided some £600,000 for this purpose this year in the grants-in-aid of the National Museums and Galleries. In March I announced also a major initiative on the training of museums staff, and a research study into the resource implications of collections management.

Industrial Archaeology

65. Mr. Adley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what recent discussions he has had on those aspects of industrial archaeology and the heritage related thereto which engage his ministerial responsibilities.

Mr. Luce: A number of the national museums and galleries which I sponsor have an interest in aspects of the industrial heritage and these feature, accordingly, in my discussions with the institutions.

Arts Bodies

68. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what guidance he has given arts bodies on the benefits of participation in the community programme and job-splitting scheme.

74. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what guidance he has given to arts bodies on the benefits of participation in the business expansion scheme and youth training scheme.

Mr. Luce: I am encouraged by the amount of support given to arts bodies by my colleagues in other Departments. The directors of regional arts associations and their officers are always ready to advise arts bodies and individual artists on the details of the various schemes.

National Heritage Memorial Fund

73. Mr. Burt: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much public funding has so far been awarded to the National Heritage Memorial Fund since its inception in 1980; and what assessment he has made of the outcome of the scheme to date.

Mr. Luce: The amount of public funding since the inception of the National Heritage Memorial Fund is £105,621,576. This is set out on an annual basis in the table. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and I are jointly responsible for the operation of the fund. Lord Charteris and the trustees are to be congratulated on an outstanding record of achievement to date. The trustees have chosen carefully among the hundreds of applications for assistance, and I commend their annual reports to my hon. Friend for descriptions of the wide range of land, buildings, artefacts and works of art saved for the nation with contributions from the fund. I have every confidence in their continuing success.

[1] The 1983-84 figure represents a grant of £1,304 million from DOE, the unspent AIL allocations of DOE and OAL (£593,327 each) and £1,468 rebate from the Land Fund.

[2] The 1987-88 DOE figure comprises of £20 million cash injection, 1·5 million annual grant and £46,100 from the proceeds of Heveningham Hall.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will give the percentage charge in non-Exchequer receipts of the national museums and galleries between 1979-80 and latest available year.

Mr. Luce: Using the figures I gave in my written answer to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 26 May, at columns 259-62, the percentage increase between 1979-80 and 1988-89 is expected to be some 800 per cent. in cash terms (393 per cent. in real terms).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Protestant Task Force

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information is available to his Department as to the nature and activities of the Protestant Task Force.

Mr. Stanley: My Department is not aware of an organisation of this name.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Interest Rates

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the interest rates of the countries in the European monetary system, both nominal and real; and what equivalent information he has for the other countries of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Lilley: Various short and long-term interest rates are given for all the countries in question in "IMF International Financial Statistics", monthly. The same publication gives indices of consumer or wholesale prices which are often used to convert nominal interest rates into "real" terms.

Balance of Trade

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has made an estimate of the effect on the United Kingdom's balance of trade with European Economic Community countries if it remains outside the European monetary system in 1992.

Mr. Lilley: No. Britain is a member of the European monetary system. I imagine my hon. Friend is referring to the exchange rate mechanism of the system. There is no reason to suppose remaining outside the exchange rate mechanism will significantly affect the balance of trade between the United Kingdom and the European Community.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give a figure for general Government expenditure in 1988-89 equivalent to that in table 1.4 of Cm. 288-1, recalculated on the assumption that there is a sustained (a) 10 per cent. rise and (b) 10 per cent. fall in the trade-weighted exchange rate over a period of one year from the level used in the formulation of the above table.

Mr. Major: The impact of exchange rate changes on the economy would depend on assumptions made about the financial policies being followed at the time. The impact of the subsequent economic effects on public expenditure cannot be determined uniquely either as this depends on the control regime being operated. A large part of the planning total is subject to cash limits where the presumption is that no adjustments are made for variations in prices or costs. Furthermore, the rates of social security benefits are determined in relation to price levels known before the start of the financial year. There is no unique relationship between changes in the exchange rate and debt interest.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many households receiving housing benefit pay income tax.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 4 May 1988]: I have been asked to reply.

Information drawn from the family expenditure survey suggests that some 1·7 million housing benefit recipients may also have paid income tax in 1985.

Tax Forms

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many more tax forms have been sent to pensioners in this financial year than last;

(2) if he plans to apologise to pensioners wrongly sent income tax forms;

(3) what is his estimate of the cost of sending 1 million tax forms.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 7 June 1988]: I regret that due to a computer programming fault tax returns were issued to some pensioners who would not normally have been called upon to make a return. The Inland Revenue has taken steps to ensure that this will not recur.

No separate figures are kept of returns issued to pensioners, but the Inland Revenue estimates that the number of returns issued to them in April 1988 is approximately 500,000 higher than last year.

The estimated cost of sending 1 million tax returns is £137,250. This includes the cost of the returns, notes, envelopes and postage. The cost of issuing the 500,000 returns to pensioners is therefore £68,625.

Nationalised Industries (Fixed Assets)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the percentage increase in fares, prices and tariffs required for the British Railways Board, Electricity England and Wales, London Regional Transport, North of Scotland Hydro-Electricity board, Post Office, South of Scotland Electricity Board and Water England and Wales to meet the expenditure on fixed assets given for 1990-91 in table 4.4 of Cm. 288-I, assuming these industries financed all this investment internally from commercially generated funds.

Mr. Major [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Hypothetical projections on the lines requested would not justify the costs involved in preparing them. Assumptions would need to be made concerning general market conditions, the responsiveness of revenues to price changes and a wide range of factors affecting cost performance such as wage settlements, fuel costs and productivity growth. For reasons of commercial confidentiallity, the Government do not publish estimates of internal resources for the later years covered by the public expenditure plans, the assumptions on which they are based, or the effects of varying those assumptions.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for 1978-79 and 1988-89 to 1990-91 at constant 1988-89 and cash prices local authority capital expenditure in Great Britain broken down as in table 3.6 of Cm. 288-I.

Mr. Major [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The presentation used in table 3.6 of Cm. 288-I was introduced in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56 table 4.5). That table provides information back to 1981-82 and figures are not available in this form for earlier years. For 1988-89 to 1990-91 the cash figures are published in table 3.6 of Cm. 288-I; corresponding figures in real terms (base year 1988-89) are in the table.

CIVIL SERVICE

Agencies

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will make a statement about current proposals for the creation of agencies within his Department.

Mr. Luce: I announced on 9 May that the Civil Service College and the occupational health service are promising candidates for agency status. We are now closely examining each of them to assess their suitability. Like other Ministers, I shall continue to review the functions of my Department to identify any other areas which might be suitable.

Funding

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if any extra funding will be made available to the Civil Service, in the light of recent policy announcements on (a) race relations and (b) the employment of women.

Mr. Luce: Civil Service equal opportunity policies on the employment of women and ethnic minorities form part of the normal personnel management work of Departments. Actions to implement these policies are taken within Departmental running costs. My Department is giving priority to increasing the effectiveness of Civil Service equal opportunity policies.

Polygraphs

Dr. Marek: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will place a copy in the Library of the independent scientific study about the validity of polygraphic techniques.

Mr. Luce: I understand that the study is currently being assessed. No decisions have yet been taken about its handling, but, as indicated by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 24 May, at column 192, there will be an announcement to the House in due course.

AGRICULTURE

Hedgerows

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any proposals to discourage the destruction of hedgerows and to encourage the planting of new hedgerows.

Mr. Gummer: The Government's voluntary approach to countryside conservation seeks to ensure that farmers are fully aware of the landscape and wildlife value of their hedgerows. This Department's Agricultural Development and Advisory Service encourages farmers to retain hedgerows where possible and provides advice both on their management and the planting of new hedgerows.

Grants are available to farmers under the agriculture improvement scheme at the rate of 30 per cent. (60 per cent. in the less-favoured areas) towards the cost of planting new hedgerows and hedgerow laying. In addition, as a special measure, grants are available to farmers at 60 per cent. for the replacement of hedgerows damaged in the storm of 15-16 October last year.

Set-aside Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he now expects to announce his proposals on the set-aside of agricultural land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall be making a statement shortly.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will arrange for further sample monitoring of radioactivity levels in sheep in Devon and Somerset.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has undertaken an extensive monitoring programme—the results of which have been placed in the Library of the House—that gives complete reassurance as to the safety of all produce entering the food chain. Monitoring continues outside the restricted area where necessary, but I see no need to carry out sample monitoring of sheep in Devon or Somerset.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will arrange for further sample monitoring of radioactivity levels in sheep in non-restricted areas which had high levels of precipitation on 2 and 3 May 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Live monitoring of sheep is continuing wherever it is necessary, but the significance of rainfall data has been superseded by the results of surveys of actual deposition and of monitoring.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take, in the light of the research findings of Dr. Kenton Morgan, of the University of Bristol, on radiation contamination among sheep in Somerset and Devon following the Chernobyl disaster, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the answers given today and on 1 December 1987 to the Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark), at column 542. No further action is required and I understand that Dr. Morgan has now made it clear that his work implies no risk to the food chain and no long-term contamination.

Dumping at Sea

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the latest available figures for the amount of flyash dumped at sea at sites off the north-east coast of England.

Mr. Gummer: In 1987 just under 375,000 tonnes of flyash were deposited at approved sea dump sites off the north-east coast of England.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the latest available figures for the amounts of colliery spoil dumped at sea off the north-east coast of England.

Mr. Gummer: In 1987 a total of 2,014,000 tonnes of minestone were deposited under licence on the beaches at Seaham, Easington and Lynemouth; a further 1,572,000 tonnes were disposed of at the approved sea dump site off the north-east coast.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the latest available figures of the amounts and types of chemicals in industrial waste dumped at sea at each of the various sites around the United Kingdom.

Mr. Gummer: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the investigations being carried out to demonstrate that dumping liquid industrial waste at sea does not harm the marine environment; and whether these investigations are carried out in their laboratory or in the field.

Mr. Gummer: All liquid industrial wastes for which application for sea disposal is made are examined in the Ministry's laboratory. Toxicity testing and chemical analysis are undertaken to ensure that potentially toxic or persistent bioaccumulatable substances are within internationally agreed limits and pose no likelihood of causing damage to the marine environment in the short or longer term. The probable initial dilution of the waste, its degradeability and its longer term fate are assessed. The minimum initial dilution required to avoid toxic effects is determined and imposed if necessary as a condition of any licence granted.

Investigations at the disposal site are made by Ministry scientists to establish the nature of the marine species, water movements which may affect dilution and dispersion of the waste, and water quality. Once disposal commences, monitoring is conducted to confirm the absence of harm to the marine environment; this will usually include assessments of actual dilution, field bioassays, analysis of water and sediments and examination of fish and other species, including those living on the seabed.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline the efforts being made to find environmentally acceptable alternatives to dumping colliery spoil in the North sea and adjacent beaches.

Mr. Gummer: Each application for a licence under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 to dispose of colliery spoil at sea or on beaches is thoroughly examined by my Ministry. I make a careful assessment of all potential alternative means of disposal, drawing on comments obtained from consultations held by my officials with local environmental interests and local authorities. The Government also have available the results of research into disposal options commissioned by the Department of the Environment in 1986.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of any investigations which have concluded that there are no practical land-based alternatives to dumping at sea.

Mr. Gummer: All applicants for licences to dump waste at sea are required to demonstrate that land-based alternatives to dumping have been carefully considered. The practicability of land-based disposal options is thoroughly assessed in every case by this Ministry,drawing, where appropriate, on the advice of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

The composition and volume of most liquid industrial wastes hitherto accepted for disposal at sea has generally rendered them technically unsuitable for other disposal methods. As regards colliery spoil, the Department of the Environment commissioned research by Ove Arup and Partners Ltd. into the availability and cost of means of disposal other than beach tipping at Seaham; the Government concluded from that work in 1986 that there was currently no practical land-based alternative to dumping.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list any details of any investigations demonstrating the level of risk to the marine environment posed by sewage sludge dumped at sea.

Mr. Gummer: Investigations in the laboratory and at sea are carried out for sewage sludge in a similar way to those undertaken for liquid industrial wastes described in my reply today to another question by the hon. Member. Sewage sludge is a dispersion of organic rich solids and other particulates in water. The water content is usually more than 95 per cent. The organic matter is largely readily degraded in the sea and limits are set to the trace levels of any persistent organic chemicals and metals to ensure that no harm to the marine environment can be caused by their presence.

Results of monitoring investigations at dump sites by this Ministry are published from time to time in the fisheries research technical report series. They show that disposal of sewage sludge at sea under controlled conditions has a minimal effect on the marine environment.

Pâté de Foie Gras

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce a ban on the import of pâté de foie grass,; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has no plans to impose a ban on the import of pâté de foie gras as I am advised that such a step would contravene the treaty of Rome. In any case, it is for individuals to decide whether or not to buy or consume foie gras.

Civil Servants (Outside Activities)

Mr. John: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pontypridd of 24 May, Official Report, column 139, he will list the names and Civil Service grades of the two civil servants appointed as directors of commercial companies; and of which companies they have been appointed directors.

Mr. Donald Thompson: At present the following two officials hold appointments in commercial companies:

Mr. C. J. A. Barnes, Grade 5, as a non-executive director with Booker Food Services (Booker plc) and

Mr. G. M. Trevelyan, Grade 5, as an observer with Brooke Bond Oxo (Unilever).

Surplus Food

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether tenders for either (a) the packaging or (b) the transportation of surplus European Economic Community food have yet been issued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The arrangements for the provision of beef and butter stocks for distribution to the most needy require designated organisations to invite tenders for processing or packaging and to make the necessary arrangements for transportation. A number have already done so. Others are grouping together in order to minimise costs. Group tenders for the packaging of butter and butter oil have been invited and are awaited. An invitation to tender for beef will be issued shortly. I understand that the first distributions to eligible beneficiaries are likely to take place towards the end of this month.

Lambs

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many lambs were marked blue and relased for further fattening in the United Kingdom between 28 September 1987 and 10 January 1988.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A total of 6,497 lambs of not more than one year old were marked blue under the "mark and release" arrangements in the United Kingdom between 28 September 1987 and 10 January 1988.

Marked blue and released for further fattening from 28 September 1987 to 10 January 1988

Food Costs

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the additional cost in food per average family in consequence of the common agricultural policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 31 March, at column 638.

Rhizomania Infection

Mr. David Davis: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has made for the inspection of beet fields for rhizomania infection during the current season.

Mr. MacGregor: We will carry out a very extensive inspection programme throughout the country while the 1988 crop is growing. This will concentrate on sugar beet fields likely to be susceptible to rhizomania risk because of, for example, soil structure, poor irrigation or a history of low sugar yields. The fields will be identified by the local knowledge of inspectors, by British Sugar's records and by the results of aerial photography. Inspections will also be carried out on other fields of sugar beet and on fields of red and fodder beet.

To ensure that infection had not been spread from the farm in Suffolk where rhizomania was found last season, prior to the discovery, we will inspect all fields growing beet this year within 5 km of the site and also crops on the farms visited by the sugar beet contractor who worked on the farm between 1981 and 1987.

All these inspections will be carried out, under a joint programme, by the Plant Health and Seeds Inspectorate, Ministry field staff and British Sugar staff. Sample beets will be taken from each field inspected. These will be tested by the Ministry's Harpenden laboratory.

We expect this inspection programme to cover about 2,000 fields. It is a formidable task, but I am sure that it is justified in order to maintain our protection against rhizomania disease. It follows widespread surveys last year and programmes of inspection in the three previous seasons, which found no sign of rhizomania infection.

I am grateful to British Sugar for its co-operation in the inspections carried out in previous years and for the help it will again be providing in the coming season.

Argentine Ant

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the dangers to native flora and fauna from the accidental import of the Argentine Ant.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

Incidents of accidental infestations of the Argentine Ant in the United Kingdom are very rare and have been confined to permanently heated buildings. All currently available evidence suggests that the species cannot survive in the wild in the United Kingdom.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Severely Mentally Handicapped People

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement concerning the benefit entitlement of the severely mentally handicapped who have undertaken a community programme placement for therapeutic purposes.

Mr. Scott: Anyone receiving an incapacity benefit who performs work for which an employer might reasonably pay shows that he is capable of work and his benefit may be affected. This may apply to severely mentally handicapped people who have undertaken a community programme placement. The decision whether in practice a person is capable of work is for determination by the independent adjudicating authority.

However, a person receiving any incapacity benefit may nevertheless earn up to £27 a week without loss of benefit provided he satisfies the adjudicating authorities that the work is therapeutic, by furnishing medical evidence to that effect.

A severely mentally handicapped person is not entitled to income support if he is working 24 hours or more a week on a community programme. But benefit may be payable if the work averages less than 24 hours a week. The first £5 or £15, as appropriate, of his earnings are disregarded in deciding entitlement.

Departmental Offices (St. Helens)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current total social fund allocation for his Department's offices in St. Helens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current total social fund allocation for his Department's offices in the Manchester area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November 1987, at columns 774-81.

Twenty-four Hours Rule

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the application of the 24-hours-per-week working rule in respect of a family's eligibility for benefit.

Mr. Portillo: Representations have been received in certain individual cases where supplementary benefit was previously in payment but where there is no entitlement to income support under the new rules because 24 hours a week, or more, are being worked. Families with children can claim the new family credit, and families facing substantial losses may also be eligible for help under the transitional arangements announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled on 28 April, at columns 253-54.

European Cancer Initiative

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what contribution the Government have made towards the European cancer initiative.

Mrs. Currie: We have made £100,000 available to provide full or part funding of United Kingdom cancer charities' activities in support of the Europe against cancer initiative. In addition, we have taken the lead in cancer prevention by implementing the European Community's first comprehensive cervical cancer screening service based on computerised call and recall, the world's first nationwide breast cancer screening sevice, and by setting up the DHSS cancer screening evaluation unit at the Institute of Cancer Research to monitor existing cancer screening programmes and to assess the possibility of screening for other cancers. The Health Education Authority has also published an updated guide for the general public on how to reduce the risk of cancer by a healthy lifestyle.

Meningitis

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the death rate from meningococcal meningitis.

Mrs. Currie: The table gives the number of deaths registered where meningococcal meningitis was the underlying cause of death and the crude mortality rate per million usually resident population for the latest five years.

Deaths with underlying cause as meningococcal meningitis (ICD(9)[1] 036·0): numbers and rates per million population England and Wales 1983-87

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the incidence of haemophilus or pneumococcal meningitis.

Mrs. Currie: The table gives the numbers of notifications of haemophilus and pneumococcal meningitis for the latest six years available. In addition, the numbers of notifications where the organism was not specified on the notification forms are shown.

Number of notifications of (a) haemophilus (influenzal), (b) pneumococcal and (c) unspecified meningitis England and Wales 1982 to 1987

Aspirin

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what conclusions have been reached by his Department on the use of aspirin as preventive medicine for those who have suffered a heart attack and for those in the age categories where they are most vulnerable to such an attack; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The use of aspirin in the prevention of heart attack is an area in which there have recently been some interesting research studies. Research is continuing.

The best preventive measures against heart disease continue to be lifestyle changes such as stopping smoking and changes in diet.

Household Income

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a set of figures for 1979 on the same basis as contained in "Households Below Average Income 1981-1985".

Mr. Portillo: I have no plans to publish a full set of "Households Below Average Income" figures for 1979. However, "Low Income Statistics—Report of a Technical Review" proposes that data for an earlier year (perhaps 1971) might be included in a future edition. Copies of this report are available in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the figures allocated for the social fund to be claimed from the Seaham and Peterlee office of his Department for the financial year 1988-89 and the proportions of these which were (a) loans and (b) grants; and whether these figures will be revised if the demand for amounts from the fund exceeds the allocated amounts.

Mr. Portillo: Social fund allocations were announced by my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November 1987, at columns 774-81. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 4 March, at column 746, for details of the contingency arrangements.

Community Care

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial arrangements are made in each health region when patients are transferred out of long-stay hospitals into community care; and how many patients were transferred out under these arrangements in each health region since 1984.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients formerly resident in long-stay mental hospitals have so far been discharged into the community as part of the community care policy in each regional health authority; and what has been the total amount of cost savings accrued as a result.

Mrs. Currie: In response to local circumstances and needs, regions have a variety of financial arrangements for funding the transfer of mentally ill or handicapped patients from long-stay hospitals to more community orientated patterns of care. In some cases funds are transferred with individual patients ("dowries") according to regional guidelines or are directly negotiated by district health authorities; in others development monies are earmarked by the regional health authority to fund specific projects. General development funds are, of course, also used to meet the costs of community care. Dowries are often permanent revenue payments uprated for inflation each year. A number of regions have set aside specific sums to bridge the cost of continuing to run old long-stay institutions while developing new services, but such funds are not the only ways of meeting such costs. The broad details of regions' financing arrangements are as follows. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the regional health authority concerned for more detailed information.

Northern RHA. Health Service developments funded from regional priority service fund. Arrangements for patients transferred from NHS to local authority or voluntary care individually negotiated. Bridging arrangements but no specific fund.

Yorkshire RHA. Direct care costs transferred to patients "home" DHA. The balance of resources required to provide community care provided from general development funds. Arrangements for transfers to local authority and voluntary agencies separately negotiated at district level. Bridging fund.

Trent RHA. Regional guideline for dowries of £13,800 for patients transferred between health authorities and of £6,900 for transfer to local authority or voluntary care. Bridging fund. (Policy under review.)

North Western RHA. Dowry of £21,400 per patient for all patients transferred as part of district package of which £4,300 is non-recurrent. Dowry of £13,400 for transfers agreed on an individual basis. Bridging fund.

Mersey RHA. Financial arrangements negotiated by DHAs according to dependency level of individual patient. Bridging fund.

West Midlands RHA. Dowry of 50 per cent. of average cost of mentally handicapped patients and 100 per cent. of average cost of mentally ill patients. Targeted bridging fund.

East Anglian RHA. Funding arrangements negotiated individually by district health authorities. Bridging fund.

North West Thames RHA. Dowries ranging from £13,000 to £20,000 according to type of patient. Additionally, there are development fund moneys available from natural decline. Bridging fund.

North East Thames RHA. For health authorities, each DHA allocated funds either to pay for care in the existing long stay hospital or to provide its own service. Transfers to local authorities and voluntary agencies separately negotiated. Strategic reserve to top up costs of care in the community where necessary with ad hoc bridging finance provided by RHA to existing providing districts.

South East Thames RHA. Dowry of £13,000 (plus London weighting if necessary) for mental handicap patients. For mental illness patients costs of hospital care apportioned to districts on the basis of numbers to be transferred. Bridging fund.

South West Thames RHA. For health authorities dowries of £13,477 for mental illness and £11,334 for mental handicap patients admitted before December 1982. Separate negotiations for patients admitted after that date and for transfers to local authorities, voluntary agencies and across regional boundaries. Bridging fund.

Oxford RHA. Development funds earmarked for specific projects.

Wessex RHA. Dowry of £14,000 per patient for all agencies. Mental handicap bridging fund.

South Western RHA. Dowry of £13,700 for mental handicap patients available for community provision by health authorities. Separate negotiation for mental illness patients and for all transfers to other agencies.

Information is not available centrally on the numbers of patients discharged from long-stay care specifically under these arrangements. The tables show the number of discharges from NHS mental illness hospitals and units and mental handicap hospitals and units in England where the depth of stay was five or more years. Tranfers to other hospitals and special hospitals are excluded. 1986 is the latest year for which this information is available centrally.

Information on cost savings is not available centrally.

[2] Excludes Special Hospitals.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if his Department currently issues any guidance to health authorities on the consultations which should be undertaken with patients, their parents and their relatives before individuals are discharged into the community from long-stay mental hospitals;

(2) if his Department currently issues any guidance to health authorities on the consultations which should be undertaken with patients, their parents and relatives, and local residents before long-stay mental hospitals are run down as part of the implementation of the policy of care in the community.

Mrs. Currie: The Government's response to the report of the House of Commons Social Services Committee on "Community Care with Special Reference to Adult Mentally Ill and Mentally Handicapped People", circulated to all health authorities, reminded them of the need to consult patients and their families about discharge from long-stay hospitals. We will be considering the question of consultation with local residents as we review reports from the Health Service Commissioner which bear on this issue.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what mechanisms his Department has established to oversee the transfer of residents of long-stay mental institutions to the community.

Mrs. Currie: The development of mental illness and mental handicap services, including the shift to community-based services, is a regular feature of the annual review meetings which Ministers and the NHS Management Board hold with each regional health authority. The Department's Social Services Inspectorate maintains liaison with local social services departments and monitors the development of personal social services, including those for patients discharged from mental institutions.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards health authorities being required to consult neighbours before mentally handicapped people are moved into the community; what representations he has received in this respect for the Health Service Ombudsman, Mr. Anthony Barrowclough; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) on 10 June, at column 727.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding the cases of former long-stay hospital residents who are ineligible for community care grants on discharge because they do not qualify for income support; what was the nature of these representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Long-stay Hospitals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what minimum standards exist for long-stay hospitals; when these standards were laid down; whether they are under review; and what steps he has undertaken to enforce these standards.

Mrs. Currie: Minimum standards for long-stay hospitals were first laid down in 1969, and other guidance bearing on various aspects of physical standards of provision for long-stay patients was issued between 1979 and 1982. The minimum standards were used by the national development team for people with a mental handicap and by the health advisory service, but there has always been a danger that these standards would be regarded as norms rather than minima. They fall well below current expectations in terms of services for long-stay patients and for this reason are now little used. Local managers are expected to look critically at the operation of services using quantified information, such as Health Service indicators, and using check lists of questions designed to expose poor quality of services.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many wards in long-stay hospitals do not meet the 1971 minimum standards of 8ft between bed centres and 70 sq ft of bedroom space per resident; and in which health districts these wards are located;

(2) what proportion of wards of long-stay hospitals in each health region fail to meet the standards of 8ft between bed centres and 70 sq ft of bedroom space per resident.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information is not available.

Disabled Child Premium

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial provision he has made to assist single parents, unable to work because of the needs of their handicapped children, to supplement their income support, other than the £6·15 additional disabled child premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The income support of a single parent with a disabled child would normally include, in addition to the disabled child premium, an age-related personal allowance for the claimant and each child, the lone parent premium (of £3·70) and the family premium (of £6·15). In addition, attendance allowance, mobility allowance as well as invalid care allowance might be payable. A person on income support would receive maximum housing benefit, free prescriptions, dental treatment, free school meals and other benefits in kind.

Cranage Hall Hospital

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received any recent representations concerning the proposed closure of the Cranage Hall hospital.

Mrs. Currie: No.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to meet residents of the Cranage Hall hospital or their parents and relatives.

Mrs. Currie: We have received no requests to meet them and therefore we have no plans to do so.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will call for a report from the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority and Crewe district health authority into the handling of the proposed run-down of Cranage Hall hospital.

Mrs. Currie: Proposals for Cranage Hall hospital are being formulated by the Crewe health authority in collaboration with the Cheshire social services department. These proposals are still at an early stage, but we will be monitoring progress through the review and planning processes.

Crewe Health Authority (General Manager)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will call for a report from the chairman of the Mersey regional health authority into the resignation of the former general manager of the Crewe health authority, the ex-gratia payment and the subsequent re-employment of the ex-general manager by the Mersey regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Employment and contractual matters are entirely the responsibility of individual health authorities.

Post-abortion Stress Disorder

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be able to publish the results of the investigation currently being conducted at his request by the Manchester branch of the Royal College of General Practitioners into post-abortion stress disorder.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) on 30 March, at column 540.

Physiotherapy (Data)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied with the arrangements which health authorities have made for the calculation of data for physiotherapy services under the revised arrangements recommended by the fourth and sixth Körner reports; what he estimates the cost of this to be; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are satisfied that those health authorities which are not already doing so, will begin the collection of the full Körner data requirements on physiotherapy services during 1988-89. Authorities currently without computer systems have made interim arrangements to collect basic statistics. The cost of collecting the Körner data will vary between health authorities, depending upon the particular system in operation, the size and number of departments and existing data collection arrangements. This costing information is not available centrally.

Child Guidance Units

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the continuance of multi-professional, multi-agency work for children with emotional difficulties, through child guidance; what proposals he has to secure the future of child guidance units in inner London; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Our current policy is that children with emotional difficulties should be able to look for help from professional staff, including psychiatrists, psychologists and social workers, who spend most of their time working in the child and adolescent fields. The organisation of these services in London after the proposed abolition of the Inner London education authority is a matter for consideration by the health and local authority services concerned.

Wakefield DHA (Inquiry)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to prevent the Yorkshire regional health authority from proceeding with its inquiry into the management of Wakefield district health authority; and if he will establish an independent public inquiry in its stead.

Mr. Newton: No. Where problems occur within a district health authority our expectation is that matters will be settled locally by the authority putting its own house in order. If the DHA concerned proves to be unable to resolve its problems internally the regional health authority, as the next management tier, and the one to which the district is accountable, has a duty to act. I therefore support the decison of the RHA to establish its own inquiry.

Nurses (Prescribing)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy towards the prescribing of medicines by nurses.

Mr. Newton: As we made clear in "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249), we see merit in giving nurses more freedom to prescribe some items and use their professional judgment in other related matters. A joint working group (mainly members of the Standing Medical, Nursing and Midwifery and Pharmaceutical Advisory Committees) has recently been appointed to help us take this forward.

Nurses (Grading Structure)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in respect of the implementation of the clinical grading structure for nurses.

Mr. Newton: Management guidance on the implementation of the new clinical grading structure has been issued to all health authorities and they have been asked to complete the regrading exercise by 31 October.

Social Security Management Board

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many meetings of the Social Security Management Board he has attended in the last year.

Mr. Scott: The Social Security Management Board is a body chaired by the permanent secretary which reports to Ministers as required. We would not therefore expect to attend meetings of the board.

Project 2000

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the ratio of qualified nurses to nursing auxiliaries being sought under the recently announced Project 2000 proposals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his assessment of the likely funding requirements for the implementation of Project 2000.

Mr. Newton: The implementation of Project 2000 will be phased over a number of years. The final cost will depend upon the final shape of the whole package of proposals, in which much detail remains to be settled.

The number of qualified nurses and support workers will be decided by district health authorities, which must determine their own requirements for staff.

Social Services (Private Companies)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local authority social services departments currently allow private companies to undertake their statutory services.

Mrs. Currie: Information about contractual arrangements between local authorities and private companies for the provision of social services is not collected centrally.

Social Work Staff

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local authority social service departments offer additional incentives over and above basic grade salaries in order to assist their recruitment of social work staff.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Conductive Education

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take, in the light of Warwick university applied social studies department's report entitled "Come Wind, Come Weather," about conductive education, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I am aware of the recommendations contained in the report to assist British families at the Peto Institute in Budapest. The Peto method of conductive education is one of a wide range of services for disabled children and adults. Proposals for its introduction in Britain would have to take into account existing health and education provision as well as the evaluation being undertaken by Birmingham university of the research project of the foundation for conductive education. I have arranged to visit a number of organisations to look at the range of services available in these fields. A team of officials from DES and DHSS recently visited Budapest to obtain more information about the difficulties faced by the British families at the Peto Institute and the part that conductive education plays in the provision of services in Hungary.

Inquest (Carlisle)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Registrar General has yet determined whether the requirements of the legislation governing the registration of births and deaths should be applied to the case which was the subject of a recent request to the Secretary of State for the Home Department by the coroner in Carlisle for the holding of an inquest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Following the decision made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department not to direct that an inquest should be held, the Registrar General has made her own inquiries and these indicate that the requirements of the legislation governing the registration of births and deaths do apply in this case.

Hospital and Community Health Service

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a table showing (a) current spending and (b) capital spending per tax unit on the hospital and community health service in England and the United Kingdom in 1988-89.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

	Current (gross) £	Capital (gross) £
United Kingdom	750	60
England	700	60

These figures are based on the estimated number of tax units who pay income tax.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his future plans for financial support to the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association; and why financial assistance has not yet been given.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 7 June 1988]: In recognition of the valuable work of the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association we have decided to make a grant for the first time of £5,000 for the current financial year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Upper Waiting Hall (Exhibitions)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Lord President of the Council why it is necessary for an hon. Member to obtain the agreement of the appropriate Government Department before applying to the Serjeant at Arms to arrange an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Wakeham: This measure has been approved by the Services Committee to ensure that exhibitions mounted by right hon. and hon. Members do not contain items of advertising or commercial interest nor material explicitly intended to further the aims of any political party or group. It was considered that by using their background knowledge of the subjects of exhibitions the Government Departments could help meet the wishes of the House.

In addition, the Services Committee recently resolved that Members' applications for exhibitions should be submitted to the Chairman of the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee as well as to the relevant Government Department.

Sittings of the House

Mr. Amess: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will publish in the Official Report a consolidated list of the occasions on which the House has sat later than 1.30 am since 1958.

Mr. Wakeham [pursuant to his reply, 10 June 1988, c. 714]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to his previous written question on 13 April 1988, Official Report, columns 166-68. It would be inappropriate to republish this information in a consolidated form.

The following tables set out the revised figures for the current Session (1987-88) to date and also the total number of occasions in each Session since 1958 when the House sat after 1.30 am.

DEFENCE

Southampton University (Contracts)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the contracts for research and development that have been awarded to Southampton university by his Department for each of the last five years, together with the purpose and cost for each contract.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has currently 805 research agreements and 76 contracts with a wide range of United Kingdom universities, polytechnics and other institutions of higher education.

It is not our policy to give details of these arrangements. It is for the universities themselves to confirm their involvement.

Departmental Costs

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to make any changes to the 1988-89 running costs limit for his Department.

Mr. Younger: The running costs limit for the Ministry of Defence will be reduced by £50,000 from £5,407,883,000 to £5,407,833,000. The reduction falls on class 1, vote 1 and reflects an agreement by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) to take over responsibility for producing some analytical work required by the MOD. This reduction will be matched by a corresponding increase in the OPCS's running cost limit to be shown on class 20, vote 16. The transfer of this work will not affect the MOD block cash limit, nor the cash limit on class 1, vote 1, as the MOD will be charged on the non-running cost part of the Vote for the work undertaken by OPCS.

Woolwich Arsenal

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proposals he is presently considering for major housing development on land at Woolwich Arsenal;

(2) what consultations he has undertaken with the London borough of Greenwich concerning redevelopment of land at Woolwich Arsenal.

Mr. Freeman: The royal arsenal west and royal arsenal east sites are principally occupied by the directorate general defence quality assurance. The future location of the directorate general is under study and, until this has been concluded, we cannot determine what land disposal may be possible on these sites. I can, however, confirm that we would expect to discuss plans for the development of any land to be released with the planning authority at an early date. Any such plans would need to take account of the nature of the area and, in particular, of the historic buildings on the royal arsenal west site.

Procurement (Overspending)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all overspending by his Department on defence procurement as identified by the Comptroller and Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information in the form requested is not held by my Department. However, the following is a list of reports by the Committee of Public Accounts since 1979, most of which have been based on reports by the Comptroller and Auditor General, and which have addressed aspects of defence procurements:

Session	Report Number	Description of PAC Report	Related C&AG Reports

Note:

In addition to the reports referred to above:

(1) The PAC have taken evidence in their current session on the following procurement subjects although the reports have yet to be published:
The Torpedo Programme and Design and Procurement of Warships; Control and Management of the Trident Programme
Annual Statement on Major Defence Projects; Control and Management of the Development of Major Equipment Procurement Irregularities; Demountable Rack Offloading and Pick-up System (DROPS)
The Profit Formula
EH 101

(2) The Appropriation Accounts (Volume 1 Class 1) for the period 1983-84 to 1986-87 also contain reports on defence matters by the C&AG.

Rally Sport

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much income has been derived in each of the last five years by the use of his Department's land in Epynt, Otterburn and Salisbury Plain for all forms of rally sport.

Mr. Freeman: Income derived from all forms of rally sport on defence land at Epynt in Brecon, Otterburn and Salisbury Plain over each of the last five years is as follows:

	Epynt £	Otterburn £	Salisbury Plain £
1983-84	3,342	967	4,121
1984-85	4,202	1,485	7,092
1985-86	5,729	1,518	9,815
1986-87	7,268	1,379	7,253
1987-88	4,360	2,066	5,259

Service Personnel (Taxation)

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, in any country in which they are stationed, members of the armed forces pay any form of local taxation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Members of the armed forces who are operating abroad under the provisions of the NATO status of forces agreement are exempt, under article X of the agreement, from any local taxes that result from residence or domicile in the receiving state, or on the salaries and emoluments paid to them in respect of their employment as members of the armed forces. Outside NATO, we always seek to ensure that similar arrangements apply. The armed forces do not, however, enjoy any exemption from taxes or duties relating to purchases and services chargeable under the fiscal regulations of the receiving state.

Low-flying Areas

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what geographical area, expressed (a) by county and (b) by parliamentary constituency, is covered by low-flying area 4.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying area 4 covers (a) the county of Hereford and parts of the counties of Gloucestershire, Oxfordshire, Shropshire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire and the west midlands and (b) the parliamentary constituencies of Cheltenham, Worcester, Mid-Worcestershire, Worcestershire South. Wyre Forest, Leominster, Gloucester and Hereford and parts of the parliamentary constituencies of Ludlow, Staffordshire South, Bromsgrove, Stratford-on-Avon, Warwick and Leamington, Banbury, Witney, Cirencester and Tewkesbury, Stroud and Gloucestershire, West.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what geographical area, expressed (a) by county and (b) by parliamentary constituency, is covered by low-flying area 6.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying area 6 covers (a) the county of Northamptonshire and parts of the counties of Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Essex, Hertfordshire, Leicestershire, Lincolnshire, Norfolk, Nottinghamshire and Warwickshire and (b) the parliamentary constituencies of Rutland and Melton, Leicester, East, Leicestershire, South, Leicester, West, Harborough, Peterborough, Corby, Mid-Bedfordshire, Bedfordshire, North, Huntingdon, Wellingborough, Kettering, Northampton, North, Northampton, South, Blaby, Milton Keynes, and Luton, North, and parts of the parliamentary constituencies of Loughborough, Rushcliffe, Gedling, Sherwood, Newark, Grantham, Stamford and Spalding, Holland with Boston, Norfolk, North-West, Norfolk, South-West, Cambridgeshire, North-East, Cambridgeshire, South-East, Cambridgeshire, South-West, Saffron Walden, Stevenage, Hertford and Stortford, Hertfordshire, North, Hertfordshire, West, Bedfordshire, South-West, Buckingham, Daventry, Banbury, Stratford-on-Avon, Rugby and Kenilworth, Nuneaton and Bosworth.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the restrictions on use of afterburners by military jet aircraft flying at low level (a) in the United Kingdom low-flying system as a whole and (b) in the central Wales, Borders and northern Scotland tactical training areas.

Mr. Freeman: Aircrew are instructed to use engine reheat (or afterburners) as little as possible when flying overland at low level, particularly over inhabited areas. Where use is necessary, for example, during take-offs and properly authorised display and trials flying, and emergencies and related training, it is discouraged at levels below 1,000 ft minimum separation distance (msd) or 500 ft msd for Jaguar aircraft. These instructions apply to the United Kingdom low-flying system as a whole, including tactical training areas.

Ex-Service Personnel (Rejoining)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy concerning Army ex-service men and women rejoining the Army when they have a criminal record.

Mr. Freeman: Whether or not an ex-service man or woman with a criminal record is allowed to re-enlist into the Army would depend on the individual nature of the offence. However, a person who has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment is normally ineligible for re-enlistment.

RAF Feltwell

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which unit of the United States Air Force space command at Falcon air force station, Colorado, will control the proposed deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell.

Mr. Freeman: The 18th space surveillance group from Falcon air force base, Colorado, will have operational control of the deep space tracking station at RAF Feltwell.

Maritime Concepts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals on the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation concept of maritime operations his Department is producing for the Eurogroup maritime concepts sub-group; what the timetable is for the review of maritime operations by the Eurogroup; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Ministry of Defence contributes fully to the work of the Euro long-term working group. Details of this are classified.

B-52 Bombers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose and function of exercises of B-52s at (i) RAF Fairford, April to May, (ii) RAF Fairford, June and (iii) RAF Marham, June.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Five United States Air Force B-52 aircraft deployed to RAF Fairford for the second of this year's Busy Brewer exercises, between 3 and 13 June. Such exercises, which involve deployments within the United Kingdom and continental Europe, are designed to rehearse the aircraft's wartime role in conventional support of NATO. The previous Busy Brewer exercise was held at Fairford between 29 April and 16 May. Two B-52 aircraft will deploy to RAF Marham between 15 and 24 June to participate in joint training exercises with the Royal Navy and the Royal Air Force.

Exercise Tristar

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many ground troops and vehicles will be taking part in Exercise Tristar; what is the role in their exercise; and in what areas they will be exercising;

(2) what is the purpose of Exercise Tristar; how many and what types of aircraft will be participating; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Exercise Tristar 88 is a routine training exercise which is being held in southern Scotland and northern England from 10 to 26 June and involves a small number of troops, vehicles and aircraft. It is not our general practice to give details of such exercises in advance.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations have taken place with the National Farmers Union and local authorities concerning Exercise Tristar.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The usual consultations for an exercise of this size have taken place with the various authorities concerned. No consultations have taken place with the National Farmers Union, although, in the usual way, there have been consultations with individual landowners as necessary.

Search and Rescue Helicopters

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has yet made a decision about the future deployment of search and rescue helicopters at RAF Leuchars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will announce his decision over the future deployment of A flight, 22 Squadron, RAF Chivenor.

Mr. Freeman: My hon. Friends will be aware that the Ministry of Defence has been conducting a detailed study, in consultation with the Department of Transport and other interested Government Departments, into the deployment of military search and rescue helicopters in the United Kingdom. Certain aspects of that study, as they affect deployment on the east and south coasts of England, have been completed and announced.

I am well aware of the concern felt by my hon. Friends and other hon. Members about the future of search and rescue helicopter services as they affect the remaining areas of the country. To enable all these concerns to be further considered by the Government, no decisions will be taken until later this year.

TRANSPORT

LRT (Chairman)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to appoint a new chairman of London Regional Transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: No.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by what route trains from the north of England will be directed through London to the Channel tunnel; what infrastructure work will be required for this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is a matter for the British Railways Board. I understand it intends initially at least to use the existing west London line, which will be upgraded and electrified for this purpose.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what additional evidence about the east London river crossing he has received from the London borough of Greenwich in the light of his Department's decision to alter the criteria for assessing the economic performances of new road schemes; and what response he has made;

(2) if he will make it his policy to take into account his Department's revised criteria for assessing the economic performance of new road schemes when reaching a decision on the proposed east London river crossing;

(3) when he now expects to be able to announce his decision on the proposed east London river crossing.

Mr. Channon: The London borough of Greenwich has submitted its consultants' assessment of the effect of the revised values of travel time and accident prevention on the east London river crossing scheme. I have confirmed that my Department's reassessment, together with that of the London borough of Greenwich, will be taken into account by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment and me in reaching our decision on the statutory orders for this scheme. We hope to announce our joint decision soon.

Driving Test Fees

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to assess the value for money of the service provided by the Driving Test Organisation in the light of the proposed increase in the driving test fee to £16·50.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 10% increase proposed represents a total increase of 15% since 1984. This is below the increase in the retail prices index. The new driving test fee of £16·50 is required to cover increased costs and the move to a reduced examiner work schedule later in the year. Significant efficiency improvements are being made following the review of driver testing to improve the service provided to the public, improve productivity and reduce unit costs.

Drivers (Minimum Age)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of the effect on the number of serious injuries and deaths of raising the minimum age requirement for the driving of (a) motor cars and (b) all motor vehicles to 18 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1986 a total of 266 deaths and 5,697 serious injuries occurred in accidents where the driver or rider of a motor vehicle was under 18 years old. It is impossible to predict how many of these casualties might be saved by raising the minimum age to 18, because a significant factor in accidents to this group is lack of driving experience rather than simply a question of age. We have no plans to raise the current minimum age requirement.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of the effect on the volume of traffic of raising the minimum age requirement for the driving of (a) motor cars and (b) all motor vehicles to 18 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The effect on the volume of traffic of raising to 18 years the minimum age requirement for the driving of both (a) motor cars, and (b) all motor vehicles, would probably be a reduction of about one quarter of 1 per cent. There is no intention at present of altering the age requirements for driving licences.

Toxic Waste (Switzerland)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what special measures his Department is taking to monitor the transportation in the next few weeks of toxic waste from Switzerland to the ReChem plant at Pontypool.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The transport of the waste will, I understand, take place under the terms of the European agreement covering the international carriage of dangerous goods by road (ADR). Special monitoring is unnecessary. In addition to the requirements of the agreement, a consignment note must be raised at the port of entry in Great Britain when imported waste is special waste under the terms of the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980.

Manor Drive, Kirkham

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps his Department proposes to take in order to determine the ownership of Manor drive, Kirkham, Lancashire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Lancashire county council has agreed with us that the land off Manor drive in which the Department once had an interest now vests in the council.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Japan (Imports)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what he estimates to be the annual cost to the consumer of the car industry's voluntary agreement to limit car imports from Japan.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answers I gave on 26 April, Official Report, columns 92-93, to my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) and on 7 June, Official Report, column 429, to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon).

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what items from Japan are subject to import quotas or voluntary restraint agreements by the European Community or the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: There are no quantitative restrictions on imports into the United Kingdom from Japan. There are, however, some informal inter-industry voluntary arrangements with Japanese producers, details of which were given in the written answer of 30 March, Official Report, columns 478-79, to a question raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon).

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what imports from Japan are subject to European Community tariffs.

Mr. Alan Clark: I refer my hon. Friend to the common customs tariff of the European Communities. There are no preferential arrangements with Japan.

Net Book Agreement

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what he estimates to be the annual cost to the consumer of the net book agreement.

Mr. Butcher: Although there have been several studies of the effect of the net book agreement, I have not been able to establish that any estimates have ever been made. Any attempt to quantify the cost would be dependent upon so many uncertainties that its usefulness would be limited. I therefore have no such estimate.

Hearing Aid Council

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report the names of the chairman and members of the Hearing Aid Council, together with the dates upon which their appointments expire.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is as follows:

	Date appointment ends
Chairman
Mr. N. Grant	December 1990
Members
Mr. R. S. Eldridge	December 1988
Mrs. M. B. Nobbs	December 1988
Mr. A B. Day	December 1988
Mrs. I. Gilbert	December 1988
Mr. D. P. Ormerod	December 1989
Mr. A. J. Douglas	December 1989
Miss A. Spokes	December 1989
Dr. D. N. Brooks	December 1989
Dr. S. Bellman	December 1990
Mr. N. J. King	December 1990
Mr. I. E. Munro	December 1990

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish in the Official Report a list of the bodies he consulted before appointing two members of the Hearing Aid Council capable of representing the interests of registered dispensers until December 1990.

Mr. Butcher: There are only two trade bodies which represent the interests of hearing aid dispensers, the Hearing Aid Industry Association and the Society of Hearing Aid Audiologists. Both were consulted before the appointments referred to by the hon. Member were made.

Manufacturing Output

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the percentage change in manufacturing output in each of the European Economic Community countries, including the United Kingdom, the United States of America, Canada and Japan, taking the 1979 level as 100.

Mr. Atkins: The information is in the following tables:

Changes in manufacturing output between 1979 and 1987

Polyurethane Foam

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what ignition tests on polyurethane foam were carried out or arranged by his Department in preparation for the proposed Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations.

Mr. Butcher: Manufacterers of polyurethane foam, independently and in co-ordination under the British Rubber Manufacturers Association, have been involved in more or less continuous fire testing of their products. As a result, claims were made during 1987 about new combustion-modified types of foams and their resistance to BS 5852 ignition source 5.

One of these manufacturers also undertook work in 1987 on a possible weight loss test in connection with envisaged regulations.

Following a statement by my hon. Friend the then Minister for Consumer Affairs on 11 January 1988, at column 23-24, my Department requested that the industry should concentrate on a test to distinguish "combustion modified" foam from the standard foam and high resilience foam, which we proposed to ban. This work was then drawn together by a BSI technical committee which first met on 5 February. Agreement on the requirements for an ignition test to indentify combustion-modified foam was announced in a written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Meriden (Mr. Mills) on 10 May, at column 69. In parallel with this, some confirmatory testing was incorporated into a study of the fire behaviour of the various foams arranged at the fire research station of the Department of the Environment. The results of this study are not yet available.

Fire Safety

Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will list the programmes currently being pursued by the Department of Trade and Industry to promote consumer awareness of the need for greater domestic fire safety;

(2) if he will list the sums allocated in 1986, 1987 and 1988 by the Department of Trade and Industry to promote consumer education in domestic fire safety.

Mr. Butcher: Publicity on fire safety in the home other than fire safety of consumer goods is the responsibility of the Home Office. But my Department does promote home safety awareness campaigns which include some safety messages on how to avoid the dangers from fire in the home, for example, Electricity Can Kill, Electric Blankets, Nightwear and Fire, Fireworks, Furniture and Fire.

It is not possible to separate the element of expenditure on fire safety from the total costs of these campaigns.

Contracts (Cancellation Forms)

Mr. Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in the light of the changes in the law after 1 July relating to contracts signed away from business premises and in particular to that part of the contract that deals with cancellation forms, he will state how this law will be enforced, with particular regard to those firms which are not members of trade associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The new regulations (SI 1987/2117) provide that if the consumer does not receive a written notice informing him of his right of cancellation the contract will not be enforceable against him. My Department has taken steps to alert traders to the new legal requirements by publishing a guidance booklet which has been distributed to trading standards departments throughout the United Kingdom as well as to interested trade associations. The Office of Fair Trading will also be alerting consumers to their new rights in a revised version of its leaflet "How to cope with doorstep salesmen" to be published shortly.

Companies

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was (a) the total cost of administration of companies registration offices in Great Britain in the year 1987-88, (b) the total revenue from fees charged by companies registration offices in Great Britain in the year 1987-88, and (c) the sum of profit or loss resulting from the difference between (a) and (b).

Mr. Maude: Provisional figures for 1987-88 show that expenditure on a memorandum trading account basis at the companies registration offices amounted to £21 million. Fees and charges to cover these costs, together with a contribution towards the costs of running a system of registered companies, amounted to £28 million in the same period.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total number of company searches carried out at each of the public search rooms in Great Britain, and by the postal search services at each office, during the year 1987-88.

Mr. Maude: The number of searches carried out during the period at the London, Cardiff and Edinburgh search rooms was 3,021,000, 872,000 and 206,000 respectively. In addition, the Cardiff and Edinburgh offices handled 58,000 and 8,000 postal searches respectively.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total of inspection fees collected for inspections carried out at each of the public search rooms of companies registration offices and at each of the postal sales units.

Mr. Maude: The total of inspection fees collected in 1987-88 was £3·8 million of which £0·8 million was collected at Cardiff, £2·9 million at London and £0·2 million at Edinburgh. Income from postal searches amounted to £130,000 at Cardiff and £20,000 at Edinburgh.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the postal sales service of company information which was introduced by companies registration offices in December 1983 is accommodated within the existing buildings of companies registration offices.

Mr. Maude: Yes.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what additional recurring costs, apart from staff costs, have been incurred by companies registration offices as a result of the introduction of the postal sales service for company information in 1983.

Mr. Maude: The introduction of the postal search service has resulted in recurring non-staff costs to cover postage, stationery, printing, micrographics equipment, office machinery and departmental overheads.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total cost of maintaining the Companies House facility in London during the year 1987-88.

Mr. Maude: Provisional figures for 1987-88 show that the cost of maintaining the Companies House facility in London on a memorandum trading account basis was £4·4 million. These costs exclude those services at Cardiff which support this facility.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the number of company searches carried out at each of the companies registration offices in Great Britain on behalf of Departments of Her Majesty's Government during the year 1987-88; if such services are charged to the requesting Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: In 1987-88 some 176,000 searches were carried out for the CROs' own working purposes and those of other parts of the Department of Trade and Industry. Searches for other Government Departments attract the normal search feee and are, therefore, not always separately identified, but total at least 68,000.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the number of staff employed in directly meeting the requests for company information, as opposed to collecting and collating company records, at (a) each of the public search rooms and (b) each of the units handling the postal sales services.

Mr. Maude: The number of staff (full-time equivalents) employed in the CROs, as at March 1988, in meeting requests made for company information at London, Cardiff and Edinburgh were 282, 68 and 12 respectively. For postal sales services from Cardiff and Edinburgh the numbers were 18·5 and 2 respectively.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total number of live limited companies registered at each companies registration office in Great Britain at the end of the year 1987-88.

Mr. Maude: The number of companies registered in England and Wales and in Scotland at the end of the financial year 1987-88 was 1,063,811 and 53,706 respectively. A number of these were either in liquidation or in course of removal from the register, leaving the number regarded as "active" as 880,000 and 47,000 respectively.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total number of new companies registered at each companies registration office in Great Britain in the year 1987-88, and the total number registered in each case with a total paid-up capital of £100 or less during the same period.

Mr. Maude: The number of new companies registered at the Cardiff and Edinburgh offices in 1987-88 was 120,000 and 6,300 respectively. An analysis of paid-up capital is not yet available, but the number of new companies with a nominal capital of £100 or less is estimated to have been 47,600 and 3,200 respectively.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the number of microfiches required to carry the average company records at companies registration offices in Great Britain; and what is the material cost of reproducing a single microfiche at companies registration offices.

Mr. Maude: An average of five microfiches carry each company record. The cost of film and processing materials for each microfiche is about 3p.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the significant elements in his calculation that an increase in company search fees is necessary at companies registration offices; and how each proposed new charge for the company search services was arrived at.

Mr. Maude: The main elements of search service costs include staff, equipment, accommodation and overheads. The new fees have been set at a level to ensure that the income received will cover the full costs of providing the services.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why, in relation to the company registration offices, an increase in search charges is proposed.

Mr. Maude: Search fees have remained unaltered since 1981. For some time the income from these services has fallen short of the costs of delivering them. The new fees have been set at a level designed to ensure that, taking one year with another, the income received will cover the costs of the services involved.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the level of the statutory search fee at each of the companies registration offices' public search rooms in 1978 and 1983; and what is the proposed figure for 1989.

Mr. Maude: The statutory inspection fees were 5p (formerly one shilling) in 1978 (as it had been since 1844) and £1 in 1983. The proposed £2·50 fee from 1 July 1988 will be subject to annual review.

Aerospace (Launch-aid)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the total amount of support from his Department to aerospace companies for launch aid since 1979, project by project and year by year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since 1979 lauch aid has been provided by the Department of Trade and Industry to aerospace companies as follows:

British Shipbuilders (Cuba Order)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to respond to the request by British Shipbuilders for intervention fund support for the potential order from Cuba.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have not yet received a formal application for support for this order, but I have told British Shipbuilders in response to inquiries that I would consider any application from it with great care in view of the considerable losses over and above agreed support that the corporation has made on other orders.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster on what occasions and for what purposes his Department has made formal complaints to the European Community Commissioner concerning breaches of the fifth or sixth directives on support for shipbuilding by other member states of the Community.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have asked the European Commission to investigate the use of state aid in the following bids: from the Netherlands for a floating crane in April 1985 and two trawlers in October 1985; from France for a cross-channel ferry in January 1987; from Portugal for a fishing boat in May 1987; and from Spain for a stern trawler in March 1988. We have been concerned to ensure fairness of competition for United Kingdom yards with others within the Community.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the accrued losses of (a) the Italian, (b) the West German and (c) the French merchant shipbuilding industries since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This information is not available to us. The losses owners are prepared to bear is a matter for them.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the accrued losses of the South Korean shipbuilding industry since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is no reliable information.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been, year by year since 1979, the amount of money provided by his Department to British Shipbuilders as intervention fund under the fifth and sixth directives of the European Community.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Payments of intervention fund to British Shipbuilders since 1979 have amounted to £259 million. Year by year totals from 1979-80 have been £31 million, £40 million, £46 million, £44 million, £34 million, £18 million, £22 million, £14 million and £10 million, respectively. The figures include payments made under the fourth directive, which was effective until 27 April 1981. No payments have yet been made in 1988-89.

British Shipbuilders (Losses)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give his estimate for the accrued losses of British Shipbuilders since 1979, excluding those mixed and naval yards that are now in the private sector.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The total cost to the taxpayer of keeping British Shipbuilders merchant shipbuilding business alive since 1979 has been over £1,850 million. The accrued losses on a profit and loss basis, excluding the warship yards and Scott Lithgow, have been approximately £1,050 million.

Manufacturing Trade

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the most recent 12-month surplus or deficit in manufacturing trade with the EEC and the rest of the world, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: The latest information is in the following table:

Departmental Research Establishments

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a copy of the review study undertaken into his Department's research establishments.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The review was part of my Department's advice on the policy that my right hon. and noble Friend should adopt towards by Deprtment's research establishments. His conclusions were explained to the House in the answer I gave on 7 June.

Furniture Safety

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the Draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations, issued by his Department on 1 March; and if he will consider implementing these regulations sooner than 1 March 1989.

Mr. Butcher: I have received approximately 260 seperate representations on the draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Relugations. A number of these contain suggestions about the dates for them to come into operation both for manufacture and for retail sale. I am considering proposals for an earlier date of implementation for one of the requirements.

Civil Servants (Outside Activities)

Mr. John: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Pontyridd of 24 May, Official Report, column 114, are the names and Civil Service grades of the seven civil servants appointed as directors of public liability companies; of which companies they have been appointed directors; and how much expenses they received in the last full year of such directorships.

Mr. Butcher: The following is the information on the seven civil servants referred to in the earlier answer:

	Grade	Company
Mr. J. V. Hagestadt	5	British Aerospace Flying College Limited, a subsidiary of British Aerospace plc.
Mr. R. A. C. Hewes	3	Comforto-Vickers, a Division of Vickers plc.
Miss M. T. Neville-Rolfe	3	Rolls Royce Motors Limited, a subsidiary of Vickers plc.
Mr. R. Priddle	3	Film and Television Division of Rank Organisation plc
Mr. P. Salvidge	5	Marine Engineering Division of Vickers plc
Mr. N. R. Thornton	5	Medical and Scientific Equipment Division of Vickers plc
Dr. A. J. Wallard	5	Rank Cintel, a subsidiary of the Rank Organisation plc.

Since that time Mr. Thornton has resigned from that appointment and Mr. J. P. Spencer, a grade 5, has been appointed to the board of GEC Avery, a division of GEC plc. The only expenses received are the expenses which the individuals incur in attending board meetings and otherwise visiting the companies.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the actual or estimated staffing levels for each category of staff employed at the National Engineering Laboratory, East Kilbride, for the period 1979 to 1990 inclusive.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The staffing levels of industrial and non-industrial staff at the National Engineering Laboratory on 1 April for the years 1979 to 1988 were:

	Industrials	Non-industrials	Total
1979	294	531	825
1980	267	523	790
1981	246	495	741
1982	237½	468½	706
1983	226½	456½	683
1984	193	458½	651½
1985	185	461	646
1986	186	448	634
1987	168	463	631
1988	156	472	628

The projected level for 1989 and 1990 is a total of 620 staff.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster from which firm his Department commissioned a study into the future of the Government-run research establishments, including the National Engineering Laboratory; and on what date it was submitted to his Department.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No such study has been commissioned by my Department.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster under what authority he proposes to effect the sale of the National Engineering Laboratory at East Kilbride; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The National Engineering Laboratory is a division of the Department of Trade and Industry. Its transfer will be effected under the prerogative power to determine the organisation of the Department which is exercised as Secretary of State by my right hon. and noble Friend.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will give details and dates in the last 12 months of discussions his Department has had with representatives of (a) the British Hydromechanics Research Association and (b) the Production Engineering Research Association on the future of the National Engineering Laboratory;

(2) on what date the British Hydromechanics Research Association lodged an interest with his Department in an optics paper drawn up by the firm of Cooper and Lybrand on the future of the National Engineering Laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The British Hydromechanics Research Association and the Production Engineering Research Association independently approached the Department to express an interest in the National Engineering Laboratory during the course of the review of the research establishments. Following normal practice, details are commercially confidential. The BHRA subsequently sent the Department a paper giving its views on the future development of NEL.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the British Hydromechanics Research Association was notified of the Government's intention to sell off the National Engineering Laboratory in advance of the public announcement in the answer of 7 June, Official Report, columns 431-32.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. However, the British Hydromechanics Research Association was informed of the likely timing of an announcement because it had expressed a close interest in the future of NEL. It was given no advance information about the content of the announcement and the results of our review of research establishments.

WALES

Perinatal Mortality

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends to announce his response to the perinatal mortality initiative survey group recommendations.

Mr. Grist: The response to the recommendations of the perinatal mortality initiative survey group was announced in Welsh health circular (86)69 issued in December 1986. Those recommendations relating to the provision of a regional perinatal intensive care service which have been the subject of consultation with district health authorities in Wales are actively being considered, and an announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Cervical Smears

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average time taken by each Welsh health authority to process cervical smear tests and provide the results for the patient and her general practitioner; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Information about the average time taken to provide results of cervical smear tests in 1987 is as follows. In November 1987, a further £400,000 was allocated to district health authorities to help improve the cervical screening service. I hope that this additional funding will contribute to a reduction in waiting times in those districts where women had to wait more than the recommended maximum of eight weeks in 1987.

Pembrokeshire was dependent on the laboratory at West Wales general hospital to process its cervical smear tests in 1987. The turnaround time at that laboratory increased significantly in 1987 due to staffing problems, although I understand that remedial action taken earlier this year should have eased the situation. Following Welsh Office funding, Pembrokeshire plans to establish its own laboratory service to evaluate cervical smear tests from 1 July. The authority has advised that this will substantially reduce the time taken to notify results.

WINVEST (Government Contribution)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the Government contribution to WINVEST for the financial years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89; and what staff numbers this contribution supported.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89 budget
Gross expenditure (£ million)	1·784	1·825	2·181
Staff numbers[1]	35	36	39

[1] Including seconded Welsh Office staff.

New Factories

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what sums were spent by the Welsh Development Agency on new factory building in the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88; what sum is projected for 1988-89; and how many square metres of additional factory space become available in each year.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is as follows:

	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89 budget
Gross expenditure (£ million) land and buildings	26·7	32·7	43·2
Factory space completed (square metres)	47,982	78,890	[1]139,000

Tritium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sites in Wales, excluding the nuclear plants at Wylfa and Trawsfynydd, are licensed for the handling, storage or disposal of tritium or tritium contaminated wastes; and if he will list them in the Official Report.

Mr. Grist: Ninety-one premises are identified in registrations specifically permitting the keeping and use of tritium, and 37 in authorisations specifically permitting the disposal of tritium contaminated waste. The list is as follows:

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Joint Funding Scheme

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to increase the budget for the joint funding scheme.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have decided to increase this year's budget for the joint funding scheme to £10·5 million, which is a 75 per cent. increase on the original allocation for last year. Under the joint funding scheme we support, on a 50:50 basis, voluntary agencies' projects which are aimed at some of the poorest and most disadvantaged communities in the developing world, and I am sure that this is money very well spent.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Car Theft

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has, for the last year for which figures are available, as to the number of private cars stolen from each police division or constabulary in the United Kingdom and the number recovered.

Mr. John Patten: The available information relates to all theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle and is given in the following table. The figures for Scotland and Northern Ireland have been provided by the Scottish Home and Health Department and the Northern Ireland Office and may not be entirely comparable with those for England and Wales, although the differences are thought to be small. From records held centrally, it is not possible to distinguish thefts of private cars from thefts of other types of vehicle.

Election Expenses

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many candidates in each of the general elections of 1979, 1983 and 1987 failed to submit a return of their election expenses to the returning officer, and in how many cases prosecutions have been instituted as the result of such failures.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

	1979	1983	1987
Number of candidates who failed to submit a return within the statutory period allowed	19	21	15
Number of prosecutions	4	[1]—	[2]—

[1] None.
[2] Not yet available.

I understand that the Director of Public Prosecutions has not yet decided in every case whether to institute proceedings in respect of the candidates who failed to submit a return after the 1987 general election.

Radioactive Discharges

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will arrange, in conjunction with the appropriate French authorities, for an evaluation of the concentration of radioactive discharges reaching the Channel Islands of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Herm and Sark from the French nuclear reprocessing plant at Cap de la Hague.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Radioactive discharges reaching the Channel Islands are continuously monitored by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The concentrations of artificial radionuclides found in these waters has been negligible. Monitoring results are published annually by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food directorate of fisheries research in the "Aquatic Environment Monitoring Report on Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles", copies of which are in the Library.

Category A Prisoners

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A women prisoners there were in Her Majesty's prison, Durham, in April and May; and how many strip searches were made on these prisoners in that month, indicating strip searches before and after consultation with legal advisers, after visits and after cell changes, wing searches and cell searches, and listing reasons for searches and illegal contraband or smuggled items found.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During April and May, there were three category A women prisoners in Durham prison. The number of occasions on which each was strip-searched during each month is shown in the table:

	Inmate A		Inmate B		Inmate C
	April	May	April	May	April	May
After legal visits	—	—	—	—	—	—
After other visits	3	2	3	—	1	—
At the time of cell changes, and wing and cell searches	2	1	2	1	1	3

No unauthorised article was found on any of the three women. I set out the reasons for such searches in my reply to a question from the hon. Member on 15 January at column 446.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A prisoners are at present held on remand at Risley detention centre; to how many strip searches they have been subjected in April and May, giving the number of persons involved, the number of times each person was searched and if any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while a search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for the search under each of the following headings: (a) making a remand appearance at court, (b) attending a trial, (c) inter-prison visit and (d) other reasons.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 13 June, there were seven inmates on remand at Risley remand centre who had been placed in category A. Comprehensive records of strip searches are available only in respect of category A women prisoners, of whom there was one in Risley on the date in question. The records show that this prisoner was not strip-searched during April but was so searched on three occasions in May—twice in connection with her temporary transfer to another prison, and one at the time of a cell change. No unauthorised article was discovered on any of these occasions. On no occasion did the prisoner refuse to be strip-searched.

Haverigg Prison

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the daily routine in force at Haverigg prison prior to the recent disturbance, giving the times of (a) reveille, (b) slop-out, (c) meals, (d) recreation, (e) confinement and (f) lights out.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Prior to the disturbance on Sunday 5 June, the main daily routine for inmates at Haverigg prison was as follows:

	Weekday	Weekend
Unlocking[1]	07.30	07.30
Breakfast	07.50	07.45

Lock-up (Lights out)	22.30	22.30

[1] As inmates are housed in dormitories with access to night sanitation, there is no slopping out.
[2] Attendance voluntary.
[3] On weekdays, evening association includes education classes.

Gaelic and Welsh

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has as to the average audience figures achieved for the Gaelic programmes "Prosbaig", "Dotaman" and "Crann Tara" for (a) Gaelic speakers and (b) all viewers;

(2) what information he has as to the average audience figures achieved for the three most popular Welsh language programmes on S4C amongst (a) Welsh speakers, and (b) all viewers.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not readily available, and I will reply as soon as possible.

Inquests

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests from coroners to hold an inquest in circumstances where their present powers are in doubt he has received in the last five years; and what consideration he has given to each of these requests.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 13 June 1988]: No central records are kept of requests from coroners for guidance where their powers are in doubt. All such requests receive careful consideration.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many requests from coroners he has received in the last five years to hold an inquest where the body of the deceased has been destroyed; and how many he approved.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 13 June 1988]: Sixty-four requests were received, of which thirty-eight were approved.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what evidence he refused permission to the Carlisle coroner to hold an inquest into the death of the Carlisle baby reported to him by the county coroner.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 13 June 1988]: My right hon. Friend's decision, that the public interest would not be served by an inquest in this case, was founded on the information given by the coroner.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry (Borrowing)

Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy under what powers borrowing is currently undertaken by the electricity supply industry; what is the current outstanding debt of the industry; what claims on capital he expects over the next three years; and whether he plans to increase the industry's borrowing powers.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The borrowing powers of the electricity supply industry are given by the Electricity Act 1957, section 15, the Electricity (Borrowing Powers) Order 1974, and the Statutory Corporations (Financial Provisions) Act 1974. The net outstanding debt at 31 March 1988 was £1,597 million. The ESI's capital expenditure is expected to be met wholly from internally generated funds in the next three years and my right hon. Friend has no plans to increase the industry's borrowing powers.

CEGB (Spending)

Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what applications for future capital expenditure he has discussed with the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Central Electricity Generating Board submits annual capital investment plans to my Department covering the whole range of activities carried out by the board. For 1988-89, I have given approval to total expenditure of £775 million.

Plutonium

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the expected annual cost to Her Majesty's Government for the protection of reprocessed plutonium from Sellafield to Japan in the 1990s; and how much will be recovered from commercial sources.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the two replies which I gave him on 24 February 1988, both at column 240.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what guidance or advice he has given with regard to the use or deployment of agencies other than the police which are to be involved in the physical protection of plutonium transported from Sellafield to Japan; and on what basis such use is paid for at the cost of deployment recovered from commercial sources.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to the replies that I gave the hon. Member on 11 May 1988, at column 110 and on 24 May 1988, at column 102.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which airport is currently used in connection with the export of plutonium by air from Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 9 June 1988 at column 633.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his consent to British Nuclear Fuels plc to export plutonium to Japan is subject to any review in the event of that country reducing or increasing its fast breeder reactor programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The merits of all exports of nuclear materials are considered case by case within the guidelines set out in the statement by the then Foreign Secretary, James Callaghan, on 31 March 1976 at columns 514-516.

No specific approvals have yet been given for the return to Japan of the plutonium that will result from the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel at THORP.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what conditions have been imposed in connection with the export of plutonium to Japan; and if he will indicate (a) the expected amount of plutonium to be exported by British Nuclear Fuels plc to Japan and (b) the maximum amount of plutonium that is permitted to be exported each year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Plutonium from spent fuel reprocessed in the United Kingdom is returned to its country of origin or to any other destination only on receipt of assurances covering peaceful use, application of safeguards, physical protection and controls on retransfer. I understand that no schedule has yet been agreed with the customers for the return of plutonium to Japan after reprocessing in THORP.

Parliamentary Questions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many holding answers have been given to parliamentary questions for priority written answers to his Department (a) since May 1979, (b) since June 1983 and (c) since June 1987.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Information on holding replies given (a) since May 1979 could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The number of holding replies to priority written questions (b) since June 1983, and (c) since June 1987 are respectively 109 and 50. The frequency with which holding replies are given depends to a large extent on the length of notice given when a question is asked.

Nuclear Materials (Exports)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions since May 1979 he, or his predecessor, has given permission under the Nuclear Installations Act for the export of nuclear materials from United Kingdom facilities to the centre for nuclear studies at Mol in Belgium; and if he will set out the details in a table listing quantities and dates of exports, by separate material categories.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since May 1979, permission has never been given under section 2 of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 for the export of nuclear material to the centre for nuclear studies at Mol.

Exports of nuclear material by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, including those exports of plutonium referred to in my reply to the hon. Member on 16 March 1988, at column 595, are not subject to the provisions of section 2 of the Act. Information on individual shipments is confidential.

Fusion Energy Research

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the agreements made at the recent United States of America-Union of Soviet Socialist Republics summit meeting in Moscow have any direct or indirect bearing on the future of fusion energy research at the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's Culham laboratories.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Moscow summit noted the commencement of work on the conceptual design of an international thermonuclear experimental reactor, which was endorsed by the United States, the Soviet Union, Eurotom and Japan at a meeting in Vienna on 21-22 April 1988 under the auspices of the International Atomic Energy Agency. The work is limited to conceptual design and is not due to be completed until 31 December 1990; it is too soon to speculate about the outcome.

Nuclear Fuel (Reprocessing)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what information he possesses on the details of negotiations between the Japanese and United States Governments for United States permission for the reprocessing of United States-origin nuclear fuel, currently in Japanese nuclear plants, in British Nuclear Fuels plc's Sellafield reprocessing plant;

(2) what information he possesses on the progress in negotiations between the Japanese nuclear authorities and the United States Government on arrangements for the shipment of plutonium from British Nuclear Fuels plc's Sellafield reprocessing plant to Japan under United States licensing laws.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Transport and reprocessing arrangements for United States-origin nuclear material are dealt with in the agreement for co-operation between the Governments of the United States of America and Japan concerning peaceful uses of nuclear energy, which was signed on 4 November 1987. I understand the agreement has now been cleared by the United States Congress and the Japanese Diet.

Nirex

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans for the disbanding of Nirex and requiring British Nuclear Fuels plc to take over the radioactive waste management and disposal role presently undertaken by Nirex.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Atomic Energy (Safeguards)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will review the current financial contributions made by the United Kingdom to the safeguards activities of the International Atomic Energy Agency to assess its adequacy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The financing of the International Atomic Energy Agency's safeguards activities was explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) on 10 February 1988 at columns 228-9.

I am satisfied that the IAEA's 1988 programme and budget, which was adopted after thorough discussion in the agency's board and general conference, are adequate for the proper discharge of all the agency's functions in the current year.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he is satisfied with the progress made towards resolving issues described as problems, numbers 1 to 17, in paragraphs 46-62 of the 1986 International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards implementation report; and if he will make a statement on specific progress achieved through 1987 on each of the 17 problem areas.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards implementation report is confidential to the board of governors. I have full confidence in the effectiveness of the agency's safeguards system. The United Kingdom funds a substantial safeguards support programme on top of payments to the regular budget of the IAEA to assist the agency in the attainment of its safeguards goals in a cost-effective manner.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether the conclusions of the 1987 International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards implementation report differ in any significant way from those contained in the 1986 safeguards implementation report.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A summary of the International Atomic Energy Agency's 1987 safeguards implementation report will be published in the agency's 1987 annual report which will be placed in the Library of the House. I am not aware that there is likely to be any significant difference in the general conclusions of the 1987 report.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to direct Her Majesty's Government's representative on the board of governors of the International Atomic Energy Agency to seek the early public release of the 1987 International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards implementation report.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The 1987 safeguards implementation report of the International Atomic Energy Agency is confidential to the board of governors. A summary will be published in the agency's 1987 annual report which will be placed in the Library of the House. Any decision to publish the 1987 safeguards implementation report would be a matter for the board of governors and the general conference of the IAEA.

Nuclear Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what safeguards apply to (a) plutonium contaminated wastes and (b) enriched uranium contaminated wastes containing fissile nuclear materials, presently unrefinable using known extraction technologies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: All civil nuclear material is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the United Kingdom/Euratom/IAEA safeguards agreement. Discussions are currently taking place with the international safeguards authorities on the safeguards to be applied to waste containing civil nuclear material.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the costs to be incurred by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for the repackaging of nuclear wastes, currently stored at the authority's Harwell laboratories, originally destined for sea disposal but now planned for disposal by Nirex in the future land or sub-sea bed disposal strategy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The UKAEA is considering the options for repackaging the nuclear waste originally destined for sea disposal. This examination includes close consultation with Nirex, as the body responsible for disposal of the waste.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will make a statement on the proposal to build a central dry store for spent nuclear fuel rods from the AGR and Magnox nuclear plants;

(2) if he will make a statement as to the relative merits of a central dry storage site for nuclear waste being located as between (a) Chapelcross and (b) Heysham.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have received an investment proposal from the CEGB for a dry store for spent AGR fuel, to be constructed on their behalf and that of the SSEB. The SSEB has made a similar proposal to the Secretary of State for Scotland. The question of siting is a matter for the industry, subject to planning consents and other regulatory control by the NII and relevant authorising Departments.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecutors (Right of Audience)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Lord Chancellor has any plans to use his powers under the Prosecution of Offences Act to extend the right of audience of Crown prosecutors; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has no current plans to use his powers under the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985 to extend the rights of audience of Crown prosecutors. Under section 4 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, Crown prosecutors already have the rights of audience enjoyed by solicitors holding practising certificates.

Matrimonial Disputes

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has as to the percentage of solicitors' practices undertaking legal aid in respect of matrimonial disputes in the Cheshire area, in the years 1979-80 and 1987-88.

The Attorney-General: No information is available in respect of Cheshire alone or, as yet, for 1987-88. In 1986-87, the last year for which information is currently available, in the south-west and Wales region, which includes most of Cheshire, 1,831 solicitors' offices received legal aid payments for matrimonial proceedings in the county court; and 792 for High Court proceedings. The information available from 1979-80 cannot be analysed in this form. No information is collected by the Lord Chancellor's Department on the total number of solicitors' practices, so it is not possible to say what proportion of solicitors' practices these figures represent.

Evictions

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases which related to eviction from the family home were recorded in the Cheshire area during the current year; and how many of those received legal aid.

The Attorney-General: During 1987, a total of 3,914 actions for possession of residential premises were entered at county courts in Cheshire, although only some of these will have resulted in a subsequent application for a warrant of eviction. Information on how many of the parties to these actions received legal aid is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

European Court of Justice

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Attorney-General what guidance is issued by the Lord Chancellor to the judiciary concerning references to the European Court of Justice under article 177 of the treaty of Rome.

The Attorney-General: No formal guidance is given by the Lord Chancellor, since the decision whether or not to make a reference under article 177 is for the court. However, there is case law, both in the European Court of Justice and in English courts, on the considerations to be taken into account in deciding whether to make a reference and upon its formulation.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Latham: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will make a statement on the implications for the Crown Prosecution Service of the recent collapse of trials relating to alleged hooliganism at football matches.

The Attorney-General: Recently, three trials involving allegations of football hooliganism have collapsed. These matters are now the subject of a full investigation and at this stage it would be improper to say anything, beyond what has been said in court, which might prejudice those investigations and pre-empt any decision that might have to be taken when the inquiries are complete.

It is important to make it clear that the matters which came to light in those trials could not have been discovered during the normal course of the CPS review of the evidence submitted by the police. Once the issue of authenticity of documents had been raised, full and detailed examinations for authenticity were carried out and the Crown prosecution service acted promptly and professionally in discharging its duty.

There has been consultation between the police and the CPS at the highest level on these matters and everything possible is being done to minimise the risk of cases collapsing for similar reasons in the future.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Attorney-General, pursuant to his answer of 9 June to the hon. Member for Walsall, North, what additional total costs have been incurred but not yet discharged relating to the legal action on "Spycatcher".

The Attorney-General: The costs which have been incurred but not yet discharged, accounts not yet having been delivered, are legal costs for the hearing before the High Court of Australia, for the hearing before the Court of Appeal of New Zealand and for the hearings before Mr. Justice Scott and the Court of Appeal in this country. In addition, an order for costs has been made against Her Majesty's Government in Australia and New Zealand, and a similar order is under appeal in this country.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Charles Powell

Q45. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister for how many civil servants in her private office Mr. Charles Powell is responsible; and what are the functions of those civil servants who report to Mr. Charles Powell.

The Prime Minister: None.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the Economic Council the impact on consumers in the EEC of the level of food prices resulting from the operation of the common agricultural policy; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: This point was raised by me during discussions at the last European Council. The whole question of agricultural support will be raised at the economic summit.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) of 17 May, Official Report, column 798, if her commitment to maintain child benefit includes maintaining its value in real terms.

The Prime Minister: No. The level of child benefit is reviewed each year as part of the annual social security uprating exercise.

Civil Service Procedures

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she is taking to improve Civil Service procedures so that in future they can manage the Government data network; and whether she has plans to raise salaries to ensure that the Civil Service can attract the necessary skills.

The Prime Minister: The service to be provided by the Government data network is to be managed and provided by Racal Data Networks Ltd. I am satisfied that the Departments which join the network, and the Treasury, can make satisfactory arrangements for their responsibilities in relation to the operation and development of the GDN.

Engagements

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 14 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including one with the President of Malawi. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Governors

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the next round of appointment of school governors to begin.

Mr. Dunn: The provisions of the Education (No. 2) Act 1986 concerning the reconstitution of school governing bodies come into effect for county and maintained special schools from 1 September 1988 and for voluntary schools from 1 September 1989. Within that framework, it is for local education authorities to determine the most appropriate timing for holding governor elections and making appointments to the reconstituted governing bodies.

Free School Meals

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children in Tameside received free school meals in each of the last three years; what percentage of the school population they were; and what is the percentage for England and Wales.

Mr. Dunn: Statistics on the take-up of school meals in each of the local education authorities in England are available in the annual school meals census, reports on which are available in the Library. Information was not collected in 1985 because of teachers' industrial action.

Matters relating to Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the number of children who have lost entitlement to free school meals in the area covered by the Bradford local education authority as a result of the Social Security Act 1986; what is his estimate of the number of these children whose parents will receive compensation through the family credit scheme; how many were previously receiving free school meals through the passport provided by family income supplement; and how many were receiving them under the local education authority discretionary scheme.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1987, the latest date for which data are available, about 3,281 pupils (or 4·4 per cent.) in Bradford received free school meals because their families were in receipt of family income supplement; a further 4,563 (or 6·2 per cent.) received them under the authority's discretionary scheme. From 11 April the families of those in the former category receive a cash benefit of £2·55 per week throughout the year under the new family credit scheme, which will also cover many in the latter category. Children from families in receipt of, or who are themselves in receipt of, income support (the successor to supplementary benefit) will continue to be eligible for free school meals. Nationally it is estimated that about 100,000 more school age children will benefit under the family credit scheme compared with those who previously received free school meals under family income supplement and local education authority discretionary schemes combined.

Temporary Classrooms (Bradford)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the number of temporary classrooms in use in Bradford and the steps he intends to take to alleviate the situation.

Mr. Dunn: According to information supplied by the Bradford local education authority earlier this year, the authority maintains a total of 451 temporary units housing 567 classes.

It is for the authority to consider any action that may be necessary in respect of this accommodation.

Research Reactor (Grenoble)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 18 May, column 455, on the ILL multilateral high flux test reactor in Grenoble (a) what has been the country of origin of the fuel for the reactor for each year since the United Kingdom joined the partnership, (b) what recent problems have arisen with the fuelling of the reactor and with what effects for the research programme and (c) what safeguards arrangements apply to nuclear fuel in the reactor.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is as follows.

(a) All fuel material for the high flux beam reactor originates from the United States of America; fabrication of the material into fuel elements has been carried out either in France or in West Germany.

(b) West German companies have been unable recently to fulfil their contracts to supply finished fuel elements to ILL, and the work has been transferred to alternative contractors in France. This change has not, however, led to loss of research time; the programme for ILL remains as planned.

(c) The reactor is licensed under stringent French safety regulations, and is inspected regularly.

Rugby League

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy, when approving the content of physical education courses at teacher training colleges, to require the inclusion of rugby league on the curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Mathematics and Science

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn of 26 May, Official Report, column 238, if he will publish a table showing for each local education authority the amount of certified expenditure for which specific grant was claimed for 1985-86 and 1986-87 on (a)

in-service training of primary teachers of mathematics and (b) in-service training of secondary teachers of mathematics;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn of 26 May, Official Report, column 238, if he will publish a table showing for each local education authority the amount of certified expenditure for which specific grant was claimed for 1985-86 and 1986-87 on (a) in-service training of primary teachers of science and (b) in-service training of secondary teachers of science.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This information is not collected centrally as LEAs are not required to apportion their grant claims for in-service training between primary and secondary school teachers.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn of 26 May, Official Report, columns 236-37, if he will estimate the cost at 1988 prices, including the cost of supply cover, of providing in-service training of one term's full-time equivalent duration such that every primary school would then have at least one teacher with identifiable knowledge of mathematics beyond GCE O-level; and if he will state the assumptions made in arriving at such an estimate;

(2) pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Blackburn of 26 May, Official Report, columns 236-37, if he will estimate the cost at 1988 prices, including the cost of supply cover, of providing in-service training of one term's full-time equivalent duration such that every primary school would then have at least one teacher with identifiable knowledge of science beyond GCE O-level; and if he will state the assumptions made in arriving at such an estimate.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I do not accept the hon. Member's assumption that identifiable knowledge of a subject beyond a particular level is necessarily associated with any particular form of training provision.

Link Project

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about progress on the Link project.

Mr. Jackson: The Government attach great importance to the Link initiative. I am pleased to be able to announce a new Link collaborative research programme in personal communications. The need for the programme is prompted by the convergence of telecommunications and radio technologies, which is generating a new industry of personal communications. The number of subscribers is increasing, with greater demand for accessibility both indoors and outdoors—whether stationary or mobile—and internationally. There is therefore a need to extend the range of services available and to integrate private mobile radio, cellular and satellite mobile systems. Much basic work needs to be done to achieve this. It will be a key technological development for the 1990s. This will be jointly funded by the Department of Trade and Industry and the Science and Engineering Research Council. £6·35 million will be available for a £13 million programme over three years initially, which will allow industry and academia to collaborate on the pre-competitive research necessary to develop a new, higher capacity, third generation personal communications system.

This is the eighth Link programme area to be announced, bringing the total planned expenditure by Government and industry up to £103 million. The Government will meet up to half of the cost of Link programmes.

Departmental Offices (Darlington)

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to transfer any of his Department's work from its headquarters in London to the Darlington site.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I am pleased to inform my hon. Friend that four areas of work are being transferred this year. This will result in the creation of 30 new jobs in Darlington, only two of which will be filled by staff transferring from London. This move will create additional employment in Darlington and will enrich the range of jobs available to staff on the Mowden hall site. There will be no redundancies in London as the existing staff will fill vacancies in headquarters. This transfer will save the Department an estimated £600,000 over the next 10 years representing a significant efficiency saving.

SCOTLAND

Labour Statistics

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the percentage of (a) female and (b) male unemployment in 1985, 1986 and 1987 in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The annual average rate of female unemployment (the number of unemployed female claimants as a percentage of the estimated total female working population), and the annual average rate of male unemployment (the number of unemployed male claimants as a percentage of the estimated total male working population), for each of the years 1985, 1986 and 1987 in Scotland was as follows:

	Female Percentage	Male Percentage
1985	10·7	16·7
1986	11·0	17·1
1987	10·1	17·0

Playgrounds

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children suffered accidents resulting in death or major injuries as the result of playing in playgrounds with concrete or tarmac surfaces for each year since 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many local authorities have playgrounds with concrete or tarmac surfaces.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Alex Pagett

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what, pursuant to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, column 343, was the purpose of the meeting in London between Mr. Alex Pagett and his special adviser.

Mr. Rifkind: My answer of 16 May to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North (Mr. Wilson) made it clear that the purpose of Mr. Pagett's occasional visits to the Scottish Office in London was to liaise with Ministers and my special adviser.

Conservative Party (Visits)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will enumerate and list the occasions since June 1987 on which employees or other officials of the Conservative party have visited his Department; and for what purpose.

Mr. Rifkind: No record is kept of the occasions on which officials of the Conservative party have visited my Department. Such visits are for the purposes of liaison with Ministers and my special adviser.

Electricity Boards (Borrowing Powers)

Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under what powers borrowing is currently undertaken by the North of Scotland Hydro-Electric Board and the South of Scotland Electricity Board; what is their current outstanding debt; what claims on capital he expects over the next three years; and whether he plans to increase the boards' borrowing powers.

Mr. Lang: The powers under which the Scottish electricity boards may borrow are set out in section 27 of the Electricity (Scotland) Act 1979. Outstanding debt as at 3 June 1988 was £2,632 million. The boards' proposed expenditure on fixed assets over the next three years is as follows:

	£ million
1988-89	237
1990-91	190

The Electricity (Financial Provisions) (Scotland) Bill, increasing the limit on the amount the boards may borrow from £2,700 million to £3,000 million, is currently before the House.

Plant Variety Testing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from small businesses or their representatives and farmers or farming organisations on the effects of the plant variety testing and seed certification review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Representations have been received from the United Kingdom Agricultural Supply Trade Association (Scottish Council) and the Scots Timothy Seed Growers' Association; the National Farmers' Union of Scotland has made its initial views known by means of a press release. These representations, and others received in response to the invitation to interested parties to comment on the report of the review, will be given careful consideration before decisions are taken by the Government on the report's recommendations.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration has been given to the effects in Scotland of the implementation of the conclusions of the review of plant variety testing and seed certification.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The report of the review of plant variety testing and seed certification systems has been made available to interested organisations with a request for comments to be submitted within a three month period ending on 15 July. After the end of the consultation period consideration will be given to the effects of implementing the report's recommendations in Scotland, and other relevant issues arising out of the report, in the light of the comments received.

YTS

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people on YTS in Scotland are in receipt of assistance towards accommodation costs from the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Lang: This information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total cost for the provision of assistance from the Manpower Services Commission towards accommodation costs for those on YTS in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: In the financial year 1987-88 a total of £1,553,353 was paid in living away from home allowance to YTS trainees in Scotland.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the criteria used by the Manpower Services Commission when making awards of assistance towards accommodation costs for persons on YTS in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: Lodging allowance is payable to those YTS trainees not covered by a contract of employment when:

a. a suitable training place is not available within daily travelling distance;
b. travelling daily is less economic than lodging allowance; or
c. travel time is excessive or prohibitive.

Milk Quotas

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the reasons for the exclusion of dairy farmers in Cowal from the increase in milk quotas announced earlier in the current year for producers in remote areas in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The limited volume of reserve quota available for allocation at 1 April this year was distributed to producers in remote areas where reductions in milk supply had created particular structural difficulties for production, processing or manufacturing, where the milk produced was effectively island or land-locked and where the addition of small volumes of quota could achieve the greatest benefit. There was insufficient quota for a more widespread allocation to Cowal and other peripheral areas within the mainland quota regions.

Rating Reform

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Her Majesty's Government will introduce an amendment to the Local Government Finance Bill to grant an 80 per cent. reduction in community charge liability for all student nurses in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The 80 per cent. reduction applies to persons undertaking a full-time course of education as defined by the criteria set out in regulations. Where courses undertaken by student nurses meet these criteria, as is likely to be the case for basic courses leading to registration following the implementation of the Project 2000 proposals for reforming nurse education and training, student nurses will qualify for the reduction.

Fire Safety

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider assisting local authorities to prepare programmes for the installation of fire detectors and alarms in houses and to give grants to tenants and home owners for the installation of fire detectors and alarms; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 13 June 1988]: Local authorities will wish to give serious consideration to the benefits to be obtained from the installation of fire detectors and alarms in houses. As far as their own housing stock is concerned, it is for authorities themselves to programme expenditure on such work within the resources which have been made available and in the light of their other priorities. Councils may include such programmes of work in their housing capital programmes and we shall take note of any such proposals in considering future levels of capital allocations.

As far as the private sector is concerned, our consultation paper, "Private Housing Renewal: The Government's Proposals for Scotland", issued on 19 May, proposed a discretionary grant by local authorities which would cover such devices in houses in multiple occupation only. However, the Government would be prepared, dependent on the responses on this point, to consider extending this to all houses in the private sector.

Forestry

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland why the annual target rate for afforestation in Britain is set at 33,000 hectares; on what basis this figure is calculated; and for how long this target is projected to continue.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 June 1988]: In their forestry policy statement of 10 December 1980, the Government saw scope for new planting to continue at broadly the rate of the previous 25 years, which had averaged some 30,000 hectares a year. In his statement of 9 February 1987 on the rural economy, the then Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, my right hon. Friend the Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale (Mr. Jopling) indicated that the Government proposed an expansion of the new planting programme by the traditional forestry sector to 33,000 hectares a year, with encouragement being given to a higher proportion of planting on low ground of better quality. This programme was confirmed by my right hon. and learned Friend on 16 March 1988, Official Report, columns 585-87 and will be reviewed from time to time.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what guidance he gives to the Forestry Commission regarding the expected rate of return on forestry investment from their plantations and from the grant-aided private sector; and whether he proposes to issue new guidelines in the light of the National Audit Office report on forestry objectives and achievements and in the light of his Budget changes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The Forestry Commission is set a target rate of return of 3 per cent. in real terms on its forest estate assets. This target rate is reviewed periodically but there are at present no plans to change it. No target is set for private sector planning since the decision on whether or not to plant is a commercial one for each owner to take, although the Commission would withhold grant-aid for any planting proposals which were not silviculturally sound or eventually capable of producing a crop of utilisable timber.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to direct the proposed Scottish Homes organisation to assist tenants with proceedings in cases of dispute with new landlords who have acquired public sector housing stock.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Clause 2 of the Housing (Scotland) Bill provides Scottish Homes with wide-ranging powers of assistance. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to direct Scottish Homes as to the use of those powers in relation to tenants involved in disputes with their landlords. We anticipate that Scottish Homes will use its discretion wisely in such circumstances.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy to direct the proposed Scottish Homes organisation to ensure that bodies which acquire public sector housing stock apply principles of rent setting which will keep rents within the reach of those in lower paid employment;

(2) if he will make it his policy to direct the proposed Scottish Homes organisation to ensure that bodies other than housing associations which acquire public sector housing stock will offer the same or similar guarantees to their tenants as those offered by housing associations;

(3) if he will make it his policy to direct the proposed Scottish Homes organisation to take effective steps to require bodies which acquire public sector housing stock to guarantee proper treatment for tenants; and if he will provide for sanctions to enforce such conditions;

(4) if he will make it his policy to direct the proposed Scottish Homes organisation to ensure that bodies which acquire public sector housing stock allocate houses to let to those who need them most, including disadvantaged groups;

(5) if he will make it his policy to direct the proposed Scottish Homes organisation to make approval of landlords seeking to acquire public sector housing stock conditional on undertakings given by such applicants;

(6) if he will make it his policy to direct the proposed Scottish Homes Organisation to take effective steps to require bodies which acquire public sector housing stock to retain such stock in the rented sector.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Where public sector tenants transfer to new landlords, Scottish Homes will be involved directly only where such transfers take place under the tenants' choice provisions in part III of the Housing (Scotland) Bill. Such transfers cannot proceed without the approval of the individual tenant who will wish to consider all aspects of the transfer and ensure that the transfer occurs only under conditions with which he is satisfied.

Where local authorities seek to make large-scale transfers of their stock to private sector landlords, including housing associations or housing co-operatives, the approval of my right hon. and learned Friend, not of Scottish Homes, will be required.

Scottish Homes' approval to landlords becoming receiving landlords for the purposes of tenants' choice will not be given lightly. As the hon. Member will recall from discussions during the Commons stages of the Bill, I have emphasised that Scottish Homes will be expected to ensure that landlords to which it gives approval are sound financially and have the management capability to provide a good service to tenants; and Scottish Homes will be expected also to monitor approved landlords' performance.

Scottish Homes will also have to approve first subsequent disposals of property transferred under the tenants' choice provisions in the Bill. In exercising this approval power, Scottish Homes will again take into account such factors as the suitability and viability of the proposed new landlord, and tenants' views.

No Scottish local authorities have as yet applied to my right hon. and learned Friend for approval to dispose of substantial proportions of their housing stock. However, he proposes later in the summer to issue guidelines on the general criteria which he expects to adopt in Scotland when considering applications for consent to any such disposals. As indicated in a letter of 8 June 1988 from the Scottish Development Department to chief executives of district and islands councils, the matters to which the Secretary of State may have regard in determining whether to give consent, and the conditions he may propose on consents, will include the extent to which the new landlord is independent of the disposing council, the extent to which the proposed disposal would result in the intending purchaser becoming the predominant or a substantial owner of housing to let in any area, the terms of the proposed disposal and any other matters which the Secretary of State considers relevant. In giving consent to a disposal, the Secretary of State may also give directions as to the purpose for which any receipt from the disposal is to be applied. I expect that the guidelines to be issued later on large scale disposals will be generally similar to those issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment last week, and will cover such matters as tenants' rights, allocation policies and rent levels, and the desirability of stock transferred continuing after a subsequent disposal to be available for renting at rents within the reach of those in lower-paid employment.

Housing

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to develop the case for a wider concept of social housing in Scotland in the context of Her Majesty's Government's policies concerning such a concept for Britain as a whole.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The creation of wider choice is one of the main aims of the Government's housing policies. There are accordingly many aspects of current policy towards housing in Scotland which contribute towards that aim. In relation to the provision of housing for rent we have emphasised the need to develop alternatives to traditional patterns of renting from local authorities. These include tenant co-operatives and housing associations. In addition, a range of other landlords may emerge in response to the Government's extension of tenants' rights through the tenants' choice proposals contained in part III of the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

My right hon. and learned Friend and I are furthering these developments through the Housing (Scotland) Bill, through increased funding for housing associations and co-operatives and through our general efforts to encourage diversity and choice.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he proposes to take to ensure that new owners of council housing under the provisions of the Housing (Scotland) Bill do not realise short-term profits through the use of these assets for purposes other than meeting urgent housing needs.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under the tenants' choice provisions in part III of the Housing (Scotland) Bill, landlords will require Scottish Homes' approval before they can exercise the right conferred by that part to acquire a house from a public sector landlord. Scottish Homes will approve only reputable landlords under these powers. The approval of Scottish Homes will also be required to the first disposal of any property acquired by a landlord under the tenants' choice provisions. Scottish Homes will take into account all relevant information and local circumstances, including the local renting market, before deciding whether to approve such a disposal. These safeguards will effectively prevent abuses of the type suggested.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies (Research and Development)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to require the annual accounts of companies to disclose expenditure on research and development.

Mr. Maude: As the Government's White Paper "Civil Research and Development" (Cm. 185 published in July 1987) made clear, we accept that there is a need to emphasise to shareholders and managers the value of research development. It is for companies to ensure that their bankers and major shareholders understand the advantage of R and D. The reporting of R and D expenditure in annual accounts will promote this understanding. The case for disclosure is, however, mainly relevant to public companies. I therefore very much welcome the decision of the Accounting Standards Committee to recommend a standard which would require such companies to disclose expenditure on R and D. Such a standard, if adopted by the accountancy bodies and complied with by public companies, would be preferable to legislation on this subject. I therefore hope that the ASC's recommendation will be acted on promptly.

Single European Market

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what financial contribution from the European Economic Community his Department is receiving towards the cost of its advertising campaign to promote the single European market; and what proportion of the total cost is covered by such subsidies.

Mr. Maude: We are receiving no European Community funding for our single market campaign.

NEDC/NDC (Government Contribution)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the Government contribution to NEDC/NDC for the financial years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89; and what staff numbers this contribution supported.

Mr. Atkins: The following table sets out the Government's contribution to the funding of the NEDC/NDC and this in part supported the staff numbers also detailed as follows:

	Government Contribution £	[1] Staff
1986-87	868,000	25
1987-88	1,118,000	30
1988-89	1,165,000	47

[1] As at 31 March of the preceding financial year.

English Estates North (Expenditure)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what sums were spent by English Estates North on new factory building in the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88; what sum is projected for 1988-89; and how many square metres of additional factory space become available in each year.

Mr. Atkins: Expenditure by English Estates on behalf of the Department of Trade and Industry and the Rural Development Commission in the north-east and Cumbria in the last two financial years was as follows:

1986-87
Expenditure £19·1 million
Floorspace completed 19,384 square metres

1987-88
Expenditure £25·0 million
Floorspace completed 75,335 square metres

Estimated figures for 1988-89 are as follows:
Expenditure £18·0 million
Floorspace completed 20,000 square metres

Note.
The bulk of expenditure for a particular project often falls in a different year from the one in which the project is completed. There is no direct correlation therefore, between the level of expenditure and the volume of floor space completed in a financial year.

Insurance (EC Proposals)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the effects of the European Economic Commission proposals for the liberalisation of insurance services, in respect of (a) the separate proposals for the covering of mass and large risks and (b) the proposal for member states to prohibit an undertaking from calling upon its establishment in the country of the risk to carry out the provision of services in that same state.

Mr. Maude: We hope that the non-life insurance services directive, when it is implemented, will offer significant new opportunities for United Kingdom insurers in the European Community market. Because of the different regimes laid down in the directive for large and mass risks it is likely that most, if not all, of these opportunities will lie in the former area. Insurance companies will not be prohibited from carrying out business on a services basis in a member state where they already have an establishment where this business relates to large risks. Member states may impose restrictions in the case of mass risks where the local establishment of the undertaking is itself authorised to underwrite the class of risks in question.

Company Searches

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were (a) the costs and the revenue figures for public search facilities at the companies registration offices and (b) the costs and the revenue figures for services to companies for the six months periods from 1 July to 31 December for 1986 and 1987, and estimated for 1988, excluding those undertaken on behalf of Government and other public authorities.

Mr. Maude: Provisional figures for 1987-88, calculated on a memorandum trading account basis, show that costs of public search facilities at the companies registration offices were £8·1 million. Revenue amounted to £3·8 million. Information about services to companies or any other sector of users is not separately available.

Radio Frequencies (Defence Use)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has received the report from the independent committee reviewing defence use of the radio frequency spectrum.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence and my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry have received from Sir Kenneth Corfield, the chairman of the committee undertaking stage 1 of the review, the report dealing with defence use of the radio frequency spectrum from 470 MHz to 3400 MHz. Because of the nature of the evidence submitted, the report is confidential but in view of the public interest in the review, we intend to publish an abridged version shortly.

The recommendations of the report will be carefully considered by the Government and the response will be made known as soon as possible.

Insurance Intermediaries

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the regulation of general insurance intermediaries.

Mr. Maude: In March 1986, my predecessor undertook to promote talks among interested parties aimed at improving self-regulation of the sale of general (non-life) insurance. I am grateful to the various interested parties who participated in the talks.

The Association of British Insurers (ABI) has today outlined proposed improvements in both its code of practice for the selling of general insurance by intermediaries other than registered brokers and in its procedures for monitoring enforcement of the code. The improvements involve, among other things, the disclosure to the consumer of an intermediary's status as the agent of the insurance companies or as the agent of the consumer; a requirement that independent intermediaries take out adequate professional indemnity insurance; and the provision to policyholders of information on the procedures for making complaints. The ABI will also establish two committees to monitor the self-regulating system, one an ABI committee to deal with day-to-day enforcement and the other a wider committee with an independent chairman and four other independent members to report annually on the system and to review its operation after three years.

I warmly welcome these proposals. There are details still to be filled in, but when the system is in operation, I believe it will offer a substantial improvement in consumer protection. It will also bring the requirements placed on non-registered intermediaries closer to the existing requirements on registered brokers.

It is up to the ABI to enforce its code effectively. It will need to show that, as well as being tough on paper, it is tough in practice. I shall be keeping the effectiveness of the system under close review. When the monitoring committee makes its report after three years, I shall be looking again at how the regulation of the selling of general insurance is operating.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether his Department was warned by the National Association of Security Dealers and Investment Managers about possible illegal trading by the Barlow Clowes group of companies prior to issuing a securities licence to it; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when his Department first knew that Barlow Clowes was operating in a manner likely to give concern to investors;

(3) whether his Department made any inquiry into the claims made by Barlow Clowes to investors that the income from funds invested in Gibraltar could be paid to them tax free.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State has today appointed Sir Godfray Le Quesne QC to carry out an investigation into the facts of his Department's handling of matters relating to the Barlow Clowes Group. He has the following terms of reference:

"On behalf of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to investigate and establish the facts relating to the exercise by the Department of Trade and Industry since 1 January 1983 of its regulatory functions in respect of the carrying on of investment business by Barlow Clowes & Partners (a partnership) and its successors, Barlow Clowes & Partners Limited and Barlow Clowes Gilt Managers Limited, and, if appropriate, by Barlow Clowes International Limited, with particular reference to the need for licences under the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958, the granting and renewal of such licences and the monitoring of the activities of the licence holder; and to provide a report as soon as possible to the Secretary of State."

NORTHERN IRELAND

Vehicle Testing (Waiting Times)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present approximate waiting time for an MoT test at (a) Downpatrick, (b) Newtownards and (c) Belfast; and what proposals he has to ensure that the waiting time does not vary between these three locations.

Mr. Needham: The waiting times for private car test appointments at Downpatrick, Newtownards and Belfast vehicle inspection centres on 3 June 1988 were five, eight and a half and eight weeks, respectively. These present extended waiting times reflect the demand in each of these locations and all three centres are working at maximum capacity. It is not possible to ensure similar waiting times at all centres when there are different levels of demand but measures have been taken, with the agreement of car owners, to divert tests to less busy centres.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many strip searches were made of female prisoners in Her Majesty's prison, Maghaberry, in April and May, giving the number of persons involved and number of times each person was searched; if any prison contraband, smuggled item or illegal correspondence was discovered in any search, indicating which items; in how many cases prisoners refused to be searched and had to be restrained while the search was being conducted; and what were the reasons for the search under each of the following headings (a) making a remand appearance at a trial, (b) attending trial, (c) inter-prison visit or (d) other reasons.

Mr. Stanley: The information requested is as follows:

	April	May
Number of searches
Total number of searches carried out	18	30
Total number of inmates searched	14	22
Number of prisoners searched once	10	14
Number of prisoners searched twice	4	8
Number of prisoners searched more than twice	—	—
Reasons for search
First admission on remand/awaiting trial	3	8
First admission on sentence/final discharge	15	14
Attending remand court	—	—
Attending trial	—	—
Inter-prison visits	—	2
Pre-release home leave scheme	—	6
Visits to outside hospital	—	—
After a visit	—	—

DEFENCE

Military Lands Act 1892

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 18 May, for what purposes the 17 byelaws made under the Military Lands Act 1892 were made in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The purpose of all byelaws made under the Military Lands Act 1892 over land belonging to the Secretary of State for Defence is to regulate the use of that land for the purposes for which it is appropriated and for securing the public against danger arising from that use.

Polaris

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what communication with the Soviet authorities took place prior to the recent surface deployment together of three out of the four submarines in the United Kingdom's Polaris force, depicted on the cover of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988".

Mr. Ian Stewart: None.

Plutonium (Exports)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the manpower implications of the use of members of the armed forces in assisting British Nuclear Fuels plc in the export of plutonium to Japan.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There are no current plans for members of the armed forces to assist in the export of plutonium to Japan.

Uranium and Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy in subsequent Defence Estimates to include details of requirements of (a) uranium for submarine propulsion, (b) uranium for tank protection armour, (c) uranium for anti-tank shells, (d) uranium for warhead production and (e) plutonium for warhead production in terms of quantities and planned sources of procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy in future defence Estimates to give details of planned (a) United Kingdom nuclear warhead tests and (b) United Kingdom-United States joint nuclear warhead tests at the Nevada test site.

Mr. Sainsbury: All tests of United Kingdom nuclear devices at the Nevada test site are conducted jointly by the United States and United Kingdom. It continues to be the policy of Her Majesty's Government not to announce these tests in advance.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contingency plans, and in what locations, exist for the test detonation of United Kingdom nuclear warheads in somewhere other than the continental United States in the event of legislation currently in Congress to halt United States nuclear testing being passed into United States law.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, following the agreement between the United States of America and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics at the Moscow summit to give prior notification of their respective nuclear tests and yields, the United Kingdom will now adopt the same policy for its nuclear warhead tests in Nevada.

Mr. Sainsbury: The hon. Gentleman is mistaken; the agreement for notification reached at the Moscow summit was in respect of flight tests of ballistic missiles, not nuclear tests.

Trident

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on progress in the A-90 plutonium processing and fabrication facility at atomic weapons research establishment Aldermaston in support of the Trident warhead programme.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Members for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) and Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms. Walley) on 26 April.

Drigg Dump Site

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contribution has been made by his Department, towards the capping of the near-surface trenches of the Drigg dump site near Sellafield, containing wastes arising from nuclear processing for defence programmes.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence, in common with all users of the Drigg depository, pays British Nuclear Fuels plc a charge per unit volume of waste deposited. These charges, which are a matter for commercial decision by BNFL, cover all aspects of site services.

Nuclear Warheads

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Manchester, Withington (Mr. Bradley), Official Report, 24 May, column 181, what has been done with the nuclear materials contained in the more than 2,000 warheads removed unilaterally, to which he makes reference.

Mr. Ian Stewart: All the 2,400 warheads removed from NATO's land-based nuclear stockpile in Europe since 1979 were wholly the property of the United States Government; the disposal of the nuclear materials contained in them is therefore a matter for the United States Government.

Cruise Missiles

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Wealden (Sir G. Johnson Smith), Official Report, 24 May, column 181, what is the basis for the statement that the Soviet Union is planning shortly to launch two types of sea-launched cruise missiles; and what protective measures are being taken against this launch.

Mr. Ian Stewart: As paragraph 615 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988 explains, the Soviet Union is developing a range of strategic cruise missiles for launch from ground, sea and air platforms. As part of this, the SS-N-21 submarine-launched land-attack cruise missile is now believed to be operational and the longer-range SS-NX-24 is at an advanced stage of development. For security reasons I am not able to comment on sources of information. We shall continue to maintain the minimum level and range of forces necessary to deter aggression of all kinds effectively.

Nuclear Weapons (Accidents)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen), Official Report, 24 May, column 161, if he will give details of the date of entry into force and the lifetime of the arrangement covering the roles and responsibilities of the United Kingdom and United State authorities in the event of an accident on United Kingdom territory involving a United States nuclear weapon.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Arrangements covering the roles and responsibilities of the United Kingdom and United States authorities in the event of an accident involving a United States nuclear weapon have evolved over many years, by a process of continuous dialogue and review. The current arrangement was signed last year and is without time limit.

Psychological Operations

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 6 May, Official Report,column 622, to the hon. Member for Brent, East concerning psychological operations, what has been his policy since 1982 towards holding courses on psychological warfare and psychological operations at the joint intelligence centre.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 June 1988]: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 6 May 1988 at column 622.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations have been received from 1971 to the current date from the British Institution of Professional Civil Servants as to information concerning psychological operations warfare principles and techniques.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 June 1988]: Correspondence from the Institution of Professional Civil Servants is not held centrally. I also refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 11 December 1987 at column 312.

Army Information Services

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 616, to the hon. Member for Brent, East concerning the Army information services, how many officials were interviewed about these matters.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 June 1988]: I have nothing further to add to the answer I gave the hon. Gentleman on that occasion.

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the precise duties and responsibilities of the Army information services in Northern Ireland; and when they were last altered.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The role of the Army information services in Northern Ireland is to represent the Army (including the UDR, TA and Cadets) in Northern Ireland in all matters relating to publicity and the media.

Clockwork Orange

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the reply of 6 May, Official Report, column 623, to the hon. Member for Brent, East, who initiated the project known as Clockwork Orange; and for what purpose.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 13 June 1988]: I understand that the term "Clockwork Orange" has been used to refer to certain allegations about illegal activities in Northern Ireland. I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave the hon. Member on 6 May 1988 at column 623.

Low-level Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what representations he has received from the West German authorities in 1988 requesting an increase in low-flying training flights over the United Kingdom by West German military aircraft;

(2) what recent communications have been received from the Federal German authorities requesting his Department to examine the feasibility of ceasing Royal Air Force low-level training flights over the Federal Republic of Germany; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what restrictions he has asked the United States Air Force to impose on flights of its F-16 aircraft over the United Kingdom pending the outcome of investigations into the two recent United States Air Force F-16 crashes in West Germany.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 May 1988]: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what reduction has taken place in the number of low-flying training sorties conducted by the Royal Air Force over the Federal Republic of Germany since 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 May 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Rhondda (Mr. Rogers) on 7 June at columns 542-43. The reduction since 1984 is approximately 15 per cent.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Nuclear Safety

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any current plans to arrange the placing of a research contract with the European Proliferation Information Centre to make an independent evaluation of the present adequacy of nuclear safeguards in European Economic Community member states.

Mrs. Chalker: No.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 23 May, column 26, if he will make a statement on the official findings of the European Commission investigation into the transfer of nuclear materials within the European Community; and whether he is satisfied with the conclusions.

Mr. Mellor: The result of the European Commission investigation has not yet been published. However, I understand that it found no evidence of any breach of the safeguards regime and no serious irregularities in the shipment of radioactive waste. It has identified some management failures at the Belgian reprocessing plant at Mol involving the accounting and monitoring of radioactive waste. I am satisfied that the investigation as thorough.

Signals Stations

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of the composite signals organisation station, Hawklaw.

Mr. Mellor: As GCHQ management has already made clear to the staff concerned, the station will close on 12 August, although most of the staff will in fact leave on 31 July. Dismantling work is likely to continue until the end of September.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his plans for the replacement of manned composite signals organisation stations by unmanned signal intelligence receiver installations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: It is not our practice to comment on matters relating to the security and intelligence services.

Refugee Camp, Hong Kong

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about his recent visit to the Vietnamese refugee camp in Hong Kong.

Sir Geoffrey Howe [pursuant to the reply, 9 June 1988, c. 655]: The recent sharp increase in the rate of arrivals in Hong Kong of boat people from Vietnam has been a matter of very great concern to the British and Hong Kong Governments. The number of Vietnamese boat people in camps in Hong Kong now stands at over 16,000, the highest level since 1980 and double the number last year. The flow of arrivals shows no sign of abating.

The Hong Kong Government have acted with commendable efficiency to establish emergency facilities to accommodate the recent influx. But their resources are stretched to the limit. I visited these facilities at the end of last month. I came to the conclusion that the burden was becoming intolerable and that things could not go on as they were.

The overwhelming majority of the new arrivals are ethnic Vietnamese. Most come from North Vietnam and have no family links outside Vietnam. They cannot be described as political refugees as defined by UNHCR. Their prospects for resettlement in the West are virtually non-existent. It was clear to me that Hong Kong could no longer offer itself to this stream of people as a transit point to a future that does not and cannot exist.

In view of the rapidly deteriorating situation, Her Majesty's Government have been considering urgently with the Hong Kong Government what should be done. The Hong Kong Government announced earlier today, with the endorsement of Her Majesty's Government, that with effect from 16 June a new policy will be introduced. From then on, the great majority of boat people arriving in Hong Kong will be detained as illegal immigrants, pending their eventual return to Vietnam. Only those few who can show that they are genuine refugees will be treated as such and will be accommodated in Hong Kong to await resettlement. All arrivals will be screened on the basis of UNHCR criteria, according to procedures which UNHCR will be able to monitor.

In taking this decision we are sending the clearest possible signal to those in Vietnam who may have purely economic motives for contemplating unauthorised departure by sea. They must understand that this is a voyage that can only lead to detention in Hong Kong and ultimately to their return to their own country.

Her Majesty's Government are pressing for arrangements with the Vietnamese authorities to enable those who are found not to be genuine refugees to be sent back to Vietnam under suitable guarantees about the treatment they will receive. In New York on 7 June I urged the Vietnamese Foreign Minister to take steps to reduce unauthorised departures and to take back those who have no prospect of resettlement elsewhere. I saw the Chinese and Soviet Foreign Ministers in New York and stressed the gravity of the problem of the boat people with both of them.

This is not, of course, a complete solution. There is a limit to what can be done until economic policies, official attitudes and other circumstances change in Vietnam itself. We are now in touch with all the resettlement countries, UNHCR and the countries of the region about the change of policy and the way forward. We are impressing upon the international community the need for concerted action to deal with the problem at source and to find a lasting solution to this human tragedy. Her Majesty's Government will devote their unceasing efforts to this end.

EMPLOYMENT

Southwark

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of job vacancies currently available in the London borough of Southwark.

Mr. Lee: On 8 April 1988, the latest available date, the number of unfilled vacancies at jobcentres covering an area closely corresponding to the London borough of Southwark was 574. Vacancies at jobcentres do not represent the total number of vacancies in the economy. Estimates suggest that nationally about a third of all vacancies are notified to jobcentres, but equivalent local estimates are not available.

Skill Shortages

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he intends to take to ease skill shortages in the north-west.

Mr. Cope: Our training programmes support employer efforts to train to meet their growing skill needs. In 1987-88 in the north-west region the Training Commission spent over £170 million on training for over 110,000 people. From September the £1·5 billion employment training programme will provide training for up to 600,000 unemployed adults nationally. I hope that employers in the north-west will take full advantage of this major new opportunity to meet their demand for skills. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State also announced recently our intention to extend Government support to a second year of local employer networks, bringing total spending to over £5 million, to involve employers throughout the country including the north-west in local training provision.

Trade Union Ballots

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to how many trade union ballots have been held under the Employment Act 1982; and what percentage were in favour, and what against.

Mr. Nicholls: The Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service is aware of 124 closed shop ballots which have taken place, the majority of which have been held since the requirements of the Employment Act 1982 came into force. Seventy-eight per cent. of the ballots were in favour of the agreement, 18 per cent. were not in favour and in 4 per cent. of the ballots the results are unknown.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much has been allocated from the European social fund towards the cost of employment training on an annual basis; and what amount was requested by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Cope: For 1987, the latest year for which figures are available, the European Commission allocated £435,562,257 from the European social fund to applications submitted by Her Majesty's Government for the United Kingdom for employment and training measures. This compares with a bid of £1,105,391,991 for these measures.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether unemployed claimants who leave the proposed employment training scheme before the end of their agreed training period and sign on again as unemployed will be referred to adjudication officers for assessment.

Mr. Nicholls: All those who make a fresh claim to benefit, including people who have left employment training without completing their action plan, are required to be available for work, and may be referred to an adjudication officer if their availability is in doubt. Leaving the programme early will not by itself be grounds for referral to an adjudication officer.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what circumstances those who leave the employment training scheme will be subject to benefit penalties for leaving the scheme without good reason.

Mr. Nicholls: People who leave employment training without completing their training will not be liable to benefit penalties for that reason alone.

Equal Pay

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of 7 June, Official Report, column 498, when he expects to have completed his consideration of the House of Lords decision in Hayward v Cammell Laird Shipbuilders, relating to equal pay for work of equal value, with a view to deciding whether further legislation is required.

Mr. Nicholls: I cannot make any predictions. Careful consideration needs to be given to all the potential effects of the decision.

Wages Inspectors

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (i) factory and (ii) wages inspectors were employed in Wales (a) in 1979 and (b) 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 13 June 1988]: On 1 June 1979 there were 33 factory and seven wages inspectors employed in Wales. On 1 June 1987, the numbers were 24 and three respectively. The Health and Safety Executive plans to increase factory inspector numbers nationally during 1988-89 and recruitment is currently underway. I consider the number of wages inspectors to be adequate.

JTS Allowance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing how many people dependent on supplementary benefit received the old job training scheme allowance; and what proportion of these had dependent children, broken down by the sex of the adult.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The information requested is not available. Allowances of trainees on the "old" job training scheme are not related to benefit entitlement. Figures concerning the benefit position of trainees are not therefore gathered. As separate allowances are not paid for child dependants, no records are kept of the numbers of trainees with dependent children.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing (a) the latest figures of the number of people claiming the old job training scheme allowance, (b) how many of these had dependent children and (c) how many were lone parents, breaking each category down by the sex of the adult.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The number of people currently receiving the old job training scheme allowance is approximately 7,000. As separate allowances are not paid for child dependents, no records are kept of the numbers of trainees with dependent children or of the number who have the status of lone parents.

TRANSPORT

East Coast Motorway

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the construction of an east coast motorway, extending the M11 northwards to Newcastle; what studies have been undertaken by his Department to establish the feasibility of such a motorway; and what priority he attaches to achieving a new north-south road link.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have received a number of representations about the provision of an east coast motorway. We have no plans for the construction of such a route nor have studies been undertaken into its feasibility. Our aim is to ensure that the trunk road network continues to meet current and future traffic needs. There is a large number of schemes in the programme for improving the existing routes.

British Rail

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman and board members of British Rail, he will seek clarification of the amendment of rule 1.14 of the British Rail rule book in so far as it relates to trade union rights and the freedom of employees to express views on safety and other matters in public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. This is a management matter for the Railways Board.

Heathrow (Passengers' Cameras)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for how long it has been necessary for outgoing passengers' cameras at Heathrow, which are not submitted for X-ray examination, to be emptied of film for manual inspection; why this requirement was imposed,; what information he has as to what other British airports and which other countries require this procedure; what international agreement has taken place on this procedure; and what discussions were held with (a) the National Union of Journalists and (b) the film industry before the requirement was imposed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The United Kingdom aviation security programme, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State administers, has required for many years that security staff at United Kingdom airports must ensure that all items of passengers' hand luggage are either screened by X-ray machine or examined physically to the extent necessary to satisfy the staff that the article does not contain any weapons or explosive. This is entirely in accordance with the international aviation security standards drawn up by the International Civil Aviation Organisation. In some cases it may be necessary for the staff to open the film compartment of cameras in order to meet this requirement. The requirement is such a fundamental part of the aviation security programme that it is unlikely to be possible to relax it significantly in the near future. I am, however, prepared to consider any proposals which interested organisations might have for ways to reduce the likelihood of it being necessary for the security staff to open the film compartment in cameras in order to meet the requirement.

Roads (Traffic Growth)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his forecast of annual traffic growth on (a) the national trunk road system and (b) motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Forecasts are made for road traffic generally and for individual motorway and trunk road schemes where appropriate. The forecasts of growth in traffic on all roads were given to my hon. Friend in my answer of 11 May 1988 at column 160.

Traffic Forecasts

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what he estimates traffic levels to be by the year 2000; and what steps have been taken to ensure that the road system will absorb the additional growth.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave him on 11 May 1988 at columns 160-61.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the criteria on which traffic forecasts are based.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: National traffic forecasts are based on relationships between traffic and GDP, fuel prices and changes in people's behaviour over time. They are prepared on high and low assumptions about future growth in GDP and fuel prices, to reflect the uncertainty in these factors.

Local traffic forecasts are prepared where necessary for use in the appraisal of specific schemes. They allow for expected local changes in car ownership, population and economic activity.

Ferries (Stability)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many ferries have had their stability recalculated as a result of his Department's safety review; and if he will list them by class and by age.

Mr. David Mitchell: My Department called for damage stability data relating to 62 United Kingdom registered ro/ro passenger ships built before 1980 to be provided not later than April this year. This information is now being analysed.

Roads

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what ways he is considering of encouraging county councils to spend more money on roads; and if he will consider making grants directly to district councils, particularly to those cities which were county boroughs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: If, having examined local highway authorities' 1988-89 maintenance budgets, we decide that measures are required beyond further exhortation we will be examining possible solutions with the local authority associations concerned. We have no plans to pay grant for road maintenance direct to non-metropolitan district councils.

Roads and Footpaths

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to take action in relation to those county councils which do not allocate sufficient funds for the proper maintenance of highways and pavements.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have frequently urged local highway authorities to spend up to the overall provision for highway maintenance. We are currently examining their 1988-89 budgets to see whether further action is needed.

The Audit Commission report on highway maintenance recommends that allocations from highway authorities to their agents should be based on an authoritywide assessment of need linked to overall policy. We are encouraging authorities to proceed on this basis.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider a review of agency arrangements, along the lines suggested by the Audit Commission, in order to assist district councils in the proper maintenance of roads and footpaths in their areas.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Audit Commission recommended that each highway authority and its agents should review their arrangements. We have made it clear that the Department fully support this. We shall be monitoring implementation in concert with the local authority associations.

Highway Authorities

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the differing priorities and needs of those shire counties which contain within their boundaries a large urban concentration or former county borough, he will review the policy of using counties as highway authorities, and districts as their agents.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Audit Commission report on highway agency arrangements (September 1987) found that county councils are, in general, better placed than the vast majority of districts to exercise the full range of highways authority responsibilities. It recommended that the way forward was to place agency arrangements on a more systematic and businesslike footing. The arrangements made in particular cases can and should reflect the capabilities of individual district councils.

Cyclists (Personal Stereo Equipment)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide figures, for the most recent years for which they are available, showing the number of road accidents involving cyclists who were using personal stereo equipment at the time of the accident.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The STATS 19 accident report form used by the police does not record whether cyclists were using personal stereos.

Plutonium Exports

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what advice was offered to British Nuclear Fuels plc with regard to which airport should be used from which to fly plutonium exports to Japan; and what matters were considered.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No such advice has been given. The decision will be for British Nuclear Fuels plc, whose arrangements will have to comply with the international regulations.

Nuclear Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what specific arrangements currently exist for the recovery of spent nuclear fuel casks and containers from the Channel following an accident and subsequent sinking of a cargo ferry carrying such radioactive assignment to or from United Kingdom ports.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department's marine pollution control unit maintains a national contingency plan for combatting pollution or threatened pollution arising from spillages at sea of oil or other hazardous substances following an accident.

In any incident involving nuclear fuel casks and containers it would first be for the owners of the ship to consider commercial salvage of the vessel and its cargo. The marine pollution control unit would be closely involved in the establishment of any such salvage operation and would arrange for the provision of radioactive expertise and the monitoring of any consequential environmental hazards. Within United Kingdom territorial waters, the Secretary of State's statutory powers of intervention would, if necessary, be used to give directions to the owners of the vessel or to the salvors on the action to be taken to prevent pollution. If such directions proved inadequate, those powers could be used to allow direct action to be taken which could extend to taking control of the ship and recovering its cargo.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safety arrangements exist for the extinguishing of fires on cross-Channel cargo ferries by emergency teams under severe storm or hurricane conditions.

Mr. David Mitchell: There are no special arrangements for use only in storm or hurricane conditions, and fires on cargo ferries would be dealt with in the same way, whatever the weather conditions. In cargo spaces the fixed fire extinguishing systems required by legislation would be used if emergency teams using hand-held equipment thought conditions to be hazardous.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to arrange a special emergency planning exercise to evaluate the capability of presently positioned safety and fire fighting teams to put out an extreme fire on board a cross-Channel cargo ferry carrying spent nuclear fuel to or from the United Kingdom, before the fire exceeds the fireproof package limits for the spent fuel casks; and if he will further invite his French and Belgian counterparts to co-operate on such an exercise.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. Adequate and well-rehearsed arrangements already exist to cope with maritime disasters, including fires on ships, and which are exercised on a regular basis. In the case of the Dover strait the contingency plan and exercises involve the appropriate French and Belgian authorities.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied with the seaworthiness and security of the SNCF-owned Channel cargo ferries, St. Germain, St. Eloi, Seaway and Seafreight Highway for the transport of spent nuclear fuel to Channel ports in the United Kingdom under international arrangements.

Mr. David Mitchell: There are no regulations either international or national which require ships carrying spent nuclear fuels to be specially constructed or equipped.

Regulations require that the cargo is shipped in containers designed and tested to meet the stringent standards laid down by the International Atomic Energy Agency. These containment standards apply to all modes of transport including rail, road, air and sea. Other regulations specify the number and location of packages containing radioactive material permitted on board ships.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any instances have come to his attention of cross-Channel ferries carrying toxic or radioactive materials to or from the United Kingdom without the appropriate carriage certification.

Mr. David Mitchell: As far as toxic material is concerned, I know of one consignment in recent months as being incorrectly declared. This matter is being followed up.

With regard to the transport of radioactive material, I am aware of no instances where such shipments have been made without the required certificates of approval.

New Road Schemes

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on his Department's criteria for assessing the economic performance of new road schemes coming forward from 1988-89 onwards for (a) East Anglia and (b) Suffolk and Norfolk.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's criteria for assessing the economic performance of all new trunk road schemes are based on the Department's computer system of cost benefit analysis, COBA9, which compares the costs of road schemes with the benefits to road users from time savings, reductions in the number and severity of accidents, and changes in vehicle operating costs.

Airports (Fees)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to (i) the landing fee, (ii) the navigation fee and (iii) passenger taxes for (a) Glasgow, (b) Edinburgh, (c) Heathrow and (d) Gatwick airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has is as follows:

(i) Landing charges (from 1 April 1988)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the level of landing and other charges at (a) Glasgow, (b) Edinburgh and (c) Gatwick airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Landing and related airport charges at these airports are matters for BAA plc subject to compliance with the United Kingdom's international obligations in respect of such charges. Navigation service charges at these airports are set at a level sufficient to recover the costs of the Civil Aviation Authority in providing the services, including an average rate of return of 7 per cent. on the relevant net assets, on a current cost basis.

Car Registration E167 HLK

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to whom the car with registration number E167 HLK is registered.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 13 June 1988]: Information of this kind may by law only be provided to a law enforcement agency, or, on payment of the prescribed fee, to a person who can show reasonable cause for having it. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Dartford Tunnel

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next proposes to meet the general manager of the Dartford tunnel joint committee; and if on that occasion he will discuss the case to escort tankers through the tunnel in view of the delay this occasions to other traffic.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [pursuant to his reply, 7 June 1988, c. 455-56]: The answer should have included the following end paragraph.

"The need for escorting will continue in view of the large number of such vehicles which use the tunnels. The Health and Safety Executive supports this view. But the provision of a new bridge, which the Dartford-Thurrock Crossing Bill would authorise, will further reduce delays from this cause to northbound traffic and eliminate them altogether for southbound traffic."

THE ARTS

Theatres Trust

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts what grant was given by his Department to the Theatres trust in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement concerning the future of the trust.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The figures of support from my Department are as follows:

1983-84	11,000
1984-85	11,000
1985-86	11,000
1987-88	nil

From April 1986 the Theatres trust has been in receipt of rental income from the freeholds of the Lyric and the Garrick theatres, which were vested in it following abolition of the GLC. It is my hope that using this and other income it will continue to be self-financing.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Brewery Tenancy Agreements

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is contemplating in view of the representations he has received from the National Licensed Victuallers Association regarding brewery tenancy agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement outlining the nature of the recent representations which he has received from the National Licensed Victuallers Association about the code of practice on tenants' security; and if he will indicate what action he is taking as a result of this approach.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The NLVA has expressed concern about the way in which some brewers have handled their tenancy agreements and has urged that the provisions of the Brewers Society's code of practice on tenants' security should be given legal effect in tenants' contracts. I am seeking the views of the Brewers Society.

Dry Sow and Tether Stalls

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he has taken over the past five years to reduce the proportion of pig farmers employing dry sow and tether stalls; and when he expects the use of such stalls to be extinguished.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government's welfare code for pigs, revised in 1983, strongly recommends the use of alternative systems to the dry sow and tether stall for the housing of sows and gilts. The Ministry, through the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, has encouraged farmers to use alternative systems and has led the industry in developing and promoting the computerised loose housed feeding system. The Farm Animal Welfare Council has recently completed a review of pig production systems which makes a number of recommendations to ensure that future trends in housing the dry sow are away from the use of stalls and tethers. We are currently consulting interested parties on the report and no decisions will be taken until their comments have been fully considered.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Government (Review)

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when his Department anticipates the next review of local government structures will take place.

Mr. Howard: We have no current plans to initiate a review of the structure of local government.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 18 May, Official Report, column 941, what progress has been made in assessing the role of the public interest in his proposals for the privatisation of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 18 May at column 940.

Sewage Discharges

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of water authorities' reports for 1987 detailing works which failed to comply with discharge consent conditions.

Mr. Moynihan: I am arranging for copies of the returns of the water authorities for those sewage treatment works which failed to comply with their discharge consent conditions in 1987 to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions his Department has had with Thames water authority about the allocation of extra funds to bring all the authority's sewage treatment works up to the current discharge consent standard; and what funds have been allocated as a result over each of the next five years.

Mr. Moynihan: Expenditure on sewage treatment works features in the Thames water authority corporate plan which the chairman is due to discuss with my noble Friend the Minister of State before the summer recess. The Department sets a ceiling on each authority's capital expenditure in aggregate for the year ahead but does not allocate amounts to particular functional programmes.

Rating Reform

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if it is his intention, under the provisions of clause 6 of the Local Government Finance Bill, to require local authority social workers to provide changes of their clients' addresses to community charge registration officers;

(2) what use will be made of social service department records in building up community charge registers.

Mr. Howard: Community charges registration officers will be able to request information from their own or any other local authority for the purpose of carrying out their functions. It is intended that regulations under schedule 2 will limit the information to be supplied about individuals to names and addresses and the dates on or between which they were known to the local authority. The regulations will not permit source documents, or the reasons for an individual being known to a local authority, to be passed to a registration officer; nor will they empower local authorities to volunteer information without a specific request from a registration officer.

Nuclear Waste

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department"s policy towards the relative merits of a central dry store facility for nuclear waste as against small storage systems above ground at the sites where the nuclear waste is created.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend shall form a view of the relative merits of a central dry store facility for nuclear waste as opposed to small storage systems above ground where the nuclear waste is created when proposals are made in sufficient detail for assessment of their respective environmental implications.

Housing

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that the process of tenant consultation required by the Housing Bill and described on pages 11 to 13 of his Department's paper "Tenants' Choice" will include (a) provision for a compulsory secret ballot, and (b) a ban on the offering of financial inducements and similar practices; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The Government intend that regulations under clause 95 of the Housing Bill will provide for tenants to cast their votes in privacy by means including postal voting. Votes will be received and counted, and the outcome certified, by an independent teller paid for by the applicant. It will be necessary for votes cast to relate to identifiable tenancies because they will determine not only whether the transaction may proceed, but also which tenants have opted to remain tenants of their existing landlord.

We shall ensure that the adoption by applicants of corrupt practices would be inconsistent with approved status under clause 87 of the Bill. Revocation of approval before the completion of the proposed statutory procedures would cause applications in train to fall.

Floating Jetty, Coulport

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the awarding of a contract for the construction of a floating jetty at RNAD Coulport; if he will name the successful bidder and list all those companies which submitted tenders for the contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Property Services Agency plans to award a contract later this summer. On commercial grounds it is not the agency's policy to publish the names of tenderers while the tender evaluation is still in progress.

Hampstead Heath

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will accept the London residuary body's recommendation to transfer ownership and management of Hampstead heath to the City of London.

Mr. Chope: We have considered very carefully the London residuary body's proposal. My right hon. Friend is disposed to accept the LRB's main recommendations but before proceeding with making an order to effect a transfer of Hampstead heath to the corporation of the City of London by April 1989, my Department has issued today a consultation letter inviting comments on what the contents of such an order should be. I have arranged for a copy of the consultation letter to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Housing Sites, East London

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if a consultant has been appointed to undertake the studies of potential housing sites in east London.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 20 April I announced that the Department was commissioning studies into the scope for housing development on five large areas in east London. The Department has selected Coopers and Lybrand Associates as the consultant for the study. The study will start shortly and will be completed within four months.

Stratospheric Ozone Review Group (Report)

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the second report of the stratospheric ozone review group; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I expect the report to be ready for publication by August, but in view of widespread interest in protecting the ozone layer the group has agreed to release its executive summary in advance. I have arranged for copies to be placed in the Library of the House.

The group, set up in 1985 by the Department of the Environment and the Meteorological Office, concludes that since its first report in August 1987 firm evidence has emerged of significant depletion of the stratospheric ozone layer as a result of man's activities. They say it is now virtually certain that the so-called Antarctic hole is caused by chlorofluorocarbons which are also implicated in ozone depletion over other parts of the globe, including the United Kingdom. The group gives clear warning that unless emissions are greatly reduced, and possibly phased out, more severe depletion of stratospheric ozone is likely to occur.

The Government will be studying the report carefully as soon as it is available, but we are already taking very careful note of this summary, and in particular its warning about the need to strengthen the provisions of the Montreal protocol. I shall bring this to the attention of my fellow Environment Ministers at the meeting of the Council on 16 June. Our first priority, however, shared with our partners in the European Community, remains that of ensuring that the protocol enters into force on 1 January 1989, as planned, and with the widest possible participation. This will allow the protocol's own review procedures to be put into effect.

Palace of Westminster (Microbiological Tests)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the results of all microbiological testing undertaken in the Palace of Westminster for the presence of legionella bacteria in air conditioning and all other water facilities.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 9 June 1988]: No regular testing is undertaken specifically for legionella bacteria. Details of the microbiological testing carried out in the last 12 months were given in response to the hon. Member's question of 7 June at column 740.

Storm Damage

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what expenditure has now been incurred or sanctioned by his Department for each local authority concerned on damage repairs and environmental resuscitation following the hurricane of 15 October 1987; how much of this is financed by (a) the National Exchequer, (b) local authorities themselves; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The Department has agreed to pay 75 per cent. of the amount by which a local authority's eligible expenditure under the special financial assistance scheme announced on 21 October 1987 exceeds the specified threshold for the authority. Such thresholds are calculated for each authority by reference to penny rate products. The amounts shown in the following list have been derived from the initial, unaudited claims submitted by local authorities, and may be subject to revision on receipt of final, audited claims. The first column of figures shows the total amount of expenditure, net of receipts, that the Department has provisionally accepted as eligible under the scheme. The second column lists the threshold amounts, which have been applied by the Department. The 75 per cent. Exchequer grant applies to what is left after deducting eligible expenditure up to the threshold (in the second column of figures) from the total eligible expenditure (in the first column), and the third column of figures lists for each authority the amount to which the grant applies. The amount to be paid by the Department is therefore 75 per cent. of the amounts in the third column of figures. Three other local authorities, Hammersmith and Fulham, Waltham Forest, Welwyn and Hatfield, have submitted claims which at 13 June were still being checked by the Department.

"The Way Forward"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations were received by Nirex, following the issue of the discussion document "The Way Forward," by 31 May; and if he will list all institutional responders in the Official Report.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that Nirex has received about 2,500 responses to the discussion document "The Way Forward". Details of the responders are a matter for Nirex, but this information will be contained in a report on the consultation exercise to be published by the university of East Anglia.

Radiochemical Inspectorate

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he plans to take to evaluate the importance for environmental health of the consignments of missing radioactive materials reported in the most recent annual report of the radiochemical inspectorate.

Mr. Moynihan: The importance for environmental health of the consignments of radioactive material whose loss was reported in the recent annual report of Her Majesty's radiochemical inspectorate was evaluated at the time the losses were reported to the inspectorate. In each case it was concluded that there would be no danger to any member of the public who might come into contact with any of the lost consignments.

Toxic Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy, at the next European Council of Environmental Ministers, to raise the export of toxic and radioactive wastes from the European Economic Community to Guinea, Guinea-Bissau and Benin for disposal, by companies including Hobday Ltd. of the Isle of Man, BIS Import-Export of London and Inter-Contrat.

Mr. Moynihan: The question of exports of toxic waste to Third world countries appears on the agenda for the meeting of the EC Environment Council later this week.

Drigg Dump Site

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the radioactive wastes by radioactivity content, currently buried at the Drigg dump site near Sellafield, arises from contracts made with foreign companies or Governments.

Mr. Moynihan: Less than half of 1 per cent. of the radioactive waste currently disposed of at the Drigg site is estimated to have arisen from contracts made with foreign companies or Governments.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his replies to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conway, Official Report, 20 May, columns 603-4, what nuclear materials in what bequerel measurements, respectively, account for the 470 terabequerel total disposed of at the Drigg dump near Sellafield.

Mr. Moynihan: The principal radionuclides comprising the 470 terabecquerels total activity currently disposed of at the Drigg disposal site are as follows:

Radionuclide	Total activity in TBq at 1 January 1986
Tritium	410
Carbon 14	2·6
Strontium 90	1·5
Technetium 99	$9·7 \times 10^{-5}$
Iodine 129	$1·9 \times 10^{-7}$
Caesium 137	1·8
Radium 226	10^{-2}
Thorium 232	3·4
Uranium 234	17
Uranium 235	0·56
Uranium 238	18
Neptunium 237	8×10^{-2}
Plutonium 238	$1·8 \times 10^{-2}$
Plutonium 239	1
Plutonium 240	0·6
Plutonium 241	11
Americium 241	1·1

American Waste

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to whether the American waste proposed to be dumped in the United Kingdom will include hospital waste or clinical waste.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 9 June at column 684.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to whether the American waste proposed to be dumped in the United Kingdom will include polychlorinated biphenyls.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that the export of polychlorinated biphenyls is prohibited by United States law.

Pollution

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to take full account at the meeting of the Environment Council on 16 June of any findings and recommendations of the House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment with respect to (a) chlorofluorocarbons and ozone layer depletion, (b) large combustion plant emissions, (c) small car emissions and (d) acid deposition.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government will be carefully studying the Select Committee's report with a view to making a response in due course. At the Environment Council on 16 June my noble Friend the Minister of State will take note of the Committee's recommendations and of the views of the House when the debate is held on the proposed directive on large combustion plants.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Incomes

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average post-tax income now received by the wealthiest 2 per cent. of taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The average post-tax income in 1988-89 of the top 2 per cent. of income tax payers is expected to be about £46,000.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average share of post-tax income now received by the wealthiest 1 per cent. of taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The top 1 per cent. of income tax payers receive about 5 per cent. of income tax payers' total income after tax in 1988-89.

Commercial Buildings (Depreciation Allowance)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report his estimate of the gain to the revenue in a full year from abolishing the depreciation allowance on commercial buildings other than factories.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Capital allowances for commercial buildings (excluding industrial buildings) are available only for hotels and all buildings in enterprise zones. The Exchequer gain from abolishing capital allowances for new hotel building work would be less than £5 million in the first year rising to around £20 million after five years. Gains in later years would depend upon future levels of investment. No figures are available for commercial buildings in enterprise zones.

Property Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the yield to the Revenue in a full year of a property tax equal to 1 per cent. of the current value of all land and buildings; and if he can provide separate estimates for residential, commercial and industrial property.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The national balance sheet estimates of the current value of all land and buildings at the end of 1986 was some £1,050 billion, 1 per cent. of which amounts to £10·5 billion. Corresponding figures for residential, commercial and industrial property are respectively £6·9 billion, £1·9 billion and £0·3 billion. The figures include property owned by central and local government.

Remuneration and Benefits in Kind

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his estimate of the gain to the Revenue in a full year from adding the whole cost of remuneration and benefits in kind to the income of the recipient for tax purposes;

(2) what is his estimate of the gain to the Revenue in a full year from disallowing all remuneration and benefits in kind as an expense against tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The taxable value of cars and free fuel provided for private use by an employer is calculated by reference to a set of scale charges. Beneficial loans are valued by reference to the difference between the official rate of interest (which broadly reflects commercial rates) and the actual rate of interest paid; accommodation provided by an employer is taxed by reference to the annual value of the accommodation, less any rent paid. Information on the cost to the employer of providing the four benefits listed is not available centrally to the Inland Revenue.

The taxable value of other remuneration in kind received by directors and higher paid employees is already determined by reference to the cost to the employer.

Estimates of the revenue effect of either taxing all remuneration in kind by reference to the cost to the employer or disallowing all of these costs in the computation of the employers' taxable profits are therefore not available.

Family Taxation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average tax burden on a married couple with two children under 16 years in 1978-79; and what it will be in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Between 1978-79 and 1988-89 the real take home pay of a couple with two children (one under 11, one 11 to 15) on average male earnings will have risen by 27 per cent. In the same period, the proportion of their earnings taken in income tax (net of child benefit) and NIC is estimated to have fallen from 20·6 per cent. to 20 per cent. If the 1978-79 tax regime had been kept in place and simply adjusted for inflation, the proportion of earnings taken in income tax and NIC taxes would have been 23·7 per cent.

Hereditament Maps

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide copies of hereditament maps sent from provincial offices to the Public Record Office at Kew, London, to those provincial offices that require them.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Valuation Office has made arrangements for copies of the hereditament maps to be available to those of their provincial offices which have a proven operational need; the Public Record Office does of course have facilities available for local record offices and members of the public who wish to purchase copies, subject to the normal scale of charges.

Gilt Edged Securities

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total net issue of gilt edged securities in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley: The total issue of gilt edged securities, net of redemptions, in the financial year 1987-88 was £7,120 million.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why, in the light of the fact that the public sector generated a financial surplus, it was necessary to make a net issue of gilt edged securities in 1987-88.

Mr. Lilley: The aim of the Government's funding policy in 1987-88 was to fund the PSBR and any net change in official reserves of foreign currency fully over the financial year as a whole, by sales of gilt edged securities to the non-bank private sector and the overseas sector.

In the financial year 1987-88 the Government generated a public sector debt repayment of £3·5 billion. However, there was a net increase in official reserves of foreign currency of approximately £11·1 billion. After allowing for other forms of funding, £7·1 billion net gilt sales were required to achieve a full fund.

VAT

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he now expects to hear from the European Court about its decision on the case initiated by the Commission on the application of value added tax to gas, electricity, water, sewerage and on new commercial and industrial buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The European Court of Justice has recently announced that it will deliver its judgment on 21 June.

EC (Budget Contributions)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now make a statement on that part of the agreement arising from the Brussels Council of 11 to 13 February which has led to an increase in the future United Kingdom net budget contribution of £200 million to £300 million per annum; and if he will set out the benefits arising to the United Kingdom from this additional expenditure.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The increase in our net contribution results mainly from the decision on Community expenditure and own resources taken at the European Council. The benefits of the Brussels package were outlined by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in her statement on 15 February at columns 705-707.

Civil Service (Value for Money)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what definition of value for money is applied within the Civil Service; and whether there are any tests or procedures for its evaluation.

Mr. Major [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The recent guide to policy evaluation which was published on 12 April 1988 and a copy of which was placed in the Library described value for money as:

"Ultimately the final social and economic benefit of a policy in relation to the cost. Sometimes used as shorthand for the optimum combination of economy, effectiveness and efficiency."

Given the variety of activities with which the Civil Service is concerned and the difficulties in a number of areas of valuing final output, there is no single test or procedure for evaluating value for money. But such tests would include the extent to which the effectiveness of the programme has been enhanced without additional resources or, alternatively, the extent to which effectiveness has been maintained with fewer resources through increased efficiency and improved economy. Volume I of the last public expenditure White Paper included a broad description of the measures being taken to improve value for money. Examples of value for money are given in the programme chapters in volume II.

Mortgage Interest

Mr. Soley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of mortgage interest relief for 1987-88, divided by ranges of total income and showing (a) the number of each band receiving mortgage relief, (b) the average value of relief per mortgagor, (c) the total cost of relief, (d) the percentage of total cost and (e) the total number of taxpayers in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Provisional estimates are given in the table. These are based on projections to 1987-88 of information in the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and the 1985 family expenditure survey. The estimates include mortgages formerly under the option mortgage scheme which are now subsumed within MIRAS.

Forestry

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate (a) the amount of tax relief which will be claimed against forestry operations and (b) the area of land involved in these claims, under the interim arrangements for tax relief on forestry operations announced in his Budget statement in the current year.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide an estimate of the annual cost to the Exchequer of the revenue forgone as a result of the transitional provisions for tax relief to occupiers of commercial woodlands and those who became occupiers as a result of commitments entered into applications for grants received by the Forestry Commission before 15 March.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Income and corporation tax relief in respect of commercial woodlands was estimated at some £10 million a year at the rates of personal income tax applying before the Budget. Under the proposals announced in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Budget the relief is being phased out, and the cost will therefore reduce year by year at a rate which will depend on the extent to which the new planting grants are taken up. It is not possible to estimate the area of land which may be involved.

Income Tax Evasion

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the total loss of revenue from income tax evasion in each of the last five years, to date; what specific action he is taking to reduce the loss of revenue from income tax evasion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1988]: It is not possible to form a reliable estimate of revenue lost through tax evasion.

Since 1979 there has been a steady increase in the resources devoted by the Inland Revenue to investigations. This is reflected in the increase in the yield from compliance work over the period: from £111 million in the year to 31 October 1979 to £741 million in the year to 31 March 1987.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals, in each of the last five years to date, have been charged with offences related to the non-payment or under-payment of income tax; how many such individuals have been prosecuted for such offences; what was the minimum, average and maximum loss of revenue where prosecution took place; how many individuals, found guilty of tax offences, were fined or sentenced to a term of imprisonment; and what was the minimum, average and maximum fine and term of imprisonment.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The charge is an integral part of the summons or warrant, which is in turn a part of the prosecution process. It follows that the number of people charged and the number of people prosecuted are the same. However, for various reasons, some prosecutions do not run their full course.

The number of people prosecuted to trial stage for offences related to tax evasion are as follows (prosecutions not completed are shown in brackets):

	Number
1983-84	159 (17)
1984-85	238 (14)
1985-86	320 (9)
1986-87	325 (8)
1987-88	210 (2)

The other information requested could not be provided except at disproportionate cost. But over the period the amounts of tax at stake varied from £90 to £1·7 million; fines ranged from £50 to £60,000; and sentences of actual imprisonment (ignoring suspended sentences) ranged from 1 day to 8 years.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate how much revenue has been forgone by the Treasury due to tax evasion for each year since 1979, in cash and real terms, at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 June 1988]: It is not possible to form a reliable estimate of revenue lost through tax evasion.

Inland Revenue (Staffing)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from Inland Revenue staff representatives about staffing levels; in what grades of staff current staff numbers are below establishment; what is the current backlog in routine inspection work; and how many staff are engaged in investigating suspected tax evasion and frauds.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1988]: I have received no such representations recently, but staff representatives are in regular contact with senior management in the Inland Revenue on a wide variety of issues, including staffing levels. The numbers of staff in post in tax offices are generally in line with authorised numbers, but there are particular staff shortfalls at some grades of the tax inspectorate. I am not quite sure what the hon. Member means by "routine inspection work"; but the state of work in tax offices at April 1988 was generally good. In particular, the number of items of post awaiting attention for more than 14 days was at its lowest level for very many years. The Revenue currently employs some 2,600 staff on investigation work in local tax offices and specialist units.

Personal Sector (Financial Deficit)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the financial deficit of the personal sector for each year since 1979 in constant and cash terms both in total and per household.

Mr. Major [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Estimates of the personal sector financial surplus/deficit at current prices are published in table 1.10 of "Financial Statistics", a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library. No estimates are available on a constant price basis. No comparable figures are available for the number of United Kingdom households.

Security Firms (Tenders)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what criteria it was decided to invite security firms with long-standing contracts with the Inland Revenue in Northern Ireland to tender, following the Inland Revenue's decision to bring all sites in Northern Ireland subject to private guarding under one contract; and on what basis it was decided not to invite certain such firms to tender for the contract.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 June 1988]: There were two main criteria for selecting firms to tender for the Inland Revenue guarding contracts. First, the firms had to have the capacity to provide and maintain security guarding at all the Revenue offices where this was required throughout Northern Ireland, including back-up and support facilities. Second, the firms had to be members of the British Security Industry Association or operate to a standard equivalent to that set by the association.

Taxation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give for each region of the United Kingdom the tax payable in 1988-89 at the 1987-88 rates above 40 per cent. and the reduction in tax payable in a full year that will result from the top rate tax reductions;

(2) if he will give for each region of the United Kingdom the gain per tax unit and per household from the income tax measures announced in the Budget;

(3) if he will give for each region of Britain his estimate of the additional spending power that will be available in the region as a result of income tax cuts announced in the Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 7 June 1988]. Estimates of the direct revenue effect of the changes in income tax announced in the 1988 Budget are given in table 4.1 of the "Financial Statement and Budget Report 1988-89". I regret that separate estimates for each region of the United Kingdom are not available. The latest information available by region relates to 1985-86. Estimates of the income tax liabilities of (a) all taxpayers and (b) higher rate taxpayers in each region were given in my reply to the hon. Member for Sedgefield (Mr. Blair) on 23 May 1988, at columns 54-56, and estimates of the numbers of taxpayers in each region by their marginal tax rate were given in my reply to the hon. Member for Ynys Mon (Mr. Jones) on 27 May 1988, at columns 373-74.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Cervical Cancer

13. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give an estimate of the cost of cervical cancer screening in the north-west in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Cervical cancer screening is often carried out in conjunction with other health care services for women. It is not therefore possible to identify separately the precise cost of the screening programme in individual regions. We do however know that in 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, about 400,000 smears were taken within the North Western RHA. The estimated national average cost of about £10 for taking and examining individual smears would point to expenditure in the region of the order of £4 million for that year.

41. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what his Department is doing to assist Leicestershire district health authority in dealing with the delays in processing cervical cancer screening tests.

Mrs. Currie: The DHSS circular on cervical cancer screening, a copy of which is in the Library, states that laboratories must aim to send the results of a smear to the doctor who submitted it within a maximum of one month of receiving it. It is for the district health authorities to take action to achieve this. This Department monitors the position and we are aware that Leicestershire district health authority has recruited additional staff and that screeners are working overtime. The processing time has been reduced from eight weeks at 1 April to four weeks at 23 May.

78. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress of the cervical cancer screening programme.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress of the cervical cancer screening programme.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friends to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wanstead and Woodford (Mr. Arbuthnot) earlier today.

Social Fund

17. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has recieved concerning the operation of the social fund.

Mr. Portillo: Since 11 April some 200 letters referring to the new provisions have been received.

NHS (Expenditure)

18. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the percentage of the gross domestic product which was spent on the National Health Service in 1987.

Mr. Newton: No estimate for 1987 is yet possible. The latest published estimates for 1986 is that gross expenditure on the National Health Service in the United Kingdom accounted for 5·5 per cent. of the gross domestic product, compared with 4·8 per cent. in 1979.

Housing Benefit

19. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of housing claimants who are likely still to be losers after transitional protection payments are made.

20. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of housing benefit claimants who are likely still to be losers after transitional protection payments are made.

22. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of housing benefit claimants who are likely still to be losers after transitional protection payments are made.

Mr. Portillo: We estimate that in cash terms, about one half of all housing benefit recipients either gained or saw no change in their entitlement to that benefit after April. Many of those who have lost will now be getting more in other benefits. The transitional payments scheme will help the position of many who have lost significant amounts.

23. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he now proposes to make any further changes in the housing benefit scheme.

Mr. Scott: I have nothing to add to the announcements made during the debate on 27 April and the subsequent written answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 5 May at columns 550-51.

25. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available on the impact of the new housing benefit rules on students living away from home.

Mr. Portillo: We published estimates of the impact of the social security reforms in October 1987. There is no analysis of the impact on students specifically.

38. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of representations he has received since the beginning of April regarding the effects of the changes in housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

42. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many right hon. and hon. Members have made representations to him on the effect on their constituents of recent housing benefit changes; what stage has now been reached in operation of the special cases unit for dealing with problems arising from the changes; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the new system of assessing housing benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has received a considerable number of letters and inquiries about the changes announced on 27 April and these are being handled in the normal way. Preparations of the transitional payments unit are at an advanced stage and on schedule for becoming fully operational in July.

61. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce detailed procedures for claims for transitional payments for the new central unit in respect of housing benefit claims.

Mr. Portillo: A new leaflet "RR4 Housing Benefit—New Rules" was printed on 27 May and copies have been placed in the Library. The leaflet explains who can qualify, how assessments will be calculated, and contains an application form for despatch by Freepost to the transitional payments units. The leaflets will be available frm a wide number of agencies including the transitional payment unit, DHSS local offices, local authorities and post offices.

Hospital Building Programme

21. Mr. Rhodes James: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress of the hospital building programme.

Mrs. Currie: Investment in National Health Service building is continuing at record levels. Information held centrally shows there are now 504 health building schemes, each costing over £1 million, at various stages of planning, design and construction. The total values of the programme is estimated at £3·8 billion and capital expenditure this financial year is expected to exceed £1 billion.

47. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many major hospital building schemes have been started and completed since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Information held centrally shows that, since 1 April 1979, a total of 286 health building schemes each costing over £1 million, have been started and completed. This is the biggest sustained building programme ever in the history of the National Health Service. A list has been placed in the Library.

Blood Glucose Testing Strips

24. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when blood glucose testing strips will be made available on prescription to diabetics.

Mr. Newton: My hon. Friend will be pleased to know that blood glucose testing strips became prescribable by general practitioners on 1 June.

Community Care

26. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends responding to the recently published report of the Public Accounts Committee on community care developments.

27. Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends responding to the recently published report of the Public Accounts Committee on community care developments.

30. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends responding to the recently published report of the Public Accounts Committee on community care developments.

32. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends responding to the recently published report of the Public Accounts Committee on community care developments.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 23 May at column 89.

36. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to be in a position to make a statement on his policy towards the report by Sir Roy Griffiths on community care.

39. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to be in a position to make a statement on his policy towards the report by Sir Roy Griffiths on community care.

46. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to be in a position to make a statement on his policy towards the report by Sir Roy Griffiths on community care.

53. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he now expects to be in a position to make a statement on his policy towards the report by Sir Roy Griffiths on community care.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 29 March at columns 439-40.

54. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the responses to date from (a) voluntary organisations and (b) other groups to the Griffiths report on community care.

Mr. Newton: We have received responses from two voluntary organisation and from 25 other interested groups. We will take them into account in framing our own proposals.

55. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the response to date to the report by Sir Roy Griffiths on community care.

Mr. Newton: We have received 48 responses from interested individuals and organisations and will take account of them in framing our own proposals.

56. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total public expenditure in the latest available year on the support of individuals in community care, broken down by the category of benefit.

Mr. Scott: The proportion of the money spent on retirement pensions, disability benefits and income support which can be said to contribute directly to the support of people in the community who might otherwise have to go into institutional care cannot be accurately estimated but is likely to be significant.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he intends to take to ensure that satisfactory arrangements are made for dowry payments by district health authorities to local authority social services departments and voluntary organisations to meet the cost of care in the community.

Mr. Newton: We look to health authorities and local authorities to identify jointly an individual's need for community care and to negotiate locally the funding of a cost-effective way of meeting these needs. The Department monitors progress in pursuing community care and other service aims through the region's long-term strategic plans and annual short-term programmes.

Psychiatric Patients

28. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are currently in psychiatric institutions; what was the comparable figure six years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: On 31 December 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 60,279 patients resident in National Health Service mental illness hospitals and units in England. The corresponding figure for 1980 was 74,831. These figures include those people admitted for short-term treatment and respite care.

It is estimated that the 14,500 net drop in residents is accounted for by decreases due to 24,000 people discharged and 32,500 deaths, and increases due to 42,000 new patients during the period 1981-86.

In 1986 although the number of in-patients in National Health Service illness hospitals and units in England was around 60,000, there were over 70,000 available staffed beds. As a result of better methods of treatment and modern practice, far fewer people need to be cared for as long-term in-patients.

Breast Cancer Screening

29. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what additional resources the Government are providing in the current year for the national breast cancer screening programme.

Mrs. Currie: In addition to the resources of over £9 million provided to meet the initial and continuing costs of the first screening centres, the Government are providing £9 million in 1988-89 for the further development of the breast cancer screening service. Financial allocations to regional health authorities also include over £6 million for capital expenditure on the buildings and equipment for sufficient centres to serve about half the remaining population of each region on the basis of one centre per half a million population.

Between 1987-88 and 1989-90, on current plans, nearly £55 million will be provided to set up and run the screening centres, including central initiatives to support the service, for example through staff training, development of standard software and health education.

57. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress of the breast cancer screening programme.

59. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress of the breast cancer screening programme.

60. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress of the breast cancer screening programme.

71. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many breast cancer screening centres are now operating around the country.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in implementing the national breast cancer screening programme.

Mrs. Currie: We are very pleased with the excellent progress of the national breast cancer screening programme. Some 17 screening centres—at least one in each regional health authority—including back-up services for the follow-up of any screen detected abnormalities have now been set up. Nearly all have by now started screening. Each centre serves a population of up to half a million; four of the centres—at Guildford, Camberwell (King's college hospital), Manchester and Nottingham are also providing training for staff from the whole programme. Planning is almost complete for the nationwide service in England, to be established by 1990. This will involve about 100 centres, and will include mobile caravans for rural areas. We hope to be able to announce details in July. We anticipate that the programme should significantly reduce mortality from breast cancer which is the major killer of women under 65.

Life Expectancy

31. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the trends in life expectancy in Britain.

Mrs. Currie: Figures prepared by the Government Actuary's Department and published in table 7.2 of the 1988 edition of "Social Trends" show that expectation of life continues to rise at all ages in the United Kingdom. Life expectation at birth for males rose from 48 years in 1906 to 68·8 years in 1971 and 71·5 years in 1984. The corresponding increase for females was from 51·6 years in 1906 to 75 years in 1971 and 77·4 years in 1984. The assumptions used in the 1985-based population projections imply a further increase in the expectation of life to 75·2 years for males and 80·3 years for females by 2024-25.

Consultants (Waiting Lists)

33. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he proposes to improve the information available to patients on consultants' waiting lists.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 28 April at column 253.

Pensioners (Incomes)

34. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of pensioners have a second income besides their state pension.

Mr. Scott: The latest available figures are for 1985 when 80 per cent. of all pensioner households and 85 per cent. of recently retired pensioner households had income from sources other than state benefits.

Pensioners (Spending)

35. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the annual change in spending on durable goods by pensioners in Britain since 1979.

Mr. Scott: The average spending of pensioner households on durable goods rose in real terms by two thirds, or 8·9 per cent. a year on average, between 1979 and 1985, the latest year for which figures are available.

Social Security Reform

37. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received on social security changes since 1 June.

Mr. Portillo: We continue to receive representations. I am unable to provide a precise number.

Organ Transplants

40. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress is being made with the organ transplantation programme.

Mrs. Currie: Provisional figures for the first five months of 1988 show a major rise in organ transplantation compared with a similar period last year. The total number of National Health Service transplants of kidneys, hearts, heart-lungs, lungs and livers notified to the United Kingdom transplant service are as follows:

1 January 1987 to 29 May 1987: 708
1 January 1988 to 31 May 1988: 1,045

These statistics reveal a remarkable increase of 48 per cent. in the number of transplants carried out. The figures reflect the positive publicity given to organ transplantation this year, both by the Government and by others.

As previously announced by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health on 16 December 1987 at column 1094, from 1 April 1988 we are also funding an additional centre for liver transplantation at St. James' university hospital, Leeds and a fourth heart transplant unit at Wythenshawe hospital, Manchester.

On 3 June I was honoured to be the guest speaker at a special meeting to celebrate the 20th anniversary of the United Kingdom transplant service. In recognition of the growing demands on its services resulting from the expansion of the transplant programme, we have allocated additional funds to the United Kingdom transplant service in this financial year. The revenue allocation in 1988-89 is £929,000 compared with £800,000 in 1987-88. The additional resources provide for additional staff in the organ exchange and data processing departments, and will help to develop the eye bank which stores tissue for use in corneal transplant operations. We are also providing a capital allocation of £61,000 for new and replacement equipment.

Diabetics

43. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes to services for diabetics have occurred since 1983.

Mrs. Currie: Provision of services for diabetics is shared by general practitioners and by district health authorities. This has not been changed during the period in question.

Over the period, as part of the development of services in the community the following items have become prescribable by general practitioners—

i. in 1983, U100 syringes for use with U100 strength insulin (insulin preparations were standardised to 100 units/ml in that year);

ii. from September 1987 disposable syringes and needles;

iii. from 1 June 1988 blood glucose testing strips.

NHS (Review)

44. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made on the Government's review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made on the Government's review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made on the Government's review of the National Health Service.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made on the Government's review of the National Health Service.

Mr. Moore: We are continuing to explore a wide range of ideas and shall bring forward proposals as soon as we can.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the manpower planning advisory group currently reviewing the staffing structure of the National Health Service is due to report.

Mr. Newton: The joint DHSS/NHS manpower planning advisory group has a continuing programme of reviewing individual staff groups. Its current work programme includes manpower, training and skill mix reviews in the occupational therapy, clinical psychology, radiography, pharmacy and physiotherapy groups. Reports are expected at various times during this year and next. The Management Advisory Service has recently completed a report on the review of pathology staffing for the MPAG which is currently under consideration by the NHS management board and regional health authority chairmen.

Portable Personal Pensions

45. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the response to date to the availability of portable personal pensions.

Mr. Portillo: Although the new personal pension arrangements under the Social Security Act 1986 do not start until 1 July, I am aware that there is already substantial interest in this important new option in saving for retirement.

Disabled People

48. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a timetable for the implementation of the remaining sections of the Disabled Persons (Services Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Discussions are continuing with local authority associations to determine the resources necessary for the successful implementation of the individual sections of the Act. The timing of further implementation is dependent on the outcome of these discussions.

SENSE

49. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what grants the Government have given in the current year to SENSE.

Mr. Scott: We recently announced a grant of £500,000 towards the development of the centre at Edgbaston additional to the grant of £300,000 in March. Other continuing grants are £15,000 towards the Usher's Syndrome project and £30,000 towards central administrative costs.

Regional Health Authorities (Role)

50. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans his Department has to change the role of regional health authorities in England, particularly with regard to joint planning of health and social services.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 26 May at column 270.

Board and Lodgings Payments

51. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress of his current review into board and lodgings payments.

Mr. Portillo: I presume that the hon. Member is referring to the review of income support for people in hostels. We have commissioned a study by the Policy Studies Institute into the characteristics of hostels providing accommodation for income support recipients. We expect to receive the results shortly. In the meantime, no decisions have been taken on future arrangements for paying these claimants.

Private Health Insurance Companies

52. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the chairmen of BUPA, PPP and other private health insurance companies; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Currie: The private sector makes a significant contribution to health care and my colleagues and I take care to keep in touch with its representatives. The sector now provides some 200 hospitals (about 10,000 beds), over 2,000 nursing homes (about 52,000 beds) and health insurance for nearly 5·5 million people. We welcome this growing response to public demand and the increasing cost-effective co-operation that is developing between the public and private sectors to the benefit of all.

Europe Against Cancer Week

58. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on Government participation in Europe Against Cancer week.

80. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on Government participation in Europe against Cancer week.

Mrs. Currie: The Department hosted the press launch of Europe Against Cancer week in the United Kingdom on 28 April. The week, observed throughout the European Community from 1 to 7 May and marked by a wide range of events organised by the National Health Service, cancer charities and voluntary organisations, was designed to dispel public fears of cancer and to emphasise that many cancers are preventable and curable. We also announced that we were making £100,000 available to provide full or part funding of activities during the week as well as for future projects under the European cancer initiative.

Nurses (Pay Award)

62. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to extend the funding of the recent nurses' pay award to cover extra recruits or additional posts over and above existing staffing levels.

Mr. Newton: The Government have provided the additional money required to fund in full the recent pay award. It is for health authorities to determine their nursing establishment, having regard to the total resources available.

63. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much extra recognition the current year's nurses' pay award gives to those nurses with extra skills and responsibilities.

81. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what increases nurses working in paediatric intensive care can expect to receive as a result of the nurses' pay award.

Mr. Newton: The extent to which an individual nurse will benefit from the new pay award will depend on the duties and responsibilities of the post occupied. However, the maximum pay for a staff nurse in a post which calls for extra skills and responsibilities, for example in paediatric intensive care is now £10,650 a year—an increase of over £2,000 or 24 per cent. above the previous maximum annual salary of a staff nurse. A similar nurse working in inner London will receive an annual salary of £12,538 maximum, an increase of over £3,000 or over 31 per cent.

70. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services by how much nurses' pay has increased since April 1979.

Mr. Newton: With the recent pay award, nurses' pay has increased by 44 per cent. in real terms since April 1979.

NHS Ancillary Staff (Pay and Conditions)

64. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to meet representatives of the ancillary staffs in the National Health Service to discuss pay and conditions.

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to meet representatives of the ancillary staffs in the National Health Service to discuss pay and conditions.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to meet representatives of the ancillary staffs in the National Health Service to discuss pay and conditions.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Motherwell, South (Dr. Reid) earlier today.

Hospital Building (West Midlands)

65. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many major hospital building schemes are currently under construction in the west midlands.

Mrs. Currie: Details of schemes currently under construction in the west midlands with a capital cost exceeding £1 million are given in the table.

Scheme	Capital cost £ million
Bromyard Community Hospital, Herefordshire	3·2
Edward Street, Psychogeriatric Unit, Sandwell	6·1
Manor Hospital, Maternity Services, Walsall	1·5
Manor Hospital, Phase 4 development, Walsall	20·7
Telford DGH, Shropshire	29·8
Stoke City General Hospital, Surgical Accommodation, North Staffordshire	20·6
Stafford Community Mental Handicap Unit, Mid-Staffordshire	1·0
Burton DGH, Central Production Unit, South East Staffordshire	3·4
Burton DGH, Psychiatric and Maternity Units, South East Staffordshire	2·4
Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Engineering Services Phases 3 and 4, Central Birmingham	1·6
Queen Elizabeth Hospital, beds and theatres, Central Birmingham	0·2
Good Hope Hospital, Phase II development, North Birmingham	5·8
Dudley Road Hospital, Post graduate medical centre, West Birmingham	1·0

Family Doctor Services

66. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to give the public more information about family doctor services.

Mr. Newton: The White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249), published in November 1987, sets out a number of measures for improving information to the public about family doctor services. For example, the Government intend to require family practitioner committees both to provide medical lists which contain more comprehensive information about practices in their areas, and to make the lists more widely available locally.

The wider provision by family doctors of practice leaflets, which contain information for patients about the doctors, the organisation of the practice and the services available, will also be encouraged. In addition, the Government wish to see a relaxation of the current restrictions applied by the General Medical Council on the extent to which family doctors may advertise factual information about their practices. They therefore welcome the Office of Fair Trading's recent reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of the current restrictions on family doctors' advertising.

Doctors (Referrals Statistics)

67. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the variation in the rates of family doctors' emergency and out-patient referrals.

Mrs. Currie: The Government recognise the wide variation in the rates of family doctors' referrals. The reasons for these variations are largely unknown. An increasing number of research workers are active in this field and the Department is currently funding a project in the East Anglian regional health authority to develop an out-patient referral information system. These will help us to understand more fully the underlying behavioural patterns and to what extent these are related to the health needs of patients.

Babies (Malformation)

68. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the reduction in the notification rate for babies with central nervous systems defects.

86. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the notification rate for spina bifida.

Mrs. Currie: Information for both types of malformations are shown in the table. They refer to malformations observed in both live and still births. The statistics are a by-product of the congenital malformations notified to OPCS. These are likely to be an incomplete measure of the total number of affected infants, partly because the notification scheme is voluntary, but, more importantly, because in the interests of obtaining data quickly the notifications refer only to malformations observed at birth or up to seven days after birth.

Notification rates per 10,000 total births of babies born with selected congenital malformations, England and Wales, 1977-1986

Year	Malformations
	Central nervous system[1]	Spina bifida[2]
1977	32·5	15·3
1978	29·2	14·0
1979	25·5	13·1
1980	22·3	11·4
1981	19·2	10·4
1982	16·1	8·1
1983	14·5	6·7
1984	12·6	5·9
1985	11·0	5·5

Income Support Premiums

69. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what effects the introduction of income support premiums has had on the work load of social security officers.

Mr. Portillo: It is to be expected that income support as a simpler benefit than supplementary benefit will lead to a lesser workload, but it is too early to provide data resulting from monitoring the new system in operation.

Queen Elizabeth Hospital, Birmingham

72. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he will take to ensure that the intensive care unit at Queen Elizabeth hospital, Birmingham, is sufficiently funded so as to ensure that all seriously ill renal patients can obtain treatment.

Mrs. Currie: The allocation of resources to Queen Elizabeth hospital, Birmingham, is a matter for the Central Birmingham district health authority. I understand that the authority will be opening an additional—eighth—bed in the new intensive care unit in July and a further four when funds permit.

The Queen Elizabeth hospital is one of seven centres providing renal treatment in the west midlands and it is for the West Midlands regional health authority to decide the allocations between them. I understand that the regional health authority has increased its funding of the region's renal programme by £320,000 over the last year's levels —a 30 per cent. increase in real terms—and is considering the possibility of increasing this still further.

In-Patient Statistics (North-West)

73. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many in-patient cases are being treated in the north-western region in the latest year for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure in 1978.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986, the latest year for which information is available, 624,678 in-patient cases were treated. The comparable figure for 1978 was 511,674.

"Look After Your Heart" Campaign

74. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress of the "Look After Your Heart" campaign.

84. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of Government campaigns on health education for heart disease.

85. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the achievements of the Government's campaign "Look After Your Heart".

Mrs. Currie: "Look After Your Heart"—the first major heart disease prevention campaign in England—was launched in April 1987 with the aim, in its initial stages, of raising public awareness of the major risk factors associated with coronary heart disease and how they might be avoided. It followed previous campaigns such as "Look after Yourself" funded by the Health Education Council.

The campaign is planned as an "umbrella" under which the many local coronary heart disease programmes could be brought together and given increased impact. Community activity has been stimulated and supported in 172 health authorities and 65 local authorities, with "Look After Your Heart" community grants funding some 118 projects to the extent of £260,000. It is planned to continue this scheme into the next phase of the campaign, and we are also looking at ways of supporting longer-term projects.

The campaign has been notably successful in securing the active co-operation of industry and commerce. One way has been through a scheme of "healthy living" contracts, in which employers and organisations undertake to support the principles underlying the campaign by a series of practical innovations which can include, for example, providing no-smoking areas and healthy menus in public restaurants and works canteens, displaying and disseminating campaign material to staff and the public, and introducing "Look After Yourself" courses in exercise, nutrition and stress management. During the first year some 75 companies, employing almost 2 million people, joined the campaign, and many more are waiting to do so.

The Department and the Health Education Authority are consulting widely about the future shape of the "Look After Your Heart" programme. The results from the campaign's first tracking survey show that there has been a greater impact on socio-economic groups C2, D and E, (the groups at which the campaign is primarily aimed) than other socio-economic groups, and that the already high levels of awareness and knowledge of coronary heart disease risk factors have increased appreciably.

Perinatal Mortality Rates

75. Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on perinatal mortality rates.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) on 18 May at columns 501-2.

Consultant Geriatricians

76. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the increase in the number of consultant geriatricians since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The number of permanent paid and honorary consultants in post in the specialty of geriatric medicine increased by 129 from 363 in 1979 to 492 in 1986, an increase of 35·5 per cent.

NHS (Competitive Tendering)

77. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress of competitive tendering in the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: As at 31 March 1988, almost all domestic and laundry services and some 76 per cent. of catering services had been put out to tender. Estimated annual savings generated from contracts awarded for the three services totalled £106 million: £28 million from contracts won by outside contractors and £78 million from tenders secured by in-house organisations. I am very satisfied with the progress being made by health authorities in putting other services out to tender and I look forward to future progress.

GP Maternity Units

79. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many general practitioner maternity units have been closed in England and Wales in the past 10 years.

Mrs. Currie: The information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Nineteen general practitioner units were approved for closure between 1979 and 1986.

Health Promotion

82. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to encourage doctors to do more work in health promotion.

Mrs. Currie: Our plans are set out in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249) published in November 1987. Officials are discussing implementation of the necessary reforms with the family doctors' representatives, the General Medical Services Committee.

As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said in his reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield Hallam (Mr. Patnick) on 12 January at columns 128-30, major changes are to be made in the system of payment to family doctors to encourage them to provide a range of health promotion and preventive activities. We intend to link payment of basic practice allowance to the provision of health promotion and prevention of ill-health. We plan to introduce incentive payments for reaching target levels of population cover for vaccination, immunisation and cancer screening and new payments for arranging and providing regular health promotion sessions for patients. We intend also to pay a fee to a doctor providing an initial clinical assessment for patients registering with the NHS for the first time. We are consulting the doctors' representatives about amending the family doctors' contract with the National Health Service to make health promotion and the prevention of disease including regular health checks a specific part of their terms of service.

Social Benefits

83. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the new transitional arrangements for social benefits are now fully operational.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Members for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore), for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) and for Leyton (Mr Cohen) earlier today.

Maternity Units (Belper and Ashbourne)

87. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will visit the maternity units at Belper and Ashbourne to discuss their proposed closure.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans specifically to visit the maternity homes at Belper and Ashbourne. The matter is essentially one for local discussion at the moment. The proposals would be considered by Ministers only if the community health council opposes them.

Out-patient Departments

88. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to promote the efficiency of hospital out-patient departments.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are responsible for promoting and monitoring the efficiency of out-patient departments. A booklet "Reducing Waiting time in Out-Patient Departments" which gave advice on the organisation of an efficient out-patients department appointments system was issued to health authorities in 1985. Officials are now considering further initiatives to promote efficiency in out-patients departments.

Nurses (Meetings)

89. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his recent meeting with representatives of nurses.

Mr. Moore: On 23 May, at the annual congress of the Royal College of Nursing I announced the Government's acceptance of the broad thrust of the proposals put forward by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for the reform of nurse education and training. The response we have made is a clear indication of the importance which this Government attach to nurse education. It provides the statutory bodies with the guidance needed to enable them to carry forward their work on the detailed implications of the changes. The proposals are firmly based on the needs of patients and clients, and are designed to ensure that nurses are more appropriately prepared to meet perceived health care needs. I welcome the professions' enthusiastic response to the announcement. A copy of the letter to the chairman of the UKCC giving the Government's response is in the Library.

I also stressed this Government's recognition of the nurses' special position with regard to pay, and our firm commitment to the pay review body. Our acceptance of all five of its reports has clearly demonstrated our regard for the nursing profession. I also highlighted the benefits to the profession of the introduction of the new clinical grading structure, which will reward those nurses who acquire additional clinical skills and take on new duties and responsibilities. It will also provide a valuable incentive for those who wish to remain in clinical practice to do so.

British Diabetic Association

90. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the chairman of the British Diabetic Association and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Newton: I met Sir John Nabarro for an informal discussion on 16 July 1987. Among the main topics we touched upon were disposable syringes and needles, which became available on general practitioner prescription on 1 September 1987, and blood glucose test strips, which became available on general practitioner prescription on 1 June 1988.

Rating Reform

91. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the compensatory element to be built into the April 1989 income support rates to reflect 20 per cent. of the average community charge will be, in the case of a couple, double that which is applied to a single person.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 20 May 1988 at column 592.

Social Security Adjudication

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he plans any changes in order to improve the standards of decision-making on social security claims, in the light of the annual report of the Chief Adjudication Officer for 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We are studying the report's recommendations.

Ritalin

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients under the age of 10 years have been given the drug Ritalin at the Maudsley hospital in the last 12 months.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Health Budget

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the projected areas in the health care budget in England and Wales for 1988-89 and 1989-90 after catering for the gross domestic product deflator.

Mr. Newton: The information is as follows:

Gross expenditure—England
£ million (1988-89 prices)

	1988-89	1989-90
Hospital and community health services—current	12,091	12,154
Family practitioner services—current	4,687	4,779
Centrally financed services—current	527	519
National Health Service—capital	1,046	1,038
TOTAL	18,351	18,490

These figures are based on table 14.1 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1988-89 to 1990-91" (Cm. 288-II). The figures for 1988-89 do not include the addition of £596 million announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 21 April to meet the cost of the review bodies' recommendations on doctors' and nurses' pay. The 1989-90 plans are subject to review in the forthcoming public expenditure survey.

Information in respect of Health Service expenditure in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the main areas of health spending in English regional health authorities.

Mr. Newton: The 1986-87 summarised accounts of regional and district health authorities in England together with those of the special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals show in total main areas of expenditure as follows:

Current expenditure
Hospital services	8,255,383
Community health services	1,054,580
Other services[1]	572,464
Headquarters administration	434,739
	10,317,166
Capital expenditure	936,291
Total expenditure	11,253,457

[1] Includes ambulance, blood transfusion and mass radiography services, etc.

For analyses of this expenditure to regions and other more detailed England and regional information I refer the hon. Member to the Department's annual booklet "Health Authorities' Annual Accounts—National Summary (England)"—copies of which (for 1986-87 and earlier years) are held in the Library.

Vaccine Administration

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many tetanus vaccines were personally administered by (a) medical practitioners and (b) pharmacists in each year since 1982;

(2) how many flu' vaccines were personally administered by (a) medical practitioners and (b) pharmacists in each year since 1982;

(3) if he will take steps to remove the current anomaly whereby medical practitioners administer vaccines free of charge and claim back the cost while pharmacists providing the same vaccine must recover the cost directly from members of the public.

Mr. Newton: The personal administration of vaccines may be undertaken by doctors but not by pharmacists. Information on the number of tetanus and influenza vaccines personally administered by medical practitioners is not available centrally. General medical practitioners are remunerated through fees and allowances for supplying vaccines for personal administration as are pharmacists for supplying vaccines on prescription. In neither case are the cost of the vaccines recovered directly from members of the public, but a prescription charge will be payable (subject to the usual exemptions) where a pharmacist is supplying on prescription. There are no present plans to change these arrangements.

AIDS

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish in the Official Report for each health authority in England the number of persons suffering from AIDS; and if he will disaggregate the statistics by age and sex;

(2) what is his Department's latest estimate of the number of people in England that are currently HIV positive.

Mr. Newton: The numbers of cases of AIDS reported from each regional health authority are published monthly. Numbers of reported HIV antibody positive persons are published quarterly. Copies of the figures are available in the Library. Estimates of the number of people who are HIV antibody positive based on several factors including the number of known cases of AIDS, the number who may be susceptible to infection, the proportion of those infected who go on to develop AIDS, the varying incubation period and the proportion of those infected who present themselves for testing. It is evident that some of these factors are not precisely quantifiable, so the estimation can only be approximate. A group of experts, under the chairmanship of Sir David Cox, is now considering the estimation of and forecasts for the numbers of people infected with HIV and with AIDS over a two to five-year period.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many terminations of pregnancy have been effected in England because the mother is HIV positive.

Mr. Newton: Of the abortion notifications received for the period 1 January 1983 to 30 September 1987 (the 1987 data being provisional), there have been 17 abortions performed in England where AIDS[1] has been mentioned on the notification form.

[1] International Classification of Disease code 279.1—Deficiency of cell-mediated immunity.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on any research work undertaken by the World Health Organisation into AIDS using chimpanzees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The information we have is that there is currently no World Health Organisation work on AIDS using chimpanzees and none is planned.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what contact his Department is maintaining with the World Health Organisation in Copenhagen with regard to the spread of AIDS and venereal diseases.

Mr. Newton: The Department maintains close liaison with the World Health Organisation's European regional office in Copenhagen on all their programmes including the communicable diseases programme (which includes sexually transmitted diseases) and the programmes they undertake in conjunction with the global programme on AIDS.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide details of moneys (a) made available and (b) used by district health authorities in England and Wales in the past 12 months for the purpose of treatment of AIDS victims.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 27 May 1988]: In 1987-88 the Government made available an additional £25·1 million to health authorities in England as a contribution towards the costs of the provision of HIV and AIDS related services. In 1988-89 a total of £58·6 million has been allocated to help develop preventative, counselling and diagnostic services and to make a contribution towards the cost of care and treatment in hospitals and the community. The allocation of these funds, and any additional funding they may decide is needed, to HIV and AIDS related services is determined by individual authorities in the light of the particular needs in their areas. The allocation of funds in Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

School Nurses

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any representations about the school nursing service; and if he will make a statement listing the duties and responsibilities of school nurses.

Mr. Newton: We have received no representations about the school nursing service. The responsibility for the provision of school health services rests with individual health authorities and this includes the duties and responsibilities of school nurses.

Prescribing Publications

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in his Department's review of prescribing publications funded partly or wholly by his Department; and when he expects to announce the result of this review.

Mr. Newton: We are discussing the review with interested organisations and expect to complete it early next year.

Nurses

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much more pay nurses in inner London can expect to receive as a result of the current year's pay award.

Mr. Newton: Increases will depend on the duties and responsibilities of individual posts regraded within the new clinical grading structure. The table indicates the range of increases in basic pay for the main grades of nurses working in inner London.

Effects of 1988 pay award on selected nursing grades in inner London

Grade	Old pay scale[1] £	New pay scale[2 3] £	Cash increase £	Percentage increase

[2] Includes £930 Inner London Weighting and new Inner London Supplement of 9 per cent. (max. £958 p.a.) for qualified staff and 5 per cent. (max. £532 p.a.) for unqualified staff.
[3] The lettered scales indicate a range of possible outcomes for individual staff on regrading. Broadly, the higher letters for each grade will apply to those with additional skills, qualifications and responsibilities.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the waiting list for operations in National Health Service hospitals as at June 1979 and June 1987 in each of the following constituencies: (a) Amber Valley, (b) Mid Worcestershire, (c) West Lancashire, (d) Staffordshire Moorlands, (e) Hendon South, (f) Darlington and (g) Fylde.

Mr. Newton: The information is not available centrally in precisely the form requested. Details of surgical waiting lists in the district health authorities wholly or mainly covering the parliamentary constituencies are given in the table. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairmen of the district health authorities who may be able to provide information relating to the parliamentary constituencies.

Number of cases on in-patient waiting list—Surgical specialties

Social Service Departments (Attacks)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each year from 1979 until 1988 the number of physical attacks on members of local authority social service departments in the course of their duties.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information about assaults on social services staff is not collected centrally.

Children and Young Persons (Amendment) Act 1986

Mr. Walters: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when the Children and Young Persons (Amendment) Act regulations will be laid before Parliament; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when consideration of the draft rules relating to the Children and Young Persons (Amendment) Act will be concluded;

(3) what representations he has received seeking early implementation of the provisions of the Children and Young Persons (Amendment) Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: My hon. Friend has himself made representations seeking early implementation of the Children and Young Persons (Amendment) Act 1986. Consideration of the draft rules of court has been completed. They were laid before Parliament on 8 June and will come into effect on 1 August when sections 2 and 3 of the Act are implemented. This will give the courts and local authorities time to make the necessary preparations. It is expected that the charge and control regulations will be laid before Parliament in this Session.

Low-income Families

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a table from the low-income families statistics showing the number of children living in Scotland below, at or up to 40 per cent. above supplementary benefit level in 1979 and 1981, 1983 and 1985; and what proportion of Scottish children they represent in each case;

(2) if he will publish a table from the low-income families statistics showing the number of (a) persons and (b) households in Scotland below, at or up to 40 per cent. above supplementary benefit level in 1979 and 1985; and what proportion of the Scottish population they represent in each case.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 27 May 1988 at columns 413-14.

Family Practitioner Committees (Investigation)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what response the Department has made to the National Audit Office investigation into family practitioner committees.

Mr. Newton: The Department has studied the draft report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on the management of the family practitioner services. Its representatives will appear before the Public Accounts Committee on 27 June in connection with the Committee's investigation of the report.

Dental Charges

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services under what circumstances a patient will have to pay 100 per cent. of the cost of a course of dental treatment under the new system of dental charges.

Mrs. Currie: Under the proposed fully proportional system of charges no course of treatment or individual treatment will attract a charge of 100 per cent.

Income Support

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether claims in writing for income support forwarded by organisations providing emergency accommodation will be treated as valid claims under the terms of Regulation 4(i) of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: A claim made by an organisation on behalf of a claimant is effective from the date of receipt by the Department but it must be followed up by a detailed statement of circumstances on one of the approved departmental claim forms. A claim can also be made by telephone to the Department provided it is followed up by a properly completed official claim form within one month.

Nottingham District Health Authority

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects Nottingham district health authority to be funded up to 100 per cent. of its resource allocation working party allocation;

(2) if he will make additional financial provision to the Nottingham district health authority to ensure that essential medical equipment, including X-ray, operating theatre, intensive care and labour ward equipment, can be replaced at a higher rate than the current 25 per cent.;

(3) what is the difference, in cash terms, between Nottingham district health authority's current percentage of resource allocation working party allocation and the full resource allocation working party allocation.

Mr. Newton: Regional health authorities are responsible for the allocation of resources to district health authorities. The hon. Member may care, therefore, to write to the chairman of Trent regional health authority for details of the region's policy on allocations to Nottingham.

Hospital Ancillary Workers

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of pay increases for hospital ancillary workers will be met by his Department; and what percentage by the district health authorities.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) and for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on Tuesday 10 May at column 133.

Ativan

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any recent representations regarding the side-effect of the drug Ativan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Since 31 March 1988, we have received some 16 letters from hon. Members or members of the public on this matter. Advice to doctors and pharmacists on the problem of dependence on benzodiazepines, of which Ativan is one, was issued by the Committee on Safety of Medicines in "Current Problems 21", a copy of which is in the Library.

Private Acute Sector

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the research on activity in the private acute sector which followed up the study carried out in 1981 by the university of Sheffield.

Mrs. Currie: It is expected that the Department will receive the completed report on the research into acute hospital care provided by the private sector, which it has funded at the university of Sheffield, within the next one to two months. Discussion about publication will then take place.

Physiotherapy Treatment

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards providing convenient out-of-hospital physiotherapy treatment for patients under the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: It is for individual health authorities and local physiotherapy managers to determine where and how to provide physiotherapy treatment. Many authorities have introduced community and domiciliary physiotherapy services, which allow patients' preferences to be taken into consideration when deciding on the location of treatment. We have actively encouraged these developments.

Family Credit

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements he has made to compensate families suffering financial hardship as a result of delays in the processing of applications for family credit.

Mr. Portillo: Arrears of benefit would, of course, be payable, backdated to the start of the award period. Family credit is paid to people in work, who will normally have significant other resources. Where, nevertheless, a family faced serious financial hardship pending an award, they could be considered for a loan from the social fund.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which organisations have made representations to him about family credit form FC2 and information leaflet FB4; what was the nature of those representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Representations have been received from the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and others, suggesting that the formula in form FC2, designed to allow potential claimants to work out whether they are likely to be eligible for family credit, can confuse or mislead. We are considering whether and how the presentation of this information can be improved in later editions to avoid this and any other points which appear to cause difficulty. The same formula appears in leaflet FB4 but we have no record of any representations specifically about that leaflet.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants for family credit since its introduction were not previously in receipt of family income supplement or supplementary benefit.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available precisely in the form requested. Around 200,000 families were transferred from family income supplement to family credit from 11 April 1988. In addition, up to the end of May, nearly 140,000 claims for family credit had been received, a few of which will be renewal claims from ex-family income supplement cases where the first award of family credit had now expired.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to monitor the number of claimants receiving family credit as a direct transition from family income supplement.

Mr. Portillo: When existing family income supplement recipients were reassessed for family credit from 11 April 1988 a precise record was kept of the number awarded the new benefit. As expected, the vast majority of ex-family income supplement cases have become entitled to family credit.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to how many applicants for family credit have applied for this benefit because they are no longer eligible for income support.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available. Supplementary benefit recipients who were not eligible for income support because they were working 24 hours a week or more, and who had dependent children, were sent a claim form for family credit, but it is not known how many of them have actually made a claim.

New Cancer Hospital, Southend

Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what assessment he has made of the extra capital costs likely to accrue as a result of the decision by the North-East Thames regional health authority to build a new cancer hospital at Southend and refurbish some existing facilities in its area instead of building the new hospital at Harold Wood and abandoning those existing facilities;

(2) what assessment he has made of the extra revenue costs likely to accrue as a result of the decision by the North-East Thames regional health authority to build a new cancer hospital at Southend and refurbish some existing facilities in its area instead of building the new hospital at Harold Wood and abandoning those existing facilities.

Mrs. Currie: My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of the North-East Thames regional health authority about the funding of cancer services within the region.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will estimate the number of claimants of mobility allowance who will reach the age of 75 years in November 1989;

(2) if he will estimate the cost of abolishing the upper age limit on entitlement to mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: Recipients of mobility allowance, except those who have transferred from the former invalid vehicle scheme and who are not subject to this age limit, will not reach age 75 before 29 November 1989. Few will thus reach that age in November 1989 but the number who have reached age 75 will grow progressively after that date. It is estimated that about 500 recipients would benefit from the abolition of the age limit in the first year at a cost of under £500,000. This would rise to over 6,000 recipients, at a cost of around £8 million in 1991-2, with the numbers continuing to rise in subsequent years.

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to increase the upper age limit of 75 years on entitlement to mobility allowance.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 10 May at column 82.

Drug Prescribing

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, South of 23 May, Official Report, column 88, if he will take steps to require doctors prescribing unlicensed drugs on a named person basis to inform his Department; and if he will ensure that full records of such prescribing are kept and are publicly available.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to require doctors to notify the Department of such prescribing.

Speech Therapy

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when was the last occasion on which he met representatives of speech therapists to discuss their salaries, career structure and funding by his Department;

(2) if he will reorganise the career structure of speech therapists;

(3) what are the minimum and maximum rates of pay of speech therapists; and what steps he intends to take to increase them;

(4) if he will undertake a reassessment of the role of speech therapists and seek to elevate their status and pay.

Mr. Newton: Pay is a matter for negotiation in the appropriate Whitley council. I understand that a claim to increase the pay of speech therapists from 1 april 1988 has been received and will be discussed at a joint meeting on 27 June. The last joint meeting on 9 December 1987 resulted in the agreement for a comprehensive restructuring of speech therapist grades effective from 1 January 1988. The minimum salary for a newly qualified speech therapist is now £8,250. The maximum salary for the most senior grade, available to both managers and holders of posts requiring the provision of an exceptionally high level of clinical expertise, is £19,207.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the number of stroke victims, elderly people and children with speech problems who require speech therapy; and what steps he is taking to ensure that their needs are met;

(2) what is the average number of speech therapists available per 100 children needing their help.

Mr. Newton: I regret that there are no accurate estimates available of the number of speech and language impaired people in the population. The Department is currently sponsoring a research study by Dr. Philip Davies, Rivermead hospital, Oxford, which should produce improved prevalence and incidence data, when completed next year. However, not all those with communication problems necessarily need or would benefit from speech therapy, so it is unlikely to be possible to derive the kind of ratio the right hon. Member seeks.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many speech therapists are (a) women and (b) men.

Mr. Newton: At 30 September 1986 there were 2,510 whole-time equivalent speech therapists in England. Fifty of these were male. The numbers employed are a matter for individual health authorities.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the basic educational requirement for speech therapists.

Mr. Newton: In order to obtain employment in the National Health Service, there is a statutory requirement to hold a certificate, issued by the College of Speech Therapists, certifying success in an examination approved by the college. All such current examinations are at first degree level, but many practising speech therapists hold diploma level qualifications gained before speech therapy became a degree level entry profession. Entry requirements for degrees in speech therapy are a matter for the individual educational establishment.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of unfilled posts for speech therapists at special schools.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available centrally and could not be provided in the form requested. It is for individual authorities to decide on the deployment of speech therapists.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many speech therapists have left the profession in each of the past five years; and what proportion they are of the total;

(2) what is the present annual rate of recruitment of speech therapists; and what has been the comparable rate in the last five years.

Mr. Newton: Information is collected centrally only on the number of speech therapists employed. The total number employed for the past five years in England is shown in the table.

[2] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest ten (10) whole-time equivalents.
[3] Percentages are calculated on unrounded figures.

The figures for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps he has taken to assess the increased demand for speech therapists in the last five years;

(2) how many speech therapists there are in England and Wales; if he has any evidence of shortage in some areas; and what steps he intends to take to increase the present number of speech therapists.

Mr. Newton: It is for individual health authorities to assess the demand for speech therapists and determine the appropriate level of speech therapy provision. Health authorities have taken account of increased demand and the numbers of speech therapists employed has increased by 32 per cent. from September 1982 to September 1986, the last five years for which data are available.

There is no shortage of speech therapists in authorised posts, although I am aware of reports of some isolated instances of difficulties in filling posts in certain specialties or geographical areas. The numbers of speech therapists employed in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Young People (Benefits)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of 16 and 17-year-olds in (a) each regional authority in Scotland and (b) Britain who are expected to be in receipt of (i) income support and housing benefit, (ii) housing benefit only and (iii) board and lodgings payments in the years 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates are not available.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many 16 and 17-year-olds in (a) each regional authority in Scotland and (b) Britain were in receipt of (i) income support and housing benefit, (ii) housing benefit only and (iii) board and lodgings payments for each year since 1984.

Mr. Portillo: I shall let the hon. Member have such information as can be obtained as soon as possible.

Board and Lodging Payments

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the proposed changes to the structure of board and lodging payments for residents in hostels, including women's aid refuges, residential homes and nursing homes.

Mr. Portillo: We are currently reviewing income support payments for people in hostels. No changes have yet been proposed. We are considering the payment of benefit for people in residential care homes and nursing homes in the light of a number of recent reports, including Sir Roy Griffiths' review of community care.

Student Nurses

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects to be able to publish details of the timetable of the scheme to change the system of finance available to student nurses;

(2) whether all student nurses will receive student maintenance awards at a given date rather than phasing in the system of student finance while discounting the present system of remuneration for student nurses.

Mr. Newton: Final decisions on the Project 2000 proposals and the time scale of their implementation, which will be phased, will depend on the outcome of discussions with the statutory nursing bodies about the further work that needs to be done.

Maternity Units

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make a statement on the role of general practitioner maternity units in (a) towns and cities and (b) the rural areas;

(2) what is his Department's advice to regional and district health authorities on the criteria to be adopted for maternity unit provisions in the rural areas.

Mrs. Currie: Good practice in maternity services is described in three reports produced by the maternity services advisory committee. These reports have been commended to health authorities and offer advice across the full range of maternity services.

Midwives

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his Department's advice to regional and district heath authorities on the number of qualified midwives who should be employed for (a) a given number of patients and (b) the total population of each authority.

Mr. Newton: It is for individual health authorities to determine the number of qualified midwives they require in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Foetal Tissue

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to the reply of 7 June, Official Report, column 557, whether the women whose foetuses were to be used to provide material which might be passed on for transplant use were told the specific purpose for which such material would be used; and if he will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to the reply of 7 June, Official Report, column 557, if he will identify the abortion centre to which he refers from which human foetal tissue was made available for transplant purposes.

Mr. Newton: It is not appropriate to identify the home involved, in view of the need to safeguard confidentiality for individual patients. However all women undergoing abortion at the home whose foetuses may be used to provide material for research purposes are invited to sign a declaration to the effect that they have no special wishes concerning the disposal of material arising from their pregnancy. Information about the specific purpose for which material might be used is given if requested. The home does not hold records to show whether such additional information was requested in these particular cases.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 7 June, Official Report, column 557, if he will seek to make available through the Library copies of the minutes of the meetings at which the local ethical committees which gave permission for the use of foetal tissue in transplant operations undertook the careful and prolonged consideration of the issue to which he refers.

Mr. Newton: Minutes of local ethical committees are not held centrally. Local ethical committees are responsible to the relevant district health authority and my hon. Friend may like to approach Sandwell district health authority direct.

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the reply of 7 June, Official Report, column 557, if he will list, indicating the nature of the involvement in each case, all the personnel of the Birmingham university medical centre who were involved in the transplanting of human foetal tissue to which he refers.

Mr. Newton: This information is not held centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to approach the Birmingham university medical centre direct.

Incomes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the average and median projected income before and after tax for the financial year 1988-89 for (a) families with children, (b) married couples without children below pensionable age, (c) single people below pensionable age, (d) couples of pensionable age and (e) single people of pensionable age, giving the number of couples or people which fall into each category and the percentage of people in each category falling below the average income for that category.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that reliable estimates for 1988-89 are not available.

Birmingham Children's Hospital

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children there were on the waiting list for cardiac surgery at the Birmingham children's hospital on each day for the period 1 May to 17 May.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 23 May 1988]: The Department is routinely informed of the number of children awaiting cardiac surgery at the Birmingham children's hospital once a month. On 5 May the number was 100. Between then and 3 June, 30 children were operated on, of which 14 were from the waiting list and 16 were emergency cases or priority new referrals. Fourteen were added to the waiting list, which accordingly remained at 100. 83 of the 107 children awaiting cardiac surgery last Christmas have now been treated. The unit has treated 102 open-heart cases so far this year compared with 126 in all of 1987.

ENERGY

Nuclear Accidents (Notification)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the agreements he has with each country in the European Community and the Nordic countries for the notification of nuclear accidents in (a) their countries and (b) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The United Kingdom is a signatory to the IAEA convention on early notification and is a party to the European Community arrangements for the exchange of information in the event of a nuclear accident.

Bilateral agreements with Norway and Denmark were concluded last year and there is a similar agreement with France dating from 1983.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether the conditions permitting the export of plutonium from Sellafield to Japan have been met in full; and what total quantity of plutonium is expected to be involved in the contract;

(2) whether the agreement to export plutonium to Japan from Sellafield will be reviewed in the event of Japan's fast breeder reactor programme being cut back.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 14 June 1988.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Home Office represents my Department's interests at NATO civil emergency planning boards and conducts liaison arrangements through the senior civil emergency planning committee. My Department is directly represented on the NATO petroleum planning committee and its working group, which meets regularly. The Department participates in relevant NATO exercises.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department, in conjunction with the energy industries, is required to prepare and has plans, including those for home defence, to meet any civil emergency arising in the production, supply and distribution of energy fuels in the United Kingdom as covered by the Energy Act 1976. The total number of departmental staff, including part-time staff, engaged on this work is 30. The annual budgets for the years listed were £240,000; £295,000 and £317,500 respectively.

Oil and Pipelines Agency

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he intends to review the role of the Oil and Pipelines Agency: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Oil and Pipelines Agency (OPA) is responsible for collecting royalty in kind, for maintaining the arrangements for state participation in oil production in the United Kingdom continental shelf and for managing the Government pipeline and storage system (GPSS). Following review, the Government have decided to cease taking royalty in kind. Notice is being given to the companies concerned that the final chargeable period for royalty in kind will run from 1 July to 31 December 1988, and that from 1 January 1989 all royalty will be taken in cash. With the ending of the trading activities of OPA, it will be my intention to phase out the participation arrangements with the oil companies. We shall be discussing with OPA and the industry the best means of achieving this. Discussions are taking place with my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces, with a view to the GPSS being transferred to his Department.

Nuclear Technology

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, further to his answer of 16 May, Official Report, columns 300-1, which countries have been the destination of transfers of nuclear technology, reprocessing and waste management which have been subject to Government approval.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 24 May 1988]: To date, one such transfer, to Japan, has been approved.

PRIME MINISTER

Port of Leith

Q43. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to the port of Leith.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Mr. Charles Powell

Q102. Mr Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what procedures are required to be followed by civil servants when they are approached with requests to give interviews or pose for photographs for use in press articles; how those procedures were followed in relation to the photograph of Mr. Charles Powell which appeared in the Illustrated London News of April 1988; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Such requests would be judged on their merits. No interview was sought or given in the case referred to in the question.

Financial Management Initiative

Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on the implementation of the Government's financial management initiative throughout Departments since its introduction.

The Prime Minister: In the Treasury minute (Cm. 236) in response to the 13th report from the Committee of Public Accounts, the Government noted that it shared the Controller and Auditor General's broad conclusions that real progress was being made in the development of suitable systems and that there were no serious shortcomings in the Departments examined by the National Audit Office in 1986. We shall shortly be making available a report on the progress being made with budgeting in Departments which covers the key system elements of the financial management initiative. As I announced on 18 February 1988, at column 1149, we have accepted the main recommendations in the efficiency unit's report "Improving Management in Government: the Next Steps". The implementation of these recommendations will further reinforce the principles of the FMI and demonstrate clearly the Government's commitment to maintaining the momentum of our overal programme to improve value for money.

Dr. Sergio Ramirez

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister why she is unable to receive Dr. Sergio Ramirez, Vice-President of Nicaragua, on his forthcoming visit to Europe; when was the last time she received an invitation to meet the Vice-President; what was her response; when she last met the Vice-President of Nicaragua; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Nicaraguan ambassador informed us that Dr. Ramirez, whom I last met in February 1985, wished to visit the United Kingdom on 11 and 12 July during a tour of European capitals. I did not intend to receive him on this occasion, but my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs agreed to do so. I now understand, however, that Dr. Ramirez has decided not to include the United Kingdom in his tour.

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. Strang: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list those Ministers, other than the Secretary of State for Employment, who answer parliamentary questions about the establishment and activities of the Health and Safety Commission and the Health and Safety Executive and their subordinate agencies; and if, for each Minister, she will list the precise aspects for which he is responsible.

The Prime Minister: The Secretary of State for Employment is responsible for all matters concerned with the staffing and establishment of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive which do not fall to myself as arising from the position of HSE staff as civil servants. He is also responsible for all the aspects of the commission's and the executive's work which concern primarily the protection of workers, and the protection of the public from the generality of hazards.

Any Secretary of State may, having consulted the Secretary of State for Employment, direct or ask the commission to do work on particular matters. The commission may also submit proposals for regulations or approved codes of practice to any Minister responsible for provisions which are relevant statutory provisions for the purposes of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974.

Secretaries of State with responsibilities which currently involve the commission and the executive, for whose activities they may answer in Parliament, are principally the Secretary of State for Energy, who has ministerial responsibility for nuclear safety in England and Wales; the Secretary of State for Scotland, who has a like responsibility there; the Home Secretary, who is responsible for the security of explosives; the Secretary of State for Transport, who has general responsibility for the protection of the public from hazards connected with transportation and harbours; the Secretary of State for Social Services who, in exercising certain of his responsibilities for public health, and the health and safety of NHS staff, relies on the advice of the commission; and the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, particularly in relation to part III of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 and its associated regulations.

The Secretary of State for Trade and Industry is extensively supported by the commission and the executive in relation to the negotiations of European directives and standards of a harmonising character, many of which have implications for safety and health, and his responsibilities for consumer safety at some points impinge on the commission's work.

The Health and Safety Executive also exercises many functions which impinge on the responsibilities of the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Wales. Questions wholly or partly directed to the executive's activities could fall to be answered by those Ministers.

Medical and Dental Officers (Armed Forces)

Mr. Whitney: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement about the pay of medical and dental officers in the armed forces.

The Prime Minister: The Armed Forces Pay Review Body has submitted to me a supplementary report on the pay of medical and dental officers in the armed forces which recommends increases of between 4 and 7·6 per cent. with effect from 1 April 1988. These awards are derived from those to civilian doctors and dentists which I announced in the House on 21 April 1988, and the Government have decided to accept them in full. The report has been published as Cm. 396 and copies are available in the Vote Office.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will identify (a) liaison arrangements between the Cabinet Office and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office is not represented on any NATO civil emergency planning board or committee, but it is kept informed of the work of these bodies, is consulted as appropriate by the relevant United Kingdom representative and is involved in the formation of the United Kingdom's policy on issues that arise within them.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in the Cabinet Office, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for such work in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Office is responsible for the co-ordination of the Government's civil emergency and home defence planning. Nine staff are primarily engaged on this work. The annual budget for such work in the last three financial years is as follows:

Year	£ million
1985-86	0·27
1986-87	0·35
1987-88	0·35

Office Costs

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Prime Minister what has been the percentage increase or decrease in the cost of running her office at 10 Downing street and Chequers since 1979.

The Prime Minister: Since 1979 there have been several developments which have affected how the costs of running my office are assessed, including:

Introduction of charging for aircraft by the Ministry of Defence in 1981-82;

Abolition of the CPRS in 1983, and the absorption of some of its staff within the No. 10 Policy Unit;

Introduction of charging for buildings and services by the PSA in 1983-84;

Introduction of charging for service personnel at Chequers by the MOD in 1984-85;

Changes in the allocation of charges for the Government Car Service in 1984-85; and Inclusion of costs of office services from 1986-87.

When the effects of these developments are excluded (as far as it is possible to do so) and the result expressed in constant price terms, the cost of running 10 Downing street and Chequers has decreased by 1·61 per cent. between 1979-80 and 1987-88.

Engagements

Mrs. Virgina Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 June.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 June.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 June.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 June.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 16 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Nursery Education

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by what date he expects to achieve the target figures for provision of part-time nursery education, set out in the 1972 White Paper "A Framework for Expansion", of 50 per cent. of three-year-olds and 90 per cent. of four-year-olds.

Mr. Dunn: Taking account of all forms of provision, we are not far short of the levels of participation the White Paper recommended: virtually all rising-fives, three quarters of other four-year-olds and one third of three-year-olds are in school, and over half the three-to-four-year-old population attend playgroups.

Mathematics

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from industry about the mathematical ability of school leavers.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received no direct representations from industry about the mathematical ability of school leavers. However, there is evidence that standards of mathematical achievement in England and Wales, particularly standards achieved by less able pupils, are lower than they should be. Our proposals for a national curriculum, with clearly prescribed attainment targets and programmes of study for mathematics, backed up by national assessment and testing, will help to raise standards.

Truancy

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to require education authorities to make periodic returns to his Department of the percentage of truancy by 14 and 15-year-old children; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 26 November, at column 275.

Open University

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met officials of the Open University to discuss funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend is advised on all matters relating to the Open University, including funding, by an independent visiting committee. This year the committee has met the university on two occasions, most recently on 7 June.

Exporters (Training)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer of 13 May, Official Report, column 259, what plans he has to extend the provision for training to exporters for the Japanese market.

Mr. Jackson: As I said in my reply of 13 May, the network of language export training centres is capable of providing training to exporters for the Japanese market. The network has been established under the local collaborative projects scheme, which is jointly funded through the Department's professional, industrial and commercial updating programme and the Training Commission. The network is currently being extended to give full nationwide coverage. The centres will also have the potential to use open learning techniques, thereby increasing the opportunities for access by business. The Department of Education and Science is in consultation with the Department of Trade and Industry on how to expand the demand for the network's Japanese services as well as other possible ways of enhancing Japanese language training for exporters.

Polytechnics and Colleges

Dr. Hampson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will now authorise the release to the Association of Polytechnic Teachers and the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education copies of the consultative document on articles of government which he has been discussing with directors of polytechnics and principals of colleges.

Mr. Jackson: The Government intend to circulate at an early date draft guidance on articles of government for the polytechnics and colleges for consultation with interested bodies, including these associations.

GCSE

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what money has been allocated nationally for the provision of school library facilities with regard to the introduction and running of the general certificate of secondary education examination system; what figure has been allocated to each local education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government's spending plans for 1988-89 include an extra £10 million for secondary school libraries in recognition of the heightened pressure for improvements resulting from the introduction of the GCSE. In addition to the above, over £100 million has been allowed in the plans for GCSE-related expenditure, of which £10 million is supported by specific grant for books and equipment. It is, however, for local authorities themselves to decide individually on the priority that they wish to give to secondary school library provision from the resources available to them.

Education Buildings

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what bids were submitted by local education authorities for the additional funding made available by his Department for the improvement of educational buildings in inner city areas; what allocations have been made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Forty authorities which cover an urban programme area submitted supplementary plans totalling £89 million. Those are currently under consideration and we expect to announce additional allocations to some authorities shortly.

Teachers (Safeguarding Payments)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to him regarding the present annual cost of safeguarding payments to teachers (a) nationally and (b) for a typical local education authority that has recently undertaken a major redeployment exercise; whether his draft circular on local financial delegation permits continued safeguarding outside allocated school budgets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested is not available. However, the cost of safeguarding nationally will have diminished greatly from October 1987, when the restructuring of teachers' pay led to many formerly safeguarded teachers becoming entitled to an incentive allowance in their present post. The draft circular on financial delegation states that in exceptional cases LEAs might wish to offer compensation outside the delegated budget for the additional costs to a school of taking on a teacher with a safeguarded incentive allowance. My right hon. Friend would expect this item to be limited in extent.

Teachers (Salaries)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information is available to him as to the number and proportion of schools that have staff in post at a total salary cost greater than the pro rata amount of the local authority's salary budget for schools apportioned between schools according to pupil numbers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: Such information could be extracted from the Department's administrative records only at disproportionate cost.

Schools (Financial Delegation)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy that any scheme of financial delegation to schools should provide sufficient funds in every case to enable the continued employment of the present teaching staff on the assumption that the number of pupils remains constant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Government do not intend to impose a single model scheme of financial delegation. Subject to the passage of the Education Reform Bill, it will be for each local education authority to prepare and submit its own scheme for approval. My right hon. Friend has issued for comment a draft consultative document which envisages that the budget of each school under a scheme of financial delegation should be based primarily on pupil numbers, weighted for differences in age. It will be for the governing body to determine the staffing required to meet the current and changing educational needs and priorities of the school within its delegated budget.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the "School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1988" will be published.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The "School Teachers' Pay and Conditions Document 1988" was published this morning.

I have now made an order which will give effect to the provisions in this document. It provides for the implementation of the recommendations on pay rates of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions. A circular has also been sent today to each local education authority. Copies of the 1988 document and the circular have been placed in the Vote Office.

Scottish Universities

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) undergraduate students and (b) postgraduate students in each of the Scottish universities came from outside the United Kingdom in each academic year from 1978-79.

Mr. Jackson: The information is shown in the following table.

Full-time students from outside the United Kingdom in Scottish Universities

	Academic year beginning
	1978	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) undergraduate students and (b) postgraduate students were studying at each Scottish university, by parental socio-economic class, as defined by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys, in each academic year since 1978-79.

Mr. Jackson: Information on the parental socio-economic class for students at individual universities is not available.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) undergraduate mature students and (b) postgraduate mature students there have been in each Scottish university since the academic year 1978-79.

Mr. Jackson: The available information is given in the table.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department has no arrangements for liaison with the bodies mentioned.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, and the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department has no formal terms of reference for these activities. No staff were employed on them and there was no budget for the years in question.

Education Authorities (Expenditure)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take into account rates of truancy when considering the expenditure requirements of inner city education authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: The needs of inner city authorities for spending on education are assessed as part of the assessment of grant-related expenditure for rate support grant purposes. There is an additional educational needs allowance based on socio-economic factors, but we do not believe that it would be desirable to include in the assessment a direct measure of truancy.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Home Leave)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements cover financial assistance for prisoners on home leave where the householder qualifies for income support; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All prisoners on home leave receive travelling expenses and subsistence for the journey. Householders who are in receipt of income support may apply for financial assistance under paragraph 6304 of the social fund manual, but the operation of these arrangements is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Violence (Town Centres)

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the level of violence in town centres of England and Wales, other than large inner city areas, and what steps are being taken to counteract such violence.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has referred in a number of recent speeches, including that to the Police Federation last month, to our concern at this serious problem. We have also received the report of the survey into the extent of the problem recently carried out by the Association of Chief Police Officers in consultation with the Home Office. Officials and representatives of the association are now examining together the problems faced by the police in tackling this sort of disorder and how best to overcome them.

We have already taken a number of steps to increase police powers and capacity to tackle violent crime and disorder. We have strengthened the powers available to the police to deal with public disorder and have brought before Parliament proposals to prohibit the sale of specified offensive weapons and to make it an offence to be in possession of a knife in a public place without good reason.

Since 1979 we have approved 4,327 additional posts for provincial forces, and police strength in these forces has increased by 6,808. The link between misuse of alcohol and this type of disorder is clear, and that is one reason why in the Licensing Act 1988 the law against under-age drinking has been strengthened.

Prison Officer Peter Shaw

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations regarding the transfer application of Prison Officer Peter Shaw, of Her Majesty's prison, Grendon.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Apart from the correspondence with Mr. Shaw himself about his request for transfer, one letter has been received in the Department in support of his application.

Mr. G. Bacon

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to why the home of Mr. George Bacon, at 7 Herbert road, Manor Park, London E.12, was raided on 30 March; and what were the results.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that a warrant was sought and obtained in order to search Mr. Bacon's house for stolen electrical equipment and household items. No stolen property was found.

Police Federation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial support is given by Her Majesty's Government to the Police Federation or its officers; and for what purposes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A contribution of 85 per cent. is made through the common police services arrangements to the salaries of the chairman, secretary, and treasurer of the Police Federation's joint central committee, the remainder being met by the federation itself. The travelling and subsistence expenses of joint central committee members attending certain meetings are also reimbursed by the same means. A small sum is also payable for the secretarial expenses incurred by the Police Federation on behalf of the staff side of the Police Negotiating Board. The size of these contributions amounted to about £72,000 in 1987-88. These payments are made mainly in pursuance of the recommendations of the Edmund-Davies committee report on the "Structure and Role of Police Staff Associations" (1979, Cmnd. 7633).

In addition, police authorities provide locally for office facilities, time off for part-time officers, the salaries of full-time officers, and travelling expenses for meetings and conference expenses. Fifty one per cent. of these costs are met through the police specific grant paid by the Government.

Adult Education (London)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to develop links between the chief education officer at the Home Office and the separate London boroughs, which have to establish their individual adult education departments on the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The draft guidance issued by the Department of Education and Science to inner London boroughs states that the arrangements for education in Prison Department establishments will be the subject of discussion between the DES, the Home Office, ILEA and the councils concerned.

Arrangements for these discussions will be made as soon as possible.

Prisoners (Education)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners are currently receiving adult education services from the Inner London education authority community education department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On the most recent date for which information is readily available, the total attendances for day and evening classes in the five prison establishments within the Inner London education authority area was 771.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to promote arrangements by individual boroughs to ensure continuing adult education for prisoners when they return to the community after serving their sentence, subsequent to the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has no powers to ensure that the LEAs provide continuing adult education for prisoners when they are returned to the community after serving their sentences. Each LEA has to balance priorities in the light of an assessment of needs and of available resources.

Discussions will be held between the Department of Education and Science, the Home Office, ILEA and those councils which will be concerned with delivery in the five London prisons and this will provide an opportunity to review provision in the community. The Home Office will encourage all London boroughs to make provision as appropriate.

Members' Correspondence

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South, sent to him on 18 April, about an alleged miscarriage of justice.

Mr. Hurd: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 9 June.

Michael Ryan

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to how many (a) persons who made written statements to police officers and (b) solicitors representing persons who made written statements to police officers, concerning matters leading up to the shootings by the late Michael Ryan in Hungerford, have requested copies of their written statements to police officers from the chief constable; what were the dates of such requests; whether copies have been given or sent to those persons or their solicitors; and when the chief constable intends to deal with those requests to which he has not as yet given an answer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that no such requests have been received.

Prison Building

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there are any plans to build a new prison on the site of New Hall hospital, Scarisbrick, near Southport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to build a prison on this site.

Police and Military Joint Tactical Doctrine

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the nature and purpose of the recently developed police and military joint tactical doctrine.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The primary responsibility for the internal security of the United Kingdom rests with the police, whether in peacetime or in war. Under common law the armed forces are required to make their best endeavours to come to the aid of the police if requested to do so. The joint tactical doctrine reaffirms those general principles in relation to planning and operational liaison between the police and the military during times of crisis and war.

Courts (Staff Shortages)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many court hearings have been cancelled within the past year because of staff shortages.

Mr. John Patten: The information is not available centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many court hearings in Yorkshire and Humberside have been cancelled within the last year because of staff shortages.

Mr. John Patten: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the reasons for the current shortage of justices clerks.

Mr. John Patten: There is no shortage of justices clerks. Concern has been expressed that rates of pay are not sufficient to recruit and retain court clerks, especially those qualified as barrister or solicitor. Rates of pay and conditions of service for magistrates courts staff in England and Wales, other than in inner London, are set by the joint negotiating committee (JNC) for magistrates courts staff. I understand that the JNC is collecting information on recruitment and retention of staff and the reasons for any shortages, and will consider this when discussing a pay settlement for 1988. I shall give careful consideration to the settlement proposed.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many justices clerks in the Yorkshire and Humberside region have within the last year left posts in magistrates courts to take up positions with the Crown Prosecution Service.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that no justices clerks have left in this way. Information about court clerks is not readily available. I shall be writing to the hon. Member.

Forensic Science Service

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what quantitative and qualitative effects upon the casework for the forensic science service he expects to flow from his recent proposals for the staffing of that service and his intention to maintain the allocation of resources to the service at their present levels.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The current proposals for the staffing of the Home Office forensic science service are intended to enhance its ability to meet the demands on it, by increasing the total number of officers reporting cases to the courts, and enabling the service to recruit and retain the staff needed for this work. The total resources available to the service will be maintained at their present level, but we will keep under review the case for increasing them.

Life Sentences

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of recommendations of the Parole Board for release of people serving non-mandatory life sentences have been overturned by him.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During 1987, the most recent year for which figures are available, my right hon. Friend was unable to accept five of 29 recommendations for release made by the Parole Board during 1987 in respect of prisoners serving non-mandatory life sentences.

Ticket Touting

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to make ticket touting at sporting or other events a criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans for such legislation.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were granted temporary admission in each of the years from 1982 to 1986, 1987 and in 1988 up to the present time; and how many such persons still remain.

Mr. Renton: The total numbers of persons granted temporary admission to the United Kingdom in the years 1982, 1983 and 1984 were 6,584, 7,292 and 8,527 respectively. The information available for 1985 onwards was given in reply to a question from the hon. Member on 22 April, at column 594. Information on the numbers of such persons granted temporary admission who still remain in the United Kingdom is not available.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons who arrived in Britain as visitors and who have subsequently married persons settled in Britain (i) are awaiting interview and (ii) have been interviewed and await a decision.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Charities (Street Collections)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek powers to standardise the procedure and forms involved in applications to make cash collections in the street for approved charities.

Mr. John Patten: Most licensing authorities have adopted street collection regulations which follow closely the model contained in the schedule to the Charitable Collections (Transitional Provisions) Order 1974. All street collection regulations require my right hon. Friend's confirmation before coming into force. Following a recommendation of the Woodfield report on the supervision of charities, we are reviewing the law relating to public collections, including these arrangements.

Union Flag

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to ban the disfiguring with words and slogans of the Union flag.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Football Matches (Policing)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the charges to each professional football club in London for police services in the season 1987-88; and what amount each club has paid.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information is as follows:

Club	Season 1987-88
	Charged £	Paid £
Arsenal	161,875·96	156,065·68
Brentford	34,078·68	34,078·68
Charlton	49,273·65	49,273·65
Chelsea	168,257·86	147,740·45
Crystal Palace	37,173·59	34,393·90
Fulham	26,526·79	26,526·79
Leyton Orient	17,509·17	16,958·86
Millwall	57,693·28	57,693·28
Queen's Park Rangers	129,564·28	129,564·28
Tottenham Hotspur	153,785·36	141,372·30
West Ham United	176,303·08	176,303·08
Wimbledon	81,354·26	81,354·26
TOTAL	1,093,395·96	1,051,325·21

Sex Discrimination Act 1975

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding amendment of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to bring private clubs, with both female and male members, within the scope of the Act; and what action he is taking.

Mr. John Patten: A number of right hon. and hon. Members have made representations recently about the call which the organisation "Women in Golf" has made for a change in the law. In its recent report "Equal Treatment for Men and Women" the Equal Opportunities Commission included a proposal to bring private clubs with both female and male members within the scope of the Sex Discrimination Act. I would refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to her questions on this on 14 March.

Police (Assaults)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about assaults on police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of the concern of the police service over the increasing frequency of assaults. My right hon. Friend has therefore asked Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary to collect from forces in England and Wales the figures of assaults on police officers and to publish them in his annual report. This will enable the problem to be more accurately assessed.

Firearms Certificates

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Council of Ministers will be considering the European Economic Community proposal for the mutual recognition of firearms certificates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The position remains as described by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister in reply to my hon. Friend's question of 14 January, at column 352.

Risley Remand Centre

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the Risley remand centre.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The future of Risley remand centre is linked with the longer-term strategic plans for local prison accommodation in the north-west. Liverpool and Preston prisons are planned to become local prisons in 1989. We intend that Risley will adopt the role of a local prison as soon as possible thereafter. In the meantime, building work at the establishment will proceed on two fronts. A rolling programe of refurbishment of existing living accommodation has begun and will be completed in autumn 1990. A larger programme of expansion and redevelopment at the establishment is scheduled to start by summer 1989. This will provide new inmate living accommodation with integral sanitation in the cells and better facilities for staff, inmates and visitors. The work is due to be completed in stages between 1991 and 1994.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Home Office officials represent the United Kingdom on the NATO senior civil emergency planning committee, which undertakes the direction of policy and general co-ordination of civil emergency planning, and on the civil defence committee and working group, which comprises senior officials of NATO countries meeting on a regular basis to consider national plans for all aspects of the protection of the public in an emergency. The NATO group of experts on warning and detection reports to the civil defence committee; it is chaired by the director of the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation and co-ordinates research and development of warning and detection systems, including an annual international exercise. Home Office officials also represent the United Kingdom on the NATO civil communications planning committee and working groups, which are concerned with the maintenance of civil communications in an emergency.

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Civil Defence Act 1948 provides the statutory basis for civil defence activity. The objective of civil defence planning in the Home Office is to give effect to the civil defence functions of Ministers, which are set out in the 1948 Act. These include the formulation of policy and issue of guidance to the local authorities and the police and fire services, payment of grant, the provision of training and equipment, development of communications, scientific research and the maintenance of warning and monitoring arrangements.

The Civil Protection in Peacetime Act 1986 enables local authorities to use civil defence resources in the response to a peacetime emergency. The Home Office issues guidance on this subject in consultation with other Government Departments.

The information requested on Home Office expenditure and manpower is as follows:

Year	Expenditure £ million	Manpower
1985-86	46·30	171
1986-87	48·40	177
[1]1987-88	55·30	178

[1] Estimate.

Abortion (Inquest)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the reasons for his conclusion that the public interest would not be served by an inquest into the case involving the abortion which took place at the City general infirmary, Carlisle, in July 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This conclusion was reached after careful consideration of all the information provided by the coroner.

Security Services (Report)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be receiving the first report from the counsellor to the security services.

Mr. Hurd: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Wycombe (Mr. Whitney) on 2 November 1987, at column 512, the staff counsellor, who was appointed in November 1987, will report not less frequently than once a year to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, the Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary and myself.

DNA Testing

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the reason for the delay in the publication of the feasibility study, jointly undertaken with the Foreign Office, into DNA testing involving those applying to settle in the United Kingdom; whether he is going to make arrangements to fund the introduction of any DNA testing scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Some of the practical and policy considerations revealed by the DNA pilot trial have proved difficult to resolve, but the results should be available shortly.

Community Education (London)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to continue the work of the community education department of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: I have been asked to reply.

The community education and careers branch of ILEA is responsible for adult education, the youth service and the careers service in inner London. Under our proposals the boroughs will become responsible for these services in their area. They will have to set out their intentions for them in their development plans. Discussions will be held with the boroughs, ILEA and others on the future arrangements for particular aspects of these services.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sunday Trading

Mr. Cran: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received from the Association of District Councils regarding Sunday trading laws.

The Attorney-General: The Association of District Councils wrote to my predecessor about the enforcement of the Sunday trading provisions of the Shops Act 1950 in the course of 1986. He received no further representations from the association and I have received none. As I mentioned in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Orpington (Mr. Stanbrook) on 18 April last, at column 297, I recently asked the association for information concerning the scale of the enforcement effort being made in pursuance of the responsibility placed upon local authorities by the Act.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General what action the Director of Public Prosecutions proposes to take following the completion of an investigation by the City of London police into contacts between the two principal Crown witnesses at the appeal hearing of the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The investigation by the City of London police into contacts between Dr. Skuse and Mr. Reade, who were both Crown witnesses at the appeal hearing of six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings, has been completed.

The investigation did not reveal any evidence of criminal conduct by any person and the Director of Public Prosecutions has therefore decided to take no further action in the matter.

Judges

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General how many judges there were at the latest date for which statistics are available; what were the figures five, 10, 20, and 30 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The number of judges in post at the relevant dates is set out in the tables. It should be noted that the post of circuit judge was not brought into being until the enactment of the Courts Act 1971. The second table, therefore, which deals with number in post in 1968 and 1958, gives the number of county court judges who were in post at the relevant time.

In addition to the county court judges in post at that time there were a small number of full-time judges in the quarter sessions. As at 1 January 1969 there were 25 such posts, but the exact numbers in post 20 and 30 years ago respectively cannot be ascertained without the expenditure of disproportionate resources.

Statistics on the number of judges, 5, 10, 20 and 30 years ago

	Circuit judges	High Court judges	Court of Appeal	House of Lords
As at 1 June 1988	405	80	27	9

Rowntree plc

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Attorney-General who requested him to make contact with the Rowntree Charitable Trust to request written confirmation that it was mindful of its charitable responsibilities in respect to the proposed takeover of Rowntree plc.

The Attorney-General: The request for information to the trustees of the Joseph Rowntree Charitable Trust was made on my behalf by an official in the Treasury Solicitor's Department, after consultation with my Department, following a report in The Daily Telegraph on 2 June.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Nicaragua

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the Overseas Development Agency refused the request from the Nicaraguan Government for the provision of beans and vegetable oil to offset the effects of the recent drought in Nicaragua.

Mr. Chris Patten: The European Community has recently approved a request from the Nicaraguans for substantial food aid, including beans and vegetable oil.

The United Kingdom supported this request and will be contributing over 17 per cent. towards the cost of the allocation.

SCOTLAND

Caravan Parks

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to publish model standards for caravan touring parks, along the lines of those already issued for residential and holiday caravan parks.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A consultation paper seeking comments on draft model standards for caravan touring parks in Scotland will be issued by the the Scottish Development Department before the end of June. Views will be sought from a variety of sources, including local authorities and organisations representing caravanning interests.

Scottish TUC

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Strathkelvin and Bearsden of 27 May, Official Report, column 363, how many meetings there were between the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Services and the Scottish Trades Union Congress; and whether a formal or informal record was kept of the meetings.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State with responsibility for health. For such meetings only informal notes for use within the Department are taken.

Doctors

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each health board, the numbers of (a) consultants, (b) general practitioners and (c) other grades of doctors employed in each year since 1970.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available for the years 1970 to 1973 as health boards were not created until 1974. For the period 1974 to 1986 the data are published in "Scottish Health Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library. The information for 1987 is set out in the table.

Number[1] of doctors employed by health board: 30 September 1987

Health board	Consultants	General practitioners	Other grades
Argyll and Clyde	112·3	301	218·5
Ayrshire and Arran	93·5	238	160·0

Shetland	2·0	17	6·0
Tayside	172·4	247	343·2
Western Isles	5·5	28	6·1

[1] Consultants and other grades are shown as whole-time equivalents and general practitioners as number. General practitioner data are provisional.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department will be contributing to the Office of Fair Trading's inquiry into the competitive position of doctors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Director General of Fair Trading has now referred the question of restrictions on doctors' advertising to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. I understand that officials of the Scottish Home and Health Department will be invited to give evidence to the commission.

Nurses

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each year since 1970, the number of qualified nurses employed by each health board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers of qualified nurses, expressed as whole-time equivalents, employed by health boards at 30 September in each year from 1974, when health boards were established, to 1986 are published in "Scottish Health Statistics", copies of which are held in the Library. The latest available figures for 30 September 1987, not yet published, are as follows:

Qualified nurses by health board: 30 September 1987

Health Board	Whole-time equivalent
Argyll and Clyde	2,443·3
Ayrshire and Arran	1,916·9
Borders	612·9
Dumfries and Galloway	1,088·0
Fife	2,059·7

Lanarkshire	3,294·3
Lothian	5,052·5
Orkney	138·5
Shetland	148·5
Tayside	3,417·1
Western Isles	208·7
TOTAL	35,078·2

Scottish Information Office

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the rules governing relations between officials of the Scottish Information Office and former employees of that office.

Mr. Rifkind: The officials concerned are bound by the rules which apply to the conduct of all civil servants; the practical effect in this area is that no assistance would be given to former civil servants which would not in principle be given to other bona fide contacts.

Playgrounds

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the average cost of replacing the concrete or tarmac surfaces in children's playgrounds.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Costs vary greatly depending on the contractor's charges and the type of surface used, ranging from relatively cheap surfaces such as sand, to expensive wetpore surfaces which can cost in excess of £100 per square metre.

Dental Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people aged up to 16 years have used dental services paid in full or in part by the National Health Service for each year since 1975.

Mr. Michael Foryth: The only available information is as shown:

Patients aged 0 to 15 treated by the General Dental Services

Year	Number
1985	544,677
1986	551,384

Patient aged 0 to 14 treated by the Community Dental Services

Year	Number
1980	188,723
1981	185,010
1982	185,531
1983	191,774
1984	189,438

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many people between the age of 16 and 21 years have used dental facilities paid in full or in part by the National Health Service, for each year since 1975;

(2) how many people over the age of 21 years have used dental services paid in full or in part by the National Health Service for each year since 1975;

(3) what is the cost to the National Health Service in 1988 terms, for each year since 1975, of dental services given to people (a) aged up to 16 years, (b) between the age of 16 to 21 years and (c) over the age of 21 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish health boards have suspended or diminished cervical cancer screening tests during the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. The number of cervical smear tests undertaken continues to rise. The provisional total for 1987 is 420,361 compared with 361,626 in 1986, an increase of 16 per cent.

Dry Sow Stalls

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of pig farmers in Scotland are estimated still to employ dry sow stalls; how this proportion compares with 10 years ago; and what action he plans to take to ensure the phasing out of such stalls.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The precise information requested is not held centrally, but present indications are that some 60 to 65 per cent. of sows are currently housed in the stalls concerned.

The Farm Animal Welfare Council has recently completed a review of pig production systems. The council's report makes a number of recommendations which could influence future housing arrangements. Interested parties are currently being consulted and their comments will be fully considered.

Water Supplies (Aluminium)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about alleged links between the existence of aluminium in water supplies and the incidence of Alzheimer's disease; if he will list those Scottish water authorities which add aluminium to their water supply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I understand that research about Alzheimer's disease is being undertaken at the Medical Research Council's environmental epidemiology unit at Southampton, but that its results have not yet been published. The research will be assessed by medical advisers and appropriate action will be taken if it is needed. The Government have adopted the standard for aluminium set by the EC drinking water directive. Most water supplies comply, and where they do not water undertakers have programmes of remedial action. Aluminium compounds are widely used as an aid to coagulation in the treatment of drinking water. Most, if not all, Scottish water authorities use them at some of their treatment works.

Fish Farms

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he has any plans to review the extant planning procedures relating to the siting or expansion of fish farms; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received concerning the planning and siting of salmonid fish farms and other fish farms; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has received a number of representations arguing for or against changes in the procedures currently operated by the Crown Estate commissioners in relation to the establishment of offshore fish farms. He is currently reviewing the operation of these procedures, and the representations are being taken into account. The results of the review will be announced in due course. The Government have no plans to review the current planning procedures relating to fish farms in inland waters.

Corntonvale Prison

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to amend the vocational guidance given to prisoners shortly before their release from Corntonvale prison; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A comprehensive programme of training and guidance is given to prisoners before their release from Corntonvale. The programme is regularly reviewed as to its relevance and content. If the hon. Member wishes to raise a particular aspect, perhaps he would write to me.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the educational and training programmes available to prisoners in Corntonvale prison; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The programme of education and training available to prisoners and young offenders at Corntonvale prison is as follows:

Education:
- Certificated Courses:
  - Higher and 'O' grades in:
    - —Arithmetic
    - —English
    - —Modern Studies
    - —Food and nutrition
- Non-Certificated Courses:
  - Social Skills
  - Art and Craft
  - Cookery
  - Current Affairs
  - Office Studies

Methods:
- Direct teaching, correspondence courses and practical guidance.

Training:
- City and Guilds and SCOTVEC (modular) courses are available in:
  - Sewing and garment making
  - Gardening
  - Catering
- Courses are being planned in:
  - Hairdressing
  - Manicuring
  - Beauticulture

Health Boards (Members' Interests)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department maintains any record of the shareholdings of health board members; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. Chairmen and members of health boards are required to declare any interests in matters being considered by their boards in terms of the National Health Service (Health Boards: Membership, Procedure and Payment of Subscriptions) (Scotland) Regulations 1975.

Health Authorities (Report)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he received the report on the Scottish health authorities review of priorities for the eighties and nineties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On 16 May my right hon. and learned Friend received a copy of the SHARPEN report from the Scottish Health Service Planning Council together with advice, in the form of a foreword to the report, endorsing the priorities identified by the working party and indicating a number of reservations about the recommendations made. Copies of the planning council's advice have been placed in the Library. Close consideration will be given to the report's recommendations and to the planning council's advice. I envisage that the report will be published in due course, together with the council chairman's foreword and an indication of the Government's response.

Voluntary Bodies (Grants)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the amount of grant-aid being made available under the special grants (environmental) programme in 1988-89 to voluntary bodies in Scotland working in the environmental field.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am pleased to announce that grant-aid totalling £200,000 has been offered to the following voluntary bodies in the financial year 1988-89, to assist them in carrying out environmental conservation, improvement or education work in Scotland:

Association for the Protection of Rural Scotland	5,000
Association of Community Technical Aid Centres	10,000
Buchan Countryside Group	5,000
Central Scotland Countryside Trust	9,900
Council for Scottish Archaeology	9,000
Environment Centre	5,700
Royal Society for the Protection of Birds	10,000
Royal Zoological Society	5,750
Scottish Community Woods Campaign	7,750
Scottish Conservation Projects Trust	30,000
Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations	6,300
Scottish Environmental Education Council	15,000
Scottish Field School of Archeology	2,400
Scottish Field Studies Association	10,000
Scottish Historic Buildings Trust	13,700
Scottish Rights of Way Society Limited	5,000
Scottish Wildlife and Countryside Link	7,500
Scottish Wildlife Trust	30,000
Strathclyde Building Preservation Trust	7,000
Woodland Trust	5,000

Greenland White-fronted Geese

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what measures have been taken to prevent the killing of Greenland white-fronted geese during their return to breeding grounds or during the period of preparation for their migration;

(2) what was the date on which licences to shoot Greenland white-fronted geese were withdrawn; what was the reason for their withdrawal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: All licences to shoot Greenland white-fronted geese on Islay were withdrawn on 16 March 1988 to avoid stress to the birds during the period of preparation for return migration to their breeding grounds. The timing of the withdrawal of licences was determined on the basis of advice received from the Nature Conservancy Council. From that date the prohibition on the killing of white-fronted geese has been fully restored and there is no evidence to suggest that any further shooting has taken place.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is empowered by the Civil Defence Act 1948 to take such steps as he considers necessary for the purposes of civil defence; to make regulations about the civil defence functions of local authorities and to make grants towards expenses incurred in the discharge of those functions. Regulations made under the Act include the Civil Defence (Local Authority Functions) (Scotland) Regulations 1983, which prescribe the functions of local authorities in relation to civil defence. The Civil Protection in Peacetime Act 1986 enables local authorities to use civil defence resources in responding to a peacetime emergency.

Information on expenditure and manpower is as follows:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Expenditure (£ million) (including grants paid to local authorities and payments to NHS)	5·40	5·40	7·30
Civil service manpower	48	48	43

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There is no direct liaison or collaborative work between NATO boards and committees and the Scottish Office, whose interests are covered by representatives of other Departments on a United Kingdom basis.

School Closures

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has reached a decision on the school closure proposals referred to him by Strathclyde regional council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Last month Strathclyde region submitted to me 34 proposals for the closure, rezoning or change of site of schools which require my consent under section 22B of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980. I have given my consent to the following:

Castlehead High School, Paisley—extension of delineated area.

St. Margarets Primary School, New Cumnock—closure.

Daer and Powtrail Primary School, Lanark Division—closure.

Donaldson Street School, Kirkintilloch—relocation.

Girvan Primary School, Girvan—extension of delineated area to include part of delineated area of Assel Primary School which is to close.

I have refused consent to the following:

Paisley Grammar School—closure.

Notre Dame High School, Glasgow—closure.

Decisions on the other cases will be notified to the education authority as soon as possible.

Council House Sales

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be able to provide further details of the new discount scheme for public sector tenants wishing to buy their council houses; and when he now expects the new provisions to take effect.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 June 1988]: Details of the items to be contained in the determination covering the revised discount provisions are currently under consideration, but it is expected that the new scheme including the cost floor provisions, will be commenced two months after the Housing Bill receives Royal Assent.

The framework of the new provisions will be broadly in line with that which applies at present in England and Wales.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inner-city Initiative

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the progress of his Department's inner-city initiative.

Mr. Atkins: The inner city task forces are a central part of the Government's action for cities. They were set up in February 1986 as small local teams charged with experimenting with policies and projects to tackle the problems of small inner city areas with big problems. They remain very closely involved in local economic regeneration. They are meeting their objectives of securing more jobs for local people and improving their employability, encouraging and facilitating local enterprise and supporting environmental and crime prevention initiatives.

Over 600 projects have been supported by the task forces, covering a broad spread of activity from which important lessons are being learnt and the results disseminated, for example, about targeted training developing schools-industry links helping small businesses start and grow through advice and better access to finance encouraging local purchasing initiatives.

In all these areas, and others, we are learning, above all, how to encourage and develop the contribution of the local business world in each city to action for cities so that all residents of our cities can benefit from increased national prosperity.

In addition to my Department's task force initiative, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster carries responsibility under the Prime Minister for co-ordinating the Government's action for cities, which involves a number of Departments. I am glad to say that there has been a most positive response from business to join us in tackling the problems of our inner cities following the breakfast presentations that my colleagues and myself have been making around the country.

Mr. Peter Luff

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the annual amount paid by his Department to the employers of his special adviser, Mr. Peter Luff, in compensation for their loss of his services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: £21,933 per annum plus VAT.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The DTI represents the United Kingdom on the NATO industrial planning committee, which meets twice a year at plenary level and four times at working group level. This committee, together with the food and agriculture planning committee, is responsible for planning and exercising the Central Supplies Agency, a NATO civil wartime agency. The Central Supplies Agency would be responsible for ensuring the continued availability and equitable distribution of both civil and military purposes of food, agricultural and industrial supplies. The committee also exchanges information on the wartime industrial plans of member countries and studies on a selective basis their capability to produce essential industrial supplies during wartime.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Civil emergency and home defence planning in the DTI is aimed at ensuring that those industries for which the Department is responsible would be able to meet any essential demands placed upon them during an emergency. Six members of staff are currently engaged full time on the work, with assistance from other staff as necessary. Annual expenditure has been as follows:

	£000's
1985-86	125
1986-87	130
1987-88	135

Space Industry

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the space industry; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry met the United Kingdom industry space committee on 26 May. There was a wide-ranging discussion of recent developments and future prospects, including the question of the commercialisation of space activities.

House of Fraser plc

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has yet received the report of the investigation into the circumstances in which House of Fraser plc was taken over; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: No. The investigation into House of Fraser Holdings plc continues and I am unable to say when a report will be received.

TechAlert

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a copy of the TechAlert report by Charles Miley; and if the will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No. The report was prepared as part of a review of TechAlert currently being undertaken by the Department and it contains commercially sensitive information.

Airbus Industrie

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on what proposals there are for the restructuring of the management and finances of Airbus Industrie.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The proposals for restructuring the management and finances of Airbus Industrie are contained in the report of the four independent advisers, known as the wise men, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

At our last meeting, in Hanover on 5 May, the Aerospace Ministers of the four Airbus partners' Governments noted with satisfaction that the Airbus partners and Airbus Industrie had responded promptly in studying the wise men's recommendations and reaching agreement in principle to their proposals. We asked the industrialists to start to implement the restructuring without delay with a view to establishing the structure of the new organisation by autumn, with full implementation from the end of 1988 at the latest.

GEC-Plessey (Merger)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the outcome of the negotiations which he asked the Director General of Fair Trading to have with GEC on the proposed merger between GEC and Plessey.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State announced on 25 March this year that he had agreed to a variation of the undertakings given by GEC following publication of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the proposed merger between GEC and Plessey in August 1986. The variation is to allow the establishment of a joint venture company to handle the telecommunications interest of both companies. This decision was in accordance with the recommendation of the Director General of Fair Trading.

Internal Market Council

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Internal Market Council held on 7 June.

Mr. Maude: The Council, at which my hon. Friend the Minister for Trade and I represented the United Kingdom, discussed proposed directives on the mutual recognition of higher education diplomas and right of residence throughout the Community for EC nationals not already covered by the treaty of Rome; proposals for a Community patent convention; and a regulation to establish a Community trade mark system.

The Council adopted directives on consumer protection in the indication of the prices of foodstuffs and non-food products; on member states' arrangements for the inspection of laboratories to verify compliance with good laboratory practice; on the rules governing the classification, packaging and labelling requirements for dangerous preparations; and establishing a mandatory range of quantities in which spirit drinks and sparkling wines must be sold.

The Council also agreed on a directive relating to the publication of annual accounting documents of branches of banks whose head office is outside that member state; a proposal to develop a Communitywide market for information services; and a resolution on small and medium-sized enterprises and deregulation.

Post Office (Counter Services)

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what proposals he has for alterations in the Post Office's arrangements for contracts for counter services; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received since 1 January concerning contracts for Post Office counter services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I have received many representations about changes to some sub-postmasters' contracts with the Post Office, particularly the introduction of community offices. However, this is primarily a matter for the Post Office and I have no proposals to intervene to change these arrangements.

Rowntree plc

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations were received by the Office of Fair Trading about the Nestlé bid for Rowntree; and how many of these supported the reference of this bid to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 14 June 1988]: I understand that the Office of Fair Trading has received many representations, most of which express opposition to the proposed merger.

Voluntary Restraint

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 7 June to the hon. Member for Darlington, Official Report, column 429, whether, in the case of the non-vehicle voluntary restraint arrangements with Japan, he is satisfied that the net cost to the economy does not outweigh the benefits to the industries concerned.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 13 June 1988]: I am satisfied that the continuation of the inter-industry restraint arrangements to which my hon. Friend refers is justified for a limited period. I am keeping the need for them under close review.

NORTHERN IRELAND

De Lorean Motor Cars Ltd.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to recover the outstanding moneys owing to Her Majesty's Government arising out of their investment in De Lorean Motor Cars Ltd.

Mr. Viggers: Claims have been lodged by the Department of Economic Development with the liquidators of the Northern Ireland company, De Lorean Motor Cars Ltd. and the trustee in bankruptcy of the American parent company, De Lorean Motor Company, both of whom have instituted legal actions for the benefit of creditors, including actions against the De Lorean auditors, Arthur Andersen and Co.

Legal proceedings claiming substantial damages have also been taken out in the United States by the Department of Economic Development alleging a number of offences, including negligence and breach of contract against Arthur Andersen and Co.

The joint receivers appointed by the Government in 1982 are also involved in legal proceedings for the recovery of funds. These actions are in London against Lotus Cars Limited, the estate of the late Mr. A. C. B. Chapman, Mr. F. R. Bushell and Mr. J. Z. De Lorean for the recovery of funds believed to have been misappropriated and in Switzerland to recover funds known to be held in Swiss bank accounts. In the United States the joint receivers have lodged claims with the trustee in bankruptcy of the American parent company.

Livewire Scheme

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Livewire scheme.

Mr. Viggers: Livewire is a United Kingdom-wide scheme which helps 16 to 25-year-olds develop their ideas for self-employment. The scheme's principal sponsor is Shell UK and in Northern Ireland the main local sponsor is the Belfast Telegraph; the scheme is administered locally by the action resource centre. This year 266 young people entered the competition in Northern Ireland, representing 8 per cent. of the United Kingdom total.

Northern Ireland participants have traditionally performed well in the United Kingdom competition; this year's grand final takes place on 28 June 1988.

I believe that Livewire is an excellent scheme which is highly valued in Northern Ireland and I congratulate the organisers. By helping young people obtain skilled advice and support the scheme encourages their interest in self-employment and provides an important focus for the development of tomorrow's entrepreneurs and small businesses.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy that housing benefit in respect of any household be deducted proportionally from all occupants in the household in receipt of benefit, and that the tenant named on the rent book could be held responsible for a proportioned amount of rent and rates charged by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

Mr. Needham: No.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for northern Ireland whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Neither the Northern Ireland Office nor the Northern Ireland Departments have any direct involvement with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, but their interests are fully represented on the appropriate NATO bodies by relevant central Government Departments.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: The Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments have a remit to prepare and review contingency plans to deal with those peacetime civil emergencies which fall within their main areas of responsibility. Civil Defence planning in Northern Ireland is carried out under the authority of the Civil Defence Act (Northern Ireland) 1950 and is in line with current arrangements throughout the United Kingdom.

The number of staff involved was 12 for 1985-86 and 1986-87 and is currently 11.

The annual budgets were:

(i) 1985-86	1,539,000
(ii) 1986-87	930,000
(iii) 1987-88	1,706,000

Sentencing Policy

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new arrangements he has made for the review of life and indeterminate sentences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: My right hon. Friend announced a review of the cases of each special category prisoner serving a sentence of life imprisonment or detention at the Secretary of State's pleasure in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) on 7 June, at column 464. As far as other Secretary of State pleasure cases are concerned, I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's replies to the hon. Members for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) and Denton and Reddish (Mr. Bennett) on 26 May, at columns 499-501.

Sport

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide figures for the last five years for the amount spent by his Department on sport; and if he will give a breakdown of such figures into convenient categories.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding reply 14 June 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

	1983-84 £	1984-85 £	1985-86 £	1986-87 £	1987-88 £	Totals £

[1] Includes grants for the provision of community facilities which cannot be given separately.

AIDS

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to how many deaths AIDS was a contributory factor during May.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 14 June 1988]: No such deaths were attributed to Northern Ireland during May.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chile

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information, pursuant to his answer of 8 June, Official Report, columns 821-23, he has on the electoral registration arrangements, including the requirements for identity cards, at the forthcoming plebiscite in Chile.

Mr. Eggar: The number of Chileans registering to vote in the forthcoming plebiscite is encouraging. By 10 June, 6·2 million people had registered out of a total electorate of about 8 million. Registration is continuing at about 400,000 per month. Voters require identity cards to enable them to register. At the end of May, just over 7·5 million new identity cards had been issued.

Military Expenditure

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which countries are proposing to increase their military spending in 1988-89 by the greatest percentage (i) in real terms and (ii) in absolute terms in (a) the developed world and (b) the Third world.

Mr. Mellor: This information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards proposals that the United States of America and its Western allies should seek a pledge by developing countries to cut military spending as part of a consensus on disarmament at the special session of the United Nations General Assembly; what account is proposed to be taken in seeking such a pledge of the projected level of arms exports by Western developed countries in the coming years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We are not aware of any specific proposals for developing countries to pledge a cut in their military spending, but believe that all states should be encouraged to undertake measures of arms control consistent with their security interests. Arms control is not the exclusive preserve of the superpowers. We believe this approach is consistent with our policy of meeting the legitimate defence interests of certain countries in accordance with their right to self defence as embodied in article 51 of the United Nations charter.

Foreign Affairs Council

Sir Peter Blaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 13 and 14 June.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I attended the Foreign Affairs Council in Luxembourg on 13 and 14 June, accompanied by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State, and my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development. On 13 June I also took part in a discussion of European political co-operation issues.

Much of our work concerned relations with Eastern Europe. In the framework of political co-operation, we issued a statement on East-West relations welcoming recent encouraging developments and urging East European countries to approach the final phase of the CSCE negotiations in Vienna in a constructive spirit.

In the Council we agreed to the signature on 25 June of an EEC-CMEA joint declaration, which provides a framework for co-operation in appropriate fields. The Council also discussed the Community's negotiations with Hungary for a trade and co-operation agreement, and agreed on a new compromise proposal, suggested by the United Kingdom, on the timing of abolition of quantitative restrictions. I hope that this will lead to the early conclusion of the agreement.

In the framework of political co-operation we discussed the middle east, Afghanistan, Latin America and South Africa. We issued a statement of support for Lebanon, where presidential elections due this summer will be of great importance for the future of the country, and a brief statement reiterating our concern about the fate of the Sharpeville Six. Copies of the statements will be placed in the Library of the House. On Afghanistan, we agreed that both the European Community and the member states individually should make a significant aid contribution to help the return of refugees and the reconstruction of an independent, non-aligned Afghanistan. We agreed that there was cause for concern at the loss of momentum in the Central American peace process, but reaffirmed our full support for it and for democratisation in Latin America.

In the Council we had a useful first discussion of the forthcoming renegotiation of the EEC/ACP (Lomé) convention. The Council agreed that the next elections to the European Parliament should take place between 15 and 18 June 1989. It also considered the jurisdiction and composition of the court of first instance, and Ministers, meeting as a conference of representatives of the member states, discussed the nomination of judges and advocates-general to the European Court of Justice. Both questions were remitted for further work. The Irish Foreign Minister and I briefed the Council on a proposal for an EC contribution to the International Fund for Ireland. This important initiative was welcomed by the other Foreign Ministers.

Finally, the Council reached agreement on the legal texts implementing the conclusions of the Brussels European Council on the future financing of the Community. These texts will be formally adopted once the European Parliament has given its opinion.

We are thus now close to completing the key task of translating the major political agreements reached in February into the binding legal form on which the United Kingdom has insisted throughout these lengthy and successful negotiations.

Immigration

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current waiting time for interviews for applicants who are (i) fiancées, (ii) spouses and (iii) dependants in (a) Bombay, (b) New Delhi, (c) Islamabad, (d) Karachi and (e) Nairobi.

Mr. Eggar: Waiting times for interviews are currently as follows:

Months

	Spouses and dependants (Q2)	Fiancées (Q3)
Bombay	6	9
New Delhi	5	8
Islamabad	12	20
Karachi	6	11
Nairobi	3	3

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average length of time it takes for an applicant who is refused entry clearance for (a) notification of refusal following interview, (b) dispatch of ECO's statement to the Home Office, (c) dispatch of Home Office papers to immigration appeals tribunal and (d) listing of case by the immigration appeals tribunal.

Mr. Eggar: The time taken from interview to decision on an application for entry clearance depends entirely on what further inquiries (including the applicant being asked to produce further documentary evidence) the entry clearance office (ECO) deems necessary to satisfy himself that the applicant qualifies for admission under the immigration rules.

The dispatch of ECO's explanatory statements direct to the appellate authority varies from post to post and can currently take from one week, in the case of smaller less busy posts, to up to six months in the case of larger posts in the Indian sub-continent processing in excess of 45,000 entry clearance applications per year.

Statistics about the time taken to complete individual appeals are not available, but I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General that the following time scale is currently likely;

(i) from receipt in London of the ECO's explanatory statement to despatch to both parties: up to four weeks;

(ii) from receipt of papers by both parties to issue by each party of a certificate of readiness to proceed: this is in the hands of the parties and times vary from a few weeks to many months;
(iii) from certificate of readiness to proceed to hearing date: up to two months, but longer where parties request adjournments;
(iv) from hearing date to issue of appeal decision: about two weeks.

Central America

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why Her Majesty's Government did not support the United Nations General Assembly resolution 42/231: special plan of economic co-operation for Central America; what information he has on the response by the United Kingdom's EEC partners; what information he has as to which other countries declined to sign resolution 42/231; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: United Nations resolution 42/231 on the United Nations special plan of economic co-operation for Central America was adopted by consensus, which the United Kingdom joined, together with all our EEC partners.

We did not co-sponsor the resolution because we wished to make an explanation of vote on it. I understand that several other countries, including a number of Commonwealth countries, also decided not to co-sponsor.

Kuwait

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to the answer of 8 June, Official Report, column 612, if he will now state what future measures he proposes to take to improve relations with Kuwait; why the information was not contained in the previous answer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: As I explained to my hon. Friend on 8 June, our relations with Kuwait are long established and very good. They will continue to be reinforced by frequent visits in both directions by senior members of our two Governments, who exchange views on matters of mutual interest.

Panama

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 31 March, what advice is now being given to British visitors intending to travel to Panama and how many have contacted the United Kingdom embassy in Panama following that reply.

Mr. Eggar: Our current advice is that the situation in Panama is still unsettled and prospective visitors should travel only if on urgent business. They should bring international credit cards and sufficient cash in US dollars in small denominations to cover other expenses. They should contact the British embassy on arrival. Fewer than a dozen visitors have contacted the British embassy since 31 March.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will identify (i) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (ii) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has no direct liaison arrangements with NATO on civil emergency and home defence planning, on which the Home Office takes the lead in respect of the United Kingdom, consulting us as necessary. The United Kingdom representative on NATO's senior civil emergency planning committee is a Ministry of Defence official, a member of staff of the United Kingdom delegation to NATO. The United Kingdom representative at plenary meetings of the committee is a senior Home Office official.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office is not directly involved in civil emergency or home defence planning, which is co-ordinated by the Home Office in respect of the United Kingdom. However, we are consulted as necessary by the Home Office and by other Whitehall Departments in the process of such planning.

Regional Languages and Cultures

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when, and by what means, Her Majesty's Government intend to give effect to the provisions of the European Community charter relating to regional languages and cultures, established by resolution of the European Parliament on 16 October 1981.

Mr. Eggar: European Parliament resolutions do not bind member states. The question of implementation by the Governments of EC member states does not therefore arise.

Economic, Social and Cultural Rights

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when, and by what means, Her Majesty's Government intend to implement part I, articles 1 (1) and (3), of the international covenant on economic, social and cultural rights, to which the United Kingdom is a signatory.

Mr. Eggar: We fully uphold our obligations under article 1 of the international covenant on economic, social and cultural rights. The measures taken in respect of our obligations under this covenant and under the international covenant on civil and political rights, which contains an identical article 1, are explained in the reports we have presented to the United Nations economic and social council and to the human rights committee respectively. Copies of these reports are available in the Library of the House.

DEFENCE

RAF Upper Heyford

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to the reasons why the flight paths have been changed at RAF Upper Heyford.

Mr. Freeman: The fine-weather take-off patterns employed at RAF Upper Heyford until 1 June this year aimed to minimise the disturbance to the surrounding population caused by aircraft noise. These patterns were unique in military aircraft operations in the United Kingdom, in that they required aircraft to bank and turn immediately after take-off. The poor weather take-offs do not involve this banking procedure. Although the F-111 has a very good safety record, a number of modifications have been made to the aircraft during its life which have reduced its thrust-to-weight ratio. The take-off patterns at Upper Heyford, like all flying operations, are kept under continual review and recent operational experience indicated the need to introduce new fine weather take-off patterns, in line with standard procedures elsewhere, to ensure that the high safety standards of the United States Air Force are maintained. In fine weather the aircraft now depart in a straight line from the airfield as they have always done in poor weather.

Rainfall

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the rainfall levels for each meteorological reading station for 2 and 3 May 1986.

Mr. Sainsbury: The hon. Member's question would require the extraction from archives of daily rainfall figures recorded at about 4,400 meteorological reporting stations in the United Kingdom alone. The transcription and checking of almost 9,000 sets of figures would involve disproportionate effort and expense.

Exercise Tristar

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) for what theatre of operations forces will be training during Exercise Tristar;

(2) on what date local media organisations were informed about Exercise Tristar;

(3) on what date advance notice of Exercise Tristar was given to hon. Members in constituencies to be affected by the exercise.

Mr. Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 13 June.

It is not our normal practice to inform hon. Members about routine training exercises as small as Exercise Tristar 88 which are unlikely to cause any disruption to members of the public, nor to inform the media that such exercises are taking place.

Tornado

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current shortfall of trained tornado air defence aircrews in the RAF.

Mr. Freeman: There is no shortfall of trained Tornado air defence aircrews in the RAF.

Military Helicopter (Incident)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the investigation of the incident involving a military helicopter and a civilian car in the Tyndrome-Dalmally area on 5 May.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to make a statement on the investigation of the incident involving a military helicopter and a civilian car in the Dalmally area on 5 May.

Mr. Freeman: RAF police investigations into this incident are very thorough and have not yet been completed, although the complainant in her statement to the RAF police has indicated that she thought the helicopter concerned was civilian rather than military.

Air Interceptions

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North of 3 May, Official Report, column 384, if interceptions of a single Soviet aircraft sorties by several different Royal Air Force aircraft are counted as one interception or as several.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A single penetration of the United Kingdom air defence region by Soviet military aircraft may result in more than one interception by Royal Air Force aircraft. Such interceptions are recorded individually. Equally, however, where an aircraft, or a flight of RAF aircraft, intercepts two or more Soviet aircraft flying together this would be recorded as a single interception.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Cunninghame, North of 3 May, Official Report, column 384, if any change has taken place in the average number of interceptions by the Royal Air Force of Soviet aircraft per week since 1987.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It would not be appropriate to comment on Soviet aircraft activity over periods shorter than one year.

TA Exercise, Newbury

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Territorial Army exercise at Crookham court school, Newbury; and what representations he has received from local residents thereon.

Mr. Freeman: A training exercise for Army cadets from the school was held on 12 May at Crookham court school. There have been no representations from local residents.

Stainmore Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement outlining his Department's plans for the use of Stainmore common by the Army.

Mr. Freeman: The Stainmore land is to be used by the Army for dry training by up to 150 men at any time, although training for up to 300 men may take place on a maximum of 22 days a year. Exceptionally, training up to battalion level may be conducted with the prior consent of the local planning authority. No live firing will take place in this area.

Combat Talon II Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States of America has approached Her Majesty's Government about deployment in the United Kingdom of Special Operations Forces Combat Talon II aircraft, due to enter service in 1989.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of proposals he has for future uses of RAF Molesworth.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the hon. Member on 20 January, at column 764.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, following the United States contingency deployment plan for chemical weapons, the United States has approached Her Majesty's Government about the contingency deployment of chemical weapons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply of my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member on 24 July 1986, at column 490.

Exercise Excalibur

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many aircraft took part in Exercise Excalibur in April.

Mr. Freeman: Forty two.

Exercise Flintlock

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if facilities at Royal Air Force Woodbridge have been used in support of Exercise Flintlock in the current year.

Mr. Freeman: Elements of the 21st Special Operations Squadron based at RAF Woodbridge deployed to take part in Exercise Flintlock.

Steeple Aston (Noise)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the recent noise testing carried out by the Royal Air Force Institute of Community Health at Dr. Ratcliffe's school, Steeple Aston; and if he will publish the results in the Official Report;

(2) if, in the light of the results of the recent noise testing carried out at Dr. Ratcliffe's school, Steeple Aston, he will issue instructions to prevent airplanes from Royal Air Force, Upper Heyford taking off directly over Steeple Aston.

Mr. Freeman: Unsuitable wind conditions have so far prevented the completion of the noise survey at Dr. Ratcliffe's school, Steeple Aston. I will reply when the information is available.

Buccaneer (Anniversary)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving or former South African military personnel were present at RAF Lossiemouth on 29 and 30 April for the celebration of the 30th anniversary of the Buccaneer aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: The celebrations held at RAF Lossiemouth on 29 and 30 April commemorating the 30th anniversary of the Buccaneer aircraft were primarily social in nature and the majority of those involved were United Kingdom service men from the Royal Navy and RAF. No South African or indeed other foreign military personnel were specifically invited, and, so far as I am aware, no South African military personnel were present. The celebrations were advertised widely in the international aviation press and a message of congratulation was received from the South African Air Force, which also operates Buccaneers.

Winston Barracks, Lanarkshire

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current status of the proposal to establish a United States Navy contingency hospital at Winston barracks, Lanarkshire, how many United States personnel are currently stationed there; and what is the cost to the United Kingdom Exchequer of establishing and maintaining this facility.

Mr. Stewart: We have agreed to make available to the United States Navy a site at RAF Lanark (formerly Winston barracks) for the establishment of a wartime contingency hospital. The costs of establishing and running this facility will be met entirely by the United States, but there will be no permanent presence at the site of United States military personnel in peacetime.

Maritime Exercise (Sutherland)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement of the nature and purposes of the air activities to be carried out in north-west Sutherland and Wester Ross during the maritime exercise on 17 and 18 June.

Mr. Freeman: The exercise will involve a small-scale amphibious landing using helicopters. Shore-based aircraft will simulate opposition to the landing, for which air defence will be provided by a mix of shore-based and carrier-borne aircraft.

Irish Regiments

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the four Irish regiments in the Regular Army have served in Northern Ireland during the past two years.

Mr. Ian Stewart: None of the so-called "Irish-named" regiments of the Army have served in Northern Ireland during the past two years.

Army Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to invite from foreign countries only official Government organisations to attend the British Army equipment exhibition as potential buyers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The majority of overseas visitors to the British Army equipment exhibition are from official Government organisations. We do, however, invite some overseas senior industrialists at the request of companies participating in the exhibition. I see no reason to alter this practice.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy not to invite British based private arms traders to attend the British Army equipment exhibition as potential buyers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Salisbury: We do not invite British-based private arms traders to the British Army equipment exhibition.

Low Flying

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet villagers of Penyllordd, Hope and Caergeric regarding the impact of low-flying military aircraft flights upon the quality of life in these and neighbouring areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I would be happy to meet the hon. Member to discuss any problems his constituents may have regarding the impact of low-level military aircraft flights near their homes.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what geographical area, expressed (a) by county and (b) by parliamentary constituency, is covered by low-flying area 7.

Mr. Freeman: Low-flying area 7 covers (a) the counties of Clwyd, Dyfed, Mid Glamorgan, South Glamorgan, West Glamorgan, Gwent, Gwynedd and Powys and (b) the parliamentary constituencies of Ynys Môn, Conwy, Clwyd, North-West, Delyn, Caernarfon, Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Clwyd, South-West, Ceredigion and Pembroke, North, Montgomery, Pembroke, Carmarthen, Brecon and Radnor, Llanelli, Gower, Swansea, East, Swansea, West, Neath, Aberavon, Cynon Valley, Rhondda, Ogmore, Bridgend, Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney, Pontypridd, Vale of Glamorgan, Cardiff, Central, Cardiff, North, Cardiff, South and Penarth, Cardiff, West, Caerphilly, Blaenau Gwent, Islwyn, Newport, East, Newport, West, Torfaen and Monmouth and part of the parliamentary constituencies of Alyn and Deeside, Shropshire, North, and Wrexham.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what geographical area, expressed (a) by county and (b) by parliamentary constituency, is covered by low-flying area 10.

Mr. Freeman: Low flying area 10 no longer exists.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what geographical area, expressed (a) by county and (b) by parliamentary constituency, is covered by low-flying area 12.

Mr. Freeman: Low flying area 12 covers (a) the counties of Cleveland and Tyne and Wear and parts of the counties of Durham, Northumberland and North Yorkshire and (b) the parliamentary constituencies of Wansbeck, Blyth Valley, Tynemouth, South Shields, Jarrow, Sunderland, North, Sunderland, South, Newcastle upon Tyne, North, Wallsend, Newcastle upon Tyne, Central, Newcastle upon Tyne, East, Tyne Bridge, Gateshead, East, Houghton and Washington, Blaydon, Durham, North, Easington, Hartlepool, Stockton, North, Stockton, South, Redcar, Middlesbrough, and part of the parliamentary constituencies of Hexham, Durham, North-West, City of Durham, Bishop Auckland, Darlington, Sedgefield, Richmond (Yorks.), Langbaurgh, Berwick-upon-Tweed and Roxburgh and Berwickshire.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-flying sorties were flown over the United Kingdom in the period 1 January to 31 May.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1 January and 31 March 1988 a total of 40,952 such sorties were flown over the United Kingdom. Figures for April and May 1988 are not yet available.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of complaints received about low flying over the United Kingdom in the period 1 January to 31 May.

Mr. Freeman: Between 1 January and 30 April 1988 the Ministry of Defence received 1,267 complaints and inquiries about military low flying. Figures for May are not yet available.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the Royal Air Force's expenditure on public relations, in constant prices, in each year since 1979; and what increase in resources is currently being provided for the Royal Air Force's public relations campaign on low flying.

Mr. Freeman: The last year for which comprehensive figures are available is 1987-88. Total spending on public relations for the Royal Air Force from 1983 was as follows:

	£ million
1983-84	0·2
1984-85	0·3
1985-86	0·5
1986-87	0·6
1987-88	0·7

Details of total expenditure for the years 1979-80 to 1982-83 could not be obtained without disproportionate effort. The figures provided include annual staffing costs together with expenditure on films, exhibitions, publications, equipment and so on. No increase in resources has been allocated to PR activity on low flying.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy on 20 January, Official Report, column 764, if the figure for the number of complaints received about low flying includes complaints made to local Royal Air Force and United States Air Force air bases and other military installations.

Mr. Freeman: Yes, although queries which had been answered by the local Royal Air Force station or United States Air Force air base would not necessarily have been forwarded to the Ministry of Defence for inclusion in central statistics.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on

(a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The terms of reference of work on civil emergencies and home defence planning are classified. The other information sought is not available in the form requested.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with the bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Ministry of Defence has no formal links with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees. However, MOD officials are consulted as necessary by the relevant lead Department on matters which are of interest to the MOD. The scale of MOD involvement varies and it is not possible to quantify this without disproportionate time and effort.

RAF (Flying Training)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the percentage increase in the provision for Royal Air Force flying training activity in 1987-88 over 1986-87; and what changes in provision are being implemented in 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman: Royal Air Force flying training activity decreased by 9 per cent. from 1986-87 to 1987-88; a further decrease of 6 per cent. for 1987-88 to 1988-89 is being implemented.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish a table showing the number of troops deployed in Northern Ireland, the number of his Department's civil servants stationed there, and the total cost to public funds of each in each year since 1974.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The information available on the armed forces and MOD civilian numbers in Northern Ireland on 1 January of each year since 1974 is as follows:

	Regular Forces	UDR	Civilians
1974	16,991	7,816	[1]not available
1975	15,732	7,678	not available
1976	15,627	7,793	not available
1977	15,427	7,616	not available
1978	15,287	7,812	[2]3,364
1979	13,704	7,761	3,305
1980	13,389	7,425	3,231
1981	12,143	7,431	3,087
1982	11,799	7,350	2,947
1983	11,357	7,026	2,825
1984	10,260	6,929	2,761
1985	10,222	6,468	2,709
1986	10,090	6,508	2,693
1987	11,158	6,535	2,621
1988	10,887	6,364	2,618

[1] Civilian numbers prior to 1978 are not readily available and could only be produced at disproportionate cost.
[2] Civilian numbers in 1978 are at 1 April.

Information on costs is not available in the form requested. However, the following information is available on the extra costs of military operations in Northern Ireland:

Financial year	Extra costs[1] at outturn prices £ million
1981-82	149
1982-83	143
1983-84	141
1984-85	121
1985-86	135
1986-87	144
1987-88	168

[1] These costs are derived from an annual assessment of the resources which MOD requires to fulfil those tasks which relate directly to the campaign against terrorism in Northern Ireland.

Reconnaissance Force

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the role and composition of the military reaction or reconnaissance force in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 13 June 1988]: There is no such unit.

Sub-machine Guns

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which models of the Sterling and Ingram sub-machine gun have been issued to the Army in Northern Ireland from 1973 to the current date.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The Sterling model L2A3 sub-machine gun and the Ingram model 10 sub-machine gun have been issued to the Army in Northern Ireland.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with union representatives concerning the safe use of pesticides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Trade unions are represented on the three specialist panels established to give assistance to the independent advisory committee on pesticides. These panels, the medical and toxicological panel, the application technology panel and the labelling and container design panel, make an important contribution to ensuring the safe use of pesticides. Since October 1986 there have been a total of eight meetings, and trade union representatives have attended four of them.

Trade unions were consulted on the drafting of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. They were also consulted on the first draft of a statutory code of practice on use of pesticides in agriculture and will be able to comment on the revised draft which was published for use on a trial basis in February 1988.

No pesticide product is approved for use unless Ministers, on the advice of the advisory committee on pesticides, are satisfied that it can be used safely. From time to time new information becomes available. Trade unions are consulted whenever the withdrawal of approval for a product for safety reasons is to be considered by the ACP.

In addition to direct contacts with individual trade unions and the TUC, my Department is kept in touch with trade union views on the safe use of pesticides through tripartite bodies organised by the Health and Safety Executive. The Health and Safety Commission, which is itself a tripartite body, has to approve any advisory code of practice on safe use of pesticides drafted by the HSE.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the number of prosecutions of persons for breach of the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986, for each year since 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has conducted two, successful, prosecutions since the regulations were brought into effect in October 1986. One prosecution was in 1987, the other this year. Both were for misuse of pesticides. My Department may also prosecute offenders who misuse pesticides under other legislation. In 1987 there were two such prosecutions under the Protection of Animals Act 1911. The other agricultural departments are responsible for similar prosecutions in respect of their own areas.

Since 29 June 1987 the Health and Safety Executive has been the enforcing authority for the regulations for the premises for which they are responsible under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. These premises include farms and holdings, and pesticide manufacturers in Great Britain. Figures for prosecution should be available shortly.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he takes to ensure that workers in the agriculture industry are fully aware of the dangers to their health from exposure to pesticides.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No pesticide product is approved for use unless Ministers, on the advice of the independent advisory committee on pesticides, are satisfied that it can be used safely. The product label is the principal way in which information on the safe use of a particular pesticide product is conveyed to the user. Any statements about operator protection or requirement for operator training have the force of law.

No workers in the agriculture industry may use a pesticide in the course of their work unless they have been given adequate instruction and guidance in the safe use of pesticides and are competent for the duties they are called upon to perform. And in using the pesticide they are required to take all reasonable precautions to protect the health of human beings.

In order to ensure that young people and those offering a commercial service are fully aware of all their obligations under the Control of Pesticide Regulations 1986, as from 1 January 1989 they will not be allowed to apply professional agricultural pesticides unless they hold an appropriate recognised certificate of competence.

Sheep Dipping

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the hazards to health of farm workers involved in the process of sheep dipping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Operators exposed to sheep dips containing organophosphorus compounds may experience some adverse reaction. All approved products carry safety warnings which advise on the appropriate precautions which should be taken to minimise exposure.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what guidance his Department has given to the agriculture industry concerning precautions in the process of dipping sheep.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Advisory leaflets are available to farmers which set out the precautions operators should take when dipping sheep. It is also a requirement that safety precautions are included on the labels of all licensed sheep dips.

Chernobyl

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) of 7 June, Official Report, column 493, if he will list the numbers and types of equipment and materials purchased for analytical purposes and for monitoring as a result of the Chernobyl accident.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The following additional major items of analytical and monitoring equipment have been purchased:

1 Gamma Spectrometry Assembly
1 Automatic Sample Changer for above
2 Liquid Scintillation Counters
25 Single Channel Analysers coupled with a $1\frac{1}{4}$ inch sodium-iodide detector
3 Single Channel Analysers coupled with a 2 inch sodium-iodide detector
8 Double Channel Analysers coupled with a $1\frac{1}{4}$ inch sodium-iodide detector

In addition, a large number of containers and other minor items have been purchased.

Plant Variety Testing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the number of job losses as a consequence of the implementation of the review into plant variety testing and seed certification; and where such job losses will occur.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 June 1988]: A report on the plant variety testing and seed certification systems in the United Kingdom was published on 14 April 1988. All interested parties have been invited to comment by 15 July 1988. No decisions will be taken on the implementation of the report's recommendations until after comments have been received and given full consideration. It is premature, therefore, to estimate whether any job losses will occur.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the number of visits made by those responsible for the review of plant variety testing and seed certification to locations in Scotland, the places visited, the number of individuals consulted in each location and the length of time of each interview.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 June 1988]: Three visits were made by the review team to Scotland, where the following meetings were held:

Date	Organisation	Location	Number of individuals
27 May 1987	Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland	Edinburgh	9
28 May 1987	Representatives of the industry in Scotland	Edinburgh	15
27 July 1987	Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland	Edinburgh	4
27 July 1987	Representatives of the Scottish Agricultural Colleges and the Scottish Agricultural Statistics Service	Perth	11
28 July 1987	Representatives of the Scottish Crop Research Institute and Caithness Potato Breeders Ltd	Dundee	10
27 January 1988	Representatives of the Scottish Office Trade Union Side	Edinburgh	9

The number of individuals shown excludes members of the review team, but includes officials of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. Each meeting lasted approximately half a day, except for a shorter meeting with the Scottish Office trade union side.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those individuals and organisations who have made representations on the potential effects of the implementation of the recommendations of the recent review on plant variety testing and seed indentification.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 14 June 1988]: Individuals and organisations have until 15 July 1988 to comment on the report on the plant variety testing and seed certification systems in the United Kingdom. Up until 10 June 1988, written representations were received from the following persons and organisations:

The British Association of Seed Analysts.
The Hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. David Clark) on behalf of Ms. D. M. Davidson.
The Institution of Professional Civil Servants—Scottish Branch Section O.
Nickerson Seed Investments Ltd.
The Scots Timothy Seed Growers' Association.
Mr. B. Snoad—John Powling Seeds.
The United Kingdom Agricultural Supply Trade Association Ltd. (Scottish Council).

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department liaises with the NATO food and agricultural planning committee by attending the twice-yearly meetings of this body and its working group, and by participating in exercises which take place annually and training sessions held every other year. Representation is at United Kingdom Civil Service grade 7 level; in addition at present a MAFF grade 5 official chairs the committee. The work of the committee consists of exchanging information about civil emergency planning, within its field, in the member nations, identifying any action required by NATO and planning to carry this through. The work forms an essential part of the United Kingdom contribution to NATO and is a valuable aid to United Kingdom national civil emergency planning.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will indentify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Most of the work on these items by my Department is carried out under programme 52 of the ministerial information in MAFF (MINIM), and the relevant information can be found in the published MINIM report, a copy of which is available in the House Library.

For this programme, the details are:

1. To maintain contingency plans to safeguard supplies of essential foods during civil emergencies; implement plans and respond to the needs of food and agriculture during emergency.
2. To plan, in conjunction with other Departments and interests in the UK and within the NATO Alliance, to feed the population in times of crisis, conventional war and recovery after nuclear attack in the light of planning assumptions laid down centrally by Ministers.
3. To maintain in good condition a strategic food stockpile of a size, composition and distribution determined in accordance with central government policy.

The number of man-years involved on civil emergencies in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 was 19, 18 and 20 respectively, and the budgets costs were £0·3 million, £0·3 million and £0·4 million.

The number of man-years involved on defence planning in 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 was 64, 61 and 63 respectively, the budget costs were £13·1 million, £13·4 million and £13·4 million. In addition, the cost of accommodating the strategic food stockpile is in the region of £10 million per year.

Other work, on civil accidents, is carried out under programme 35, where the terms of reference are "To review and update national and international procedures for food safety in the event of a nuclear or non-nuclear accident."

Information on the numbers of staff and budgets for this work is not separately available.

American Waste

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what assessment he has made of the danger of an outbreak of Colorado beetle infestation from the importation and dumping of American domestic waste in the United Kingdom;

(2) what assessment he has made of the danger of an outbreak of swine fever from the importation and dumping of American domestic waste in the United Kingdom;

(3) what assessment he has made of the danger of an outbreak of foot and mouth disease from the importation and dumping of American domestic waste in the United Kingdom;

(4) what assessment he has made of the danger of rabies from the importation and dumping of American domestic waste in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My officials are assessing the implications of importing American domestic waste in relation to both plant and animal health. The possible introduction of the Colorado beetle is one of the plant health risks being investigated. We are aware of no recent outbreaks of either swine fever or foot and mouth disease in the United States of America, but we are considering whether there might be any risk of those diseases being introduced if the waste included waste food originating outside the United States of America. We are satisfied that there would be no risk of introducing rabies.

Badgers (Tuberculosis)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when a live vaccine for use against tuberculosis in badgers was first isolated.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no live vaccine suitable for use against tuberculosis in badgers. Laboratory trials using a killed strain of the bacillus mycobacterium vaccae are in progress.

WALES

Labour Statistics

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the percentage of (a) female and (b) male unemployment in 1985, 1986 and 1987 in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The seasonally adjusted number of unemployed claimants, expressed as a percentage of the working population, is as follows:

Percentage of unemployed—Wales (annual averages)

	1985	1986	1987
Male	16·5	16·5	15·5
Female	10·6	10·9	9·2

Source: Department of Employment.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the latest figure for the percentage change in unemployment in (i) Wales and (ii) Clwyd since May 1979; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 13 June 1988]: On a consistent seasonally adjusted basis, the number of unemployed claimants in Wales in May 1979 was 73,100 and in May 1988 132,200, an increase of 80·8 per cent. Comparable figures for the same period for Clwyd are not available.

Unadjusted unemployment claimant figures, which are affected by changes in coverage, are available for Clwyd since June 1983. These show a decrease of 24·5 per cent. over the period to May 1988. Comparable figures for Wales show a fall of 18·1 per cent. I am pleased that unemployment in Wales has now gone down every month for the last 24 months.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the numbers of part-time workers in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The most recent estimates of the total number of part-time workers in Wales is provided by the 1984 census of employment. This indicates that in September 1984 there were 192,000 part-time workers.

Welsh Development Agency Factories

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report, for each of the last five years, the number of Welsh Development Agency factories, together with their area in square feet sited in Wales, disaggregated by (i) county area; (ii) district council area and (iii) parliamentary constituency area; and if he will give the corresponding statistics for the percentage of the factory space that remained unoccupied.

Mr. Peter Walker: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

WDA (Driving Instructors)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information his Department holds on the number of approved driving instructors that the Welsh Development Agency has financially assisted in setting up in business during each of the past five years; and at what level of geographic disaggregation this information is available.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Welsh Development Agency has no record of ever providing financial assistance to an approved driving instructor in Wales.

Gipsy Site, Felindre

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what date he will announce his decision on the reference to him by Lliw Valley borough council under section 8 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 on the proposal by West Glamorgan county council to seek deemed planning permission for an official gipsy site at Brynwhilach Farm, Felindre, Swansea.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend expects to be in a position to announce his decision by the end of July.

Farm Workers

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many farm workers were employed in each county of Wales at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Peter Walker: The numbers of farm workers employed in each county, in June 1987 are given in the following table:

	Regular Family Workers	Regular Hired Workers	Total Regular Workers	Seasonal Casual Workers	Total Workers
Clwyd	768	1,020	1,788	1,138	2,926
Dyfed	1,931	1,625	3,556	3,339	6,895
Gwent	453	464	917	646	1,563
Gwynedd	793	716	1,509	1,021	2,530
Mid Glamorgan	179	145	324	373	697
Powys	1,072	959	2,031	1,611	3,642
South Glamorgan	119	252	371	181	552
West Glamorgan	163	124	287	416	703
Wales	5,478	5,305	10,783	8,725	19,508

Notes:
1. Figures relate to main holdings only.
2. Regular workers includes those working full-time and part-time.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is proposing to carry out a monitoring exercise in compliance with the code of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 24 May 1988. A survey to provide information on the ethnic origin of staff in the Welsh Office was recently completed as part of a phased programme of ethnic surveys across the Civil Service.

Hedgerows

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if there are any estimates of the amount of hedgerows grubbed up in Wales in the last year.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if there are any guidelines issued to prevent the loss of hedgerows in the Welsh countryside;

(2) what action he proposes to take to combat the loss of the natural fauna and flora found in hedgerows.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government are anxious to prevent the loss of hedgerows and, as such, grant-aid for their removal was completely withdrawn in 1983. At the same time higher rates of grant were introduced for the provision, replacement and improvement of hedges. The Agricultural Development Advisory Service has produced a number of leaflets giving guidance on hedgerow management and can advise on their value both for agriculture and conservation purposes. The Department also gives guidance to highway authorities on methods of managing roadside hedges which are sympathetic to the needs of the resident flora and fauna.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take to combat the accelerated erosion of soil surrounding hedgerows which have been grubbed up.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am not aware of any particular problems in Wales of accelerated erosion of soil surrounding hedgerows which have been grubbed up. I understand this is a problem mainly associated with the arable areas of East Anglia.

Environmental Conservation

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action he proposes to take to combat the destruction of the physical character of the countryside.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Government are firmly committed to the conservation of the countryside. There are a number of statutory designations which serve to protect it, including national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty, sites of special scientific interest and national nature reserves. A recent initiative is the designation of environmentally sensitive areas, and on 1 January 1988 I established the second such area in Wales in the Lleyn peninsula. In addition the Countryside Commission, which is my right hon. Friend's statutory adviser on countryside conservation matters, the national parks and the Welsh Office agriculture department can make grants available towards the management of important landscape features.

Water Supplies

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has received from Welsh water on the increased levels of acidification of Welsh rivers and its effects on the concentration of aluminium in domestic water supplies.

Mr. Grist: No information has been received of any connection between increased acidification of surface waters and the concentration of aluminium in domestic water supplies. Compliance with the requirements of directive 80/778/EEC which includes a maximum limit on the aluminium concentration, is discussed in the water quality report published annually by Welsh water authority.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the supply outlets of domestic water in Wales that (a) are currently being treated with aluminium sulphate, (b) have aluminium concentration in excess of the European Commission guidelines and (c) are subject to derogations for these and other reasons.

Mr. Grist: In respect of directive 80/778/EEC Welsh water authority's sources of supply which are subject to derogations or delay for aluminium are as follows:

Derogations	Delays
Nantmor	Nantybwch
Llan Penmachno	Capel Dewi
Cwmsymlog	Strata Florida
Afon Cwm-y-Llan	Bontgoch

Details of the number of supplies treated with aluminium sulphate and the concentration of aluminium in supply are not held centrally.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will undertake to meet a joint conference of the Clwyd area health authority, the Alyn-Deeside district council and the county and town councils of Deeside to discuss his plans to enhance cancer treatment for north Wales patients in north Wales, as outlined in his letter to the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside on 10 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Proposals for a comprehensive study of cancer treatment services for north Wales patients have already been the subject of consultation with appropriate health authorities and further discussion would unduly delay commencement of the study.

Datamagnetics, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the amount of funds given so far by (a) Investors in Industry, (b) the Welsh Development Agency and (c) the European Economic Community to Datamagnetics, Clwyd; and what new funds are proposed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: For information on the Welsh Development Agency's input I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 9 May 1988.

EC resources in the form of European regional development fund grants are not passed directly to individual companies. When an investment proceeds as planned, ERDF is retained centrally as partial reimbursement for United Kingdom regional aid assistance already awarded.

As regards the financial involvement of Investors in Industry, I suggest that the hon. Gentleman seeks the information required from the company itself.

The receiver remains optimistic that Datamagnetics can be sold as a going concern.

Deeside and Vale of Clwyd Mind Association

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will meet members of Deeside and Vale of Clwyd Mind Association to discuss the possible closing down of their projects under the unified training programme for the unemployed employment training;

(2) what special measures he will take to assist Deeside and Vale of Clwyd Mind Association to continue the currently effective community programme providing work for disadvantaged groups when employment training is fully operative;

(3) how many places Deeside and Vale of Clwyd Mind Association provide in the current year under the community programme;

(4) if he will enable Deeside and Vale of Clwyd Mind Association to become a training manager in its own right; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Deeside and Vale of Clwyd Mind Association provided 39 places under the Training Commission's community programme scheme between 1 April and 31 May 1988. Decisions about the association's participation in employment training are for the Training Commission, and I understand that none has yet been made. I have no plans to meet members of the association.

Welsh Language

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the members and their appropriate qualifications of the committee advising him on the Welsh language.

Mr. Peter Walker: The eight members of the working group chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister of State are:

Alun Daniel—Executive Director, Welsh Development Agency
Prys Edwards—Chairman Wales Tourist Board
John Elfed Jones—Chairman Welsh Water Authority
Tom Jones—North Wales Regional Officer T&GWU
Winston Roddick QC—Barrister
D. Hugh Thomas—Clerk and Chief Executive, Mid Glamorgan Council Council
Euryn Ogwen Williams—Deputy Director, S4C
Elfed Roberts—Regional Director, Midland Bank.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department has plans for various civil emergencies, and encourages and co-ordinates contingency planning by other public bodies with executive responsibilities. Home defence planning is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, and my Department participates in and contributes to planning in respect of Wales. Three members of staff are devoted full time to this work, and others participate from time to time as necessary.

My Department's budgets, in cash terms, for the last three years were as follows:

	£ thousands
1985-86	103
1986-87	187
1987-88	413

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Liaison between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the United Kingdom Government in areas of Welsh Office responsibility is conducted through the Home Office.

Waste Imports

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will seek powers to prohibit the importation of contaminated soil and other waste from the continent to Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Government believe that the provision of waste disposal services is a legitimate and proper element of international trade provided that adequate safeguards are in existence to ensure that there is no danger to public health or the environment.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much domestic waste, contaminated soil and other waste has been imported in 1986, 1987 and 1988 from (a) the continent, (b) Holland and (c) other sources into (i) Wales and (ii) Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assessment he has of the impact upon human, animal and plant life consequent upon the disposal of contaminated soil from Holland at a site near Gresford, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I refer the right hon. Gentleman to the answer given on 3 December 1987. I was fully satisfied before the consignment was allowed to be imported from Holland that there would be no adverse impact upon human, animal or plant life and I was assured by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution, on advice from Wrexham Maelor borough council, that the disposal site in question was appropriately licensed to receive the waste.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the substances that contaminated the soil exported from Holland to Gresford, Clwyd, via Mostyn docks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The soil contained very low levels of copper, lead, zinc, cadmium, nickel, chromium, arsenic, antimony and mercury.

Gateway Network

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the progress of the small business gateway network in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: On Wednesday 15 June I announced in Cardiff that the high street banks in Wales had joined the gateway network. This adds the commitment of an important sector of private enterprise to our major framework of support for small businesses in the Principality and will add considerably to its success and impact.

THE ARTS

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the objects and property accepted in satisfaction of capital transfer tax and inheritance tax during the financial year ended 31 March; if, in listing them, he will specify (a) the amount of tax satisfied in each case, (b) whether any offers of objects carried conditions as to destination, (c) the dates in each case of the recommendations received by him from the Museums and Galleries Commission for the acceptance of objects, (d) the total for the financial year of the tax thus satisfied and (e) the means by which that total has been covered in the public accounts; and whether a press notice will be issued from the Office of Arts and Libraries comprising the information given in his reply.

Mr. Luce: The information the hon. Member requests is as follows:

Item Offered	Amount of Tax Satisfied (£)	Condition as to Destination	Date of receipt of MGC's recommendations
Two paintings by Belloto	412,500	None	24 February 1987
Archives of Lord Clark of Saltwood	144,870	None	13 March 1988
Chattels at Hagley Hall	34,100	To remain in situ	Residue of offer first recommended 11 October 1985
Picasso's "Weeping Woman"	1,200,000	Offer conditional on allocation to Tate Gallery	11 May 1987
Derby Commemorative Jug	13,750	None	11 May 1987
Raeburn Portrait	96,250	None	MGC Recommendation went to Secretary of State for Scotland on 21 May 1987
Twenty Vignettes by Turner	233,750	Offer conditional on allocation to Scottish National Galleries	MGC Recommendations went to Secretary of State for Scotland on 22 July 1987
Ten Portrait Miniatures	200,344	None	11 May 1987
Henry Moore Drawings	153,456	Offer conditional on allocation to the British Museum	1 September 1987
Constable's "Stratford Mill"	5,500,000	None	4 March 1987
Gainsborough's "Captain Wade"	638,444	Offer conditional on allocation to Bath City Council	15 January 1988
Total Tax Satisfied	8,627,464

The total amount of tax satisfied in 1987-88 was £8,627,464 and a call on the Reserve of £7,388,444 was made, of which £6,627,464 was spent. A press notice is being issued in conjunction with this reply.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will state the total amounts of tax satisfied consequential on the acceptance of objects and property in lieu of capital transfer tax and inheritance tax which have been covered in the public accounts by means of resort to the Reserve for contingencies in each of the three completed financial years since the written answer on 26 July 1985 made on behalf of the then Minister for the Arts, Official Report, column 777.

Mr. Luce: The amount of tax satisfied by means of resort to the Reserve in the last three financial years is listed in the table. Due to underspends in each financial year on the annual vote of £2 million provided for the acceptance-in-lieu of objects and property the amount actually spent from the Reserve was less than the original call. I list the actual money spent from the Reserve for the hon. Member's information.

Year	Amount of tax Satisfied/Call on the Reserve £	Amount actually spent from the Reserve £
1985-86	520,000	366,707
1986-87	1,165,000	947,842
1987-88	7,338,444	6,627,464
Total	9,023,444	7,942,013

CIVIL SERVICE

Civil Servants (Secondment)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will give, by region, the number of temporary appointments of civil servants made on secondment to companies in the private sector and of individuals in the private sector to Civil Service Departments, by region.

Mr. Luce: Information is not held centrally showing the regional distribution of secondees between Government Departments and outside organisations, and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

East End Trust

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what financial contribution is being made by the London Docklands Development Corporation to the East End trust; what proportion of its current income this represents; and to what purposes its funds are being devoted.

Mr. Trippier: London Docklands Development Corporation has approved contributions to the East End community trust totalling £186,500. These are for revenue support, a wildlife habitat study in Docklands, and to provide a legal advice service to local groups. The trust is developing its sources of funding. London Docklands Development Corporation is currently a major contributor.

Rents

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the average level of fair rents registered in Greater London in each year from 1979 to the latest available date for (a) private unfurnished tenancies, (b) private furnished tenancies and (c) housing association tenancies, distinguishing, in each case, between the rent on first registration and that on re-registration and including figures for the percentage increase on an annual and cumulative basis and for the movement of the retail price index over the same period.

Mrs. Roe: The figures on average rents registered by rent officers for private unfurnished, private furnished and housing association tenancies and for movements in the retail prices index up to 1987 are as follows:

Average Fair rents registered by Rent Officers in Greater London (£ per annum)

	Unfurnished tenancies		Furnished tenancies		Housing Association tenancies
	First Registration £	Re-registration £	First Registration £	Re-registration £	First Registration £	Re-registration £
1979	691	664	897	1,016	609	543
1980	778	761	1,059	1,169	669	649
1981	728	861	1,295	1,165	778	755
1982	895	967	1,301	1,297	890	821
1983	1,048	970	1,433	1,537	974	912
1984	1,080	1,123	1,554	1,605	1,107	999
1985	1,240	1,128	1,771	1,755	1,196	1,069
1986	1,272	1,305	1,900	1,873	1,250	1,150
1987	1,345	1,315	2,057	2,012	1,462	1,266

Notes:
Service charges, if any, are included in fair rents.

The percentage movement of the retail prices index on an annual and cumulative basis since 1979 is as follows:

Retail Prices Index (UK) Annual

	Percentage increase over year	since 1979
1980	18	18
1981	12	32
1982	9	43
1983	5	50
1984	5	57
1985	6	67
1986	3	73
1987	4	80

The mix of properties for which rents are registered varies from year to year for a number of reasons: for example, extension of decontrol in 1981; the reduction from three to two years in the minimum period for re-registration which led to re-registrations in 1983 of rents previously registered in 1980 and 1981. Therefore, comparisons of averages for consecutive years do not properly reflect rent movements. Better estimates of rent movements are derived from previous and new registered rents for tenancies where there has been no material change in terms or in the physical condition. For properties with rents fixed during 1979, 1982, 1984, 1986 and 1987 the estimated increases in Greater London are:

	Unfurnished tenancies Percentage increase		Furnished tenancies Percentage increase		Housing association tenancies Percentage increase in period	annualised	in period	annualised	in period	annualised
1979-82	44	13	40	11	46	13
1982-84	19	9	18	8	19	9
1984-86	17	8	17	8	16	8
1985-87	20	9	17	8	16	8

London Docklands (Refurbishments)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much expenditure his Department has allowed the London Docklands Development Corporation to incur on the internal refurbishment of dwellings in the urban development area.

Mr. Trippier: Expenditure of £90,000 has been approved exceptionally for the internal refurbishment of three dwellings owned by the London borough of Tower Hamlets. The corporation is considering what further contribution it might make for this purpose for discussion with the Department.

Storm Damage

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what account he proposes to take of the level of expenditure incurred by (a) central Government and (b) Ealing council in respect of the severe flooding in the Greenford and Hanwell area in 1977 and of the number of people who received payments, and of the (i) highest payment, (ii) lowest payment and (iii) the average payment made, in deciding whether to make any financial assistance available following the recent flooding in the same area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: All requests for financial assistance are considered on their merits. The treatment of Ealing's request for financial assistance in 1977 would not therefore be relevant to any request in respect of the flooding in 1988. Any representations Ealing borough council may make will, of course, be considered carefully; none has been made so far. I would refer the hon. Gentlemen to the answer I gave him on 23 May 1988, at column 79.

Playgrounds

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce urgent legislation to make compulsory the replacement of concrete or tarmac surfaces of children's playgrounds and the use of safe soft materials in such playgrounds.

Mr. Moynihan: No. The Health and Safety at Work etc, Act 1974 already applies and requires local authorities and other playground operators to take reasonable measures to ensure safety at playgrounds which are under their control. Duties under this Act are enforceable by the Health and Safety Executive. Additionally, the Department issued guidance to local authorities on safety in children's playgrounds in 1978; part of this guidance was consolidated in British Standard 5696. A new British Standard on playground surface safety is currently being drawn up and should be completed by the end of this year.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many children suffered accidents resulting in death or major injuries as the result of playing in playgrounds with concrete or tarmac surfaces for each year since 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I am consulting the Health and Safety Executive, to which accidents are reported under the provisions of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have playgrounds with concrete or tarmac surfaces.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally. I understand, however that a joint working group comprising the national children's play and recreation unit, the Institute of Leisure and Amenities Management and the Royal Society for the Prevention of Accidents, is conducting a comprehensive survey of local authority provision. The results of the survey should be available later this year.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the average cost of replacing the concrete or tarmac surfaces in children's playgrounds.

Mr. Moynihan: It is not possible to assess a meaningful average cost. Costs vary greatly depending on the contractors' price and the type of surface used—ranging from relatively cheap surfaces such as sand to expensive wet pore surfaces.

England v. Scotland Football Match

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the football authorities about crowd behaviour at the recent England v Scotland match at Wembley.

Mr. Moynihan: I have not discussed the England v. Scotland match directly with the football authorities. Immediately following the match the Football Association launched an internal inquiry into the incidents which occurred both in and around the stadium. Evidence will be taken from all relevant bodies. I have asked to see a copy of the report of the inquiry as soon as it is available. I will be discussing progress on anti-hooliganism measures with the football authorities on 5 July.

Disabled Athletes

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made on the Ten Events Initiative to highlight the ability of many top sportsmen and women with disabilities; and whether he intends to visit the Paralympics in Seoul.

Mr. Moynihan: Following the successful launch of the Ten Events Initiative with the slalom challenge during the British ski championships, I have completed the bowls event, participating in 100 ends in a day, and the first leg of the Milk Race. Sponsorship from these events will go towards helping to send a Great Britain squad to the Paralympics in Seoul. I shall be participating in several events this summer, including 100 holes of golf in a day, a Docklands decathlon and watersports events.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received about safety of waste disposal sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received a number of representations about the safety of waste disposal sites. Waste disposal facilities are licensed by the waste disposal authorities to ensure that the operations do not endanger public health or the water supply.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps will be taken to ensure that the import and dumping of American domestic waste in the United Kingdom conforms with European Community policy to preserve, protect and improve the quality of the environment and to contribute to protecting human health.

Mr. Moynihan: Disposal of all controlled waste is subject to licensing by waste disposal authorities and must take place in accordance with the conditions imposed by the authority on the disposal licence, which are intended to protect health, the water supply and local amenity.

Asbestos

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations have been made by the fire research station into the consequences of fires in buildings containing asbestos materials and the subsequent distribution of asbestos particles; what conclusions were reached on the consequential risks to firemen or residents from inflamable asbestos fibres; and if he will make a statement on the steps being taken to reduce this.

Mr. Moynihan: At the beginning of 1986 the fire research station carried out a small-scale investigation of the effect of heat on the principal types of asbestos materials used in buildings, and undertook preliminary modelling studies of the dispersal of fibres in the fire plume. It was concluded from these studies that further work was necessary before the risks to firemen or residents from asbestos in fires could be fully assessed. This further work is continuing.

Brook House, London

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his inspector's decision with regard to the discontinuing of office use of Brook house, Park lane, London W1, and of other such properties after 1990.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following the report of an inspector who held a local inquiry into an appeal by MEPC plc, against the decision of Westminster city council to refuse planning permission for the continued use for offices purposes of Brook house beyond 1990, my right hon.

Friend the Secretary of State issued his decision to dismiss the appeal. His reasons for the decision are fully documented in his decision letter dated 17 May 1988. The Secretary of State has no further jurisdiction in the matter.

Decisions relating to other such properties are a matter for Westminster city council. In so far as individual cases may come before the Secretary of State, for example on appeal, they will be dealt with on their merits.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to introduce new statutory rules of procedure governing planning applications and appeals which go to public inquiry.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following consultation with the Council on Tribunals, two sets of rules, made by my right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor, have been laid before both Houses.

They are the Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1988—in respect of decisions taken by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State or by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales; and the Town and Country Planning Appeals (Determination by Inspectors) (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1988—in respect of decisions taken by planning inspectors appointed by either of my right hon. Friends.

The revised rules are intended to make the planning inquiry process as efficient and effective as possible, while not impairing the fairness and impartiality of inquiry proceedings, or the ability of participants to make representations which are relevant to the decision. In particular, the new rules provide for a fuller exchange of information among the various interested parties about their respective cases before an inquiry opens, and introduce a more detailed timetable for the steps to be taken before an inquiry opens. Other new features are that they regulate pre-inquiry meetings and the procedure to be followed if a decision is quashed by the courts.

Also issued today are an explanatory circular to local authorities and two non-statutory codes of practice. The first is on preparing for major inquiries and the second governs the conduct of hearings, which are held as an alternative to inquiries in suitable cases.

I hope that applicants or appellants, local planning authorities, and other parties to planning cases will co-operate fully in implementing the new arrangements so that the benefits, for all parties involved, of smoother procedures and quicker decisions can be fully achieved.

Rating Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet received the report from Price Waterhouse on the costs to local authorities associated with (a) the setting up and (b) administration of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: Yes.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date he expects the majority of revaluations for the unified business rate to be completed and notified to ratepayers.

Mr. Howard: Drafts of the new valuation lists which will come into force on 1 April 1990 are required to be deposited for public inspection no later than 31 December 1989. We hope to have sample information on which to base decisions on the transitional arrangements for business rates by the autumn of this year.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give revised figures to exemplify the effect in 1987-88 on the overall illustrative community charge levels of applying to them the decision to grant student status to student nurses, in particular in the London boroughs of Camden, Lambeth and Southwark.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 14 June 1988]: It is not possible, at this stage, to estimate the effect on the community charge in particular areas of treating student nurses (of which there are at present about 60,000) as students for the purposes of the community charge. We intend that the cost to individual local authority areas of all exemptions from the charge, and student reliefs, will be allowed for in ensuring that each area can levy the same personal community charge if it spends in accordance with the Government's assessment of need. To do this we shall need to know the number of exempt individuals and students (including, if appropriate, student nurses) living in each area. This information is not available at present.

Leeds Urban Development Corporation

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, following the laying before Parliament of the order to establish the Leeds urban development corporation in May, a detailed map of the site can now be published.

Mr. Trippier: Copies of the 1:10,000 map referred to in the order are available for inspection in the Library and at the offices of my Department and of Leeds city council.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations have taken place, following the laying before Parliament of the order to establish the Leeds urban development corporation in May, with Leeds city council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Prior to the order being laid I kept both the City council and local Members of Parliament informed at each stage of the process; and I invited the city council to comment on the proposed boundaries. The next step is for Parliament to debate the order.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) following the laying before Parliament of the order to establish the Leeds urban development corporation in May, whether the board will include representatives from groups and bodies within the local community in whose area the urban development corporation lies;

(2) whether the board of the Leeds urban development corporation has now been appointed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The board cannot be appointed until Parliament has approved the order and the corporation has been established. My right hon. Friend has announced Mr. Peter Hartley as chairman-designate; other members will include people with special knowledge of the locality and people with appropriate business or professional experience. He is currently consulting Leeds city council about his intention to appoint local authority members to the board.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, following the laying before Parliament of the order to establish the Leeds urban development corporation in May, the commissioned consultative report on the urban development corporation potential can now be published.

Mr. Trippier: The report has now been published. I have placed copies in the Library and sent copies to Members with constituencies in the area.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made to date with establishing the Leeds urban development corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Excellent progress has been made. I hope Parliament will approve the orders and the corporation will be established in the next few weeks.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: My Department's work on civil emergencies and home defence planning involves the development and operation of contingency measures for dealing with emergencies in peace-time, particularly in relation to water supply and the release of radioactive substances. The Property Services Agency provides works and estate management services to enable client departments to fulfil their operational requirements in any emergency.

The number of staff and annual budgets are as follows:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Number of staff	8	17	19
Annual budget (inc. Capital £000s expenditure)	175	418	473

These figures do not include any staff who may do work related to civil emergencies and home defence planning incidental to their normal duties.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: My Department does not have any direct liaison arrangement with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees.

Government Departments (Planning)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those Government Departments from which his inspectors have received representations about planning matters since 12 June 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is not readily available, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

National Front

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence of British National Front, or other extreme Right-wing organisational involvement he has collected following recent incidents including British citizens attending the European football championships in West Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received no evidence that extreme Right-wing groups are funding or organising the incidents in West Germany, though I have seen newspaper reports about the insignia they have been wearing and their chants. I deplore all incidents or hooliganism, however those involved are dressed.

Private Housing Schemes

Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will consider permitting local authorities to give the same level of assistance to privately let housing schemes as the Housing Corporation is able to give to mixed-funding schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local authorities wishing to provide assistance for privately let housing schemes may do so only with the Secretary of State's consent under section 25 of the Local Government Act 1988. Hitherto, that consent has not normally been given if the aggregate public sector assistance to the scheme in question would exceed 30 per cent. As from today that limit has been raised to match the higher limits for housing association grant from the Housing Corporation to mixed-funding schemes, announced on 3 March 1988, namely, in the range 50 to 75 per cent. according to area. These higher limits should help unlock more private finance for housing that can be let at rents within the means of the prospective tenants.

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to carry out a review of housing co-operatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is the Government's policy to encourage the formation of co-operatives in order to broaden opportunities for tenants to play a greater part in the management of their homes. I have visited a number of co-ops recently and have been greatly impressed by their ability to build and strengthen local communities.

I am aware, however, that there are concerns, not least from within the co-op movement itself, that the present arrangements for supporting and promoting co-ops may not provide a suitable basis for the expansion in numbers which I am keen to secure. I am, therefore, commissioning a wide-ranging review of the arrangements to promote, develop and support co-ops, with the following terms of reference;

a. To consider the administrative, financial and legislative framework necessary for the promotion, development and support of housing co-operatives on a local and national scale, both generally and in the context of tenants' choice;

b. To consider the role of secondary housing co-operatives as promotional and servicing agencies; and

c. To make recommendations.

I have set up a review team which will be led by my Department to consider these matters. We are writing to the organisations most closely involved, but I invite all interested parties to write to the review team at my Department with their views on what is needed for co-ops, or similar forms of tenant involvement in the control of rented housing, to succeed. I have asked the review team to report by the end of the year.

Environmental Assessment Directive

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now lay before Parliament regulations implementing the European directive on environmental assessment (85/337/EEC) for projects subject to planning controls.

Mr. Waldegrave: Yesterday I laid before Parliament the draft Town and Country Planning (Assessment of Environmental Effects) Regulations 1988. They require to be approved by resolution of each House before they can be made. I hope that both Houses will approve the drafts so that they may be made before 3 July. Copies of these draft regulations have been placed in the Library and will be available for sale at Her Majesty's Stationery Office from 20 June. Drafts of further regulations relating to projects which are not subject to planning control, and equivalent Scottish regulations, are also being laid before Parliament.

Nuclear Waste

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been done into the feasibility of building dry store facilities for nuclear waste at each of the locations where the waste is produced.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 14 June 1988]: Following the recommendations in March 1986 of the House of Commons Select Committee on the Environment, the generating boards (CEGB and SSEB) each conducted a full analysis of the arrangements for storing and disposing of spent nuclear fuel from their Magnox power stations. The Department of the Environment then commissioned an independent review of the two reports by a firm of consulting engineers.

The reports and the review confirmed that reprocessing of spent Magnox fuel remains preferable to direct disposal and that the building of dry stores at the respective power stations would not be justified at this late stage in their lives. Copies of the reports are in the Library of the House.

Asset Sales and Purchases

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate (a) the asset sales and (b) the purchases of his Department and the Commission for New Towns for 1987-88 and the planned net receipts for 1988-89, giving separate figures for sales and receipts by local authorities.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 14 June 1988]: The sums raised from the sale of assets by the Commission for the New Towns in 1987-88 amounted to £210·6 million. The commission's planned receipts for 1988-89 are confidential at this stage. I am unable to answer the remaining aspects of the hon. Member's question without more precise details of the information he requires.

Toxic Waste (Pontypool)

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what special measures his Department is taking to monitor the disposal, at the ReChem international plant at Pontypool, of the toxic waste which will be imported from Switzerland in the next few weeks.

Mr. Grist: I have been asked to reply.

Any wastes entering the United Kingdom from other countries are subject to the same controls as home-produced wastes. Operations at the ReChem plant, Pontypool are regulated by the Health and Safety Executive, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution, Torfaen borough council and the Welsh water authority.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Scottish Grand Committee

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will list in the Official Report the dates and subjects debated by the Scottish Grand Committee in the Scottish Assembly building, Old Royal High School, in Edinburgh since 1979.

Mr. Wakeham: Since 1979 the Scottish Grand Committee has met on 17 occasions in the former Royal High School buildings in Edinburgh. The dates of these meetings and the subjects discussed were:

Date	Subject
15 February 1982	Matter Day debate on youth employment and training.

TRANSPORT

Vehicle Excise Duty

99. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will seek to increase the road fund tax on a 53-seat coach from £85 to £850.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Decisions on all excise duty rates are matters for the Chancellor of the Exchequer.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for 3Transport (1) how many unlicensed vehicles in the London borough of Newham have been detected in each of his Department's campaigns against motor tax evaders;

(2) how many unlicensed road vehicles have been detected in the current campaign in London being undertaken by his Department in conjuction with the Metropolitan and City police forces;

(3) how many prosecutions involving unlicensed vehicles arose out of his Department's campaign in London in May 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: During the 1988 London campaign 62 unlicensed vehicles were reported within the borough of Newham. Figures for individual boroughs are not available for earlier years. In London as a whole 4,055 offence reports have been received in the course of the 1988 campaign. The comparable figure for 1987 was 2,900 and the number of resulting prosecutions in 1987 was in the region of 1,000.

Bypasses

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many bypasses have been begun in each of the last 30 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Eleven bypasses were started in 1986-87 and 14 in 1987-88.

For earlier years, the information is not available in the form requested. Figures for the numbers of bypasses completed since 1974 are as follows. It can be assumed that in most cases construction started approximately two years before.

Year	Number of completed bypasses
1974-75	13
1975-76	21
1976-77	17
1977-78	9
1978-79	7
1979-80	4
1980-81	3
1981-82	8
1982-83	12
1983-84	7
1984-85	8
1985-86	11
1986-87	14
1987-88	14

No information is available for years before 1974. Other schemes, although not designated bypasses, also have a bypassing effect.

Heathrow (Passengers' Hand Baggage)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the X-ray machines used to examine passengers' hand baggage at Heathrow and marked safe for film up to 1,000 ASA are safe for film rated at (a) 1,000 ASA; (b) 1,600 ASA; and (c) 3,500 ASA; and how many complaints have been received about the fogging of such film.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The United Kingdom aviation security programme, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State administers, provides for passengers who fear that any article they are carrying might be damaged if passed through the X-ray machine at an airport to be afforded the alternative of having the article examined physically by a member of the security staff. Any arrangements made to indicate to passengers that particular X-ray machines are safe for particular kinds of film are entirely the responsibility of the airport authority concerned. So, too, are any complaints about the fogging of film which has been passed through the machines.

Motorways

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of new motorway he anticipates being opened in 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect to open 16 miles in 1989 and 50 miles in 1990. We expect to complete 12 miles of widening this year and 13 miles in 1989. No new motorway will open this year.

Heavy Goods Vehicles (Weight Restrictions)

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to reduce the maximum level of weight restrictions on heavy goods vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no such proposals. The House will be debating on 16 June the European Commission's current proposals on lorry weights and dimensions.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will identify (a) liason arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Officials from my Department participate fully in the work of the following civil NATO planning boards and committees concerned with transport:

Planning Board for Ocean Shipping
Planning Board for European Inland Surface Transport Civil Aviation Planning Committee and various sub-committees and working groups of these bodies.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The work carried out by the Department on civil emergencies encompasses the preparation, co-ordination and implementation of plans for the maintenance of essential services in an emergency. Home defence planning involves the preparation of similar plans for use in a time of tension and war, and the provision of certain support to the armed services.

The numbers of staff involved and the annual budgets in recent years have been as follows:

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Staff	62	62	62
Annual Budget	£4·5 million	£5·3 million	£4·9 million

These figures do not allow for staff who may do a limited amount of work on civil emergencies incidental to their normal duties.

Trees

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trees have been planted by his Department in England since 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Since 1979 we have planted 12·25 million trees and shrubs alongside our motorways and other trunk roads in England. The Secretary of State is the most prolific planter of trees for amenity purposes in the country.

London Taxi Fares

Mr. Bendall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will make a statement about London taxi fares.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Secretary of State has made an order increasing London taxi fares by about 6·5 per cent. on average with effect from Saturday 25 June 1988. The new tariff will incorporate a minimum fare of £1 (including an unchanged hire charge of 40p) for the first 1,305 yards or 4 minutes 21 seconds. The rate will then be 20p for every 435 yards or 1 minute 27 seconds up to six miles and 20p for each 290 yards or 58 seconds thereafter.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the estimated cost of electrifying the London to Leicester east midlands line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The layout of the midland main line, with a high proportion of curves, junctions and stations, means that without a major reconstruction significant improvements in speed are impracticable. For these reasons the existing HSTs cannot be used to their full potential because of these limitations. Electrification might reduce journey times by a few minutes, but I understand from BR that it is clear from preliminary studies that the benefits to the passenger would be small compared to the cost, which would have to be recouped through fares. In these circumstances BR has made no recent or detailed estimates of cost.

Commercial Vehicles

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to require all commercial vehicles to display the name, address and telephone number of the owners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Certain vehicles, for example those carrying food, are required to display the user's name and address. Extending the requirement to all commercial vehicles would not be justified, particularly as the user of a vehicle may not by the owner. Many vehicles are leased or hired for short periods.

Ferry Safety

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of P and O to discuss ferry safety.

Mr. David Mitchell: On 7 March.

Blackwall Tunnel

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning traffic delays at the Blackwall tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Metropolitan police recently requested an extension of the hours of tidal flow working, which allows northbound traffic to use three of the four available lanes in the morning peak hours. This request was refused after consultation with other interested bodies. It would have shifted congestion from the south to the north of the river.

East London River Crossing

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the decision of the east London river crossing public inquiry to be announced.

Mr. Channon: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on Monday 13 June at column 72.

Speed Governors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will now implement speed governors for heavy goods vehicles as well as public service coaches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 7 March, at column 97.

Motorways

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the expenditure by his Department on temporary markings on motorway roadworks for (a) temporary white lines, (b) temporary studs, (c) lane directional arrows and (d) blacking out, for the latest three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the traffic density on British motorways; and what are the comparable figures in Germany, France and Italy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest available estimates are:

Country	Year	Average Daily Flow of Vehicles per 24 hours on Motorways (thousands)
Great Britain	1985	36·4
Great Britain	1987	40·8
Germany	1985	31·3
France	1985	15·7
France	1987	18·2

Comparable data are not available for Italy.

Road Schemes (Northamptonshire and Cambridgeshire)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list his Department's proposed road improvements or new road schemes costing £100,000 or more which are planned to start in Northamptonshire and Cambridgeshire within the next five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is set out in the table. Schemes are liable to delay for a number of reasons. The lists are subject to change.

Nuclear Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any consignment of radioactive materials, including medical radio-isotopes, natural uranium, uranium hexafluoride, enriched uranium, plutonium and low, intermediate or high-level nuclear wastes has ever been lost in transit within the jurisdiction of United Kingdom regulatory and safety authorities in any year since 1979.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 14 June 1988]: The information is not available for the years 1979 to 1982. I understand that since then industrial or medical isotopes have been lost on six occasions. No other radioactive materials have been lost in transit.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the annual tonnage for each year since 1979, of spent nuclear fuel licensed for (a) export and (b) import through the ports of Felixstowe, Harwich, Dover, Folkestone, Newhaven, Southampton, Immingham and Barrow, respectively.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 14 June 1988]: This Department does not collect details of the kind requested.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Company Profitability

11. Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rise in non-North sea company profitability in 1987.

83. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rise in non-North sea company profitability in 1987.

92. Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rise in non-North sea company profitability in 1987.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The net rate of return on capital employed by non-North sea industrial and commercial companies increased by $1\frac{1}{2}$ percentage points in 1987 to $10\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.—the highest level for about 20 years.

Balance of Payments

12. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding the effect of the recent appreciation of the value of the pound on the current account of the United Kingdom balance of payments.

Mr. Lilley: The outcome for the current account depends on many more factors than just the exchange rate. Much more important for competitiveness is the need to control unit costs.

70. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding the effect of the recent appreciation of the value of the pound on the current account of the United Kingdom balance of payments.

88. Mr. Doran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding the effect of the recent appreciation of the value of the pound on the current account of the United Kingdom balance of payments.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Members to the answer given earlier today by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald).

96. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the balance of payments for 1988-89.

Mr. Major: At Budget time my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast a current account deficit of £4 billion for 1988. A new forecast will be published at the time of the Autumn Statement.

Benefit Withdrawals

13. Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what weight he gives to the effect of benefit withdrawals when assessing marginal tax rates.

Mr. Major: The Government's policy is to reduce marginal rates of tax. Only about 3 per cent. of the working population face high rates of benefit withdrawal and the Budget reduced their number by 30,000.

Sub-Saharan African Debt

14. Mr. Wells: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to discuss with other Finance Ministers his proposals on sub-Saharan African debt.

Mr. Lawson: I shall be meeting the Finance Ministers of the other six major industrial nations in Toronto at the economic summit early next week. One of the United Kingdom's main objectives for the summit will be to agree a specific set of measures to implement my initiative to help the poorest most heavily indebted countries in sub-Saharan Africa.

Income Tax

16. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the cost of administering and collecting income tax expressed as a percentage of the revenue raised; and what information he has on the comparable figure in the United States of America.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Precise comparisons across all taxes are difficult. Cost incurred by United States taxpayers are higher, but the United States Government's administrative costs are lower. Research in 1986 suggested that the cost-yield ratios were broadly similar when taxpayers' costs are taken into account.

17. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the number of people who will gain as a result of the abolition of the highest rates of income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Nine hundred and thirty thousand single people and married couples will benefit as a result of the top rate of income tax being set at 40 per cent. for 1988-89.

World Debt

18. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next intends to meet other Finance Ministers to discuss world debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be meeting other Finance Ministers at the economic summit in Toronto on Sunday.

Top Incomes

19. Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average post-tax income now received by the wealthiest 2 per cent. of taxpayers.

86. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average post-tax income now received by the wealthiest 2 per cent. of taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The average post-tax income in 1988-89 of the top 2 per cent. of income tax payers is expected to be about £46,000.

30. Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the gain to a man earning £1 million a year who also inherits £1 million in the 1988-89 tax year as a result of the changes made in the Finance (No. 2) Bill.

38. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the gain to a man earning £1 million a year who also inherits £1 million in the 1988-89 tax year as a result of the changes introduced in the Finance (No. 2) Bill.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the gain to a man earning £1 million a year who also inherits £1 million in the 1988-89 tax year, as a result of the changes proposed in the Finance (No. 2) Bill.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A married man with earnings of £1 million and no other income in 1988-89 who claims no allowances or reliefs other than the married man's allowance would be liable to £193,914 less income tax as a result of the proposals in the Finance (No. 2) Bill. The inheritance tax liability on a £1 million legacy would normally be borne by the testator's residuary estate and not by the beneficiary.

60. Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average share of post-tax income now received by the wealthiest 1 per cent. of tax payers.

95. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average share of post-tax income now received by the wealthiest 1 per cent. of taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The top 1 per cent. of income tax payers will receive about 5 per cent. of income tax payers' total income after tax in 1988-89.

Inflation

20. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current rate of inflation.

Mr. Lilley: The retail prices index rose by 3·9 per cent. in the year to April.

Labour Market (North of England)

21. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the labour market in the north of recent economic trends.

Mr. Major: Strong economic performance has benefited the labour market in all regions, especially the north, north-west and the west midlands, which have enjoyed the largest reductions in unemployment rates.

Family Income

22. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect of the income tax cuts since 1979 on the living standards of a married man on half average earnings with two children.

84. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect of the income tax cuts since 1979 on the living standard of a married man on half average earnings with two children.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Real take home pay is likely to have increased by 21½ per cent. between 1978-79 and 1988-89 for a married man, with two children on half average earnings. Income tax cuts have contributed to this, both directly and through their contribution to economic growth.

39. Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect of the income tax cuts since 1979 on the living standard of a married man on average earnings, with two children.

52. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect of the income tax cuts since 1979 on the living standard of a married man on average earnings, with two children.

67. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the effect of the income tax cuts since 1979 on the living standard of a married man on average earnings, with two children.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Real take home pay will have increased 27½ per cent. between 1978-79 and 1988-89 for a married man, with two children on average earnings. Income tax cuts have contributed considerably to this, both directly and through their contribution to economic growth.

Departmental Manpower

23. Mr. Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officials of his Department are responsible for monitoring (a) the social security budget, and (b) other Department of Health and Social Security services.

55. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many officials of his Department are responsible for monitoring (a) the social security budget, and (b) other expenditure by the Department of Health and Social Services.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms. Armstrong).

VAT (Hospital Radio Broadcasting Equipment)

24. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking zero rating for value added tax for hospital radio broadcasting equipment; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received no further representations since the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs) on 7 June, at column 528.

Poverty

26. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the impact on the extent of poverty in the United Kingdom of public expenditure decisions taken by the Government since 1979.

Mr. Major: A reduction in the share of national income devoted to public expenditure is an important element of the Government's medium-term financial strategy, which has created conditions for steady economic growth and increasing employment, producing benefits for all sections of the community.

Tax and National Insurance

27. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the share of the income taken in tax and national insurance from a single man earning (a) £100,000 a year and (b) £10,000 a year.

48. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the share of income taken in tax and national insurance from a single man earning (a) £100,000 a year and (b) £10,000 a year.

90. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the share of income taken in tax and national insurance from a single man earning (a) £100,000 a year, and (b) £10,000 a year.

Mr. Norman Lamont: A single man with no allowances or reliefs other than his personal allowance earning £100,000 a year in 1988-89 will pay 37·5 per cent. of his earnings in income tax and national insurance. A similar person earning £10,000 a year will pay 27·5 per cent.

Exchange Rate

42. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what mechanisms are available to him to affect alterations in the exchange rate.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the Prime Minister's statement on 17 May at columns 794-98.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Burnley on Tuesday 7 June, his Department discriminates for any purposes between inquiries from different sectors of industry on the exchange rate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: No.

28. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding the rise in the deutschemark-pound sterling exchange rate since the beginning of 1988 and its effects on British industry.

43. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding the rise in the deutschemark-pound sterling exchange rate since the beginning of 1988 and its effects on British industry.

73. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement regarding the economic effects of further appreciation of the pound against the deutschemark.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor to the hon. Member for Carlisle (Mr. Martlew).

Tax and Prices Index

29. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rise in the tax and prices index in the 12 months to April.

56. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rise in the tax and prices index in the 12 months to April 1988.

77. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rise in the tax and prices index in the 12 months to April 1988.

Mr. Lilley: The tax and prices index rose by 1·7 per cent. in the 12 months to April.

Manufactures

31. Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current United Kingdom volume share of world trade in manufactures.

36. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current United Kingdom volume share of world trade in manufactures.

Mr. Major: In 1987 the estimated United Kingdom volume share of total world trade in manufactures was about $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. As chart 3.5 in the FSBR shows, this share has been broadly stable since 1981, following previous decades of decline.

Budget (Redistributive Effects)

32. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to publish at the time of his Budget Statement a full study of the redistributive effects of the taxation changes he is introducing.

97. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to publish at the time of his Budget Statement a full study of the redistributive effects of the taxation changes he is introducing.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 10 June to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid), at column 701.

59. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the redistributive impact of his Budget changes.

63. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the redistributive impact of his Budget changes.

76. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the redistributive impact of his Budget changes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received a number.

Budget Surplus

33. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the Budget surplus for 1988-89.

41. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the Budget surplus for 1988-89.

72. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast of the Budget surplus for 1988-89.

Mr. Major: The latest forecast for the PSBR in 1988-89 is for a net repayment of about £3 billion, $\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. of GDP, as published in the 1988-89 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Business Investment

34. Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for business investment in 1988.

61. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for business investment in 1988.

Mr. Major: Business investment is forecast to grow by 9 per cent. in 1988, as shown in chapter 3 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Regional Manufacturing Industry

35. Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of successive Budget changes on investment in manufacturing industry in the regions.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash) on 7 June 1988, at column 601.

Public Expenditure Allocations

37. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of public expenditure was devoted to (a) housing, (b) education and (c) health in 1979 and in 1987.

Mr. Major: The table shows, for the financial years 1979-80 and 1987-88, public expenditure (net of receipts) on housing, education and science and health as a percentage of the public expenditure planning total, excluding privatisation proceeds and, for 1987-88 only, the adjustment made to bring the sum of individual estimated outturns in line with the Treasury's view of the likely overall outturn.

Percentages

	1979-80 outturn	1987-88 estimated outturn
Housing	7·3	2·4
Education and Science	14·0	13·8
Health[1]	12·0	13·6

[1] Excludes personal social services.

Manufacturing Productivity

40. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of manufacturing productivity in the United Kingdom economy since 1980.

54. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of manufacturing productivity in the United Kingdom economy since 1980.

69. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of manufacturing productivity in the United Kingdom economy since 1980.

Mr. Major: Since 1980, output per head in the manufacturing sector has grown at an average rate of 5·1 per cent. per year—faster than in any other major industrialised country.

Job Creation

44. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new jobs have been created in the economy since 1983.

57. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many new jobs have been created in the economy since 1983.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin).

Pound Sterling

45. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current value of the 1979 pound; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: In real terms the sterling index averaged 90 in 1979 and is estimated to have been 100·3 in May 1988.

Productivity

46. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the annual growth of productivity for the whole economy since 1980.

66. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the annual growth of productivity for the whole economy since 1980.

Mr. Major: Since 1980 output per head in the whole economy has grown at an average rate of 2·7 per cent. per year, about the same as Japan and faster than any other major industrialised country.

Personal Disposable Income

47. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of real personal disposable income in 1987.

51. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of real disposable income in 1987.

82. Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of real personal disposable income in 1987.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Real personal disposable income was some 3 per cent. higher in 1987 than in 1986.

Manufacturing Investment

49. Mr. Strang: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the level of investment by United Kingdom manufacturing industry in 1987-88.

Mr. Major: Investment by manufacturing industry (including leased assets) in 1987-88 was £7,595 million at 1980 prices.

Retail Price Inflation

50. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average level of retail price inflation over the past five years.

65. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average level of retail price inflation over the past five years.

93. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average level of retail price inflation over the past five years.

Mr. Lilley: Retail price inflation has averaged 4·7 per cent. over the five years to April 1988.

Labour Statistics

53. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the fall in adult unemployment over the past 12 months.

58. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the fall in adult unemployment over the past 12 months.

68. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the fall in adult unemployment over the past 12 months.

Mr. Major: Adult unemployment in the United Kingdom has fallen by 535,000 over the past year.

62. Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the fall in long-term unemployment in the year to January 1988.

64. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the fall in long-term unemployment in the year to January 1988.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Sevenoaks (Mr. Wolfson).

EC (Harmonisation)

71. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on progress within the European Community with regard to the harmonisation of value added tax and excise duties.

75. Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on progress within the European Community with regard to the harmonisation of value added tax and excise duties.

Mr. Lilley: The Economic and Finance Council discussed the Commission's proposals at its informal meeting in May. My right hon. Friend reiterated the United Kingdom's view that tax approximation is unnecessary for the completion of the single market. Most other member states also expressed reservations.

80. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects the harmonisation of value added tax and excise duties to be discussed at the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Lilley: The Council of Ministers meets from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

Economic Trends (Labour Market)

74. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the labour market in the regions of recent economic trends.

Mr. Major: The recent favourable performance of the United Kingdom economy has benefited the labour market in all regions. Unemployment has fallen significantly in all regions over the past year.

Wage Inflation

78. Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of wage inflation.

Mr. Lilley: Average earnings for the whole economy are currently increasing at an underlying rate of 8½ per cent. a year.

Income and Wealth Distribution

79. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on income and wealth distribution in the light of the Church of Scotland study entitled "Just Sharing", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy on income and wealth distribution in the light of the Church of Scotland study entitled "Just Sharing", a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Members to the reply my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke).

Interest Rates

81. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 8½ per cent.

94. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the recent reductions in United Kingdom interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates were reduced from 9 per cent. to 8½ per cent. on 18 March, from 8½ per cent. to 8 per cent. on 11 April, and from 8 per cent. to 7½ per cent. on 18 May. Bank base rates were increased to 8 per cent. on 3 June and to 8½ per cent. on 7 June.

Bank of England

85. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the governor of the Bank of England; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor meets the governor from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

National Economic Development Council

87. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last attended the National Economic Development Council; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor last attended and chaired the National Economic Development Council on Wednesday 13 January. The Council discussed the outlook for the economy; a report by the knitting industry; and international competitiveness, research and development, and action by economic development committees.

Business Activity

89. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate the rate at which business activity is currently expanding in the United Kingdom; and if he has any evidence of developing bottlenecks.

Mr. Major: The output measure of GDP is provisionally estimated by the Central Statistical Office to have increased by 4½ per cent. in the year to the first quarter of 1988. The CBI's latest quarterly industrial trends survey shows little evidence of capacity constraints, with the vast majority of firms (86 per cent.) reporting capacity at least adequate to meet expected demand over the next 12 months.

Government Revenue

91. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of total Government revenue in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The latest estimate of total general Government receipts in 1988-89 is £185 billion, as published in the 1988-89 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

Unemployment

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the fall in long-term unemployment in the year to January 1988.

Mr. Major: Long term unemployment fell by 234,000 in the year to January 1988, and by a further 71,000 between January and April.

Allowances

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing, for 1988-89, the level of the single person's tax allowance, the married man's allowance, the single age allowance and the married age allowance, their percentage increase since 1978-79 and the level of each allowance had they been updated in line with the percentage increase in the single person's allowance since 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is in the table.

Personal Tax Allowances in 1978-79 and 1988-89

Allowance	1978-79 £	1988-89 £	Increase since 1978-79 Per cent.	Real[1] increase since 1978-79 Per cent.	If increased in-line with single allowance £

Civil Servants (Northern Ireland)

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Upper Bann of 7 June, from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, he will indicate who employs those civil servants in Northern Ireland who work for the Inland Revenue and Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Most of the civil servants who work for the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise in Northern Ireland are employed by the Board of Inland Revenue and the Board of Customs and Excise. There are, however, a few officials who are members of the Northern Ireland Civil Service and who are on secondment to the Inland Revenue.

Placement Students

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) when the ceiling for tax exemption on earnings of placement students for periods spent on courses was first set at £5,000;

(2) what will be the level of maximum earnings exempt from tax for placement students during periods on courses for the tax year 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In accordance with the Inland Revenue's statement of practice 4/86—a copy of which I am placing in the Library—payments by employers to employees who are released to attend a full-time further education course are not regarded as taxable if the rate of payment does not exceed the higher of £5,000 a year or the amount payable to someone in similar personal circumstances by a public research body. The 1988-89 rate of £5,000 was introduced with effect from 1983-84; it remains well above the amount which would generally be payable to a single person living away from home by a public research body.

Departmental Staff

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 April.

Mr. Major: On 1 April 1988 there were 579,627 staff in post in central Government Departments. Of these 506,565 were non-industrials and 73,062 were industrials.

The Government's declared target for this date has therefore been met. Staff in post figures will continue to be reported on a quarterly basis, although the move to running cost controls in place of manpower ceilings will give departments more freedom to adjust between manpower and other running cost expenditure in the pursuit of best value for money.

Business Expansion Scheme

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he proposes to make any changes to the Inland Revenue guidelines for approval of business expansion scheme funds.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have decided to remove the requirement that a fund must offer participants a spread of investment in companies carrying on different trades. From now on, an approved BES fund will be able to invest in companies specialising in a particular activity. We are also reviewing the rest of the guidelines to take account of the introduction of the Financial Services Act and the experience to date of the use of approved BES funds.

Gaming Machines

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much licence duty has been collected by Her Majesty's Government from gaming machines in the following financial years (a) 1985-86, (b) 1986-87 and (c) 1987-88 to date.

Mr. Lilley: The amounts of gaming machine licence duty collected were as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	86·0
1986-87	74·7
1987-88	194

[1] Provisional.

Bingo

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much bingo duty was paid or estimated to be paid by unlicensed clubs registered to play bingo in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: The amounts of bingo duty paid by unlicensed clubs registered to play bingo are not separately recorded. Estimates of the amounts paid are as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	2·7
1986-87	3·0
1987-88	3·2

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the cost of enforcement, supervision and collection of bingo duty from unlicensed clubs registered to play bingo in each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lilley: The costs of collecting bingo duty are not recorded separately. They are thought to be comparable with the costs for collecting the betting and gaming duties generally, which are under 1 per cent. of the duty yield.

EEC (Contribution)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Economic Community in the year 1987; what were the comparable totals for 1986 and 1985; and what is his estimate for 1988.

Mr. Brooke: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) on 7 June 1988, at columns 540-41. An estimate of the United Kingdom's net contribution to the Community budget for 1988 will be contained in the annual statement on the Community budget, which will be published as soon as possible.

Taxation

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures showing, for each region and for Great Britain, the number and percentage of taxpayers paying tax at their top marginal rate for each tax band; their total tax liability expressed in 1988 prices; and the number and percentage of non-taxpaying households; using the most recent available figures.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The latest information available by region relates to 1985-86 and is limited to taxpaying units only. In the tables, married couples are counted as one unit, members of Her Majesty's forces and the Merchant Navy are included only in the national totals, and tax liability is measured before allowing for mortgage interest relief given at source. Estimates relating to tax rates of 40 per cent. or higher, whilst shown to the nearest thousand or £1 million, are in many cases based on small samples: where this means that the actual number or amount may be more than about one third higher or lower than shown in the table, the figures are shown in brackets. The corresponding percentages should also be treated with particular caution.

In 1988-89, the index of retail prices is expected to be about 12 per cent. higher than in 1985-86.

The provisional estimate of the number of tax units in 1988-89 for the United Kingdom is 32·6 million, of which about 11·7 million are expected not to be liable to income tax.

Taxation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the percentage share of tax paid by the top 1 per cent. and 5 per cent. of taxpayers from 1970-71 to 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The information is given in the table.

I regret that information for earlier years is not available.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the information in his reply of 17 May, Official Report, column 424-30, for 1988-89, on the basis of the community charge replacing domestic rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 7 June 1988]: Information on the level of community charge equivalent to domestic rates in 1988-89 is not yet available. Information of the kind requested would be of doubtful value because patterns of spending by local authorities and by individuals are likely to change when the community charge is introduced.

VAT

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what representations he has received from disability organisations concerning proposals from the Commission of the European Communities to impose 14 to 20 per cent. value added tax on talking books for blind and disabled people, wireless sets for blind people and on aids equipment for disabled people; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received from charities concerning proposals from the Commission of the European Communities to impose 14 to 20 per cent. value added tax on charities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 10 June 1988]: Ministerial colleagues and I have received a number of such representations.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate in the Official Report those commodities formerly, or currently, subject to zero value-added tax rating, including all those in groups 1 to 17 listed in his note to the Select Committee on the Treasury and Civil Service and published by it on page 8 of its third report of Session 1987-88, (HC 248), in five separate tables to show items that: (a) were zero rated by Her Majesty's Government, but have subsequently had their zero rated status changed by virtue of actions taken, or requests made, by either the Court or the Commission of the European Economic Communities, (b) items currently the subject of infraction proceedings before the court of the European Economic Communities, (c) items currently zero rated which have been the subject of specific pledges from Ministers concerning their continued zero rated status. (d) other items of zero rating subject to current proposals from the Commission of the European Communities and (e) other zero rated items not in categories (a) to (d), showing for each item in each table (a) to (d) the rate or band of rates applied, or proposed to be applied, together with the approximate annual revenue, or range of revenue, which has accrued or is likely to accrue to Her Majesty's Government, at 1988 prices for each category, with totals for each table and grand total, and in respect of table (c) footnote references to the respective principal pledge made.

Mr. Lilley [pursuant to his reply, 24 March 1988, c. 195-96]: I regret that the first two figures in column (iii) of table (d) were mistaken. The correct figures are:

Sewerage services other than supplies to industry: £175 million—£250 million.

Water other than supplies to industry: £25 million—£75 million.

Personal Incomes

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the (i) average and (ii) median income of (a) married couples and (b) single people, whether liable to income tax or not, for 1988-89; and if he will give the percentage of married couples and single people falling below the average for their group.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 14 June 1988]: The latest information on the distribution of income relates to 1984-85 and was published in the November 1987 edition of Economic Trends. The mean income of all married couples and single people in 1984-85 was £7,520 a year and the median income was £5,480. Some 65 per cent. of incomes were below the mean income of £7,520. Separate estimates for married couples and single people are not available.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Inland Revenue first became aware of the claim by the investment company Barlow Clowes, that the income from funds invested by it in Gibraltar could be paid to investors tax-free; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 14 June 1988]: The Inland Revnue's obligations of confidentiality prevent the disclosure of any information concerning a particular taxpayer's affairs.

Exchequer Revenues

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) of 7 July 1987, Official Report, column 84, regarding Exchequer revenues to

(a) include 1988-89, (b) give the table at constant 1988-89 prices, and (c) break down customs and excise duties into (i) excise duties, (ii) customs duties, and (iii) agricultural levies.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what change in the level of United Kingdom exports of manufactured goods to the EEC he forecasts as a result of the completion of the internal market; and on what basis he has made such estimates.

Mr. Major: I would expect completion of the internal market significantly to boost exports to other member states of the Community, but have made no detailed estimates.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the deficit in United Kingdom trade with the EEC in manufactures in 1987; and what estimate he has made of the effects of the completion of the internal market on this figure.

Mr. Major: The deficit on direct trade in manufactured goods with other member states in 1987 is at present estimated to have been £10·2 billion. I expect completion of the internal market to boost both our exports to and imports from other member states, but I have made no estimates of the magnitude.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his forecast of the increase in United Kingdom exports of manufactured goods to the EEC as a result of the completion of the internal market; and if he will provide a similar forecast for the increase in exports.

Mr. Major: I expect completion of the internal market to boost trade with the other member states of the Community. No detailed estimates have been made.

Nationalised Industries (Fixed Assets)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide a table showing the expenditure on fixed assets in the United Kingdom by nationalised industries for 1978-79 and 1989-90 plans, at constant 1988-89 prices and cash prices broken down in the form of table 4.4 of Cm. 288-1, giving the percentage of the industries capital requirements financed or expected to be financed internally.

Mr. Major [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The table shows the expenditure on fixed assets in the United Kingdom by nationalised industries for 1978-79 (consistent with table 3.2 of Cmnd. 7841 and table 3.2 of Cmnd. 9143) and 1989-90 plans (consistent with table 4.4 of Cmnd. 288) at cash prices and in real terms (base year 1988-89). Also included are the percentages of the industries' capital requirements financed internally for 1978-79. For reasons of commercial confidentiality the Government do not publish estimates of internal resources or external finance by industry for the later years in the public expenditure plans. But the current plans imply that, taken together, the industries' capital requirements for 1989-90 can be met entirely by internal resources.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Personal Incomes

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average increase in income of the poorest 5 per cent. of people in the United Kingdom since 1979; and what has been the average increase in income of the wealthiest 5 per cent.

Mr. Portillo: Estimates of real household income changes, adjusted for family size and composition, are only available for individuals expressed in 10 per cent. bands. Between 1979 and 1985 the incomes of the bottom 10 per cent. of individuals in Great Britain (expressed net of tax and national insurance, after the receipt of any social security benefits and before payment of any housing costs) rose by an average of 6 per cent. in real terms. The real incomes of the top 10 per cent. rose by 18 per cent.

Macclesfield Health Authority

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will tabulate the revenue cash limit figures of the Macclesfield health authority at 31 March in each year since 1979 and the projected cash limit for 1988-89.

Mrs. Currie: Determination of the cash limits for individual district health authorities is the responsibility of regional health authorities. Following is the information requested, together with figures of total revenue expenditure for the Macclesfield health authority since its establishment on 1 April 1982. Prior to that date the authority's predecessor health district formed part of the Cheshire area health authority and district-based figures are not available.

Financial Year	Final Revenue Cash Limit[1] £000	Total Revenue Expenditure[2] £000
1982-83	26,949	26,664
1983-84	29,142	28,799
1984-85	30,306	30,594
1985-86	31,521	32,327
1986-87	33,211	[3]33,617
1987-88	37,187	—
1988-89	[4]38,355	—

Notes:

1. Capital cash limits and capital expenditure is excluded.
2. Cash drawings against revenue cash limit represent the main source of funds for health authorities in meeting their revenue expenditure but these drawings are supplemented by local income (not included in cash limits).

Housing Benefit

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners will receive transitional protection in respect of losses in excess of £2·50 a week arising from the new housing benefit scheme; and if he will estimate the average amount of the weekly additional transitional payment.

Mr. Portillo: We estimate that some 350,000 people can benefit from the transitional payments scheme. Approximately one half of these are pensioners. The data are not reliable enough for us to estimate the average payment for a particular client group.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the number of housing benefit claimants who are likely still to be losers after transitional protection payments are made.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett), for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) and for Heywood and Middleton (Mr. Callaghan) on 14 June.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which categories of claimants whose housing benefit have been reduced or withdrawn will not benefit from the transitional arrangements; if he will list those so involved; and if he will give the total numbers involved.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 3 May 1988]: Payments will not be made to anyone who does not fall into one of the following groups:

Families with children (including lone parents).
Pensioners (over 60).
The long term sick and disabled (that is those to whom the disability or severe disability premium applies in the housing benefit calculation).
People in receipt of an industrial injuries benefit, a war disablement pension, a widow's pension or a war widow's pension.

The scheme is not designed for claimants of income support at the beginning of April as they will have been receiving maximum housing benefit. No accurate estimate exists of the numbers not covered.

Resource Management Initiative

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress of the resource management initiative.

Mr. Newton: Progress on the acute resource management projects has been encouraging and a new pilot site, south Lincolnshire, was announced in April. An evaluation report on the acute projects is scheduled for later this year. It is hoped that this will point the way to a phased extension to other districts from 1989.

The community projects are second generation sites and are making good progress in advancing their project plans and building on the work undertaken at the two first generation sites.

Social Workers

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what moneys are being made available for the training of social workers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Department's contribution to funding for social work training is about £20 million in this financial year. This sum includes £7 million to grant-aid the new £10 million training support programme for local authority social services staff working with elderly people, and about £11·6 million to the Central Council for Education and Training in Social Work. The latter figure includes £7·6 million for direct student support and up to £1 million for improvements to present training arrangements.

AIDS

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the efficacy of the treatment of AIDS patients by means of hyperoxygenating blood with ozone as carried out by Dr. Horst Keif and others in Munich.

Mr. Newton: I am aware that there have been some claims that hyperoxygenating blood with ozone might be beneficial in relation to AIDS. The Department has no direct knowledge of Dr. Keif's work, but I understand that the idea involved is known to the Medical Research Council.

Meningitis

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will issue a circular on the notification of meningitis.

Mrs. Currie: The Department's chief medical officer, Sir Donald Acheson, wrote to all doctors in England about meningitis on 3 February, emphasising that it is a statutory requirement under the Public Health (Control of Diseases) Act 1984 for cases of meningitis to be notified to the proper officer, usually the medical officer for environmental health. A copy of the letter is in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether under the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987, he is empowered to direct that payments of income support related to accommodation charges be made to the organisation providing the accommodation in cases where such charges have been incurred but the claimant has moved on between the date of claim and the first pay day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Direct payment may be made to another person to protect the claimant's interests. This power is used in exceptional circumstances where, for example, there is clear evidence that the claimant is failing to maintain his family.

The independent adjudicating authorities may also consider direct payment where the claimant has failed to budget for an accommodation charge. Direct payment may be made automatically to a hostel run by a voluntary organisation which provides facilities for alcoholics or drug addicts or which is akin to a resettlement unit.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of supplementary benefit claimants who had 19-year-old children in full-time education or training courses, for whom they were receiving additional dependants' benefit, who have since lost their entitlement because income support is available only for dependent children aged under 19 years; if he will estimate how much benefit they have lost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No family receiving supplementary benefit including an addition for a 19-year-old dependant lost benefit as a result of the change to income support, because transitional protection ensures that they suffer no loss of income.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of disabled and mentally handicapped/disturbed claimants who were previously paid direct by order book who have been notified of the change to income support which now requires them to be available for, work or claim sickness benefit; how many have (a) subsequently made claims as available for work, (b) been disqualified as not capable of, or available for work and (c) claimed modified income support as referred to in Department of Employment circular 109/279, 17 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The estimates requested are not available. One of the basic conditions for receiving income support is that claimants must be available for work unless specifically exempted. Anyone who is incapable of work because of disease or mental or physical disability is exempt and should also claim the appropriate incapacity benefit.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether directions have been issued to his Department's local offices to ensure that women who have moved out of the matrimonial home because of a violent partner, and have sought refuge in a women's refuge, are not denied income support because they are owners or joint owners of the home they have fled.

Mr. Portillo: Yes; and amending legislation came into force on 30 May.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of people claiming supplementary benefit from his Department's local offices in Kensington in 1979; and what is the current number of income support claimants from those offices.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 10 June 1988]: The total number of people in receipt of supplementary benefit on 15 May 1979 from the Department's office at Kensington was 9,107[1]. The total number of people in receipt of income support on 31 May 1988 at the same office was 8,454, although these figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

[1] This figure may, however, overstate the number of people receiving supplementary benefit. The footnote to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves), on 31 March 1988, at columns 660-61, refers.

Nottingham District Medical Staff Committee Report

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will obtain for his Department's library a copy of the Nottingham district medical staff committee's report entitled "The Financial Situation and its Impact on Clinical Services."

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the report is regarded by the health authority as being confidential to it and it is for the authority to decide whether it should be made publicly available.

Spending Power

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables using the assumptions in his answer of 4 February, Official Report, columns 737 to 742 using expenditure and benefit figures appropriate for families in Leicester for which he has sufficient data, and with an additional column showing the extent of the differences that will result from the changes in benefits in April.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is set out in the tables. It should be noted that the results are essentially hypothetical. They compare the post-reform position in April 1988, not with the actual pre-reform cash situation but with a hypothetical position which they might have been in had the previous structure continued and been uprated on the assumptions in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits" (October 1987).

Secondly,, the comparisons are based on average local authority housing charges in Leicester, but do not reflect the wide variety of rents and domestic rates that people actually pay.

Finally, the comparisons do not take account of the transitional cash protection arrangements announced on 27 April.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how far (a) the fall in the numbers of persons living below supplementary benefit level and below 40 per cent. of supplementary benefit level and (b) the rise in the number of persons living on supplementary benefit is accounted for by changes in the real value of supplementary benefit scale rate between 1983 and 1985.

Mr. Portillo: Changes in the real value of the scale rates between these dates were insufficient to allow reliable estimates to be made, but any effect would be minor.

Sheepdips

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many complaints have been received by his Department about allergic reactions caused by the use of sheepdips containing organophosphorus pesticide in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie; We received one complaint in 1987 involving two people. None was received in the previous four years.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to investigate the possible link between allergic reactions and the use of sheepdips containing organophosphorus pesticides; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have been asked to reply.

Organophosphorus sheepdips are subject to the licensing requirements of the Medicines Act 1968. A licence is issued only after the licensing authority is satisfied as to the safety, efficacy and quality of the product concerned. Safety includes the safety of operators handling the product. In licensing veterinary medicines, the licensing authority is advised by the veterinary products committee, a statutory body of independent experts in human and animal health.

All organophosphorus sheepdips contain warnings on the labels and accompanying literature to ensure that operators are aware ot the dangers and take appropriate precautions.

Suspect adverse reactions to organophosphorus sheepdips should be reported to the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and to the Health and Safety Executive. All such reports are investigated.

As with many other types of chemical compounds, there are some people who are allergic to organophosphorus compounds. Anyone who is known to be allergic to organophosphorus sheepdips is advised to use alternative licensed products.

Leicester Night Shelter

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the decision by staff of his Department's Leicester offices to discontinue their practice of visiting the Leicester night shelter to take fresh claims; what reason has been given for this decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: A number of representations have been received about this decision, which took effect in October 1987.

The decision to discontinue the visits—a system which worked soley on the voluntary co-operation of local office staff—was taken as a result of a physical assault on a member of staff outside the night shelter.

Family Credit

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action is being taken to reduce the delays in assessing family credit.

Mr. Portillo: Clearance rates should improve as staff become more proficient and as more experienced staff are released from work on family income supplement now that the latter has come to an end. In the meantime, overtime is being worked and casual staff are being taken on to allow more of the permanent staff to concentrate on assessment work. In addition, further computer enhancements are due to come into effect shortly, which should improve administration, and consideration is being given to procedural changes which could speed up the action on cases which are most at risk of difficulties arising out of delays.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many times he has exercised his discretion under the Social Security (Payments on Account, Overpayments and Recovery) Regulations, part 11, paragraph 2(i); and how many times this was in respect of family credit.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available about the making of interim payments of benefits generally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost. However, the discretion to make an interim payment on account of family credit has not been exercised.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many health authorities have suspended or diminished cervical cancer screening tests during the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: By April of this year all district health authorities in England had implemented computerised call and recall systems for cervical cancer screening. Health authorities are not required to report temporary suspension or reduction of the screening programme to the Department. However, we know that a small number of DHAs have taken action of this kind when problems have arisen in their laboratories. Those of which we are aware are:

Winchester DHA and Basingstoke DHA—routine call and recall suspended because of shortage of laboratory staff in Winchester. Every effort is being made to find a laboratory to examine smears on a temporary basis until more staff can be recruited. Basingstoke expects to restore full service shortly.

Bassetlaw DHA—reduced rate of call at present to allow clearance of laboratory backlog.

East Dorset DHA—suspended call and recall during April but now restarted.

Single Payments

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was paid in single payments to social security applicants in Tameside in the last complete financial year; and how much has been allocated under the social fund for the current year.

Mr. Portillo: The metropolitan borough of Tameside is served by the Department's local offices at Ashton, Hyde and Openshaw. The boundaries of the areas covered by these offices are not conterminous with those of the borough. The amount paid in single payments of supplementary benefit in the year 10 April 1987 to 8 April 1988 is shown in the table. The figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Ashton	385,725
Hyde	562,320
Openshaw	582,242
Total	1,530,287

Information on the social fund allocations to local offices for 1988-89 was contained in the reply of my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November 1987, at columns 774-81.

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the backlog in single payment claims, made before 11 April, at his Department's offices in (a) Coventry and (b) nationally; and what instruction he has issued to managers as to the time limits for clearing the backlog.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has two local offices in Coventry, Coventry, east and west. On 31 May there were 5,125 cases awaiting action on single payment requests in Coventry, east office and 2,124 cases at Coventry, west. On 29 April the national total was 349,827 cases. These figures are provisional and subject to amendment. All claims are examined on receipt and priority was given to urgent cases.

No national instructions on clearance times have been issued. Every local office manager is, however, aware of the importance of clearing the arrears as a matter of urgency, and in many offices the task has already been completed. In both Coventry, east and west additional manpower resources are being used to clear the backlog as quickly as possible.

Additional Payments

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current backlog of claims for additional payments at each of the offices of his Department in the metropolitan borough of Tameside; what is the estimated time needed to clear them, given the present staffing levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The metropolitan borough of Tameside is served by the Department's local offices at Ashton, Hyde and Openshaw. The boundaries of the areas covered by these offices are not conterminous with those of the borough. On 13 June there were no cases at Ashton or Openshaw awaiting action on claims for single payments of supplementary benefit. At Hyde there were fewer than 10 cases. These will be cleared as soon as the claimants concerned provide further information to allow their claims to be determined.

Research Trials

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans for the central registration of research trials; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have no plans for the central registration of research trials.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration his Department has given to the publication, funded by the Greater London Association for Disabled People, entitled "How Do We Get To Hospital"; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The publication has only just been received by the Department. We have not yet had time to consider it.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current waiting list of visits by occupational therapists to disabled persons in the county of Leicestershire.

Mr. Newton: This information is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may care to write to the chairman of Leicestershire health authority for the information he seeks.

Royal Homoeopathic Hospitals

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list the date or dates of visits made by Ministers in his Department to any of the royal homoeopathic hospitals since June 1979; and what further visits are planned.

Mrs. Currie: There is only one royal homoeopathic hospital, the Royal London homoeopathic hospital, which is at Great Ormond street, WC1. No ministerial visits have been made since June 1979 and none is planned.

Benefits

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what will be the position of patients in community care living in village community schemes established in hospital grounds under the current legislation for income support payments and other benefit payments.

Mr. Portillo: A patient's entitlement to income support and other benefit payments will depend on individual circumstances. These include whether the person has been discharged from hospital, or is still an in-patient, whether he is in paid employment and whether he has any other resources.

Low-income Families

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of persons in low-income families in Wales (i) on supplementary benefit, (ii) below 100 per cent. of supplementary benefit and (iii) below 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit, for each of the years 1979, 1981, 1983 and 1985.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 27 May 1988 at columns 413-14.

Leicestershire Health District (Cleaners)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cleaners were employed by the Leicestershire health district in (i) 1980, (ii) 1984, (iii) 1987 and (iv) the present day.

Mr. Newton: The latest available figures to this level of detail are for 1986. The information is given in the following table.

Cleaners[1,2]—ancillary staff in post in Leicestershire district health authority

[2] Part of the reduction since 1984 may be attributable to the effects of competitive tendering.

[3] Figures are rounded to nearest ten (10) whole time equivalents.

[4] Figures related to Leicestershire area health authority.

Foetal Tissue (Committee of Inquiry)

Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 7 June, Official Report, column 557, what account was taken in his selection of candidates for membership of the committee of inquiry into the use of foetal tissue for transplant surgery of their publicised views on abortion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The members of the committee to review the report of the advisory group on the use of foetuses and foetal material for research were selected because of their expertise in their respective fields, which are relevant to the issues involved.

"Doctors and their Careers"

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether organisations representing women as consumers of the National Health Service, appropriate trade unions, and the Equal Opportunities Commission will be attending the two seminars which he is holding to discuss the Policy Studies Institute report, "Doctors and their Careers".

Mr. Newton: Those invited include representatives of the royal colleges and faculties, health authorities, the British Medical Association, medical schools and universities, women doctors' groups, and the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Departmental Premises (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what property in Easby road, Bradford his Department has purchased recently; what was the purchase price; and for what purpose the property was bought.

Mrs. Currie: Neither this Department nor the Property Services Agency which acts on behalf of Government Departments in this regard, has purchased any property recently in Easby road. I understand, however, that 48 Ash grove, Bradford, which stands on the corner of Ash grove and Easby road and is owned by Bradford metropolitan district council is about to be leased to Bradford health authority for use as a mental health resource centre. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Bradford health authority for any further details he may be seeking.

Dental Treatment

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to change current arrangements for patient referrals to the dental reference service at the request of general dental practitioners.

Mrs. Currie: We have no such plans. However, as mentioned in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health", we are consulting about the possible introduction of dental practice advisers in some family practitioner committees. It is expected that examination of patients at the request of their dentists would be one of the functions undertaken by dental practice advisers. Decisions about the introduction of dental practice advisers will be announced in due course.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases have been referred to family practitioner committees for possible service committee proceedings by the Dental Estimates Board in each of the last 10 years in respect of treatment carried out and treatment proposed.

Mrs. Currie: The number of cases taken up with family practitioner committees in England and Wales by the Dental Estimates Board as recorded in the board's annual reports, is set out in the table. Information about the numbers which concerned proposed or completed treatment is not available.

Clinical Thermometers

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the European Economic Community proposals for the harmonisation of standards on clinical thermometers; which problems the directive is designed to overcome; and what assessment he has made of the benefits which will accrue from this to the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: Directive 76/764/EEC relates to clinical mercury-in-glass maximum reading thermometers designed to measure the internal temperature of humans or animals. The directive describes instruments eligible to bear the EEC mark and thus assist the removal of a hindrance to trade. An amending directive is designed to ensure that such instruments which bear the EEC mark and sign to indicate conformity with pattern approval and initial verification do so conform. No assessment of the benefits to the United Kingdom has been made, but it is expected that British manufacturers will find it easier to sell their products to EC member states. Regulations will be laid to give effect to the requirements of the directives.

Publicity Budget

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 10 June, Official Report, column 725, he will itemise the £14 million social security publicity budget.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's planned spending for 1988-89 on publicising social security is as follows:

	£ million
Press and television advertising:
Pensions, Housing benefit, Family credit	5·00
Literature:
Leaflets and posters	8·70
Services:
Regional information services, radio and television fillers, Prestel etc.	0·30

Residential Homes

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the guidance given by his Department to local authority social service departments about the standards relating to the size of rooms and staffing arrangements which they should require from private residential homes under the Registered Homes Act 1984; and how he intends that those standards should relate to those obtaining in the local authority's own homes.

Mrs. Currie: Private residential homes have to comply with the requirements of the Residential Care Home Regulations 1984. These regulations require suitable and sufficient accommodation and staffing but do not lay down room sizes or staffing levels. The regulations are complemented by "Home Life: a Code of Practice for Residential Care", published by the Centre for Policy on Aging in 1984, a copy of which is in the Library. "Home Life" gives guidance on staffing levels. Local Authority Building Note No. 2, "Residential Accommodation for Elderly People" gives guidance on room sizes. Circular LAC(86)1 explained to registration authorities how this note should be applied to private and voluntary homes (copies of both are also in the Library). In circular LAC(86)6 we advised registration authorities not to expect higher standards in private and voluntary homes than those achieved in their own homes.

Babies (Deaths)

9. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the numbers and rates for stillbirths, infant, perinatal, early neonatal and late neonatal deaths in England and Wales, jointly and separately for the years 1985 to 1987 inclusive.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is shown in the table.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department provides the United Kingdom civilian medical member of the NATO joint civil military medical group. The other United Kingdom member is a military doctor representing the Ministry of Defence.

The group, which meets twice a year, advises and reports to the NATO civil defence committee on matters involving joint civil/military planning and co-operation in peace and war and conducts a number of relevant studies. Members maintain liaison outside the formal meetings by acting as national points of postal contact.

The Department also takes an appropriate advisory and playing part in NATO exercises from time to time.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: There are no terms of reference specific to this Department for work on civil emergencies and home defence planning. However, in concert with other Government Departments, we are committed to planning for peacetime emergencies and the effects of warfare, whether conventional or nuclear; plans for these are kept under constant review.

In this Department 5·5 whole-time equivalent staff are engaged in the work of civil and home defence planning.

Departmental costs for the last three years are as follows:

	£ million
1985-86	1·36 outturn
1986-87	1·12 outturn
1987-88	1·64 estimate

These costs are attributable largely to storage of medical supplies and equipment. In addition, approximately £200,000 per annum is spent on staff costs.

The Department issues specific guidance to the National Health Service on several aspects of emergency planning. We expect shortly to issue a new circular on civil defence planning in the NHS which also includes revised guidance in response to nuclear accidents.

Health Care

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of gross domestic product each member of the European Community devoted to health care in 1987.

Mr. Newton: International comparisons of expenditure on health care are not available for 1987. Comparative data for 1985, the latest year for which comprehensive data are available from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, are as follows:

Expenditure on Health Care as a Percentage of GDP, 1985

Country	Public	Private	Total

Note: Luxemburg is excluded from the table because of inconsistencies in the national health accounts.

Hospital Closures

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all hospitals where he has been notified of (a) total closure and (b) partial closure in the areas covered by the following health authorities: North West Thames, South West Thames, North East Thames, South East Thames, Basingstoke, Winchester, Portsmouth, Southampton, Isle of Wight, Milton Keynes, Aylesbury, Wycombe, East Berkshire, West Berkshire and Oxfordshire.

Mrs. Currie: It is important to note that closures may be offset or balanced by openings or reprovision elsewhere. The hospitals or units approved for total or partial closure from 1979 to end 1986 in the specified regional and district health authorities are in the table.

The following districts have not approved any closures in the period:—
Southampton and South West Hampshire
Milton Keynes
Wycombe
North West Thames

General Practice Finance Corporation

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how it is proposed to meet the expenses incurred in connection with the reconstitution of the General Practice Finance Corporation.

Mr. Newton: Parliamentary approval for this expenditure has been sought in the Supply Estimate for the Family Practitioner and Other Services, England, Vote (class XIV, vote 2) presented to Parliament on 15 March 1988. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure, estimated at £100,000, will be met by repayable advances from the contingencies fund.

Medical Secretaries

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the annual average salary of a qualified medical secretary;

(2) if he will give, for each regional health authority, district health authority and special health authority (a) the number of funded establishments for qualified medical secretaries and (b) the number of qualified medical secretaries in post;

(3) if he will give the average annual salary of a trained medical secretary.

Mr. Newton [holding answers 6 May 1988 and 9 May 1988]: Medical secretaries are employed in the NHS on various grades with basic pay scales ranging from £4,733 to £8,990 per annum for an adult according to their individual responsibilities. In addition, allowances up to £635 per annum may be payable for tested proficiency in typing, shorthand and audio skills. London weighting allowances of £1,201 per annum within the inner zone and £718 per annum in the outer zone are also payable as appropriate.

Payroll information identifying medical secretaries is not centrally available for all parts of the NHS. Based on information from eight regions and six special health authorities in the period April to December 1987, the average gross salary was estimated to be £6,620 per annum inclusive of proficiency allowances but excluding London weighting. There is no central classification or payroll identification of a trained or qualified medical secretary.

The table shows the number of medical secretaries in post in each regional, district and post-graduate special health authority at September 1986. Figures for funded establishments are not held centrally.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the possibility of transferring to regional health authorities functions currently carried out by his Department.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 25 May 1988]: The need to exercise functions centrally is kept under continuing consideration. For example, following a review of the Department's works function, authority for execution of capital building schemes at all stages subsequent to approval in principle was delegated to regional health authorities.

60 to 70-year-olds

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of men and women, respectively, for each year between the ages of 60 and 70 who in 1987 (a) were in full-time employment, (b) were known to be retired and who were working part-time or (c) whose status was unknown; and what percentage of their year each represented.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 7 June 1988]: Information is not available in exactly the form requested. The available information is in the table and is for spring 1987:

Note: Numbers do not sum to total because of roundings.

Capenhurst (Cancers)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what have been the recorded levels of childhood leukaemia, malignant brain tumours among young people and the number of adult thyroid cancers, in the area covering a six-mile radius around the British Nuclear Fuels plc plant at Capenhurst; and how this compares with the incidence of these conditions in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 7 June 1988]: The precise information is not readily available in the form requested. In a report published last year in the OPCS series "Studies on Medical and Population subjects" (No 51) [1] the following relevant information is given in relation to Capenhurst:

Local Authority Area with at least two-thirds of the population resident within 6 miles of BNFL site at Capenhurst

Common Cold

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what research is currently undertaken into the prevention of the common cold; which institutions are undertaking such research; how much money is being provided, publicly and privately, for such research and by whom; and if he will make a statement on policy and research in this area.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 14 June 1988]: The Department is not at present funding any research on the prevention of the common cold. The main agency through which the Government promote medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. I understand that the Medical Research Council is at present funding research at the common cold unit, which is part of the clinical research centre's division of communicable diseases. In the financial year 1986-87 (the last for which figures are available) the council's expenditure on this research was £304,000.

The Medical Research Council has agreed that the common cold unit should close in 1990 following the retirement of the director. A committee has been set up to evaluate the future need of a facility for studying infections in human volunteers.

Details of research other than that funded directly by Government Departments or by research councils are not held centrally.

EMPLOYMENT

Tourists (Expenditure)

98. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates he has in sterling equivalent of the amount (a) spent in the United Kingdom by foreign tourists, and (b) spent overseas by British tourists.

Mr. Lee: It is estimated that overseas residents spent £6·2 billion in the United Kingdom in 1987 and that United Kingdom residents spent £7·3 billion abroad.

Urban Greening Initiatives

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will provide details of the number of Manpower Services Commission staff and participants employed on urban greening initiatives in the voluntary sector;

(2) if he will provide details of the number of Manpower Services Commission staff and participants employed on urban greening initiatives in local authority sponsored schemes.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no Manpower Services Commission staff employed directly on urban greening initiatives under the community programme. One of the programme's national initiatives, UL2000, includes amongst its five themes "greening the cities", but separate figures of participants on the different themes are not available.

At 31 March some 6,782 people were employed on the UK2000 community programme national initiative in Great Britain. Of these, some two thirds are employed in the voluntary sector and around one fifth in local authorities.

Training Schemes (Fatalities and Accidents)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many fatalities have occurred on Manpower Services Commission building and construction schemes under YTS, the job training scheme and the community programme for each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: One fatality occurred in May 1986 to a YTS trainee in the construction and civil engineering occupations. There have been no fatalities to trainees on the job training scheme in these occupations. Central records of fatalities on the community programme are not held, although accidents on the community programme have to be notified to the Health and Safety Executive in the same way as for other employment.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many accidents have occurred on Manpower Services Commission building and construction schemes under YTS, the job training scheme and the community programme for each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: Accident information by industries is available only for YTS and where the accident occurred after 1 July 1986. Comparable accident figures for adult trainees on the job training scheme and employees on the community programme are not available centrally. Accidents on the community programme have to be notified to the Health and Safety Executive in the same way as for other employment. The following table gives quarterly figures of fatal, major and minor YTS accidents in the construction and civil engineering occupations and includes accidents to both one-year and two-year YTS participants.

Period	Accidents[1]
	Fatal	Major	Minor
1 July 1986—30 September 1986	Nil	21	74
1 October 1986—31 December 1986	Nil	26	136
1 January 1987—31 March 1987	Nil	15	162

1 October 1987—31 December 1987	Nil	32	234
1 January 1988—31 March 1988	Nil	41	209

[1] MSC accident figures for YTS have been compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the commission's figures include a number of accidents, in particular road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents to trainees in educational establishments which may not have been reportable to the executive had the individuals been employed.

Mines and Quarries

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, South of 26 May, Official Report, column 315, why the inspector was concerned only with the security of the stockpiles on his visit to Penlee quarry on 5 January; how long was the visit; why no check was made on machinery guards and conveyors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The inspector visited Penlee quarry, not to carry out a routine inspection of the site, but to investigate a specific complaint from the public. The investigation took approximately three hours, was restricted to the extensive stockpiling areas and did not include the preparation plant area where the conveyors are sited.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether training managers under the proposed employment training scheme will be able to (a) charge trainees for any protective clothing, safety footwear and special equipment they may be issued with, (b) deduct any part of a trainee's training allowance as a deposit on any protective clothing, safety footwear or special equipment they are issued with and (c) impose any fines or deductions from any part of a trainee's training allowance for any trainee's unauthorised absences, lateness or irregular attendance.

Mr. Nicholls: Training managers will not be able to make any financial demands on trainees for protective clothing, safety footwear or special equipment, nor will they be able to impose fines or deductions from a trainee's training allowance.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many placements on the new employment training scheme will at any one time be available for use by voluntary sector agencies.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training will provide for about 300,000 trainees at any one time with about 600,000 trainees taking part during a full year. The emphasis will be on the individual training needs of trainees, and they may spend time in a variety of training opportunities during their period on the programme. I hope voluntary organisations will be extensively involved in employment training and so continue the valuable contribution which they have made to existing programmes. Training Commission officials are currently considering proposals from organisations interested in taking part.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many voluntary sector agencies have indicated that they will not take placements under the new employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training is a locally planned and locally delivered programme and the majority of discussions and negotiation with organisations which may wish to participate is being done at local level. There is no central record of organisations which have indicated that they either do or do not wish to take part. The voluntary sector has an important part to play in employment training and I hope most existing managing agents and sponsors will move forward into the new programme.

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what alternative support will be offered to voluntary groups which are not offered placements from the new employment training scheme and to those which decide not to use such placements;

(2) what consideration the Government have given to the probable impact of the withdrawal of the community programme on voluntary agencies which provide community services.

Mr. Nicholls: The community programme will be replaced from 5 September by employment training. Project-based training will be an important part of the new programme, with some 194,000 project-based opportunities in the first year, broadly the present level of community programme provision. I hope that most current CP projects will move forward into employment training bringing with them the worthwhile services that they currently provide.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently met representatives of the National Council for Voluntary Organisations to discuss the scope for the fullest involvement of the voluntary sector in employment training. Discussions are continuing between officials, including the role of the voluntary sector in providing worthwhile voluntary activities for those participants who, at the end of employment training, do not move directly into a job.

YTS Agents

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether there are any exemptions to the requirement for agents of YTS to have approved training status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: There are no exemptions to the requirement that agents of YTS must achieve approved training organisations status. New organisations contracting with the Training Commission to deliver YTS programmes must apply for ATO status within one month of signing a contract and their training arrangements are monitored against the ATO criteria. A decision on whether to award ATO status will be made within a year of their contracting with the commission to provide training.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether there are any agents of YTS who have not acquired approved training status still operating as agents of that scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: Only 136 (4 per cent.) of all agents contracted to deliver YTS by the Training Commission have yet to acquire approved training organisation status. All these organisations have recently contracted with the Training Commission to deliver YTS training and their training arrangements are being monitored against the 10 ATO criteria prior to a decision on their status.

Community Programme

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a full list of voluntary sector community programme placements classified according to type of work undertaken.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the number of filled places is not available in the form requested. The table shows the number of authorised places on the community programme as at 29 April 1988 (the latest date available) allocated to agents and sponsors in the voluntary sector, classified according to the type of work undertaken.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested. The nearest categories and the number of authorised places in each are shown in the table:

Health and Safety Commission

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the specific matters in relation to the establishment and activities of the Health and Safety Commission and the Health and Safety Executive and their subordinate agencies on which he answers parliamentary questions.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is responsible for all matters concerned with the staffing and establishment of the Health and Safety Commission and Executive which do not fall to the Prime Minister as arising from the position of HSE staff as civil servants. He is also responsible for all the aspects of the commission's and the executive's work which cover primarily the protection of workers. He answers for the protection of the public from the generality of hazards, except where other Secretaries of State have responsibilities which involve the commission and executive. For a description of these responsibilities, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister today.

Remploy

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what further steps he proposes to take to enable Remploy to increase its work force, its range of products and its subsidy.

Mr. Lee: The longer-term arrangements for supporting people with severe disabilities in employment, including the support given to Remploy, are among the matters to be considered within the internal review of the assistance offered by my Department to people with disabilities announced in March. We aim to complete this review as quickly as possible this year.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when was the last occasion on which he visited Remploy factories to discuss subsidies, pay, bonuses and working conditions.

Mr. Lee: I welcome the opportunity to visit Remploy factories whenever possible to meet both management and work force, and most recently visited the Burnley factory on 26 February. Discussions on the matters raised by the right hon. Member are generally held at a national level. I met members of the consortium of Remploy trades unions on 28 September 1987 to discuss pay issues and met the board of directors on 15 June to discuss a range of issues.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what special provision is made in Remploy for those severely disabled people who may not be able to participate in bonus schemes.

Mr. Lee: By effective placement and training Remploy has increased the number of severely disabled workers who earn bonus from 86 per cent. of the disabled work force in 1980 to 98 per cent. in 1988. Those who are unable to achieve the bonus standard receive the basic Remploy wage.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of Remploy workers who lose money, compared with benefits, by working.

Mr. Lee: This information is not available.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled people are seeking work with Remploy but are unable to get jobs.

Mr. Lee: Information on the number of severely disabled people seeking work with Remploy is not held. The company recruits and trains between 1,000 and 1,200 new employees each year.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average cost to the Government of each Remploy worker who benefits from the subsidy.

Mr. Lee: In 1987-88 the average cost to the Government of subsidising each severely disabled worker employed by Remploy, excluding loans to the company in respect of capital expenditure, was £5,529.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to provide new, modern skills for those Remploy workers who require them.

Mr. Lee: This is essentially a matter for the management of Remploy to determine within the resources available to it, taking account of the characteristics of those people with severe disabilities in its employment.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the cost to the Government in terms of benefits which would have to be paid if all Remploy workers become unemployed.

Mr. Lee: A reliable estimate could be made only if information were available about the entitlement to benefit of each Remploy worker. However, it is estimated, using general survey information, that the cost to the Government would have been of the order of £27·5 million if all the severely disabled people employed by Remploy had remained unemployed and claimed benefits during the whole of the financial year 1987-88. This estimate is based on information about the characteristics of severely disabled people in employment collected in 1986. It does not take account of changes in benefits introduced since that date.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are in supervisory jobs in Remploy and how many of them are disabled.

Mr. Lee: Comprehensive information is not available, but 283 (42 per cent.) of the 667 supervisory staff in Remploy factories are severely disabled.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are in management jobs in Remploy; and how many of them are disabled.

Mr. Lee: Comprehensive information is not available, but four of Remploy's 94 factory managers are severely disabled.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled workers are employed by Remploy; in which areas they are located; and what is their basic weekly wage.

Mr. Lee: On 31 March 1988 Remploy employed 9,042 severely disabled workers. This figure has been broken down into employment service regions as follows:

Region	Number of Severely Disabled Workers at 31 March 1988
Northern	920
Yorkshire and Humberside	1,104
East Midlands and Eastern	653
London and south-east	990
South-west	516
Wales	1,492
West midlands	646
North-west	1,647
Scotland	1,074

The basic weekly wage is £102·43 for workers in London and £90 elsewhere. With skill and productivity payments, average weekly earnings are £121·86 in London and £109·43 elsewhere.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next intends to meet the management and trade unionists of Remploy to discuss the present subsidy.

Mr. Lee: I shall continue to meet the management of Remploy, and representatives of the trades unions with which the company negotiates, as and when the need arises.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the annual subsidy to Remploy for each of the past 10 years; if he will increase the present subsidy to enable Remploy to pay higher wages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The annual subsidy (excluding loans for capital expenditure) to Remploy for each of the past 10 years is given in the table:

	£000
1978-79	22,530
1979-80	27,263
1980-81	32,235
1981-82	39,195
1982-83	42,578
1983-84	44,572
1984-85	47,825
1985-86	48,415
1986-87	47,770
1987-88	49,726

In the past three years pay settlements for Remploy's manual work force have been above the annual rate of inflation. I am informed that Remploy's manual work force has voted by a substantial majority to accept a pay offer negotiated between the company and the consortium of Remploy trades unions earlier in the year, operative from 1 April.

It is estimated that average weekly earnings of Remploy workers outside London have risen from £83·03 in April 1984 to £109·43 in April 1988. Workers at Remploy's London factories receive higher rates of pay. The new pay arrangements will be operated within the subsidy for 1988-89.

Sheltered Workshops (Wage Rates)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is (a) the national average wage, and (b) that paid in local authority sheltered workshops.

Mr. Lee: The average gross weekly earnings (excluding bonuses, overtime and shift premiums) taken from the new earnings survey April 1987 for full-time adult employees whose pay was not affected by absences was £170·70. In April 1987 the average weekly rate of pay in most local authority sheltered workshops was estimated to be £95·10; the current average weekly rate of pay in these workshops is estimated to be £102·28.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Department of Employment has no liaison arrangements, and does no collaborative work, with the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Work in the Department of Employment on civil emergencies and home defence planning is carried out within guidelines laid down by the Government. The work is done by staff, both in London and in the regional offices, who also have other duties. It is estimated that the total effort devoted to emergency planning is equivalent to about five full-time staff. This area of work is not costed separately, but is included in overall administrative costs and amounted to around £100,000 in the 1987-88 financial year; no figures are available for previous years.

Single European Market

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish an analysis of the regional impact on jobs in the United Kingdom of the Commission's proposals to achieve a single market in the European Community by 1992.

Mr. Cope: The impact of the single European market should be beneficial on output growth in the United Kingdom and so on jobs. The impact on jobs in different regions in the United Kingdom cannot be predicted with confidence.

Sheltered Employment

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total cost, in each of the years 1985, 1986 and 1987, and by each standard region, of providing (a) sheltered placement scheme places, (b) sheltered employment places in Remploy and (c) sheltered employment places in local authority workshops.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 17 May 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. Total expenditure nationally and by Training Commission regions (excluding the Department's expenditure on administration and capital expenditure, for which information in this form is not available) is given in the table for the last three financial years for which information is available.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 17 June 1988

PRIME MINISTER

Food Surpluses

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she has responded to the petition delivered to No. 10 Downing street on 20 April requesting the fairer distribution of European Economic Community food surpluses.

The Prime Minister: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food replied on 18 May to the petition from the Common Market fair food campaign.

Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the written reply of 26 April, Official Report, column 96, to the hon. Member for Brent, East, on what date she wrote to the Chairman of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee.

The Prime Minister: I wrote the letter to which I referred on 12 March 1987.

Parliamentary Questions

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister on what basis it was judged appropriate in her reply to the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison), Official Report, 6 May, columns 628-44, on Government achievements in the United Kingdom since May 1979, to incur an expenditure above the standard upper limit for resourcing answers to parliamentary questions.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 14 March 1988, at column 429. On this occasion it was decided that since the question concerned a large number of Departments it was appropriate to give a consolidated answer.

"Strategies for Deception"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister for what reason Her Majesty's Government have intervened to halt the publication of the academic work on "Strategies for Deception" by Professor Sir Nicholas Howard, All Souls.

The Prime Minister: I assume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the volume in the "Official History of British Intelligence" series prepared by Professor Sir Michael Howard, Regius Professor of Modern History and Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford. Publication of this volume is still under consideration. At such time as a decision is taken, I shall, of course, inform the House.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what guidance the Director of Public Prosecutions gave to the City of London police on their inquiry into contacts between the two principal Crown witnesses at the recent appeal hearing relating to the Birmingham pub bombings trial.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions passed to the City of London police the information that he had received. In all cases in which the director requests police inquiries it is for the police themselves to determine how those inquiries are conducted.

On occasion, advice is offered to assist the police in their investigation. It is not the practice of either the director or myself to disclose whether any advice has been offered, and, if so, in what terms, in any particular case.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of value added tax refund claims under Customs and Excise notice No. 719 processed for the fiscal year 1986-87.

Mr. Lilley: I presume my hon. Friend refers to the fiscal year 1987-88 as my hon. Friend's question on notice No. 719 for the year 1986-87 was answered on 26 November 1987 at column 291. The number of claims processed in the fiscal year 1987-88 was 9,254.

Business Registrations

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many businesses were registered for value added tax in the Corby district at the end of (a) 1981 and (b) 1986;

(2) how many businesses were registered for value added tax in the East Northants district at the end of (a) 1981 and (b) 1986.

Mr. Lilley: I regret that records are not maintained on a town or district basis. Corby and east Northants lie within the area covered by the local VAT office at Peterborough. There were 15,097 businesses registered at this office at the end of 1981 and 19,070 at the end of 1986.

Dredging

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many firms were licensed to carry out industrial dredging off the United Kingdom coast in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lawson: The number of firms to which licences have been issued by the Crown Estate Commissioners to extract sand and gravel off the United Kingdom coastline is as follows:

Year	Firms
1979	19
1980	20
1981	19

Year	Firms
1982	20
1983	19
1984	19
1985	20
1986	20
1987	20

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many firms were licensed to carry out dredging off the North sea coast in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lawson: The number of firms to which licences have been issued by the Crown Estate Commissioners to extract sand and gravel off the North sea coast is as follows:

Year	Firms
1979	9
1980	9
1981	9
1982	9
1983	8
1984	8
1985	8
1986	8
1987	8

Inflation

Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on inflationary pressures within the economy; and what action he envisages in that regard.

Mr. Lawson: The central objective of economic policy is the elimination of inflation.

Life Assurance

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when, in the course of his review of the taxation of life assurance, he will be consulting the industry and other interested parties.

Mr. Lawson: Work done so far on the review of the taxation of life assurance has highlighted a number of unsatisfactory features. The present tax regime has built up piecemeal over many years and has proved increasingly out of line with developments. The incidence of tax between offices is very uneven; some offices pay very much less tax than might be expected given their profits and the investment returns they earn for their policy holders; and in consequence the yield from the industry overall is also less than might have been expected. For many policy holders, the current rules may even so mean a higher effective burden—particularly on their capital gains—than they would face if investing in other ways. And there are many technical weaknesses and uncertainties which call into question the effectiveness of the regime.

With my agreement the Inland Revenue is today publishing a consultative document which examines the position in detail and sets out a number of different ways in which the issues could be tackled.

Economic Growth

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the growth in the volume of trade, both inward and outward, between the United Kingdom and mainland Europe in the next 12 months.

Mr. Major [holding answer 16 June 1988]: No specific forecasts of these flows are available.

Financial Institutions (Investments)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the cost of rebasing to 1982 market value investments held by financial institutions which will not benefit from the 1982 rebasing under the capital gains tax provisions in the Finance (No. 2) Bill 1988;

(2) if he will estimate the cost to the Exchequer of an indexation allowance for investments held by financial institutions which do not benefit from the capital gains tax allowance.

Mr. Lawson [holding answers 13 June 1988]: I regret that the information needed to provide estimates for these proposals is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Tax Evasion

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was spent by his Department to prevent tax evasion in each year since 1979, in cash and real terms, at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 June 1988]: The estimated cost of resources devoted by the Inland Revenue and Customs and Excise to preventing tax evasion was as follows:

	Inland Revenue		Customs and Excise
	£ million	£ million (1987-88 prices)	£ million	£ million (1987-88 prices)
1978-79	*	*	46·7	93·9
1979-80	*	*	52·6	91·3
1980-81	*	*	65·9	98·4
1981-82	*	*	74·3	99·5
1982-83	*	*	80·1	100·1
1983-84	54·6	65·2	89·8	107·2
1984-85	63·2	71·8	102·5	116·5
1985-86	67·7	72·6	113·6	121·9
1986-87	71·4	74·2	130·4	135·6
1987-88	84·1	84·1	151·2	151·2

Notes:

The inland Revenue figures relate to accounts investigation work in tax districts, investigations by specialist units and checks by the Revenue's PAYE auditors. Costs for 1982-83 and earlier years were not recorded in a way which permits extraction of the figures requested; the 1983-84 figure is also not strictly comparable to those for later years.

The Customs and Excise figures relate to the overall cost of VAT control officers and specialist staff employed in VAT fraud investigation. Control officers deal mainly with legitimate traders but equally have a duty to pursue VAT fraud. The 1987-88 figure is provisional.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will identify (a) liaison arrangements between his Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation civil emergency planning boards and committees, concerning civil emergency and home defence planning, and (b) the extent of collaborative work carried out with these bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 16 June 1988]: Any matters affecting the Treasury are covered by the Home Office in its liaison role with NATO.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will identify the terms of reference of work on (a) civil emergencies and (b) home defence planning carried out in his Department, the number of staff involved and the annual budgets for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The role of my Department in an emergency situation would be to maintain economic activity. The staff and cost implications are small and not separately identifiable within existing budgets.

TRANSPORT

Dredging

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many vessels were operating as industrial dredgers off the coast of the United Kingdom for each of the years from 1980 to 1987;

(2) how many vessels were operating as industrial dredgers off the North sea coast for each of the years from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information is not available within my Department. Figures from Crown Estate Commissioners, who issue licences, indicate that 55 industrial dredgers operate around the United Kingdom coast. Of these, about 20 operate off the North sea coast. A more detailed breakdown of these numbers is not available.

Driving Tuition

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to maintain high standards of driving tuition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Good instruction is important for good driving skills and behaviour. The Department has agreed with the national instructors associations five measures to help maintain high standards in the compulsory registration system for driving instructors. They are:

(a) introduction of "banding" into the written examination to ensure an adequate level of knowledge over the whole syllabus;

(b) expansion of the syllabus of the written examination to include questions on the theory and practice of learning, teaching and assessment;

(c) a limit of three attempts at each of the two practical qualifying tests within a period of two years from passing the written examination:

(d) extension of the minimum period of cancellation of tests without forfeiture of fee from three days to 10;

(e) targeting checks of registered instructors more effectively on those who need it.

These measures will be introduced progressively over the next nine months.

We are also co-operating with the national instructors associations in their development of an industry-approved register of establishments that train instructors, including the appropriate standards for instructor training courses.

These measures are designed to maintain and improve driving standards and to reduce accidents.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Higginson Committee (Report)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will state the total cost of establishing, servicing, and publishing the report of the Higginson committee on the future of A-levels.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total salary, and other non-pay costs, including travel, of establishing and servicing the Higginson committee and publishing its report on the future of A-levels was £68,234, which included £7,584 for printing.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Industrial Investment

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will estimate the amount spent per head in industrial support and investment promotion in (a) the northern region and (b) Scotland.

Mr. Atkins: The amount spent per head on industrial support and investment promotion as regional preferential assistance, in the most recent year for which figures are available, is as follows:

Expenditure per head of civilian working population, 1986-87

Northern Region	96·6
Scotland	99·6

Notes:

1. The expenditure figures are based on regional development grants, regional selective assistance (under section 7 of the Industry Act 1982), expenditure on land and factories by the English Industrial Estates Corporation, the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board.

2. Civilian working population comprises employees in employment, the self-employed and the unemployed.

Inward Investment

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest estimate of the number of jobs created in Scotland, England and Wales as a result of investment by non-United Kingdom European Community companies since 1979.

Mr. Atkins: The following are the Invest in Britain Bureau (IBB) figures for the number of jobs expected to be created or safeguarded, in the long term, by inward investment projects announced by companies from member states of the European Community, other than the United Kingdom, in each year since 1979 for England, Wales and Scotland. The figures are based on information provided by the companies themselves and include only those jobs associated with inward investment projects currently known to the IBB.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of public expenditure was devoted to overseas aid in 1979 and in 1987.

Mr. Chris Patten: Gross public expenditure on overseas aid represented 1·25 per cent. of total public expenditure in 1979 and 0·90 per cent. in 1987.

ENERGY

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library the report by Large and Associates No. LA1817/274 concerning the investigation of allegations of malpractices at British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Sellafield, issued in May.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that the report to which the hon. Member refers was commissioned privately from Large and Associates by the two organisations Greenpeace and Cumbrians Opposed to a Radioactive Environment (CORE). Those organisations have not sent a copy of it to my Department.

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what will the final expected cost of the capping of the near-surface trenches of radioactive wastes at the Drigg dump site near Sellafield.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

B205 Reprocessing Plant

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the chief nuclear installations inspector is satisfied with the current reporting arrangements concerning the entering and leaving of the B205 reprocessing plant, in terms of the accountability of the whereabouts of workers at the plant.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This matter was raised during the Health and Safety Executive's safety audit of BNFL Sellafield in 1986. BNFL subsequently introduced improvements to the health physics control arrangements at the entrance to B205. The Nuclear Installations Inspectorate is considering, with BNFL, the need for further improvements and is awaiting the results of an experimental system in use on a new plant on the site.

WALES

Welsh Water Authority

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the name, age and occupation of each member of the Welsh water authority.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is given in the following table:

Name	Age (January 1988)	Occupation
Mr. John Elfed Jones, CBE	55	Chairman
Professor Ronald Walter Edwards	58	Professor of Applied Ecology
Mr. Timothy Knowles	50	Managing Director
Mr. Gareth Edwards, MBE	41	Company Director
Major Howard Robert Jackson	67	Farmer
Councillor Sir John Cotterill	53	Farmer
Councillor Graham Jones	55	Steel Worker
Councillor John Thompson, JP	56	Farmer
Councillor Lloyd Turnbull	54	Company Director
Councillor William Elwyn Conway	63	Club Steward
Miss Elizabeth Jean Muir	40	Marketing Consultant
Mr. John William Ray	55	Managing Director
Dr. Martin Owen	41	Executive Director and Group Treasurer

Perinatal Intensive Care

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his proposals for a perinatal intensive care service for Wales and the proposed role within that service of the Morriston hospital special care baby unit.

Mr. Grist: I have agreed in principle the designation of a regional perinatal intensive care centre at the University Hospital of Wales. To advise on the operational structure of the centre and its relationship with other services in Wales for new-born babies, including the need for satellite units, I am setting up an expert advisory group under the chairmanship of Professor C. E. Stroud, Professor of Child Health, King's College school of medicine and dentistry.

DRIVE

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many projects have taken advantage of the DRIVE initiative (a) in the area convered by Mid Wales Development, and (b) in the area covered by the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Peter Walker: At 31 March 1988 52 projects had accepted offers of assistance from Mid Wales Development and 27 from the Welsh Development Agency.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drugs

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received for the decriminalisation of narcotic drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: From time to time the Home Office receives representations for the decriminalisation of certain activities relating to controlled drugs. We take the view that action on these lines would be irresponsible.

Drugs Charges (Mr. Alan Waite and others)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the reasons for the dropping of drugs charges against Mr. Alan Waite, Mr Geoffrey Pope, Mr. Marcel Mullins, Mr. Mark Wittaker, Mr. Paul Brown and Ms. Theresa James.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that, following arrests in 1984, the charges in these cases were dropped in view of doubts about the reliability of police evidence upon which the prosecutions depended.

Drugs (Police Operations)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implications for the management of police operations relating to dangerous drugs in London of the conviction of Inspector Norman McGowan and Police Constable Michael Buchanan for theft of drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The management of police operations is a matter for chief officers. Since the conviction of Mr. McGowan and Mr. Buchanan, the coming into force of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 has introduced new procedures for the treatment of suspects. Since then also, and following a major review of the organisation and management of the Metropolitan police, area drug squads have been established which are under the supervision of an officer whose responsibilities extend beyond drugs matters. I understand that both these changes have helped to improve the supervision and management of officers engaged in the investigation of drug-related crime.

Prison Population

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of the prison population is represented by ethnic minorities.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: According to the records held centrally, on 31 December 1987 about 14 per cent. of the population of prison department establishments in England and Wales was from the ethnic minority communities. More detailed information, for 30 June 1987 and previous years, was published in table 6 of Home Office statistical bulletin 8/88 on "The Prison Population in 1987", copies of which are in the Library.

Police (Vetting Powers)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will provide a list of the legislation and other powers under which the police claim the authority to vet members of the public; and if he will summarise the reasons why such vetting takes place.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In most cases the police do not vet members of the public. The police supply information about an individual to other organisations which would decide in the light of this information, and any other information in their possession, whether a person was suitable for the post applied for.

The principles governing the disclosure of police information are set out in section 17 of the consolidated circular to the police on crime and kindred matters and in Home Office circular 45/1986, copies of which are in the Library.

Information from police records is supplied only where there are important considerations of public interest to justify departure from the general rule of confidentiality. These are, broadly speaking:

(i) where there is a statutory obligation to provide information;
(ii) to the courts for the administration of justice;
(iii) to ensure probity in the administration of law;
(iv) for the protection of vulnerable members of society; and
(v) national security.

Electronic Tagging

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received on the proposals to introduce electronic tags both for defendants on bail and as an alternative sentence to imprisonment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce electronic tagging on an experimental basis for remand prisoners.

Mr. John Patten: Letters from hon. Members and interested organisations have suggested various uses for electronic monitoring, including checking the whereabouts of people remanded on bail and as an element in non-custodial sentences. We are examining the equipment which is available.

Drunkenness

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to control drunken behaviour amongst young people.

Mr. Hurd: The Government entirely accept the importance of this issue. That is one reason why we set up the ministerial group on alcohol misuse under the chairmanship of my right hon. Friend the Lord President of the Council. The Licensing Act 1988 tightens the offence of selling alcohol to under-age drinkers, increases the penalties for those found guilty of doing so and makes it an offence for wholesalers to sell alcohol to people under 18. We hope that these measures will increase the number of successful prosecutions for offences connected with under-age drinking.

Action has been taken on two recent reports to the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention which made proposals for dealing with this problem. Successful pilot schemes based on the recommendations of the 1986 working group report on violence associated with licensed premises have taken place in several towns. Progress in implementing the recommendations of the 1987 working group report on young people and alcohol was reported by my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin) on 26 April at columns 85-86.

The recent ACPO survey of disorder in non-metropolitan areas, carried out in consultation with the Home Office, confirmed the police view that much disorder is drink-related. We are considering urgently with the police the problems they have in dealing with this sort of disorder and what measures, including the wide dissemination of the results of successful crime prevention schemes, can best be taken to help the police tackle them.

Young Offenders

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy towards the future involvement of the probation service in providing alternatives to custody for young offenders.

Mr. John Patten: The Government would like to build on the experience of the probation service in supervising juvenile and young adult offenders in the community. We are encouraging and enabling the probation service to develop programmes for young offenders aged 17 to 20 which make them face up to the consequences of the offending behaviour, both for themselves and for their victims. We are strengthening community service orders. We want also to examine the scope for exercising more control over offenders in the community; punishing them for the harm they have done; enabling them to make recompense and helping them to tackle problems which stand in the way of their becoming law-abiding citizens. The probation service will have a central role in these developments and we are already having constructive discussions with it about our proposals which we hope to publish before long.

Illegal Travellers' Encampments

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what discussions he has had with the Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police about the use of Public Order Act powers to remove illegal travellers' encampments; and with what result;

(2) on how many occasions Public Order Act powers have been used in the Metropolitan police area to remove illegal travellers' encampments; and in which local authority areas.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is an operational matter for the senior police officer present at the scene of an unlawful occupation to decide whether or not in all the circumstances it would be appropriate to use the power in section 39 of the Public Order Act 1986. I understand that the Metropolitan police do not collect statistics on the use of the power and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Football Hooliganism

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the possible extension of the terms of section 9 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 to cover crimes of violence committed by British citizens outside the jurisdiction as a means of combating football hooliganism by Britons abroad.

Mr. John Patten: I would not wish to rule out of consideration any effective means of tackling the problem of violence by British football supporters abroad. Given the evidential difficulties, however, it seems doubtful whether extraterritorial jurisdiction would in fact be an effective approach to the problem, or offer sufficient advantage to justify such a radical departure from the essentially territoral basis of our criminal law.

Hooliganism

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to enable the courts in appropriate cases to withdraw, for any period to be fixed by them, the right to hold a British passport of anyone convicted of a hooligan-type offence and who, in their opinion, is likely to bring Britain into disrepute if allowed to travel abroad.

Mr. Douglas Hurd: As part of the measures announced by the Government on 16 June to deal with problems of football hooliganism, we shall be considering whether the courts should have powers in the longer term to impose restrictions on overseas travel following conviction for an offence.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the position of a trainee who is receiving income support on the proposed employment training scheme, whose spouse or partner gets (a) a job for more than 24 hours a week, or (b) a job for less than 24 hours a week, during the trainee's time on the programme; whether such persons will be obliged to inform his Department of these change in circumstance; and what impact the spouse or partner's earnings will have on the trainee's training allowance.

Mr. Nicholls: All those in receipt of income support, including employment training participants, are obliged to inform the DHSS of any change in their, or their partner's circumstances. Income support can normally only remain payable so long as neither partner works for 24 hours a week or more. A partner's wages from part-time employment will be taken into account after allowing the appropriate earnings disregard (£5 or £15 per week). If the income support entitlement of an employment training participant is reduced, the basic training allowance payable may also be reduced to ensure an element of income support remains in payment and entitlement to "passported benefits" is safeguarded.

YTS

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if it is his intention to renew contracts to organisations which have failed to gain approved training organisation status in relation to YTS.

Mr. Cope: The Training Commission which administers YTS does not intend to renew contracts to organisations which have failed to gain approved training organisation status.

Young People

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if organisations which have failed to meet minimum standards of the Manpower Services Commission are still being paid to offer places to young people.

Mr. Cope: No. All organisations providing YTS must achieve approved training organisation status. Where a YTS provider has had its application for approved training organisation status rejected, and its rights of appeal have been exercised without the rejection being reversed, the Training Commission moves to close the contract at the earliest permissible date. In these cases also steps are taken to require recruitment to cease. Where closure occurs, existing trainees are transferred to other places offering suitable training as soon as practicable. In cases where a YTS provider is in breach of contract, urgent remedies are sought under threat of contract closure, or contracts are closed immediately or with a period of notice. During closure procedure it is standard practice to require recruitment to cease.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Warsaw Pact (Verification)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement, in the context of United Kingdom membership of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the offer of on-site physical verification of Warsaw pact bases, depots and troop deployments in the conventional weapon sector, with less than 12 hours' notice, made by the Soviet negotiators to the United States delegation during the recent Moscow summit.

Mr. Mellor: We understand that during the summit the Soviet Union proposed an exchange of data on force levels accompanied by verification through on-site inspections, as well as elimination of asymmetries. This movement towards the Western approach in the conventional arms control field is welcome. An Alliance priority now is to reach a balanced outcome in the CSCE review conference in Vienna which will allow the conventional stability talks to commence. Any agreement reached in the talks will certainly require an exchange of data, verified by on-site inspection.

Nuclear Tests (Verification)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to resume active negotiations with the United States of America and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics on verifications of nuclear tests following the joint verification plans announced by Mr. Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev at the Moscow summit.

Mr. Mellor: No. The United States/Soviet joint verification experiments on nuclear testing are bilateral and relate to the bilateral United States/Soviet threshold test ban treaty.

Asia/Pacific Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department received any invitation to send a representative or observer to the conference for a nuclear-free Asia/Pacific in Hong Kong on 8 to 12 June.

Mr. Mellor: No.

SCOTLAND

Health Boards

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the total spending on mental health for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The table shows health boards' expenditure on mental health in each year from 1981-82 to 1986-87. Information is not available for years before 1981-82.

Child Care

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has in relation to the number of social workers, teachers, medical staff, ancillary staff and other members of the public in Scotland, who have been vetted by police before they are employed in jobs where they work with children; and whether his Department keeps information as to the number of people refused employment and the reasons therefor.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally.

Licence Holders (Vetting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has in relation to the number of licence holders who have been vetted by police before a licence is given; and whether his Department keeps information as to the type of licence applied for, the number of people refused a licence and the reasons therefor.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are many different activities which are, or may be, subject to licensing under a wide range of enactments. In some cases —for example, under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 or the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982—the chief constable has a statutory right to object to the grant or renewal of a licence. No information is collected centrally about the number of licences granted or refused under these enactments.

Radioactivity (Monitoring)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department conducts any environmental monitoring (a) alone and (b) in conjunction with the Ministry of Defence at the ports of Rosyth, Holy Loch and Coulport, to assess the radiological impact of nuclear-powered and nuclear-capable Royal Navy and United States navy ships that use the dockyards.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Marine monitoring for radioactivity in these areas is undertaken both by MOD and by MAFF whose programme provides an independent check on behalf of the Secretary of State for Scotland. MOD publish results of its own surveys while the MAFF work is included in aquatic environment monitoring reports entitled, "Radioactivity in Surface and Coastal Waters of the British Isles," which are in the Library. The MAFF reports, which include assessments of the monitoring results, confirm that the levels of radioactivity around the naval establishments in Scotland remain very low and of no significance in radiological terms.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his decision to commission Coopers and Lybrand to handle the establishment of Scottish Homes, including the terms of reference of his agreement with that firm, the fee to be paid and the reason why he has decided not to have the work done by civil servants; and what relevant experience Coopers and Lybrand has in the provision and management of rented housing to meet social needs in Scotland or elsewhere.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The hon. Member will recall that I informed the First Scottish Standing Committee on 4 February, during its consideration of the Housing (Scotland) Bill, that we were likely to commission consultants to assist Scottish Homes to produce proposals in relation to its structure below board level. In pursuit of that intention, eight firms of consultants were invited in May to produce proposals in relation to the task of advising the board and chief executive of Scottish Homes on possible options for the organisational structure; and on an implementation and development plan in relation to the action necessary to enable Scottish Homes to establish itself as fully operational. Coopers and Lybrand was selected to carry out the task after thorough consideration of the proposals submitted by consultants, which involved the general manager of the Scottish Special Housing Association and the director of the Housing Corporation in Scotland as well as officials of the Scottish Office. It has been asked to complete the work by 1 September 1988.

The use of consultants for work of this type by Government Departments is not uncommon and recognises their specialist knowledge in relation to large-scale organisational and project management tasks, which is not widely available within the Civil Service. Coopers and Lybrand has a wide range of relevant experience including work for the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, the Scottish Special Housing Association and a number of local authorities in Scotland and elsewhere. It will work in close consultation with the Scottish Development Department, the Housing Corporation in Scotland and the Scottish Special Housing Association; and with the chairman-designate and chief executive designate of Scottish Homes once they have been appointed.

The estimated cost of the work is a matter of commercial confidence, which it would be inappropriate to disclose.

Fish Farms

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will describe the scope and remit of the current review of the present arrangements for fish farming applications; when he expects it to be completed; and if its findings will be published in full.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend is reviewing the operation of the consultation arrangements introduced by the Crown Estate Commissioners in 1986 and is taking into account representations from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and a number of other organisations about the procedures currently operated by the commissioners in relation to the establishment of offshore fish farms. The review is not yet complete but he hopes to announce its conclusions before long. No decision about the form of announcement has yet been taken.

Women Prisoners

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) adult and (b) young offender women prisoners received accredited vocational training during 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No accredited vocational training courses were held at Cornton Vale during 1986.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of women prisoners in 1986 had had psychiatric in-patient treatment prior to their trial and sentence; and what percentage of these women were mothers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not available in the form requested. Details of previous psychiatric treatment of inmates in penal establishments is obtained, if necessary, in individual cases but is not recorded centrally.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of women prisoners in 1986 (a) had previously been in prison and (b) had previous convictions and non-custodial sentences.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The only statistical information held centrally on the previous sentences and convictions of inmates is obtained from the inmates on reception into the penal establishment and may not be completely reliable. The figures from this source are as follows:

Women received under sentence into prisons in Scotland: 1986

Percentage admitting:	per cent.
Previous direct prison sentence	60·8
Other direct custodial sentence (but not direct prison sentence)	4·2
Other previous sentence only (non-custodial or custodial sentence in default of fine/compensation order)	14·1
No previous sentence	20·9

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) adult and (b) young offender women prisoners acquired qualifications; and if he will list those qualifications.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The question cannot be answered in precisely the terms stated. The position in relation to individual educational qualifications gained during the past two years was as follows:

1986	gained by 13 candidates
O grades	23
Highers	Nil
1987	gained by 9 candidates
O grades	17
Highers	1

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what percentage of men with no previous convictions were sent to prison in the most recent five years for which statistics are available;

(2) what percentage of women with no previous convictions were sent to prison in the most recent five years for which statistics are available.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The only available statistical information on previous convictions is obtained from inmates on reception into the penal establishment and may not be completely reliable. The figures from this source are as follows:

Adults received under sentence in prisons in Scotland: Percentage admitting no previous convictions, 1983-87

	Men	Women
1983	3·4	7·4
1984	3·5	7·9
1985	5·3	15·3
1986	6·7	20·9
1987	6·2	18·7

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of convicted (a) men and (b) women were sent to prison in (i) 1977 and (ii) 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table:

Percentage of adults, with a charge proved against them, given a sentence of imprisonment

Year	Men	Women
1977	5·1	1·7
1987	8·0	3·5

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) men and (b) women convicted of crimes of violence were sent to prison in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table:

Percentage of adults convicted of a crime of violence given a sentence of imprisonment

Year	Men	Women
1983	42·6	7·7
1984	41·4	7·3
1985	45·4	8·8
1986	43·7	9·3
1987	40·0	9·6

Prisoners (Facilities)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what physical training and recreation activities are available to (a) male and (b) female prisoners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A wide variety of facilities for physical education and recreation are available in all penal establishments in Scotland. Usage by individual inmates is influenced by considerations of security and control as well as priorities of need.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the vocational courses of the industrial training boards, currently available to (a) adult and (b) young offender male prisoners, are also available to the same categories of women prisoners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: At present there is no fully accredited vocational training available for female inmates at Cornton Vale, although skill training is provided in sewing, garment making, cookery and horticulture. Plans are well in hand to introduce properly accredited courses in catering and hairdressing in the near future.

Cornton Vale Prison

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions the electronic link between the central office and each room in Cornton Vale women's prison malfunctioned between 1985 and 1987; and what was the average time taken for repairs to be carried out.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The system malfunctioned on 34 occasions in 1985, 32 in 1986 and 40 in 1987. The average time taken to complete repairs was $1\frac{1}{2}$ hours. When it was thought the work on individual rooms might take more than one hour, the inmate was moved temporarily to another room.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the average number of days of in-service training provided to staff at Cornton Vale prison in 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not immediately available, but I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many body and strip searches in Cornton Vale in 1986 and 1987 were carried out on prisoners who were pregnant.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women prisoners who gave birth while imprisoned in Cornton Vale in 1985, 1986 and 1987, respectively, (a) kept their babies with them following the births and (b) did not keep their babies following birth; and what was the length of sentence served by each such mother following the births.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of inmates who gave birth while in the custody of Cornton Vale was:

Year	Inmates
1985	6
1986	3
1987	4

Two of these inmates were released from custody directly from hospital without returning to Cornton Vale. Of the 11 who did return to Cornton Vale, 10 returned with their babies and one did not.

Of the 11 who returned to Cornton Vale, one has not yet been released and the following is the length of time spent in custody after the birth and before liberation by the remaining 10:

	Inmates
Under 2 months	3
3 months	2
5 months	1
6 months	2
7 months	1
15 months	1

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland until what age babies are permitted to remain with their mothers in Cornton Vale prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton In general children do not remain at Cornton Vale with their mothers beyond the age of 12 months.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (i) female staff and (ii) male staff at Cornton Vale women's prison in 1986 were on sick leave for (a) less than one week, (b) between one week and up to one month, (c) between one month and up to six months and (d) for six months or more.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not immediately available but I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Prisoners (Photographs)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether women prisoners who are mothers are able to keep photographs of their children during the course of their imprisonment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Yes.

Prisoners (Children)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what percentage of mothers imprisoned in 1986 in Cornton Vale prison, whose children were in local authority care, were visited by their children at least once during their imprisonment; what was the average length of time, from initial imprisonment before such a visit took place; and whether visits took place at the usual visiting hours and in the visiting area used by mothers whose children were not in care;

(2) what percentage of mothers imprisoned in Cornton Vale prison in 1986, who had access orders in respect of their children, fulfilled those orders (a) in full and (b) partially during the course of the mother's imprisonment.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is not available in the form requested. Visits by children in local authority care to mothers who are inmates at Cornton Vale are arranged in appropriate cases on an individual basis and in consultation with the relevant local authority social work department. Such visits would normally take place in less formal surroundings and outwith usual visiting hours and are a significant feature of the regime at Cornton Vale.

Detailed information on children in local authority care subject to access orders, or visits by children subject to such access, is not routinely collected in respect of those admitted to Cornton Vale.

Prisoners (Children)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what percentage of women imprisoned in 1986 were mothers whose children were in local authority care before their trial and conviction; and what percentage of these women were single mothers;

(2) what percentage of women prisoners in 1986 were mothers with children under school leaving age; and what percentage of those children, while their mothers were in custody (a) continued living in the same family situation and (b) moved into local authority care;

(3) how many (a) men and (b) women prisoners presently have children requiring to be taken into care.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Details of child care arrangements may be volunteered by the inmate or may be obtained for social work or other purposes in individual cases. Such details, however, are not routinely collected or centrally recorded in respect of those admitted to penal establishments in Scotland.

Prisoners (Outside Work)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) male and (b) female prisoners were employed outside their prisons in 1986.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The percentage of male prisoners employed outside their prisons during 1986 was 1·2 per cent. No female prisoners were so employed.

Prisoners (Disciplinary Action)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the amount of disciplinary action against (a) male and (b) female prisoners; and what proportion of such disciplinary action in each case was for the mutiny or violence category of offence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest available information on numbers and types of disciplinary offences by inmates is given in appendix 5 of the "Prisons in Scotland—Report for 1986" (Cm. 223), copies of which are available in the Library.

In 1986 there were no disciplinary findings or punishments on inmates for the offence of "mutiny". There is no category of offence of "violence". Figures are given in the "Prisons in Scotland" report for specific offences of assaulting officers or assaults on other inmates, and for the general offence of "offending against good order and discipline" which may include other acts of violence such as fighting.

Children in Care

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) girls and (b) boys, between the ages of 10 and 16 years, held in care have committed no crimes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is estimated that at 31 March 1987 60·5 per cent. of boys and 86·5 per cent. of girls in local authority care were there for reasons not related to the commission of crimes or offences.

Hostel Accommodation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what amount of hostel accommodation is available for (a) men and (b) women offenders; and what facilities for children are available at these establishments.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Offenders' hostels grant-aided by my right hon. and learned Friend under section 79 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 1980 presently offer a total of 80 places, 17 of them for women; they do not contain accommodation for children. Information is not held centrally about other residential accommodation catering for offenders which may be provided by local authorities or voluntary bodies.

Prisoners (Meat Allowance)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will consider increasing the current meat allowance for prisoners in Cornton Vale prison; and if he will state the current allowance for prisoners in other prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The current allowance of meat for prisoners is the same at Cornton Vale as in other prisons in Great Britain. It is based on properly balanced dietary scales for inmates as a whole. I see no reason to change it.

Deportation

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the light of violence against persons of ethnic minorities awaiting either deportation to the country of their origin or appealing against deportation in Her Majesty's prisons in Scotland, he will take steps to safeguard them by placing them in establishments outwith Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 14 June 1988]: There is no evidence of widespread or systematic abuse against inmates of ethnic origin. Prison staff are particularly vigilant in detection of abuse against all inmates, including ethnic minorities. All instances of inmate assault, for whatever reason, are fully investigated, including police involvement where sufficient evidence exists to bring charges against the suspected perpetrators.

From 1 January to 1 May 1988 only 13 people were held in detention in Scottish prisons, at any one time, under the provisions of the Immigration Act 1971. Such a small number does not justify the provision of special accommodation. However, I have asked Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons to advise me on what improvements, if any, might be made to the arrangements for accommodating such detainees.

Cancers

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the latest figures for the incidence of all types of cancers, including leukaemia, for all age groups, broken down to the smallest geographical areas available; and if he will also give the comparable figures for similar periods over the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 9 June 1988]: This information could not be provided except at disproportionate expense.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the incidence of cancers in babies in Scotland; how this compares with previous years, broken down by area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 9 June 1988]: The tables set out the information requested, by health board, for registered cases of cancer in children aged less than one year at date of registration over the period 1977 to 1986.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what monitoring systems he has initiated, in pursuance of his commitment to providing equality of opportunity for all employees in, and potential recruits to, the Ministry of Defence to comply with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively; and what such exercises have revealed concerning the employment of people from ethnic minorities and of women respectively.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence, in common with other Government Departments, has been carrying out a voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of all non-industrial and industrial staff. The survey of non-industrial staff is being conducted in six phases. To date, three phases have been completed, and of the respondents 1·9 per cent. are from the ethnic minorities. The survey of industrial staff commenced this month and the results are not likely to be available for some time. The ethnic monitoring of recruitment commenced in 1987 and as yet no results are available.

As regards women, there are no specific monitoring exercises currently taking place but records are kept which show the proportion of males and females in each grade. Consideration is being given to ways in which the progress of women and ethnic staff can be effectively monitored.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has established an equal opportunities unit; and whether his equal opportunities efforts are co-ordinated by an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes.

Harrier

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with the integrity of Royal Air Force Harrier wing structures; and what investigations are currently being made into defects in these structures.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am fully satisfied that the integrity of the Harrier wing is being maintained through a planned programme of inspection and repair.

Tornado

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the Tornado F3 aircraft currently in store at Royal Air Force St. Athan will be held there awaiting modification and upgrading.

Mr. Sainsbury: All the F3 aircraft currently in storage at RAF St. Anthan will receive modifications to bring their capability and maintainability to a level comparable with the latest production aircraft.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the delivery rate for Tornado F3 aircraft was first agreed with British Aerospace; and what changes in that agreed rate have occured since that date.

Mr. Sainsbury: The delivery rate for the Tornado programme was first agreed with Panavia, the Tornado prime contractor, in 1974. In 1982, following full consultation with Germany and Italy, it was agreed that the peak annual delivery rate for the Tornado should be adjusted to 44 for the United Kingdom. Although there have been some changes since then in the balance of deliveries between Tornado variants to accommodate export sales requirements, there has been no change to the agreed peak delivery rate.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the estimated cost of upgrading the 18 RAF Tornado F2s to F2A standard.

Mr. Sainsbury: The estimated cost of upgrading 18 RAF Tornados F2 to F2A standard is about £20 million.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration has been given to the sale of the RAF Tornado F2 and F3 aircraft, currently in store at RAF St. Athan, to Italy.

Mr. Sainsbury: None.

Departmental Staff (South-east England)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to reduce the proportion of the total manpower of his Department that is based in the south-east of England from its present level.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is established policy in the Department that every effort should be made to relocate work from London and the south-east to the regions whenever it proves operationally and economically viable. Whenever potential opportunities for relocation arise they are carefully considered.

Gruinard Island

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the membership of the independent advisory group that endorsed the conclusion that Gruinard island was safe for disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Independent Advisory Group (IAG) on Gruinard Island was appointed in 1985 under the chairmanship of Professor W. D. P. Stewart, BSc, PhD, DSc, FIBiol, FRSE, FRS, head of microbiological sciences at Dundee university. Its other members were:

J. P. Duguid, CBE, BSc, MD, FRCPath.,
Emeritus Professor of Bacteriology,
University of Dundee.

A. J. Stevens, MA, BVSc, MRCVS, Dip.Bact.,
Formerly Director, Central Veterinary Laboratories,
M.A.F.F, Weybridge, Surrey.

J. A. Strong, CBE, MD, FRCP, FRCPE, FRSE,
Emeritus Professor of Medicine, University of Edinburgh.
Past President, Royal College of Physicians of Edinburgh.

T. S. West, CBE, BSc, PhD, DSc, CChem., FRSC, FRSE, Formerly Director, Macaulay Institute for Soil Research, Aberdeen.
Honorary Professor of Chemistry and Soil Sciences, University of Aberdeen.

J. G. White, MSc, PhD, CBiol., MIBiol.,
Adviser to the Director on Soil Partial Sterilants,
AFRC Institute of Horticultural Research,
Wellesbourne, Warwick.

J. A. N. Emslie, MB, ChB, MD, Dip.Bact.,
Consultant Epidemiologist,
Ruchill Hospital, Glasgow.
(Observer on behalf of the Scottish Home and Health Department).

A. J. Alexander, BSc,
Department of Biological Sciences,
University of Dundee.
Secretary.

The IAG reviewed and endorsed the plans prepared by my Department's chemical defence establishment (CDE) for decontaminating Gruinard island; provided consultancy advice to the CDE in the selection of a contractor to carry out the decontamination work; and monitored the subsequent tests carried out by both the CDE and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food central veterinary laboratory to establish the success of the treatment. The IAG's report, which was completed earlier this year and a copy of which will be placed in due course in the Library of the House, concluded that "the chances of persons or animals contracting anthrax on Gruinard island are so remote that the island can be returned to civil use".

As provided in the terms of transfer to the Ministry of Defence, we are proposing to return Gruinard island to its previous owners.

Modular Stand-off Weapon

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the consequences for British participation in this and similar collaborative projects of the announced withdrawal by France from the modular stand-off weapon project.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom will be expected to make a larger percentage contribution to the cost of project definition. There are no consequences for other collaborative projects.

Radiological Hazards

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what definition of radiological hazard is used by his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: MOD recognises that some ionising radiations are a potential hazard to health. Procedures adopted for limiting the exposure of workers and members of the public are in accord with the philosophy of the International Commission on Radiological Protection and are governed by the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 and the Radioactive Substances Act 1960.

Super VC10

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many super VC10 aircraft have been purchased from British Airways; what was the cost of the purchase; how many are now in service as tanker aircraft; how much has been spent on converting super VC10s to tankers; and what is the intended fate of the remaining aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: In March 1981, at a cost of £3·75 million, 14 Super VC10s were bought from British Airways as spares to support the rest of the VC10 fleet: some additional spare parts were included in the package. Six aircraft remain, five of which are earmarked for conversion to tankers. The rest were used as sources of spare parts.

Out-of area Operations

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail all the steps taken since 1982 to improve the effectiveness of the armed forces in mounting out-of-area operations, with particular reference to those aspects where deficiencies or gaps in capability led Her Majesty's Government to seek assistance from the United States Administration during the Falklands war; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The enhancements to our out-of-area capability since 1982 are detailed in the annual "Statement on the Defence Estimates". Some particular improvements introduced as a result of experience in the Falklands conflict were indicated in Cmnd. 8758 ("The Falklands Campaign: The Lessons").

Major enhancements since 1982 include the creation of a joint force headquarters which would be activated in response to a crisis outside the NATO area; the fitting of point defence systems in Royal Navy ships and the provision of an organic airborne early warning capability for the fleet; significant enhancements to 5 Infantry Brigade (re-named 5 Airborne Brigade); and a substantial strengthening of the RAF's long-range transport capability. Of these, some of the point defence systems were acquired from the United States.

Nuclear Reactor Plants

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to obtain for his Departmental library a copy of the study for the United States Navy Department, released in May 1984, entitled "Environmental Impact Statement on the Disposal of Decommissioned, De-fuelled Naval Submarine Reactor Plants".

Mr. Sainsbury: Copies of this document have been available in the Ministry of Defence since it was published.

Ships (Radioactive Releases)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the level of monitoring undertaken by his Department on radioactive releases from nuclear-powered and nuclear-capable ships in (a) Royal Navy dockyards and (b) United Kingdom territorial waters.

Mr. Sainsbury: Marine monitoring for radioactivity around Royal Navy dockyards and in United Kingdom territorial waters is undertaken both by MOD and by MAFF, whose programme provides an independent check. Both MOD and MAFF publish the results of these surveys. The results indicate that the levels of radioactivity around the naval establishments in the United Kingdom remain very low and of no significance in radiological terms, thus confirming the effectiveness of our radiation control procedures.

Nuclear-powered Submarines

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implications of the report, "Environmental Monitoring and Disposal of Radioactive Wastes from United States Naval Nuclear-Powered Ships and their Support Facilities, 1987," by J. J. Mageno, J. M. Steele and L. F. Poletti, for the United States Navy Department naval nuclear propulsion unit, report NT-88-1, published February 1988, for the long-term management of Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: The report concludes that United States navy procedures to control the release of radioactivity are effective in protecting the environment and the health and safety of the general public. It therefore has no bearing on the long-term management of Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines. However, the Royal Navy's maintenance, operation and safety standards are no less exacting and no less effective in protecting the environment. As a consequence, there has never been an incident involving such submarines which has posed any radiological hazard to service men, base personnel, or members of the public.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the expenditure to date, and what is the expected expenditure to be incurred over the next 50 years, towards the decommissioning of nuclear-powered submarines of the Royal Navy.

Mr. Sainsbury: Much of the work to date on the disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines has been undertaken as part of more wide-ranging planning for the defuelling, de-equipping and refitting of nuclear submarines. The expenditure on the disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines over the next 50 years will depend on the method of disposal ultimately chosen.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what studies have been conducted by his Department on the radiological implications of decommissioning nuclear-propelled submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: Studies of the preparation of nuclear submarines for disposal, including the radiological impact on the work force, have been completed. A study of the radiological impact on the environment of the disposal of decommissioned nuclear submarines is currently under way.

Thompson Sub-machine Guns

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy as to the use of American Thompson sub-machine guns by the Army in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 13 June 1988]: The Thompson sub-machine gun was withdrawn from Army service over 30 years ago.

NORTHERN IRELAND

YTP Scheme

Mr. McCusker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much finance has been made available each year to each of the area education boards in Northern Ireland for the implementation of the YTP scheme; and how much of that money has been allocated by each board to the particular provision for young people with special educational needs.

Dr. Mawhinney: The financial allocations made available to the education and library boards from the 1982-83 financial year for this purpose are:

EC (Free Food)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which organisations are assisting with the distribution of European Community free foods; whether the European Community free food scheme is being operated within all district council areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Thirteen organisations have been designated to participate in the distribution of food in Northern Ireland under the European Community free food scheme. A list of designated organisations in the United Kingdom has been placed in the Library.

Given the voluntary nature of the scheme it is not possible to ensure that all parts of Northern Ireland are covered. However, although most of the designated organisations in Northern Ireland will be distributing the food in their immediate locality, two have indicated that they intend to operate more widely in the Province.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture and Food Research Council

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what have been the cuts in scientific staff engaged by Government-funded Agriculture and Food Research Council research establishments since 1984; and whether further redundancies are contemplated detailing numbers and establishments.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

Since April 1984 the number of permanent scientific staff posts in the AFRC has been reduced by 1,081.

Further losses may be required as a consequence of reductions in research and development expenditure by the Agricultural Departments. It is not yet possible to quantify these losses or to say where they might fall.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the location and staff numbers in Agriculture and Food Research Council establishments and an outline of the work undertaken at each.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The current staff complements of the eight institutes of the AFRC at 1 April 1988 are as follows:

	Number
Institute of Arable Crops Research	748
Institute for Animal Health	584
Institute of Animal Physiology and Genetics Research	499
Institute of Engineering Research	329
Institute of Food Research	730
Institute of Grassland and Animal Production Research	678
Institute of Horticultural Research	618
Institute of Plant Science Research	401
Total	4,587

Staffing figures for individual sites are not available.

Details of the locations of the sites and of the research work undertaken at the institutes are set out in the AFRC's corporate plan 1988-93 and annual report 1986-87. Copies of both publications are available in the Library.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will name the Government-funded research establishments formerly funded by the Agriculture and Food Research Council that have been transferred to the private sector.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

Part of the council's plant breeding institute has been transferred to the private sector.

Research and Development and Advisory Services

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department intends to reduce its support for research and development and advisory services; and if he will identify the economies likely to be made.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In his Autumn Statement last year my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced reductions of £5 million and £10 million for 1989-90 and 1990-91 in planned public expenditure on agriculture, fisheries and food research and development. These reductions reflected the Government's view that industry should contribute more to the funding of research from which it benefits. The report on the recent internal examination of agriculture departments' R and D expenditure is currently under consideration and no decisions have yet been reached.

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reason he set up an inquiry into his Department's support for research and development and advisory services; when it intends to report; and whether it will be published.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department's examination of its research and development programme took place against the objectives outlined in the July 1987 White Paper on civil research and development (Cm. 185) and the Government's general view that industry should fund more of the work from which it benefits. It therefore sought to identify those areas of research which are closest to the market—that is to say, which have the most direct commercial potential. It did not cover advisory work as such, except in respect of technology transfer services. The review was an internal exercise and it would not be appropriate to publish the report, which is currently under consideration. A separate internal review of the first year's experience of ADAS charging is also being undertaken, as explained in the reply to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr. Clark) on 26 May 1988 at column 261.

Dry Sow and Tether Stalls

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportion of pig farmers in England and Wales are estimated still to employ dry sow stalls and tether stalls; how this proportion compares with 10 years ago; and what action he proposes to ensure the phasing-out of such stalls.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is estimated that approximately half the pig farmers in England and Wales still use dry sow stalls or tether stalls. No accurate information is available on the position 10 years ago, but it is believed that the proportion of farmers using such systems has declined. The Farm Animal Welfare Council has recently completed a review of pig production systems, which makes a number of recommendations to ensure that future trends in housing the dry sow are away from the use of stalls and tethers. We are currently consulting interested parties on that report and no decision will be taken until their comments have been fully considered.

Home Brewery (Takeover)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he is taking in response to the representations made to him by the National Licensed Victuallers Association concerning the takeover of Home Brewery by Scottish and Newcastle and the decision of the latter to end current agreements with tenants.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This is a commercial matter in which it would not be appropriate for me to intervene, but, having regard to the Brewers' Society code of practice on tenants' security, I have drawn the attention of the society to the concerns of the National Licensed Victuallers' Association.

Domestic Waste Imports

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on the import of domestic waste from New York to Warrington; what are the risks of the generation of animal or plant diseases from this waste; and if he will receive a delegation from Cheshire county council on this matter.

Mr. Gummer: My Department has received a number of representations on this matter and is assessing whether such imports would endanger animal or plant health. Overall responsibility for imports of domestic waste rests with the Department of the Environment and it would therefore be for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to receive a delegation from Cheshire county council. I understand that he will be happy to do so.

Industrial Dredging

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has conducted as to the effects of industrial dredging on fish life and breeding grounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Applications to dredge are carefully considered by Ministry scientists in order to ensure that extraction does not seriously damage fishery resources including breeding grounds.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has held with his European Economic Community colleagues as to the effects of industrial dredging upon fish stocks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: None. The primary international forum for consideration of the effects on fisheries of marine sand and gravel extraction is the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea, in whose discussions Ministry scientists participate with representatives of other EC countries.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has conducted as to the effects of industrial dredging on the seabed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr.Gummer: In considering applications to dredge, the Ministry assesses the nature, depth and extent of deposits, if necessary by conducting surveys. Controls can then be applied to ensure that the nature of the sediment is not changed by dredging, thus allowing recolonisation once dredging operations have ceased.

Public House Licensees

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he is proposing to make to the representations from the National Licensed Victuallers Association urging greater security for tenant licensees in view of the refusal on the part of some landlords to abide by the Brewers' Society code of practice.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) on 14 June.

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the National Licensed Victuallers Association regarding Grand Metropolitan's proposals to introduce a 20-year lease policy for licensees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The National Licensed Victuallers Association has expressed concern that the proposed 20-year leases appear not to be covered by the provisions of the Brewers' Society code of practice on tenant security. The matter is being pursued with the Brewers' Society.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the Irish Government about the effect of illegal drift netting on United Kingdom salmon stocks, following the publication of the report of the Irish Government's salmon review group which was presented to the Minister for the Marine in November 1987.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 16 June 1988]: I have seen with interest the report of the Irish Government's salmon review group. No doubt the Irish Government are considering their response to the various recommendations contained in the report and it is, of course, entirely a matter for that Government to regulate salmon fishing in their waters. United Kingdom Fisheries Departments do monitor the effects of the Irish salmon fishery and there is an exchange of scientific information. I shall raise the issues considered in the report with the Irish Minister when we next meet.

Pesticides

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all publications from his Department on pesticides used in the agricultural industry.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 June 1988]: My Department produces jointly with the Health and Safety Executive "Pesticides 1988" which is published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office. This lists all pesticides approved for sale in the United Kingdom under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. Her Majesty's Stationery Office also publishes the annual reports of the advisory committee on pesticides and reports of the working party on pesticide residues.

The Ministry itself publishes leaflets about the Control of Pesticides Regulations and related information, and draft codes of practice on the use and storage of pesticides. We also publish from time to time circular letters and consultation documents on specific aspects of the developing statutory controls, such as residues, off-label approvals and evaluations of new pesticide active ingredients.

Other information on pesticides is included within the many publications available to farmers and growers from the Agricultural Development and Advisory Service. I have arranged for lists of these, and copies of the specific publications I have mentioned to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of the expenditure of his Department on research into the effects of pesticides on meat products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 June 1988]: Pesticides are approved for use only when it has been established that such use will not lead to harmful residues in food, including animal products. The working party on pesticide residues monitors for residues in animal products as part of its ongoing surveillance programme. In addition, my Department is undertaking research relating specifically to residues in beef, milk and sheepmeat at a cost of £58,000 per annum. Other work costing £279,000 per annum and relating to crops which may be used in animal feedstuffs also has some relevance.

Blue-marked Sheep

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 13 June to the hon. Member for South Shields, if he will publish in the Official Report a breakdown of the age and sex of the 9,357 sheep marked blue and released for further fattening.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 June 1988]: This information is not available.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action is being taken to eliminate the risk that bovine spongiform encephalopathy may be contracted from the blood and bone meal in compound feed.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 June 1988]: Legislation comes into force on 18 July which will suspend the use in feed rations for ruminants of any animal protein, including blood and bone meal, which is derived from ruminants.

Potatoes

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement outlining the arrangements for protecting potato growing in the United Kingdom, giving the amount of potatoes withdrawn from the market over the past 12 months and the cost of such withdrawals.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 June 1988]: In Great Britain potato market support involves control by the Potato Marketing Board (PMB) of the area planted and intervention by the board to remove potatoes from the market in times of surplus. The Government set a target area each season to be planted by producers registered with the PMB and the board must ensure as far as possible that that area is planted. Intervention is triggered when market prices are below the support prices set by the Government. The Government share the cost of market support with the PMB up to 500,000 tonnes each season on the following basis:

Size of surplus (000 tonnes)	0-200	201-300	301-500
Board's share (percentage of tonnage)	100	50	0
Government's share (percentage of tonnage)	0	50	100

Over the past 12 months the board has removed just over 150,000 tonnes of potatoes from the market. The cost is estimated to be about £6 million, which will be met entirely by the board from its levies on registered potato producers.

Separate market support arrangements exist in Northern Ireland, involving intervention, financed by the Government, if average market prices for the season are likely to be below a specified target price. No potatoes have been withdrawn from the market in the last 12 months.

Sugar

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current international price of sugar; and what subsidy is offered for the export of surplus sugar, expressed in pounds per tonne.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 June 1988]: On 8 June 1988 the London daily price for white sugar (which is representative of world prices) was £146·9 per tonne. On the same day the EC sugar management committee approved a maximum export refund for Community sugar of 424·9 ecu per tonne which, if the sugar was exported from the United Kingdom, would be equivalent to £267·4 net of the current MCA.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the terms of reference, membership and method of working of the departmental committee on the future funding of housing co-operatives.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle).

Water Authorities

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the name, age and occupation of each member of each water authority in England.

Mr. Moynihan: The details are as follows:

District Councils (Agency Arrangements)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review agency arrangements between shire counties and their districts in order that districts may give their own priorities to matters including lighting, footpath maintenance, car parking and traffic management.

Mr. Chope: The Department of Transport expects local authorities to consider how to ensure that agency arrangements for highways between counties and districts are put on a more systematic and businesslike footing, in the light of last year's Audit Commission report. The Government have no other plans for a review.

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider transferring powers currently exercised only as agents from shire counties to their districts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government have no plans for major changes in the responsibilities of county and district councils. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport is, however, considering the proposal in the recent Audit Commission report on improving the condition of local authority roads that the responsibility for street cleansing, grass-cutting and other horticultural work should be transferred to district councils.

Property Searches

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any recent representations concerning the time taken by London boroughs to process property search applications.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have received a number of representations expressing concern about the length of time taken by some local authorities to respond to search inquiries. The Government share this concern. The problem and possible solutions are currently being examined by the conveyancing standing committee of the Law Commission whose recommendations we will study carefully.

Countryside Commission

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what additional funds he intends to allocate to the Countryside Commission in 1989-90 to ensure the effective implementation of its "Enjoying the Countryside" initiative; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government's expenditure plans for 1989-90 make provision for an allocation of £19·535 million to support the Countryside Commission's programme, which includes the enjoying the countryside initiative. Any changes to these plans will be announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his Autumn Statement.

Homelessness

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the present level of homelessness in (a) England and (b) Wales; and what was the corresponding figure for 1979.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, East (Mr. Brown) on 10 June at column 737. For information about Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

HOTCHA

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average value of discounts provided under the HOTCHA scheme in each region of England during the latest six-monthly period for which figures exist.

Mrs. Roe: The average discount provided under the HOTCHA scheme in each Housing Corporation region in England during the period October 1987 to March 1988 is as follows:

London and Home Counties North	17,209
London and Home Counties South	17,440
West	13,043
East Midlands	10,000
West Midlands	9,231
North-East	8,823
North-West	10,000
Merseyside	8,125

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants have bought houses under the HOTCHA scheme in each six-monthly period since the scheme was introduced.

Mrs. Roe: The information requested is as follows:

		tenants
1984-85	September to March	159
1985-86	April to September	1,280
	October to March	1,292
1986-87	April to September	794
	October to March	521
1987-88	April to September	931
	October to March	460

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring takes place of the radioactive nitrogen oxide gases released from the B 268 medium active evaporation and uranium finishing plant at British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., Sellafield.

Mr. Moynihan: British Nuclear Fuels plc is required to monitor radioactive gaseous discharges from the Sellafield site as a condition of the certificate of authorisation issued by my Department and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. The radioactive content of the nitrogen oxide gases discharged from B 268 is monitored for alpha and beta, plutonium alpha, americium and curium radioactivity.

American Domestic Waste (Warrington)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the import of American domestic waste to Warrington; how many lorries daily will be required to transport this waste from Liverpool to Warrington; what type of lorry will be used; what will be included in the domestic waste; whether any risk to human life will arise; if he will receive a delegation from Cheshire county council on this matter; and if he will ban the importation of this waste.

Mr. Moynihan: We have received a number of representations about these proposals which I understand to be the subject of negotiation between the interested parties. The matter is, in the first instance, for Cheshire county council to determine, as operator of the site concerned and as planning and waste disposal authority. I have agreed to meet members of the council to discuss the matter.

Tap Water (Greater Liverpool)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the level of aluminium in tap water in the Greater Liverpool area.

Mr. Moynihan: All drinking water supplies in the Greater Liverpool area comply with the standard for aluminium set by the EC drinking water directive.

Toxic Waste

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the importing of toxic waste for disposal in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: All special waste imported into the United Kingdom is subject to the same controls as special waste generated in this country. The provision of disposal services for imports of special wastes is a legitimate business provided it is carried out with proper environmental safeguards, does not involve risks to public health and does not jeopardise the availability of suitable facilities for United Kingdom waste. Within this framework this service can benefit the environment where suitable facilities are not available in the country of origin.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to which countries exporting toxic waste to Britain do so because such disposal would be illegal in their countries.

Mr. Moynihan: To the best of our knowledg no waste imported into the United Kingdom would be illegal to be disposed of in its country of origin.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that all mixed consignments of toxic waste imported for disposal in the United Kingdom contain chemicals that are compatible.

Mr. Moynihan: The European agreement concerning the international carriage of dangerous goods by road contains stringent requirements that incompatible chemicals including waste chemicals should not be carried together. When a consignment of waste reaches the United Kingdom its deposit, storage and handling will be subject to licensing by the waste disposal authorities, which should impose conditions to ensure the waste is handled safely and that incompatible chemicals are kept separately.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding waste transfer stations being used to obscure the nature and origin of toxic waste prior to its disposal.

Mr. Moynihan: I have received no such representations.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take urgent steps to ensure that all major landfill sites disposing of toxic waste have analysis facilities on site.

Mr. Moynihan: The licensing of waste disposal facilities is a matter for waste disposal authorities. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution has advised them that all major landfill sites licensed for special wastes should have laboratory facilities on site and that this should be a requirement of the licence.

Water Pollution (Aluminium)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that immediate measures are taken to eliminate pollution of water by aluminium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Most water supplies already comply with the aluminium standard set in the EC drinking water directive. Action is being taken by water undertakers to ensure that all remaining supplies comply.

Current concentrations in these supplies are not considered to be a health risk. The directive standard was set in relation to the appearance of water; it was not set on health grounds.

Research into possible health risks from aluminium in water is kept under review by the Government's medical advisers, who are in contact with researchers, including the University of Southampton which is carrying out a study on aluminium in drinking water and Alzheimer's disease. When the full report on this study is available, probably later this year, it will be assessed by medical experts. In the meantime, medical advisers consider that too much weight should not be placed on the results on any single study.

Aluminium salts are widely used in the United Kingdom and many other countries as coagulants in water treatment to remove contamination by undesirable suspended matter. Aluminium can also occur naturally in some raw waters.

There are a number of alternative theories about the cause of Alzheimer's disease, of which a possible link with aluminium is only one. Over 90 per cent. of the daily intake of aluminium comes from food even when the water contains the maximum concentration allowed by the EC drinking water directive. Other evidence and scientific considerations also weigh against the suggestion that aluminium derived from drinking water is likely to be a cause of Alzheimer's disease.

Unfurnished Dwellings (Rents)

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish for (a) England, (b)

Yorkshire and Humberside and (c) Barnsley district, the average level of local authority rents and fair rents registered for unfurnished dwellings for each year since 1979, indicating the percentage in each year on an annual and cumulative basis; and what was the change in the retail price index over the same period.

Mrs. Roe: The latest available figures on local authority rents, the average rents registered by rent officers and the movements in the retail prices index up to 1987 are as follows:

(A) Average weekly unrebated rents at April for local authority dwellings

	England			Yorkshire and Humberside			Barnsley

[1] Service charges, if any, are included.
[2] Registered rents are for private regulated tenancies only.
[3] England and Wales.
[4] Annual average (second half-year not available).

The mix of properties for which rents are registered varies from year to year for a number of reasons; for example, extension of decontrol in 1981; the reduction from three to two years in the minimum period for re-registration which led to re-registrations in 1983 of rents previously registered in 1980 and 1981. Therefore, comparisons of averages for consecutive years do not properly reflect rent movements. Better estimates of rent movements are derived from previous and new registered rents for tenancies where there has been no material change in terms or in the physical condition. For properties with rents fixed in the second halves of 1979, 1982, 1984 and 1986, the estimated increases are:

	England		Yorkshire and Humberside
	Percentage increase		Percentage increase
	in period	annualised	in period	annualised
1979-82	47	14	58	16
1982-84	18	9	18	9
1984-86	17	8	18	9

The estimated annualised increase for properties with rents fixed in the second half of 1987 was 9 per cent. for both England, Yorkshire and Humberside. Information provided by rent officers is not available below county level outside London.

Cash Limits

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Wells on 24 March, Official Report, column 192, whether he has yet received final returns of outturn on the DOE/LA1 cash limit for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: No, but sufficient returns have now been received to confirm that the DOE/LA1 cash limit for 1987-88 will have been underspent by at least £141·7 million; that is, 5 per cent. of the original cash limit. The cash limit for 1988-89 will, under the end-year flexibility arrangements, be increased by that amount.

The capital expenditure returns submitted by local authorities for 1988-89 do not suggest that the revised cash limit will be overspent. I and my colleagues responsible for services within the DOE/LA1 cash block will therefore now be making further capital allocations of £41·7 million for 1988-89. These are additional to the £100 million announced in my reply of 24 March.

The sum available for my Department's services from the £41·7 million is £24·1 million. I propose to direct £3 million of this to areas of poor quality private sector housing. The remaining £21·1 million will be for further direct help to the homeless. This will be the third tranche of additional resources in the last seven months, totalling over £74 million, and targeted to those local authorities with particular homelessness pressures. As before, we will expect authorities to use these extra resources to bring empty property back into use to house their homeless people, relieving the burdens of temporary accommodation.

Aluminium

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the levels of aluminium in the water supply provided by the North West water authority, and current EEC permitted levels of aluminium in water supplies.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: All drinking water supplies provided by the North West water authority comply with the standard for aluminium set by the EC drinking water directive except for the following: parts of Sefton MB, Stockport MB, Bolton MB, Tameside MB, Oldham MB, Carlisle district, Eden district, Lancaster borough, Ribble Valley district.

I also refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham).

Illegal Dumping (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received regarding the illegal dumping of building waste in London.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The Department has received many representations about fly-tipping in London, including dumping of building waste, both from hon. Members and from the general public. We recognise this as a serious problem and have consulted on legislative proposals which assist its solution. We expect to announce the conclusions of the consultation shortly.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Social Services what is his latest estimate of how many people have lost entitlements to receive housing benefit as a result of recent changes to the social security system.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 7 June 1988 at column 561.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Social Services if he will make it his policy, in responding to hon. Members' representations on behalf of constituents affected by changes in the calculation of entitlement to housing benefit, to comment on the individual concerns of each constituent rather than issuing a duplicate reply.

Mr. Portillo: The appropriate reply to a letter from hon. Members is always judged according to the letter in question. When we receive a large volume of correspondence about a single subject, it is often appropriate to use a comprehensive standard reply. This ensures that hon. Members receive a consistent explanation of Government policy and that replies are sent out as quickly as possible. If Ministers were to ask for a detailed report on the individual circumstances in every case affected by a change of policy, and to reply accordingly, this would result in inordinate expense and delay.

Local authorities are best placed to explain the detail of the calculations they have made in individual housing benefit cases.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the cost of restoring the housing benefit to all those who will not gain from the transitional arrangements.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The cost would be very substantial, but would largely depend on the manner in which losses were restored and the account that was taken of increases in other benefits.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if local authorities are able to submit details of claimants' housing benefit losses of more than £2·50 direct to his Department's central unit responsible for making transitional payments.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 May 1988]: An applicant for transitional payments will have to give his consent to the transfer if any information between his local authority and the transitional payments unit. This has been taken into account in the discussions with the local authorities associations on the detailed arrangements for handling applications for transitional payments and obtaining the necessary information.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to provide a substantive reply to the question from the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford, which received a holding answer on 20 May, concerning claims in respect of housing benefit losses of more than £2·50; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I replied to the hon. Member today.

Travel Costs

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what percentage of the health budget accounts for travel costs in the following regional health authorities (a) Northern, (b) North East Thames, and (c) Merseyside in the latest year for which figures are available.

(2) what were the costs both in absolute terms and as a percentage spent on transporting of patients to and from medical establishments in the latest year for which figures are available in the following regional health authorities (a) Northern, (b) North East Thames, and (c) Merseyside.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that information precisely as requested is not held centrally. Following is the information available from annual accounts submitted to the Department by the regional and district health authorities comprising the Northern, North-East Thames and Mersey regions for 1986-87 (the latest year available):

(1) Total revenue expenditure on ambulance services

Region	£'000	As a proportion of all revenue expenditure per cent.
Northern	20,629	3·10
North East Thames	21,820	2·24
Mersey	13,390	2·47

(2) Total revenue expenditure on non-ambulance transport[1]

Region	£'000	As a proportion of all revenue expenditure per cent.
Northern	2,510	0·38
North East Thames	4,263	0·44
Mersey	2,317	0·43

[1] Includes costs for the transportation of staff, stores, materials, etc. and patients. (These components are not separately identifiable).

Note: The figures at (1) and (2) include the travelling and subsistence costs of the staff employed in providing ambulance and non-ambulance transport services. Other staff travelling and subsistence costs are excluded.

Adult Training (Benefits)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if people participating in the adult training scheme will continue to receive any transitional protection they are eligible for on their social security benefits;

(2) if participants finishing their adult training programme and returning to income support will continue to be eligible for transitional protection on their social security benefits.

Mr. Portillo: Claimants participating in the adult training programme will continue to receive transitional protection while participating in the programme. Protection will continue after the programme ends provided they continue to be eligible for income support.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a table showing the take-up of family income supplement in 1985, broken down into (a) the total likely to be entitled to benefit, (b) the proportion receiving benefit, (c) the numbers not receiving benefit, (d) the estimated amount of benefit unclaimed and (e) the average weekly amount unclaimed;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the take-up of supplementary benefit in 1985, broken down into (a) the total likely to be entitled to benefit, (b) the proportion receiving benefit, (c) the numbers not receiving benefit, (d) the estimated amount of benefit unclaimed and (e) the average weekly amount unclaimed, broken down into pensioners, sick and disabled, unemployed, families with children and one parent families.

Mr. Portillo: The latest take-up estimates for supplementary benefit are for 1983 and those for family income supplement are for 1983-84. A convenient summary is shown on pages 272 and 273 of the 1988 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 288). More detailed technical reports are available in the Library.

Notifiable Diseases

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if any action is taken in respect of general practitioners who fail to notify all cases of notifiable diseases.

Mrs. Currie: We are aware that the level of notification of communicable disease is not satisfactory although notification is a legal responsibility of the diagnosing clinician. However, one of the recommendations of the recently commissioned report "Public Health in England" is that the Department circulates to all doctors a brief explanatory guide to the notification procedure and its purpose. That guide is being prepared and will be circulated in the next few months. I hope it will encourage a substantial improvement.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will set out in tabular form the distribution of all supplementary benefit recipients in respect to their relationship to 100 per cent. entitlement along the lines of paragraph 7 of chapter 2 of the "Low Income Statistics" report of a technical review.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is set out in the table:

Distribution of persons in income units receiving supplementary benefit & housing benefit supplement 1983

Relative net resources	Per cent. of persons
Less than 100	2·7
100 but less than 105	32·7
105 but less than 110	22·6
110 but less than 120	19·6
120 but less than 140	14·7
Over 140	8
Total	100

Notes:

1. "Persons" in an income unit are defined as a single person or married couple with their dependent children (if any)
2. "Relative Net Resources" are defined in terms of the supplementary benefit scale rate applied to each income unit. The scale rate is defined as 100. Since two sets of scale rates are in use, for pensioners and others, two individuals shown as having income at the same scale level may have significantly different incomes.
3. Percentages do not total to 100 due to rounding.
4. Source: 1983 Supplementary Benefit Annual Statistical Inquiry.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the total number of recipients and dependants on supplementary benefit who were on benefit for one year or more, broken down into the following categories: (a) two-parent families with children, (b) one-parent families with children, (c) pensioners and (d) others, for each year from 1978 to the latest available date.

Mr. Portillo: The information is as follows:

Dental Services

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people aged up to 16 years have used dental services paid in full or in part by the National Health Service for each year since 1975;

(2) how many people over the age of 21 years have used dental services paid in full or in part by the National Health Service, for each year since 1975;

(3) how many people between the age of 16 and 21 years have used dental facilities paid in full or in part by the National Health Service, for each year since 1975.

Mrs. Currie: I am sorry that the information sought by the hon. Member is not available in precisely the form requested. Figures for the number of courses of treatment in the general and community dental services, by age of patient, in England from 1975 are set out in the tables. Such information for the hospital dental service is not available. Figures are by calendar year up to 1985; thereafter by financial year for the latest year available.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Sir Bernard Braine: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the numbers of persons in England and Wales known to be suffering from myalgic encephalomyelitis; what is the current state of research into the causes and treatment of the disease; what financial help is given to the ME Association and its work for sufferers; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I recently announced a grant of £5,000 to the Myalgic Encephalomyelitis Association. Research of relevance to ME is being conducted but detailed information about this work and data on the number of sufferers are not held centrally.

Passive Smoking

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the increased risk of lung cancer from passive smoking.

Mrs. Currie: The fourth report of the independent scientific committee on smoking and health, published in March this year, concludes that breathing other people's tobacco smoke gives rise to a 10 to 30 per cent. increase in the risk of lung cancer among non-smokers. This is in line with the findings of the International Agency for Research into Cancer, the United States National Research Council and the United States Surgeon General, all of which conclude that passive smoking increases the risk of lung cancer. Copies of the independent scientific committee's report are in the Library.

Benefits Taper

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received any representations concerning the existence of a 100 per cent. taper, whereby hostel residents pursuing training or employment see a reduction in their benefit £1 for £1 if they earn more than £5 a week.

Mr. Portillo: No.

Foetal Brain Cell Implants

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy on foetal brain cell implants.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given on 7 June at columns 557-58.

Funeral Expenses

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people claiming only housing benefit in

(a) Lewisham, (b) London and (c) Britain have submitted a claim for a grant towards funeral expenses in the last year.

Mr. Portillo: The numbers of people receiving only housing benefit who submitted a claim for a social fund funeral payment from 6 April 1987 to 10 April 1988 are as follows:

	Number
(a) Lewisham[1]	31
(b) London	848
(c) Great Britain	10,402

[1] The Lewisham, Deptford constituency is covered by the Department's local offices at Greenwich Park, Lewisham and Peckham, although their boundaries are not conterminous with those of the constituency.

Departmental Staff (Barnsley)

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 the establishment figure and the actual number of persons in post at (a) Barnsley Department of Health and Social Security office and (b) Barnsley employment office; and what was the total case load count for each year for the same period.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has two local offices in Barnsley—Barnsley East and Barnsley West. The information requested in respect of both these offices is as follows:

	Barnsley West	Barnsley East

[1] Income support.

Information regarding short-term benefits case loads prior to 1983 is not available.

Comparable figures are not available for the full range of contributory benefits.

The 1988 case load figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Direct comparisons between the numbers of staff and the live load are misleading as work loads vary considerably by type and duration of claim and the action that has to be taken. All these factors vary over time as a result of legislative, policy and procedural changes.

The information requested relating to Barnsley employment office is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Children in Care

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons aged 17 years and under were received into care by a local authority in England and Wales under section 7(7) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 in (a) 1985, (b) 1986 and (c) 1987; and how many in each year were from an ethnic minority background.

Mrs. Currie: The number of young persons admitted to care by local authorities in England under section 7(7) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 for the most recent three years for which information is currently available is given in the table. Information for 1987 is not yet available.

Information about the ethnic origin of children and young people in care is not collected centrally.

Information for Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further research he will be undertaking about the possible link between aluminium in drinking water and Alzheimer's disease; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I am aware that it has been suggested that aluminium in drinking water is one of the possible causes of Alzheimer's disease. For information about research on Alzheimer's disease I refer my hon. Friend to the reply by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Education and Science, to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 29 April at column 342.

Domestic Violence (Report)

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to publish the final report which he has commissioned from the Policy Studies Institute on the characteristics of hostels and the people who live in them before making any decision on income support payments for the victims of domestic violence living in women's refuges.

Mr. Portillo: The institute's final report is still awaited. Permission to publish will not be unreasonably withheld.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current level of Government funding for the national campaign against drug abuse; and whether he contemplates any changes in its level or targeting.

Mrs. Currie: We plan to spend £2·5 million in the current financial year on a national campaign about the dangers of drug misuse. The campaign's content and targeting will be determined in the light of evaluation findings relating to 1987-88 campaigns, and of information about the current drug scene.

Compliance Cost Assessment

Mr. Nelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish a list of compliance cost assessments prepared by his Department.

Mr. Portillo: The following compliance cost assessments are available:

Extension to DHSS Manufacturer Registration Scheme
Temperature Control (Food)
Industrial Injuries (Reduced Earnings Allowance)
Maternity Allowance (Statutory Maternity Pay)
Ionising Radiation
Housing Benefit Earnings Inquiries
Family Credit Earnings Inquiries
Alignment of Benefit Pay Periods
National Insurance—Amendment to Regulations on Recording the Details of Earnings
National Insurance "Trust Fund" Exemption

They are available on request from the departmental deregulation unit, Room 002, 151 Great Titchfield street, London SW1.

Written Answers to Questions

Monday 20 June 1988

PRIME MINISTER

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will now set up an inquiry into the policy considerations and decisions which led to the recent operation involving military personnel in Gibraltar and the shooting of three Irish Republican Army personnel.

The Prime Minister: No. The inquest in Gibraltar is the proper occasion for the matter to be examined. We hope it will be held as soon as possible.

Members' Letters

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Prime Minister what is her practice with regard to answering letters from right hon. and hon. Members directly from her Office or referring them to other Departments.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 22 April 1988 at column 583.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister what information she has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in the Cabinet Office who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

The Prime Minister: The names of the schools attended by civil servants at grade 3 level and above in the Cabinet Office are recorded on personal files in only a few cases.

University of Newcastle (News Media Unit)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister why British Nuclear Fuels plc made it a condition of its offer to fund a news media unit at the University of Newcastle that Mr. Bernard Ingham be associated with the project.

The Prime Minister: Mr. Ingham remains my Chief Press Secretary and is not available to take up any post in Newcastle.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Birmingham Pub Bombings

65. Mr. Meale: To ask the Attorney-General what was the basis for the decision by the Director of Public Prosecutions to ask the Commissioner of the City of London police for an inquiry into contacts between the two principal Crown witnesses at the recent appeal in relation to the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin).

68. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Attorney-General what line of inquiry the Director of Public Prosecutions suggested to the City of London police when asking them to inquire into contacts between the two principal Crown witnesses at the recent appeal hearing of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 17 June 1988, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

69. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Attorney-General what action the Director of Public Prosecutions proposes to take following the completion of the investigations by the City of London police into contacts between the two principal Crown witnesses at the appeal of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 15 June 1988, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Court Proceedings (Tape Recording)

67. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received concerning the introduction of the taping of court proceedings in England and Wales to replace shorthand writers.

The Attorney-General: Representations in writing have been received by the Lord Chancellor's Department from 13 sources.

DPP (Meeting)

70. Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions; and what matters were discussed.

72. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions; and what subjects were discussed.

73. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions; and what matters were discussed.

The Attorney-General: I last met the Director of Public Prosecutions on Wednesday 15 June 1988 to discuss matters relating to the Crown Prosecution Service.

King Edward (Remains)

71. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Attorney-General what costs have been incurred to public funds to date in legal proceedings involving the bones of Edward, King of England, Saint and Martyr.

The Attorney-General: Costs expended to date amount to £2,361·99.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Attorney-General what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

The Attorney-General: There is only one such person in my Department. He was educated at a private school.

Crown Prosecution Service (North Report)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General what are the implications for the Crown Prosecution Service of the recommendations in the North report on fatal road accidents.

The Attorney-General: The road traffic law review, chaired by Dr. Peter North, published its report on 12 April this year. The report contains 137 recommendations, several of which propose major restructuring of the current road traffic offences which may be applicable when a fatal accident occurs, including those where drink is involved. The report is currently receiving detailed scrutiny, and whilst I cannot anticipate any future legislation, the Crown Prosecution Service would naturally welcome any move which would assist in bringing to justice on appropriate charges those who commit serious driving offences.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Aid

81. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the average percentage of gross national product given in aid by the members of the European Community that are also members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development assistance committee, excluding the United Kingdom, in 1987 or for the latest available year.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1986, the latest year for which figures have been published, the net official development assistance of these countries represented 0·55 per cent. of their combined GNP.

90. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the estimated expenditure on overseas aid in the current financial year.

95. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of expenditure on overseas development.

Mr. Chris Patten: The overseas aid budget, including aid administration, for the current financial year is £1,337 million.

Kampuchea

82. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of Vietnam's 25 May undertaking to withdraw half its troops from Kampuchea by the end of the year, he will reconsider the provision of development assistance to Kampuchea.

Mr. Chris Patten: We see no reason at the present time to change our position on aid to Cambodia.

Africa

83. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what support Her Majesty's Government are giving to programmes of structural adjustment in Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1987-88 Britain provided an estimated total of over £90 million of quick-spending balance of payments finance in support of structural adjustment programmes in African countries. We have pledged at least £250 million of similar assistance over the next three years in association with the World Bank's special programme of assistance to low-income, debt-distressed countries in sub-Saharan Africa that are following appropriate programmes of economic reform. We are also giving very substantial support to the IMF's enhanced structural adjustment facility. Our contribution to the interest subsidy account will be greater than that of any other country, and will be sufficient to subsidise the interest on lending up to SDR 1 billion—about £750 million.

SADCC and Front-line States

84. Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the value, in 1980 prices, of British bilateral aid to the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference and the front line states in (a) 1980, and (b) 1986.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1980 prices gross bilateral aid to the member states of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference was £133 million in 1980 and £73·5 million in 1986. The 1980 figure is particularly high because of large post-independence expenditure in Zimbabwe. Finance pledged to the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference is recorded as aid to a particular country once expenditure has taken place.

Afghanistan

85. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to increase British and European aid to Afghanistan after the withdrawal of Soviet troops and advisers.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have already pledged £10 million to support the work of multilateral organisations and British voluntary agencies once properly co-ordinated international relief arrangements have been established. If appropriate, additional resources will be made available later.

When the situation in Afghanistan allows, the European Community could also make an important contribution to international aid efforts. Emergency and food aid, channelled through international organisations, will be priorities.

94. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's assistance to Afghan refugees.

Mr. Chris Patten: Following signature of the Geneva agreements in April, I have announced a doubling of our annual programme of support for Afghan refugees to £10 million in the current financial year. These funds will support the work of British voluntary agencies and multilateral organisations such as the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross. This assistance will be conditional on properly co-ordinated international arrangements for the resettlement of Afghan refugees being put in place.

Africa (Locusts)

86. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he is providing to counter the threat of locusts in north and west Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have recently agreed to provide £1·3 million of new bilateral aid for a programme to help combat locust infestations in 16 countries of north and west Africa. This support is in addition to some £1·5 million already provided bilaterally and through the European Community.

Nicaragua

87. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is, for each year since 1970, the amount of bilateral aid to Nicaragua.

Mr. Chris Patten: Between 1970 and 1987 British bilateral aid to Nicaragua amounted to £2·49 million. I shall publish in the Official Report a breakdown by calendar year.

Vietnam

88. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will reconsider his decision not to respond to the Government of Vietnam's request for emergency food aid as a result of the drought in northern Vietnam.

Mr. Chris Patten: No. The European Community has, however, agreed to provide 20,000 tonnes of cereals.

Ethiopia

89. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement on the famine relief effort in Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: The international community has responded promptly and generously to the renewed threat of famine in Ethiopia and estimated food aid requirements for 1988 have been largely met by pledges made. For our part, we have committed over £45 million in famine relief assistance since the beginning of 1987, including the cost of some 95,000 tonnes of bilateral food aid and our share of European Community assistance. The relief effort is, however, being seriously hampered by increased military activity in Eritrea and Tigray. As a result the number of people, particularly in Tigray, who can be reached by current relief operations has been substantially reduced. The situation is further aggravated by the Ethiopian Government's continued refusal to permit full resumption of the relief activities of the voluntary agencies and the ICRC.

Sri Lanka

91. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he plans to provide reconstruction aid for Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: When I visited Sri Lanka this year, I signed an agreement for the provision of £20 million in reconstruction aid to Sri Lanka. A number of projects have already been agreed, and others identified, for expenditure against this aid.

Africa (AIDS)

92. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what special assistance Her Majesty's Government are providing for African countries affected by the spread of AIDS.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have already committed £7·75 million, including £4·5 million this year, to the World Health Organisation's global programme on AIDS which is working with 44 countries in Africa. In addition, we have offered to provide a total of £4·6 million over five years for national AIDS control programmes agreed with the World Health Organisation in Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda and Zambia.

Departmental Expenditure

93. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will express Overseas Development Administration expenditure as a percentage of gross national product (a) in the financial year 1978-79 and (b) in the current financial year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Expenditure under the net aid programme in 1978-79 represented 0·41 per cent. of GNP. The comparable figure for the current financial year will not be available until later next year.

Underdeveloped Countries (Technical Aid)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current provisions for technical aid to underdeveloped countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1987 some £320 million was spent on technical assistance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drink-Driving Convictions

97. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of drink-driving convictions in the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is for findings of guilt at all courts for driving and so on after consuming alcohol or taking drugs. It is published for 1976 to 1986 in table 7 of Home Office statistical bulletin 36/87, "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales 1986", copies of which are in the Library. In 1986, there were about 107,000 such findings of guilt. The figures for 1987 will be published later this year.

Passports

Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average period required to process applications for passports in each passport office in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: The current times for straightforward non-urgent applications are shown in the table. Urgent applications are given priority.

Passport office	Delay (Working days)
London	59
Glasgow	38
Peterborough	35
Newport	22
Liverpool	14
Belfast[1]	4

[1] The Belfast office is by far the smallest and deals only with Northern Ireland residents.

Child Care

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has in relation to the number of social workers, teachers, medical staff, ancillary staff and other members of the public who have been vetted by police before they are employed in jobs where they work with children; and whether his Department keeps information as to the number of people refused employment and the reasons therefore.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police do not vet applicants for posts which involve close contact with children; they supply information which they may have about the criminal background of individuals to prospective employers, who then decide whether or not to employ the individual in the light of all the information they may have about him or her.

The latest figures available on the number of checks undertaken under these arrangements were given in a reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member on 29 April at column 283. A further survey will be undertaken for the year to 31 August 1988 and the results should be available in the autumn.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking the withdrawal of his announcement of 18 May regarding the rise in the cost of concessionary television licences; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Between 19 May and 14 June, 12 members of the public and six hon. Members complained about the concessionary licence fee increase. Replies have explained that the increase is necessary to cover the costs of administering the concessionary scheme and of extending it.

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to meet the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and what he expects to discuss.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has arranged to meet the Commissioner on Wednesday 22 June. He plans to discuss a number of policing issues, including football hooliganism.

Television

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the progress being made by the broadcasting authorities in improving television reception in areas at present experiencing difficulties.

Mr. Renton: The BBC and IBA do their best to assist viewers who experience difficulty in obtaining good television reception. They have undertaken a joint programme to extend UHF television coverage to all unserved areas with a population of at least 500, and smaller communities where practicable. Twenty-six new relay transmitters were installed in 1987 serving some 20,000 people. Some 99·4 per cent. of the population are now able to receive BBC and IBA services.

Immigration Officers (Holyhead)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers are at present employed at the port of Holyhead; and what are the corresponding figures for 1979 and 1984.

Mr. Renton: No immigration officers are at present stationed at the port of Holyhead; none were stationed there in 1979 or in 1984.

Welsh Language Programmes

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the availability of Welsh language television and radio programmes and other programmes made in Wales to viewers outside Wales.

Mr. Renton: I am aware of only one such representation in recent months.

Police Houses (Sales)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to propose any changes in the method of valuation of ex-police houses for the purpose of their sale to serving officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for police authorities to arrange for the valuation of surplus police houses which they propose to offer for sale. They are authorised by the general consents issued by the Secretary of State for the Environment in 1981 to sell such houses to serving police officers on the same terms and at the same rates of discount as those offered by housing authorities to council tenants. It is for individual police authorities to decide whether a discount should be offered and, if so, what the rates of discount should be, subject to the maximum rates of discount set by the general consents.

Metropolitan Police (Racial Equality)

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will hold discussions with representatives of the Metropolitan police concerning the future establishment of appropriate structures to monitor and settle problems of racial equality in the service, the promotion of black officers and appraisal procedures, and training improvements.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since December 1986, the Metropolitan police have been implementing an equal opportunities programme with the help of the Commission for Racial Equality, the Equal Opportunities Commission, and the race relations advisory service of the Department of Employment. Issues of race and sex equality are handled by the equal opportunities unit which has been set up in the force and last year a procedure was introduced to enable officers to seek redress for grievances under the Race Relations Act 1976.

I understand from the Commissioner that recruit selection is undertaken only by those trained in equal opportunities. All probationers, and other serving officers, also receive such training. The force is also developing a computerised system to monitor equality of treatment, and the staff appraisal system has recently been modified taking account of the need to ensure equal opportunities. At present, 7·1 per cent. of the 442 officers from ethnic minority backgrounds hold supervisory ranks.

Given the continuing progress being made by the Metropolitan police in this area, we do not consider that discussions are needed at present.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the national shortage of court clerks and inadequate space and facilities in many courts, he will make a statement about planned additional funding for the magistrates courts.

Mr. John Patten: We are aware of the concern expressed by justices' clerks and others about difficulties in recruiting and retaining court clerks, especially those qualified as solicitor or barrister. I understand that the joint negotiating committee (JNC) which negotiates pay and conditions for magistrates' courts staff is collecting information on recruitmemt and retention, and will take it into account when considering the pay settlement for 1988. We will consider very carefully whatever proposals the JNC puts forward. Capital funds are available for replacing or improving accommodation and are allocated in order of operational need.

Immigration (Grants to Local Authorities)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been spent on section 11 grants under the Local Government Act 1966 in each of the last four years.

Mr. John Patten: The amount of grant paid under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 in respect of each of the last four years was:

	£ million
1984-85	73·6
1985-86	81·2
1986-87	87·8
1987-88	98·8

The figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are estimates subject to adjustment when claims from local authorities are finally settled. The grant represents 75 per cent. of the eligible expenditure incurred by local authorities.

Category C Prisons (Escapes)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of prisoners who have escaped, or attempted to escape, from all category C prisons in the last 20 years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics on escaps are published in annual reports on the work of the prison department, copies of which are available in the Library, and show that the following numbers of prisoners escapd from category C prisons:

Year	Number
1969	9
1970	12
1971	20
1972	45
1973	36
1974	26
1975	44
1976	50
1977	48
1978	44
1979	94
1980	62
1981	76
1982	98
1983	91
1984-85	105
1985-86	98
1986-87	68

The 1984-85 figure is for the 15-month period from 1 January 1984-31 March 1985. Subsequent reports relate to the year from 1 April. Between 1 April 1987 and 31 May 1988, a total of 103 prisoners escaped.

The figures need to be viewed in the context of the substantial increases which have occurred during the period in both the number of category C prisons, and the total average population of such establishments.

As to attempted escapes, the information readily available centrally relates to 1986-88 and shows that, during these years, the following numbers of prisoners were reported as having attempted to escape:

Year	Number
1986	72
1987	93
1988 (to 31 May)	26

Entry Rules

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what rules govern entry into the United Kingdom by (a) citizens of Eire and (b) citizens of Commonwealth countries; and if privileges granted are reciprocal for United Kingdom citizens in Eire.

Mr. Renton: Because the Irish Republic forms part of the common travel area, its citizens are generally free to enter the United Kingdom, whether coming from within or outside that area. Irish citizens, may, however, be subject to deportation, or to exclusion under either the immigration or the prevention of terrorism legislation. Under regulations in place in the Republic of Ireland, complete reciprocity is accorded to British citizens, thus allowing them unrestricted access to the Republic. The entry of Commonwealth citizens to the United Kingdom is controlled by the Immigration Act 1971 and by the immigration rules made under it.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what entry documents are required for (a) citizens of Eire entering the United Kingdom and (b) Commonwealth countries; and if these rights are reciprocal for United Kingdom citizens entering Eire.

Mr. Renton: Under the provisions of the Immigration Act 1971 a person must produce a valid passport or some other document establishing his identity or citizenship if required to do so by the immigration officer examining him. This applies to all nationalities without distinction. Additionally, any person requiring an entry clearance must be in possession of this at the time of entry. Entry clearance requirements however do not apply to citizens of the Irish Republic.

Persons arriving in and departing from the United Kingdom on a local journey within the common travel area, that is to say, the Channel islands, the Isle of Man or the Republic of Ireland, are not generally subject to control under the Immigration Act and would not therefore normally be required to submit to examination by an immigration officer, nor required to produce entry documents under the provisions of that Act. Arrangements for the operation of the common travel area are reciprocal.

Requirements placed on persons entering the Republic of Ireland from outside the common travel area are matters for the Irish Government.

Computer Crime

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the progress being made against computer crime; what steps are being taken to combat it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are concerned about computer crime, but it is a complicated matter and my right hon. Friend is awaiting a report from the Law Commission about it before deciding what, if any, action needs to be taken by Government to deal with it. In the meantime, the subject is receiving close attention from the police. I know, for example, that the Metropolitan police give lectures and talks to companies and have contributed to conferences on the dangers, and security aspects, of computer crime.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure that companies who are the victims of computer crime are co-operating fully with the police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All citizens have a general duty to co-operate with the police in the investigation of offences. We have no information to suggest that companies which have become victims of computer crime are not co-operating fully with the police.

Mortgage Fraud

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated total involved in known mortgage fraud; what steps are being taken to identify those responsible; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Criminal statistics do not distinguish between mortgage and other types of fraud and no information is therefore available on numbers of offences or amounts of money involved. It is the responsibility of chief officers of police to take whatever steps they think appropriate to investigate suspected offences and to identify offenders.

Police (Establishment)

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out for each police authority area in England and Wales the current establishment of police officers and the shortfall where applicable in the actual numbers of police officers in service below that establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information is as follows:

Members' Representations

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Stretford of 31 December 1987 and 14 April 1988 concerning the practice of writing directly to constituents on matters raised by a right hon. or hon. Member.

Mr. Renton: I hope to do so shortly.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Hurd: About one half of officers at grade 3 level and above attended private (including the then direct grant) schools: the remainder either attended state schools or the information is not readily available.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of those held on remand in custody awaiting trial have been held (a) over three months and (b) over six months, at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest available information on the length of time since the initial remand in custody of untried prisoners relates to 30 June 1987 and was given in the reply to a question from the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 27 May at columns 379-80.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Home Tutors (Cheshire)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is yet in a position to make a statement about the pay of home tutors in Cheshire.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand from the Cheshire local education authority that it will be reinstating the rate of pay applicable before 1 October 1987 for those home tutors who had a contract with the authority on that date, for the duration of those contracts. I have written to my hon. Friend on this matter.

Education Support Grants

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the operation of education support grants in Norfolk, in particular those which are specifically geared to the needs of rural areas.

Mrs. Rumbold: The total expenditure that has been approved for support by education support grants in Norfolk in the four years to 1988-89 and the amount of expenditure on which grant has been claimed is given in the table.

The authority has taken part in the pilot project to improve the quality or the range of the curriculum provided in primary schools in rural areas and figures are given in the table. This is the only activity that is specifically geared to the needs of rural areas.

Education support grants: Norfolk

Mathematics in Schools
Science in Primary Education PICKUP
Midday Supervision
IT in NAFE
Education needs of unemployed adults
DP equipment in FE
Misuse of Drugs
GCSE
Education for a multi-ethnic society
Portage.

Rugby League

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the answer of 14 June to the hon. Member for Wakefield, if he will take steps to encourage the greater availability of rugby league as part of the content of physical education courses at teacher training colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: No.

Education Reform

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the additional estimated transport costs faced by local authorities as a result of the implementation of the Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: We do not consider that there need be any significant additional transport costs associated with the implementation of the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to issue guidance on admissions to county and voluntary schools in the light of the more open enrolment provisions of the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Draft guidance is being issued today. Its purpose is to inform discussion of this topic during the remaining stages of the Bill's passage through Parliament; to guide local education authorities and others in any preparatory work they wish to undertake and to give all concerned an early opportunity to comment. Comments are invited by 16 September 1988.

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the number of letters his Department has received to date from parents of children attending schools in the Inner London education authority area who (a) expressed opposition to the abolition of the authority and (b) approved of the abolition.

Mrs. Rumbold: Some 3,350 letters have been received since the announcement of the Government's proposals on 4 February. Correspondents do not always give their circumstances and it is therefore not possible to state how many are parents. Initially, many correspondents expressed concern at the proposals, but as these have become better understood the emphasis has shifted to inquiries about specific areas of education.

Undergraduate Tuition

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current, average, annual, per student full cost of undergraduate tuition, excluding capital costs, for degree courses in veterinary science, medicine, law, physics, modern languages and English, at (a) university and (b) polytechnic.

Mr. Jackson: Table 9 of "University Statistics 1985-86 —Volume 3, Finance" provides information (excluding some central costs) about university academic provision within each of 37 cost centres. Similar information about polytechnic provision in each of 17 cost centres is contained in "Polytechnic Expenditure, Actual 1986-87". Copies of both volumes are in the Library. The cost centres do not necessarily tally with the individual subjects identified in the question but, in any case, the figures do not permit the separation of first degree course tuition costs from other departmental activity.

Amnesia

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what research into amnesia has been and is being supported by his Department; and what plans there are to increase it.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that the Medical Research Council (MRC) is currently supporting 10 research projects on amnesia. In the financial year 1986-87, the last year for which figures are available, the council's expenditure on this research was £254,000. The MRC also supports a variety of other projects which have a bearing on aspects of memory. University departments and medical schools also undertake research in this area supported by UGC block grant funds. The MRC will consider soundly based scientific proposals for further research in amnesia in competition with other applications.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a detailed statement on the up-to-date progress being made on the individual plans to set up the various city technology colleges in the various sites earmarked for this purpose.

Mrs. Rumbold: Sponsorship for six city technology colleges has now been announced. The first, sponsored by Hanson plc in Kingshurst, Birmingham will open in September this year, the second CTC, in Nottingham, sponsored by Mr. H. Djanogly, CBE, will open in September 1989 when I hope that the Teesside CTC sponsored by BAT Industries will also open. Dixons plc, the Sir Philip and Pauline Harris Trust, and jointly, the Mercers' Company and Thamesmead Town have announced their sponsorship of three more CTCs. We are making good progress in discussions with a number of other prospective sponsors and over prospective buildings-sites.

City Technology College (Thamesmead)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has incurred any cost in drawing up a proposal to establish a city technology college in Thamesmead; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No. The cost of planning for the proposed Thamesmead CTC is being borne by the prospective sponsors. The cost of local consultation prior to a decision on the publication of related proposals under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 would be met by Bexley local education authority. As part of their normal duties, officials in the Department have given information and advice to the prospective sponsors and to the local education authority.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has discussed with the sponsors of the proposed city technology college in Thamesmead the college's admission policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Officials at the Department have advised the prospective sponsors of the proposed Thamesmead CTC of the general policy for admission to city technology colleges and ways in which it might be applied in the particular circumstances in Thamesmead.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish the draft financial memoranda covering relationships between his Department and the PCFC and between his Department and the UFC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: These documents will set out formal financial requirements on matters such as transfer of funds and accounting and audit. They will be drafted in discussion with the interested parties and made publicly available in due course.

Medical and Scientific Research

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the comparative expenditure in medical and in scientific research for each year since 1974 in Belgium, France, Holland, Italy, Denmark and the Federal Republic of Germany in pounds sterling of 1988.

Mr. Jackson: Figures showing international comparisons of expenditure on research are published in the 1987 annual review of Government-funded R and D, which is in the Library. For 1985, the latest year for which figures are available, the details are as follows:

£ million 1985 prices

	Belgium	France	Holland	Italy	Denmark	Federal Republic of Germany	United Kingdom
Civil Research	372	4,018	883	1,948	n.a.	4,900	2,203 of which
Medical Research	26	232	22	99	n.a.	169	167

Details of expenditure for each year back to 1974 could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wray. To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is, for each year since 1974 and in 1988 moneys, the expenditure on medical or scientific research in (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales, (iii) Northern Ireland, (iv) England and (v) the whole of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jackson: The information is not available.

Non-advanced Further Education

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the public spending per head for senior school pupils and those in non-advanced further education in pound sterling for Germany, France, the United States of America and Italy.

Mrs. Rumbold: The readily available information is shown in the table. As my hon. Friend the Member for Dartford (Mr. Dunn) explained in his reply of 10 June to the hon. Member, for international comparisons, non-advanced further education is included with secondary education at the second level. Figures for the United Kingdom have been included for comparison.

Recurrent public expenditure per pupil/student at the second level at 1984 values[1]

	Year of data (beginning in)	£ purchasing power parity[2] (1984 values)[3]
Germany, Federal Republic of[4]	1984	1,410 (1,340)

Universities (Government Expenditure)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give Government expenditure, excluding home student fee income, in total and per head of university population for each year since 1978-79 at constant prices, including planned expenditure per head for 1988-89 to 1990-91; and if he will give the number of new undergraduate entrants for 1978-79.

Mr. Jackson: In the table, Government expenditure has been taken as the University Grants Committee recurrent grant to universities. Otherwise, the per capita figures are on the same basis as those contained in the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 13 June at columns 8-9. The full-time home undergraduate intake for the academic year for 1978-79 was 72,994.

Government expenditure (constant 1986-87 prices)

	£ million	Per student £
1978-79	1,120·3	4,352·4
1979-80	1,156·4	4,386·9

NATIONAL FINANCE

CHIEF Computer Project

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will place in the Library a copy of the business case on which his decision on the CHIEF computer project was made.

Mr. Lilley: No. The business case for CHIEF contains commercial information that was supplied in confidence. This confidence would be breached if the report became a public document during the course of the contractual negotiations which are still taking place.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated cost over the next 10 years of granting the CHIEF project to British Telecom, rather that its being continued in-house.

Mr. Lilley: Contractual negotiations for the development and operation of CHIEF are currently taking place with British Telecom and will not be concluded until towards the end of the year and figures will not be finalised until then. The release of information about the costs of the options for CHIEF could compromise these negotiations.

Customs and Excise Computers Project

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to privatise the Customs and Excise computers project.

Mr. Lilley: I assume that this question refers to the CHIEF project which is currently being negotiated between Customs and British Telecom. CHIEF will replace the current DEPS system which British Telecom already operate under contract with Customs. There is therefore no privatisation involved.

Civil Service Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average weekly Civil Service pension; and what percentage of Civil Service pensioners are on or below this average.

Mr. Brooke: The average pension in payment to retired civil servants is £54 a week; the average in payment to dependants is £21 a week. Some two thirds of retired civil servants and of dependants are on or below their respective averages.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements he proposes for customs clearance on high-speed trains to and from the north of England using the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Section 12 of the Channel Tunnel Act provides for customs and immigration checks to be undertaken on board trains going beyond London via Olympia, subject to adequate facilities being provided. Discussions are at present taking place between Customs and British Rail about the facilities that would be required on these trains and the back-up accommodation needed at Olympia.

Government-owned Companies

Mr. Fry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the trading concerns and companies which are still either fully or partly owned by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Major: Details of Her Majesty's Government's holdings of shares and other securities are shown annually in the "Consolidated Fund and National Loans Fund Accounts, Supplementary Statements", a copy of which is held in the Library.

Alcohol and Tobacco

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a special and additional tax on alcohol and tobacco, the proceeds of which are to be spent exclusively on the National Health Service.

Mr. Lilley: It is not the Government's policy to introduce taxes whose revenues are hypothecated to particular programmes.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Brooke: Information on the type of school attended is not held on personnel records or in any other form.

Own Resources

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the early payment of non-value added tax own resources to the European Communities in June.

Mr. Brooke: As I informed my hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Ian Twinn) on 8 June at columns 602-3, the European Commission estimates that its spending obligations during June will exceed the available resources available for that month, thereby leading to cash flow difficulties. In order to help ease these difficulties, and in accordance with article 10(2) of Council regulation 2891/77, the Commission has requested member states to advance into this month their payments of own resources other than VAT which would otherwise have been made in July. The Government are satisfied that the request complies with article 10(2). The gross amount of the advance is £147 million. However, the actual payment to be on 20 June in respect of the advance will be only some £36 million as a result of two adjustments to the gross figures:

(i) As I informed my hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) on 29 March at column 397, in accordance with the conclusions of the Brussels European Council of 11-12 February 1988, member states are entitled to deduct at source 10 per cent. of non-VAT own resources to cover collection costs. This replaces the previous arrangements whereby 10 per cent. of the amounts in question was refunded to member states.

(ii) The outstanding amount of the Commission's borrowing up to 20 June under article 12(2) of Council regulation 2891/77 will be recovered.

The article 10(2) facility does not affect the total amount which the Community is authorised to spend during the year. The payment of levies and duties on 20 July will be reduced by the amount of the advance. The Commission's request does not, therefore, involve any net addition to public expenditure.

Economic and Finance Council

Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the outcome of the latest meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council.

Mr. Lawson: The Ecofin Council met in Luxembourg on 13 June. I represented the United Kingdom. The Council approved the interinstitutional agreement between the Council, the European Parliament and the Commission on the implementation of the conclusions of the Brussels European Council on budget discipline.

The Council reached agreement on a directive providing for complete liberalisation of capital movements in the Community and a regulation combining the two existing mechanisms for medium-term balance of payments support. The complete abolition of exchange controls by those countries that still retain them will represent an important move towards a freer and less-regulated Europe, and an essential step towards the completion of the single market.

The Council also agreed that there should be further discussion on tax exemptions for temporary importations of means of transport.

Land and Buildings

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement explaining the variation in the figures for general Government gross domestic fixed capital formation, purchases of land and existing buildings net of sales in 1987-88 as (a) forecast in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 56, (b) estimated in the 1988 public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 288, (c) provided in the Official Report, of 28 March 1988, column 321, and (d) most recently estimated, following publication of figures for sales by the new town commission.

Mr. Major [holding answer 14 June 1988]: The table gives planned expenditure and estimated outturn figures for purchases, net of sales, of land and existing buildings by Department for 1987-88.

No detailed update to estimated outturns for 1987-88 has been made since these figures were produced for the 1988 public expenditure White Paper. The overall difference between planned expenditure and estimated outturn is mainly the result of substantially larger than expected sales.

The table shows purchases, net of sales, of land and existing buildings included in the planning total. Between Cm. 56 and Cm. 288 the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the Development Board for Rural Wales (new town activities) were given external finance treatment and their capital expenditure no longer features in the planning total. The presentation of the figures is consistent with the coverage used in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56-II, Table 2.9) and in the table provided in the Official Report of 28 March 1988 at column 321. It differs, however, from the presentation of purchases, net of sales, of land and existing buildings shown in table 2.11 of volume I of the 1988 public expenditure White Paper, which excluded public corporations not given external finance treatment.

VAT

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he plans to impose a 14 to 20 per cent. tax on talking books for blind and disabled people, and on aids and equipment for disabled people, in accordance with proposals from the Commission of the European Communities.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 10 June 1988]: I have made it clear on a number of occasions that Her Majesty's Government do not accept the Commission's proposals for the approximation of indirect taxation.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the destination of the 377,000 individuals who left the unemployment register between May 1987 and March 1988 but did not apparently enter work.

Mr. Cope: In the 10 months May 1988 to March 1988 the total outflow from the United Kingdom claimant count was over 4·1 million. Information on the destinations of those leaving the count is not available.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report the total number of persons out of work and claiming benefit for each (a) assisted area and (b) intermediate area on 8 April.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the library. The table shows the total number of unemployed claimants for each development area and intermediate area on 8 April 1988.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list in the Official Report each travel-to-work area, not being either an assisted or intermediate area, in which male unemployment on 8 April was 10 per cent. or higher.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of male unemployed claimants, expressed as a percentage of employees in employment plus the unemployed for each of the non-assisted travel-to-work areas in Great Britain, on 14 April 1988, in which the male unemployment rate was 10 per cent. or higher. The figures are not seasonally adjusted.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the percentage level of unemployment at the latest available date in the Liverpool, Riverside constituency;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the percentage figures for unemployment for the top 10 constituencies in England and Wales and the percentage of the bottom 10 constituencies.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available. The Department does not calculate unemployment rates for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has for each of the member states of the EEC concerning (a) the average weekly hours worked, (b) the average holiday entitlement and (c) the normal retirement age in the most recent years for which figures are available.

Mr. Lee: The table sets out the latest available information published by the International Labour Organisation (ILO) covering average weekly hours worked in manufacturing industry. Information on average holiday entitlement and age of retirement is not readily available.

Restart

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of individuals attending restart interviews since 1986 have moved straight into employment; if he will provide a breakdown of the destinations of the remainder; and what information he has as to how many have been switched from unemployment-related benefit to some other form of benefit.

Mr. Cope: The table shows the proportion of people interviewed under the restart scheme who have been referred to various opportunities, including jobs. We do not know how many of these move straight into employment, nor do we know how many people have moved from unemployment related benefits to some other form of benefit.

Between July 1986 and 29 April 1988, a total of 3,725,563 restart interviews took place. These resulted in:

	As percentage of those interviewed
Submitted to:
Jobs	8·8
Community programme	8·0
Voluntary projects programme-voluntary work	2·2
Jobclub	8·7
New job training scheme	6·8
Other training	8·2
Employment rehabilitation centre	0·2
Restart course	7·6
Enterprise allowance scheme	3·9
Referred to:
Disablement resettlement officer	3·4
Claimant adviser	4·2
Other referrals (inc. PER)	18·2

Some people may be referred to more than one opportunity. The remaining represent people who have either declined an offer or for whom an offer was not appropriate.

New Jobs

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the net new jobs created in the United Kingdom since 1983 have been full-time and how many part-time; and what evidence there is on how many of the new part-time jobs have been taken by people already in employment.

Mr. Cope: As the employed labour force estimates for Northern Ireland do not distinguish between full-time and part-time jobs, the figures are for Great Britain only. Between December 1983 and December 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, there was a net increase of 603,000 full-time and 760,000 part-time jobs in the employed labour force—the sum of employees in employment, the self-employed and members of Her Majesty's forces. It is estimated from the labour force survey that between spring 1984 and spring 1987, the number of people with two or more jobs increased by 133,000.

Employment Growth

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures to show how net employment growth in the United Kingdom since 1979 compares with that of other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries when measured on a common basis in terms of full-time equivalents.

Mr. Cope: Comparative data for employment in terms of full-time equivalents are not available. Figures for net change in total civilian employment in the major OECD countries are as follows.

Net change in civilian employment between 1979 and 1987

	Thousands	Per cent.
Canada	+1,559	+15·0
United States	+13,616	+13·8

Benefit Fraud Investigations

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average duration of unemployment of those denied benefit after fraud investigations in the year to April; what are the net savings to the taxpayer; and how these are calculated.

Mr. Cope: Records are not kept separately of the number of unemployed people whose claim to benefit is disallowed by the independent adjudicating authorities in fraud cases. Where a person voluntarily withdraws a claim to unemployment benefit following a fraud investigation it is assumed, on the basis of DHSS research, that the person refrains from claiming benefit on average for a period of 22 weeks. Net savings to the taxpayer for the year up to 31 March 1988 amount to £54·6 million and are calculated by multiplying by 22 the total amount of weekly benefit in payment at the time that a claim is withdrawn and deducting the costs of the fraud operation.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the numbers flowing through unemployment in the year to April is represented by those denied benefit after fraud investigations.

Mr. Cope: Records are not kept separately of the number of unemployed people whose claim to beneift is disallowed by the independent adjudication authorities in fraud cases. In the year ending 31 March 1988, a total of 80,088 people voluntarily withdrew their claims to unemployment benefit following a fraud investigation. This figure represents 1·83 per cent. of the total number of people who withdrew their claims in that year.

Taxi Drivers

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what access his Department has, and by what means, to details of the names and addresses of licensed taxi drivers in (a) Glasgow, (b) Birmingham and (c) elsewhere.

Mr. Lee: My Department's investigators requested and obtained from the local authorities in Glasgow and in Birmingham lists of the names of licensed taxi and private hire car drivers. They would adopt the same method in other parts of the country.

Job Club Scheme

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the percentage of unemployed who, having used the Government's sponsored job club scheme, have successfully gained a job during the last 12 months (a) nationally and (b) in the (i) Doncaster area and (ii) Mexborough area; and if he will make a statement on the general working of the scheme.

Mr. Lee: From April 1987 to March 1988 a total of 105,677 people passed through job clubs. Of these 57,080 (54 per cent.) went into jobs. During the same period, 680 people passed through job clubs in the Doncaster area of which 295 (43 per cent.) went into jobs. A total of 226 people passed through job clubs in the Mexborough area and, of these, 122 (54 per cent.) went into jobs.

Restart

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give for each month from March 1987 the number of restart interviews at each jobcentre within the London borough of Camden.

Mr. Lee: Restart interviews are carried out at two offices within the London borough of Camden—Swiss Cottage jobcentre and Camden employment office. The table gives the available figures:

	Camden employment office	Swiss Cottage jobcentre	Total
1987
April	461	—	461

Access to Employment

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what comparable access to employment in the United Kingdom (a) citizens of Eire and (b) citizens of Commonwealth countries enjoy; and if such access enjoyed is reciprocal for United Kingdom citizens seeking employment in Eire.

Mr. Lee: European Community law provides for free reciprocal access to employment between the United Kingdom and Eire. Commonwealth citizens require a work permit or other permission to work in the United Kingdom, unless they have the right of abode or are settled in the United Kingdom.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Lee: This information is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Printing Industry

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the barriers to be removed from the printing industry by the completion of the EEC internal market by 1992.

Mr. Maude: I am not aware of barriers peculiar to the printing industry which need to be removed by 1992. If the hon. Member is aware of obstacles particularly affecting the printing industry, I should be glad to receive details.

Lloyd's

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress which has been made by Lloyd's in the implementation of the recommendations of the committee of inquiry into regulatory matters at Lloyd's.

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what further progress has been made by Lloyd's in the implementation of the recommendations of the committee of inquiry into regulatory matters at Lloyd's.

Mr. Maude: The chairman of the council of Lloyd's has recently submitted a memorandum which records the progress made to date and Lloyd's plans for further implementation. This is the third such report to have been submitted by Lloyd's; the last having been placed in the Library on 18 November 1987 as I announced in the Official Report at columns 555-56. I have today placed a copy of the latest memorandum in the Library. It shows that the council of Lloyd's has implemented 38 of the 70 recommendations in the committee's report which was published in January 1987. A steady programme of consultation on the remaining recommendations, including that on deficit clauses, continues. Implementation of virtually all the committee's recommendations should be completed by the middle of 1989.

I expect Lloyd's to maintain momentum in accordance with that agreed timetable for full and complete implementation. I shall continue to follow closely their progress and to keep the House informed.

Fur Marking Order

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects that the proposed Fur Marking Order will be laid before the House.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) when he intends to introduce a labelling order for leather goods manufactured from fur-bearing animals which he has identified as being commonly caught in leghold traps;

(2) whether he will list the scientific evidence on which he bases his identification of certain animals as commonly being trapped in leghold traps;

(3) if he will make it his policy not to lay the forthcoming order on fur labelling before Parliament in advance of a decision by the House on the principle of the matters to be covered by the order; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been giving careful consideration to the representations which were made during the consultation process. Legal difficulties have been raised, and I have regretfully come to the conclusion that it would not be practicable to proceed in the way originally envisaged. I have therefore decided not to proceed with the proposed order and to defer further action on the matter.

Professional Liability

Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the names and occupations of the members of the three study teams he has set up to establish the implications of liability problems faced by selected professions, as announced in his reply to the hon. Member for Salisbury on 28 October 1987, Official Report, column 298; and if he will make a statement .

Mr. Maude: As announced on 11 May by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry—Official Report, House of Lords, columns 1208-9—we have appointed Andrew Likierman, professor of accounting and financial control at London business school, to be overall chairman of the fact-finding studies of the liability problems of selected professions. The names and current or former occupations of the members of the three study teams are as follows:

Name	Occupation
Auditors:
William Morrison (Chairman)	chartered accountant
Robin Jackson	Lloyd's underwriter
Anthony Mallinson	solicitor
Geoffrey Williams	merchant banker
Architects/consulting engineers/construction surveyors:
Donald Bishop (Chairman)	academic, chartered engineer
Bernard Anderson	regional health authority estate manager
Peter Down	services engineer
Donald Keating	Queen's Counsel
Anthony Kidd	insurance underwriter
Clifford Lansley	architect
James Myatt	building contractor
Roger Squire	director, property company
Chris Vickers	chartered surveyor
K. Wesley Whimster	consulting engineer
Other surveyors:
Ian Oddy (Chairman)	chartered surveyor
John Chapman	chartered surveyor
Brian Grainger	chartered surveyor
Edward Hartill	the City Surveyor
Kim Lewison	barrister
Ray Moorman	managing director, property company
Jeremy Mortimer	insurance broker

Scotch Whisky (Japan)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made in negotiations with the Japanese Government to ensure the early removal of discriminatory import taxation on Scotch whisky as agreed under the general agreement on tariffs and trade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Japanese authorities have now announced their intention to introduce, from April 1989, a single rate of tax for all whiskies, at a level 45 per cent. below that currently applying to Scotch. This news is most welcome. Nevertheless, since some discrimination in the tax rates applying to other competing spirits will remain, the impact of the proposes changes would need to be kept closely under review, and the possibility of further recourse to the general agreement on tariffs and trade left open.

Harvard Securities

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many items of correspondence he has received complaining about the activities of Harvard Securities in each quarter of 1985, 1986, 1987 and the current year respectively.

Mr. Maude: The number of complaints received in respect of Harvard Securities plc between January 1985 and April 1988 are as follows:

Quarter	1985	1986	1987	1988
January-March	16	3	37	34
April-June	16	5	26	[1]10
July-September	10	14	42	—
October-December	9	84	28	—

[1] To 29 April 1988.

Following the repeal of the Prevention of Fraud (Investments) Act 1958 on 29 April 1988, complaints have been dealt with by the Securities and Investments Board. Three complaints relating to Harvard have been passed to the SIB since that date.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the monitoring returns made by Barlow Clowes to his Department in October 1987 were accompanied by an accountant's report from (a) the former Barlow Clowes auditors Spicer and Pegler, (b) the current Barlow Clowes auditors Touche Ross or (c) from any other firm of accountants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: While the facts of my Department's handling of the Barlow Clowes case are under investigation, I do not believe it would be appropriate to answer specific questions relating to the case.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many firms are presently operating with interim authorisation under the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Maude: I understand from the Securities and Investments Board that on Wednesday 15 June, the most recent date for which figures can be supplied, there were 4,184 persons holding interim authorisation within the terms of paragraph 1 of schedule 15 to the Financial Services Act.

Securities Licences (Investigations)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many firms have been subject to more than the usual investigation prior to being granted a securities licence by his Department in the years 1984 to April 1988.

Mr. Maude: The extent of investigation varied considerably from case to case, depending upon the circumstances, and it is not therefore possible to provide a meaningful answer.

Estate Agents Act 1979

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what sections of the Estate Agents Act 1979 are currently not in operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: There are no regulations in force under sections 16, 17, 19 or 22 of the Estate Agents Act 1979. We have considered the need for such regulations but have no plans to implement these sections for the time being.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Butcher: The information requested is not currently held, and to obtain it would involve disproportionate cost.

Deregulation (Small Businesses)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster from which organisations representing small businesses he has received representations in connection with his Department's forthcoming White Paper on deregulation.

Mr. Maude: No representations from organisations representing small businesses have been received dealing specifically with the forthcoming White Paper on deregulation. The enterprise and deregulation unit, however, has frequent contact with those organisations about issues involving all aspects of deregulation.

Handsworth Task Force

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the projects approved so far by the Government's Handsworth task force.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following is the list:

Inner City Task Forces

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is making any changes to the inner city task forces.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. There are now 16 Government task forces operating in small inner city areas. The task force in Handsworth in Birmingham set up two years ago has made remarkable progress in stimulating enterprise and creating jobs for local people. The time has now come to transfer the benefits of the task force approach to another deprived part of Birmingham. I am therefore setting up a new Government task force to focus on the Saltley, Nechells and Washwood Heath areas of east Birmingham. The new task force will work closely with the private sector-led Birmingham heartlands urban development agency which is already tackling the economic regeneration of east Birmingham.

The new emphasis on east Birmingham does not mean that Handsworth will be forgotten. There is much work still to be done and projects to implement. The task force has brought a new impetus and freshness to tackling the area's problems and has proved that Handsworth is a place with a future worth investing in. The task force has contributed £4 million to 60 projects whose total cost has been £10 million. We estimate that it will have created over 2,000 jobs and training opportunities for local people and the ongoing effect of the projects will create many more.

I have always made it clear that task forces were short-term pump-priming and experimental teams working in deprived areas. I envisage the Handsworth team remaining for another nine months or so, but the demands on it are such that it will not be able to accept any new projects from today. Over the next few months the task force will be consulting with other public and private sector bodies, including the Government city action team, Birmingham city council and the CBI, to determine the best means to continue its work and maintain its record of success.

Through our action for cities programme, the Government will continue to focus a wide range of special assistance on Handsworth. We will also continue to learn from experiences in Handsworth and other task forces, and apply the lessons to the Government's continuing support for inner cities. Our new high priority in Birmingham will be the work of the east Birmingham task force.

ENERGY

Council of Energy Ministers

Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the meeting of the European Communities Council of Energy Ministers on 9 June.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Council was unable to agree conclusions on the three major items on the agenda. Those were the Commission's paper of obstacles to the completion of the internal market in energy, the Commission's review of progress made by member states against the 1995 energy objectives, and a draft recommendation on co-operation between public electricity supply companies and auto-producers using new and renewable and certain other sources of electricity. Objections were made to a reference in the first case to consumer choice, in the second to an opening up of the electricity market and in the third to the possibility of common carriage. The two latter items were remitted to permanent representatives for further work; on the first of these items the presidency, on its own responsibility, adopted conclusions which did not fully reflect the majority viewpoint.

The Council did however adopt a recommendation on measures to encourage the exploitation of renewable energy sources in the Community. A common position on this recommendation had been agreed last November; it has since been considered by the European Parliament.

The Council also agreed conclusions on a report by the Commission on implementation by member states of two 1983 recommendations encouraging the use of solid fuels in industry, public buildings and district heating schemes. The Commission will prepare a further report on the possibilities for increasing the use of these fuels.

Potassium Iodate

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will identify the extent of potassium iodate stocks held in Wales, their locations and the arrangement for their distribution in the event of an emergency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The operators' detailed site emergency plans include arrangements for the storage and distribution of stable iodine tablets to protect those who may be at risk in the unlikely event of an accident having significant off-site radiological effects. These plans are available in local libraries in the vicinity of the site, and in the Library of the House.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Parkinson: About half of the civil servants at grade 3 and above in my Department were educated in private schools and half in state schools.

Renewable Energy Sources

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to publish the report on the development of renewable energy sources referred to in the debate on energy renewable sources, on 30 October, Official Report, columns 564-623.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am today publishing Energy Paper No. 55 "Renewable Energy in the UK: The Way Forward". The report is on sale by Her Majesty's Stationery Office and copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

The report outlines our view on a development strategy for renewable energy to the year 2000. By that time we hope that technologies will have been successfully developed to the point of commercial application and responsibility for exploitation taken over by industry. The report gives our view on the development path for each technology together with our estimation of the costs to be shared between Government and industry. We hope that the report will provide the basis for discussion with industry and the necessary increasing levels of collaboration.

Our aim is to stimulate the development of renewable energy sources to the fullest practicable extent where they have prospects of being economically attractive and environmentally acceptable. This aim will be pursued by two main means:

A collaborative research, development and demonstration programme with industry leading to commercial application for the more promising technologies;

The establishment of an institutional framework which will ensure that renewables can compete in the market on equal terms with other energy sources.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how he proposes to inform those involved of the benefit consequences for them of the social security rule concession in his announced speech to the House on 27 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, North-West (Mr. Stern) on 14 June 1988 at column 152. In addition a national press publicity campaign was carried out during week commencing 23 May.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people receive housing benefits in each of the last three financial years; and what is the estimated number of recipients for 1988-89.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is shown in the table. The figures represent the estimated average numbers of households receiving rate rebates. Most households receiving assistance with rent will also be in receipt of a rate rebate.

Thousands

	Rent rebate	Rent allowance	Rate rebate
1985-86	3,710	1,150	7,020
1986-87	3,720	1,180	7,050
1987-88	3,760	1,250	7,030
1988-89	3,430	1,055	5,845

Source: Public Expenditure White Paper 1988, table 15.6. 1988-89 updated to take account of changes to capital rule, income tax changes and latest information on rent and rates.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of households (a) by tenure and (b) by household type who were expected to cease to qualify for any housing benefit as a result of the changes to the scheme implemented in April; and what is his estimate of the effect on these figures of his announcement of 27 April, including in both cases the effect of the new capital rule.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer June 1988]: An estimate of the numbers losing all entitlement to housing benefit is contained in the tables. This is on the basis of the changes implemented in April. About 100,000 of these will be brought back into housing benefit by the capital changes introduced on 30 May. A breakdown of this 100,000 by household or tenure type would be unreliable because of data limitations. It is likely that the vast majority will be pensioners. The transitional payments scheme has no effect on the actual housing benefit caseload.

	Lose entitlement to housing benefit on April 1/4 (thousands)

Notes:
1. Figures refer to tax units rather than households.
2. Figures may not add owing to rounding.

Prisoners (Home Leave)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average sum paid by way of living expenses entitlements for prisoners on home leave, payable to their partner or relatives by paragraph 6304 of the social fund manual; in how many cases the notional entitlement is below the £30 threshold; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available. However I am pleased to say that Secretary of State's direction 28, which prevents the award of community care grants for amounts below £30, has been amended today. The revised direction provides an exception to enable community care grants to be awarded under paragraph 6304 of the social fund manual in such cases where living expenses are calculated at less than £30.

Employment Training (Benefits)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, and in what ways, any of the additional payments that might be paid to adult trainees under the proposed employment training scheme, over and above their basic training allowance, including end of scheme bonus, earnings outside the programe and any additional top up in addition to their £10 premium, will affect their entitlement to (a) income support, (b) transitional protection payments, (c) housing benefit and (d) other passported benefits, including free prescriptions.

Mr. Portillo: Participants in employment training will be paid a training allowance, which will include a training "premium". If they are on income support when training starts, that benefit will continue but at a reduced level. This will safeguard automatic passported entitlement to other benefits, such as housing benefit and free prescriptions.

The training premium will not count as income in calculating a trainee's entitlement to any of the means-tested benefits.

The Government have announced an end-of-training bonus scheme, and intend that payments under that scheme will, likewise, not count as income in calculating entitlement to benefits. Any earnings received from work outside the training programme will be treated in the normal way with the appropriate disregard. Any voluntary top-up to the premium made at regular intervals will attract a £5 disregard.

We have ensured that training allowances do not erode transitional protection for income support purposes.

District Medical Staff Committees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the relationship between a district medical staff committee and a district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: It is the responsibility of each DHA to establish professional advisory machinery in a form that best meets the professional advice needs of that district. This may well include a district medical staff committee whose role is to provide advice on professional medical issues to the DHA. Whether that advice is implemented or not is a matter for the DHA.

Queen Mary's Hospital, Sidcup

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning maternity services at Queen Mary's hospital, Sidcup.

Mrs. Currie: Four letters were received, all in 1987, including three from right hon. and hon. Members about the effect on maternity services at Queen Mary's hospital of changes in service in Dartford and Gravesham health authority, and one from a consultant about staffing aspects of the service at Queen Mary's hospital.

Maternity Services

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning maternity services at West Hill hospital, Dartford.

Mrs. Currie: A considerable number of representations were received from right hon. and hon. Members and members of the public about Dartford and Gravesham health authority's proposals to rationalise some of its acute hospital services, which included transferring maternity services from West Hill hospital to Gravesend and North Kent hospital. I visited the health district on 1 September 1987. No representations concerning maternity services at West Hill hospital have been received subsequent to Ministers' decision on 15 September 1987 to approve the transfer.

Home Defence Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 25 April to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock), Official Report, column 30, whether the details of the limited participation by the National Health Service in any or all of the military home defence exercises Eastern Shield, Capital Guard, Drake' Drum, Autumn Tiger, Northern Crusade, Western Encounter, Triple Crown, and Strong Link have been finalised; how much such participation is now estimated to cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs Currie: The Ministry of Defence has requested limited participation by certain National Health Service authorities in some of these exercises. The extent of any participation which would be on a voluntary basis—has not been decided, and the cost cannot yet be estimated.

Income Support

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether claims in writing for income support forwarded by organisations providing emergency accommodation will be treated as valid claims in the terms of regulation 4(1) of the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) on 14 June, at column 172.

Independent Living Fund

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce an independent right of review for disabled persons who are refused assistance by the Independent Living Fund.

Mr. Scott: The Independent Living Fund is an independent discretionary trust and it is for the trustees to decide how they will deal with cases which give rise to dissatisfaction. I know, however, that it is their intention to look at such cases very carefully.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans his Department has to enable the Independent Living Fund to assist with disabled persons' claims after the £5 million provided by the Government has run out.

Mr. Scott: I am confident that the sum of up to £5 million for the current year will be more than enough. We shall review the level of funding for future years in the light of experience.

Brain Injury (Rehabilitation Services)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will commission an assessment of the probability of long-term improvement occurring from the provision of specialised rehabilitation services immediately or soon after brain injury occurs; and if he will examine the cost effectiveness for the National Health Service and the social services departments combined of such provision.

Mrs. Currie: We are aware of the issues raised by the right hon. Member. Officials are currently considering the way forward.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many brain injury rehabilitation units there are in (a) the National Health Service and (b) the private sector.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Amnesia

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what are the most common causes of severe amnesia;

(2) what estimates he has of the number of people suffering from serious amnesia who live at home with their families; and what evidence there is on the adequacy of the support provided by social services departments;

(3) what estimates have been made of the number of patients suffering severe amnesia who are long-stay patients in hospitals which are not able to give specialised treatment to them.

Mrs. Currie: Severe amnesia can be a symptom of a range of medical conditions. Statistics on amnesia are not collected centrally.

The National Health Service is organised to treat medical conditions rather than specific symptoms and there is therefore no special provision for patients with severe amnesia. Patients may be treated in a number of settings such as neurological, mental illness or geriatric units. Local authority social services departments usually provide services on a client group basis.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what research into amnesia has been and is being supported by his Department; and what plans there are to increase it.

Mrs. Currie: The Department does not directly commission research specifically into amnesia. The main Government agency for the promotion of medical and related biological research is the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives its grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science.

Brain-Injury and Amnesia

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what National Health Service provision there is for specialised treatment for (a) serious brain injury and (b) serious amnesia; what plans he has to increase such provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The National Health Service offers a range of facilities for treatment of people with brain injury, including accident and emergency departments, neurosurgery, and rehabilitation facilities. Treatment for amnesia sufferers is related to the medical condition with which the symptom is associated. It is for individual health authorities to determine the level of provision.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimates he has of the number of people suffering (a) serious brain injury and (b) serious amnesia; and how many new sufferers there are annually.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally. I am aware that the Medical Disability Society has recently published a report which contains estimates of the number of people suffering from brain injury.

Brain Injury Service

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has given to the proposal of the Royal College of Physicians that each district health authority should have a named consultant to provide and oversee a complete brain injury service.

Mrs. Currie: We are aware of this recommendation and officials are considering the best way to take the matter forward, in the light of the recent report of the Medical Disability Society's working party on the management of traumatic brain injury.

Hospitals (Leasing)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer of 23 May, Official Report, column 93, whether health authorities may lease hospitals on a permanent basis to the private sector.

Mrs. Currie: At present, when a health authority does not envisage any further use for a National Health Service property it is required to dispose of the freehold. Exceptionally, a long-term lease may be granted, but only where there are strong reasons in the public interest for doing so.

Lithotripsy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) where in England hospitals are equipped to treat kidney stones by using the lithotripsy process;

(2) what is the cost of equipping and staffing a hospital with the lithotripsy method of treating kidney stone patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) on 29 April 1988 at columns 341-42.

Kidney Stone Patients

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will release funds to enable (a) Chester district health authority and (b) Mersey health authority to purchase equipment and to appoint staff to enable them to treat kidney stone sufferers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This is a matter for the health authorities concerned. They must determine their own priorities and use the resources they have available in a way which best serves the needs of the local population.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients with kidney stone problems are treated annually in the Chester district and Mersey health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Such information which is available centrally relates to the estimated number of patients treated with the main diagnosis of calculus of kidney and ureter, and is set out in the table:

Estimated Number of Discharges of In-patients, by Regional Health Authority, NHS Non-psychiatric Hospital, England, 1985

Diagnosis	ICD Code[1]	England	Mersey	Chester
Calculus of Kidney	592·0	4,480	130	[2]
Calculus of Ureter	592·1	5,580	230	[2]
Urinary Calculus, unspecified	592·9	260	[2]	[2]

[1] International Classification of Diseases—9th revision.
[2] The number in the sample is too small to make reliable estimates.

The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairmen of the Mersey regional health authority and the Chester district health authority to see what information is available locally.

Maternity Units (Closure)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many maternity units have been closed since 1979, or are planned to close, in each health authority area in England.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the numbers of maternity units by regional health authority approved for closure between 1979 and 1986. It is important to note that closures may be offset or balanced by openings or reprovision elsewhere.

	Number
Northern	3
Yorkshire	9
Trent	10
East Anglian	6
North West Thames	4
North East Thames	7
South East Thames	2
South West Thames	3
Wessex	3
Oxford	1
South Western	5
West Midlands	4
Mersey	3
North Western	3

Figures of closures for 1987 should be available shortly. I regret that information regarding planned closures is not available centrally.

Pensions (Eire Citizens)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Social Services what entitlement to pension by virtue of age, injury or disability is granted in the United Kingdom to citizens of Eire; and if these rights are reciprocal.

Mr. Scott: The United Kingdom social security scheme does not discriminate on the grounds of nationality. Citizens of the Republic of Ireland in the United Kingdom are entitled to all social security benefits payable on account of age, injury or disability providing they satisfy the relevant conditions. Similarly, a United Kingdom citizen in the Republic of Ireland who satisfies the conditions for Irish benefits will be entitled to them.

Single Payments (Birmingham)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for single payments were outstanding at the social security offices at Kingsbury road and St. Margaret's road in Birmingham on 30 April and 31 May.

Mr. Portillo: The numbers of cases awaiting action on claims for single payments of supplementary benefit on 29 April are shown in the table. The figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

	29 April 1988	31 May 1988
Erdington local office (Kingsbury road)	412	42
Washwood heath local office (St. Margaret's road)	1,017	263

Unemployed Persons (Removal Expenses)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the specific provisions in the new social security system for help with removal expenses of unemployed people who need to change their places of residence in order to take up new jobs.

Mr. Portillo: None. Such provision would be inappropriate to the social security system.

Water Supplies (Aluminium)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask The Secretary of State for Social Services what studies have been conducted by his Department, water authorities or other bodies into a possible link between high aluminium levels in water supplies and senility; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has not commissioned any research into a possible link between high aluminium levels in water supplies and senility. I understand that the Medical Research Council, which is the main agency through which the Government support medical research in the United Kingdom and which receives a grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science, has supported two studies on this subject in its own units. The results of one of these studies have still to be published. I am also aware that other research on this subject has been carried out at the University of Surrey, but details are not held centrally.

Dental Reference Service

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many references have been dealt with by officers of the dental reference services, showing how many were in respect of (a) treatment and (b) estimates for dental treatment.

Mrs. Currie: In the year 1987-88 dental officers in England examined patients in the following numbers of cases:

	Number
Proposed treatment	13,724
Completed treatment	14,419
TOTAL	28,143

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take in the light of the Benner report on the review of the dental reference service; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The report has been sent to interested parties and their comments invited by 31 July. No decision as to whether or not its recommendations should be implemented will be taken before then.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Moore: I regret that a reply cannot be provided without incurring disproportionate cost.

Hospitals (Staff Shortages)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will urgently introduce measures to help teaching hospitals with staff shortages which cause damaging interruption of clinical research due to the need to attend to the care of patients.

Mr. Newton: The allocation of resources to teaching hospitals is a matter for health authorities subject to the guidance issued to them. The Department, in guidance to health authorities last year, reminded them of their responsibility to support clinical teaching and research.

NHS Workers (Career Structure)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce new arrangements for the career structure of National Health Service workers aimed at the promotion of medical or scientific research.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. The present medical career structure is flexible enough to accommodate doctors who wish to make a career in academic medicine or to combine scientific research with an NHS commitment.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the value of unemployment benefit for a single person, a married couple and a married couple with two children under 11 years as a proportion of average net earnings for all males and all manually employed males for each year between November 1978 and the latest date available.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is given in the table.

Retirement Pension

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the value of the retirement pension for a single person and a married couple as a proportion of average net earnings for all males and all manually employed males for each year between November 1978 and the latest date available.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is in the table.

Social Security

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how the changes in the social security schemes announced to the House on 27 April will affect (i) war widows, (ii) industrial injuries benefit and (iii) special hardship allowance as respects income assessment for housing benefit; and if they will be protected by the minimum loss of £2·50 per week.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 17 May 1988]: The changes announced on 27 April did not alter the method of calculating housing benefit but people in these groups may receive transitional payments if they incurred losses in housing benefit in excess of £2·50 per week as a result of the changes in the structure of the scheme from 1 April. However, local authorities continue to have discretion in the new housing benefit scheme to disregard up to the whole amount of a war pension. Therefore, we will not compensate for losses arising from any reduction in the disregard through changes in local authorities' own discretionary schemes for war pensions.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Commodity Prices

96. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Governments of producer countries concerning improvements in commodity prices.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and other Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers meet their opposite numbers in the Governments of commodity-producing countries at regular intervals. On these occasions the developmental problems facing producer countries, including the prices their commodities command, are often discussed.

Spain (British Tourists)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to how many British tourists have been killed on Spanish beaches over the last seven years by drowning.

Mr. Eggar: Over the past five years our consulates in Spain have been informed of 83 British nationals who died by drowning. Of these, a number drowned in swimming pools.

Not all such deaths are reported to us. Further statistics are not readily available, and could be provided only at disproportionate costs.

"Platform on European Security Interests"

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he took to publicise the Western European Union statement entitled, "Platform on European Security Interests", arising from the meeting of the Foreign and Defence Ministers meeting at the Hague on 27 October 1987; and if he will make a statement as to what extent it represents the policy of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Mellor: The Western European Union "Platform on European Security Interests" was placed in the Library of the House following its adoption and has received considerable media publicity. It has been quoted regularly in ministerial and other speeches and has been further publicised in a Western European Union brochure about that organisation's activities. We endorse the platform.

Israel

Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement of Her Majesty's Government's latest assessment of relations with Israel and on its policy towards the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Israeli Government about recent Mossad activities in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Following the trial and conviction of Ismail Sowan, the Israeli ambassador was informed on 17 June that a member of his diplomatic staff must leave the country by the end of this month. Additionally, the Home Secretary is requiring the departure from Britain by the end of the month of a staff member currently serving in the PLO office in London.

We will not tolerate the export to Britain of middle eastern feuds and violence.

Cyprus

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 10 June, Official Report, column 696, what is the United Kingdom's representation in (a) Greek southern Cyprus and (b) Turkish northern Cyprus; and why he has no figures for non-Cypriots resident in southern Cyprus.

Mrs. Chalker: There are 30 United Kingdom-based members of staff and 37 locally engaged staff in the British high commission in Nicosia. The high commission represents Her Majesty's Government's interests throughout Cyprus.

Information about the number of non-Cypriots resident in the south was not available when I answered the hon. Gentleman's earlier question, but further inquiries were then made. I understand that there are about 15,000 non-Cypriots resident in the area controlled by the Government of the Republic of Cyprus.

Diplomatic Staff (Languages)

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list for each post overseas the number of diplomatic staff, the number and percentage whose skill in those local language is functional or better, and the number and percentage whose skill is extensive.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is not readily available in the form requested. However, of the total 3,257 mainstream Diplomatic Service officers, 2,978 have one or more language qualifications. Many have qualifications in more than one language. The total number of qualifications at functional level or better is 4,172. Of these 967 are at higher levels.

Spain (British Holidaymakers)

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions have been held with the Spanish authorities regarding the behaviour of young British males in holiday centres; what action is proposed to combat their activities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I visited Spain from 12 to 14 June 1988. I had frank and useful talks on tourist security and behaviour of British visitors with local and regional authorities in Alicante and Valencia, and in Madrid. Some 3,000 extra policemen are being sent to the main coastal resorts, Seville and Grenada for the peak summer period, and a publicity campaign to give practical advice to tourists about security will be launched by the Spanish authorities shortly. We are exploring a number of further practical measures including restrictions on alcohol sales.

We shall be continuing our public education campaign both here and in Spain to reduce as far as possible the small minority who tarnish Britain's image abroad. The Association of British Travel Agents and the major British tour operators also recognise the need to advise their clients on the spot about behaviour and security and we shall be pursuing further initiatives with them. In addition, in conjunction with other interested bodies, we shall be looking at the possibility of curbing excessive consumption of alcohol at airports prior to departure.

Sharpeville Six

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations Her Majesty's Government has made to South Africa concerning the Sharpeville Six; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Foreign Ministers of the Twelve issued the following statement in Luxembourg on 14 June:

"The Foreign Ministers today discussed the situation in South Africa following the decision by the Supreme Court of Pretoria not to reopen proceedings in the case of the Sharpeville Six.

The Ministers expressed their deep distress and concern about the fate of the Sharpeville Six.

They urged that all legal options available in South Africa should be used to prevent the death penalty from being carried out. In this connection they drew attention to earlier representations by the European Community."

The German ambassador in Pretoria will be making representations to the South African Government on behalf of the Twelve.

Soviet Union (Republics)

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what account Her Majesty's Government takes in its policy towards recognition of the legal status of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania as republics of the Soviet Union, of the manner in which they acquired that status; and what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the resumption by these states of their independence by peaceful means.

Mr. Eggar: We have not recognised de jure the incorporation of Estonia, Latvia and Lithuania into the Soviet Union, because of the unacceptable way in which it was carried out. It follows that we would respect the right of these former independent states to determine their own future status in a peaceful manner, as is indeed provided for in the Soviet constitution.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pollution

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what evidence he has on the extent to which the proposed set-aside scheme will cause a reduction in pollution caused by agricultural activities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what evidence he has on the extent to which the diversification scheme will reduce pollution caused by agricultural activities; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he has evidence on the extent to which the introduction of environmentally sensitive areas has resulted in a reduction in pollution caused by agricultural practices in those areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: In my report to Parliament later this year on the first year's operation of the environmentally sensitive areas, I will be considering among many other things, the evidence available on their impact on pollution. We shall also be monitoring the impact of the set-aside scheme which we announced on the 14 June. The main aim of the farm diversification grant scheme is to provide additional non-agricultural sources of income for farmers and it is not therefore likely greatly to affect pollution from agricultural activities but I shall obviously keep this question in mind.

Nitrates

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to reduce the levels of nitrates as a result of the Hatton catchment nitrate study.

Mr. Gummer: The Government are currently looking at a mumber of options for further action to reduce nitrate pollution—including those identified in the Hatton study. A publicity campaign was launched earlier this year with the support of interested organisations aimed at encouraging farmers to adopt practices which minimise the risk of nitrate loss. The agricultural development and advisory service also takes every opportunity to put the message across in the course of its regular contact with the farming community.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 13 to 15 June in Luxembourg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Minister for State and I attended this Council of Agricultural Ministers of the European Community, which began on Monday afternoon, 13 June, and finished last Friday morning.

The Council agreed to two directives harmonising charges for meat inspection and bringing the standards for export-approved and non-export slaughterhouses closer into line. Other member states were strongly opposed, partly on the ground that it would have been administratively cumbersome, to our preference that the harmonised inspection charges should be based on the principle that the charges should equal the actual costs of inspection in all cases. We did however in the end secure agreement to an increase from 50 to 55 per cent. in the reduction which is permitted from the standard charges where the actual costs of inspection are low. The result of this is to minimise the effect of the new arrangements on United Kingdom slaughterhouses. The arrangements will come into effect on 1 January 1991. The harmonised charges and the 55 per cent. reduction factor will be reviewed by the Council in 1992. The Council also agreed a directive laying down animal health requirements for trade in cattle semen, and a directive dealing with safeguards against the spread of enzootic bovine leucosis.

There was also a short introductory discussion on the Commission's revised proposals for income aids.

The major part of the Council was taken up with further negotiations on prices and other support arrangemens for agricultural commodities for 1988-89. I very much regret that, just as it seemed that agreement was in reach after prolonged and difficult discussions the negotiations broke down when the Greek Minister invoked the Luxembourg compromise, signalling that the matter was so important for him that he wished discussion to continue until there could be unanimous agreement. The 11 other member states including ourselves were prepared to accept the compromise package proposed by the presidency and Commission at that stage. Negotiations will have to be concluded at a date still to be determined.

Set-aside Scheme

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the interaction between the set-aside scheme announced on 14 June and the arrangements for environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. MacGregor: The schemes have separate objectives. Moreover, while set-aside applies throughout the United Kingdom, environmentally sensitive areas are limited to particular localities.

Those farming within ESAs will be able to join the set-aside scheme provided they meet the conditions, but to avoid double payment on particular parcels of land, farmers will not be eligible for set-aside for any land to which an ESA agreement applies. A farmer in an ESA will have to consult the ESA project officer about the management of any land to be set-aside before he makes an application under the scheme.

Mr. John: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food upon what estimated take-up by farmers he based his agriculture set-aside proposals announced on 14 June.

Mr. MacGregor: As this is an entirely new scheme, and it is voluntary, it is not possible to make a scientific assessment of take-up in advance.

Mr. Tony Lester-Card (Statement)

Mr. John: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action he proposes to take against Mr. Tony Lester-Card, a civil servant in his Department, whose public statement reported in Farmers' Weekly of 8 June on the inefficacy of voluntary agricultural set-aside schemes was repudiated by him on 14 June, Official Report, column 178.

Mr. MacGregor: As I explained to the House on 14 June, the official mentioned was not speaking for the Government.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The personnel records for officials at grade 3 and above in my Department include information on schools attended. However, this information has not been analysed in the terms of the question asked.

Newcastle Disease

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to whether vaccines in use in the United Kingdom to protect poultry from Newcastle disease will protect against strains found in north America.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have no reason to suppose that the Newcastle disease vaccines licensed in the United Kingdom, when used in accordance with the manufacturers' instructions, are not effective against strains of the virus found in north America.

Cereals (Testing)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the estimated costs for (a) Cambridge and (b) Edinburgh which make up the joint total of £233,000 for cereals test operations given in paragraph 253 of the report of the review on plant testing and seed certification.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 17 June 1988]: The estimated costs for 1987-88 were £152,000 for Cambridge and £81,000 for Edinburgh. The estimate for Cambridge includes costs for centralised activities not undertaken at Edinburgh.

Sugar

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest estimate of the current annual production and consumption of sugar in the European Economic Community.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 June 1988]: For 1987-88, the Commission estimates European Community sugar production at 13·198 million tonnes, including 12·384 million tonnes of quota production, and sugar consumption at 10·750 million tonnes.

Budgie Seed

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the European Economic Community Commission's proposal to increase the levy on budgie seed will be considered by the Council of Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 June 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) today.

SCOTLAND

Homicides

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been convicted in Scotland of homicide since the abolition of the death penalty for murder.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: From 1966 until 1987, a total of 749 people were convicted of murder. Comparable figures for culpable homicide are only available from 1969. From 1969 until 1987, a total of 647 people were convicted of culpable homicide.

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons convicted of homicide in Scotland and released on licence or termination of sentence have been convicted of homicide again since the abolition of the death penalty.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since 1965, three people released on licence from a previous murder conviction have been convicted of murder. Comparable information about homicides other than murder is not readily available and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

Speed Limits

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his criteria in determining whether to grant a request from a regional roads authority to change an existing speed limit; how many such requests he has received from Highland region over the past five years and of these (a) how many have been approved and (b) how many have been turned down; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The criteria for determining appropriate speed limits apply throughout Great Britain. They are set out in Scottish Development Department circular No. 18/80 and were issued after full consultation with various representative bodies, including the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Association of Chief Police Officers (Scotland).

Thirty applications have been received from Highland regional council in the last five years. Nine applications have been approved, 18 have been turned down and three are currently under consideration. My right hon. and learned Friend refuses consent for a speed limit only if he is satisfied that the relevant criteria are not met.

Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Lord Advocate will instruct the procurators fiscal for the Borders and Grampian regions to institute proceedings against the Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust for breaches of charity law as it applies in Scotland on the grounds (a) that charitable status applies only to organisations dealing with endangered animal species and (b) that expenditure on extinguishing netting rights unlawfully discriminates in favour of proprietors of rod fishing rights and against the interests of netsmen.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No reports alleging breaches of the criminal law have been received by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate or by any of the procurators fiscal in Grampian, Highlands and Islands region or Lothian and Borders region against the Atlantic Salmon Conservation Trust. Accordingly the Lord Advocate has had no occasion to instruct procurators fiscal in this matter.

Health Boards (Grievances)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, as part of its review of procedures relating to individual employee's grievances with local health boards, he will direct the General Whitley council to consider any changes intended to expedite settlement of such grievances.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: While my right hon. and learned Friend approves General Whitley council agreements in Scotland, he has no power to direct the deliberations of that council.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, as part of its review of procedures relating to individual employee's grievances with local health boards, he will direct the General Whitley council to seek to obtain statistics on the average time for settlement of disputes between local health boards and the British Medical Association and on the total cost to the Health Service in locum salaries, ex-gratia settlements and administrative costs of such disputes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I believe that the hon. Member's concern may arise from a constituency case about which we are in correspondence, and I shall write to him.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will describe the remit of the current review being undertaken by the General Whitley council on procedures relating to individual employees' grievances with health boards; and what options are under consideration.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no formal remit for the current review of General Whitley council grievance procedures. Informal exploratory discussions between management and staff sides are taking place which may lead to formal negotiations on a new agreement. It remains to be seen what options emerge during discussion and negotiation.

Remand

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest figure for the average time spent on remand for men and women.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The estimated average periods spent in custody on remand in 1987 were as follows.

	Days
Men	20·1
Women	17·6

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of (a) women and (b) men were put in prison while waiting for trial and subsequently freed over each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available.

Cornton Vale Prison

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to ensure that Cornton Vale prison benefits from having (a) a state registered nurse and (b) a drama therapist.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am satisfied that the present complement of seven nursing staff at Cornton Vale, who are all state-enrolled nurses, is adequate for the present requirements of the establishment. There are no plans to employ a drama therapist.

Elsie Inglis Maternity Hospital

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central, of 10 June, Official Report, column 723, he will place a list of all those who made representations to him in connection with the closure of Elsie Inglis maternity hospital, and a copy of all such representations, in the Library.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Health Boards (Ancillary Services)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what arrangements he has made for health boards ancillary services tenders to be considered by English health authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Legal Aid

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average time taken by the Scottish Legal Aid Board in dealing with applications for legal aid; and what were the figures in each of the four previous years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations the Lord Advocate has received about the working of the legal aid system in Scotland; and if he plans to speed up the time taken in dealing with legal aid applications.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Since the Scottish Legal Aid Board assumed its duties on 1 April 1987, the Lord Advocate has received nine such representations from right hon. and hon. Members, bodies representing the legal profession and the general public. They covered delays in the determination of applications for legal aid, refusals of legal aid and other matters. Legal aid is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend, who announced on 15 December 1987 our intention to make regulations to assist in improving procedures. These will be laid shortly. The Scottish Legal Aid Board is also considering an expedited civil application procedure.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Rifkind: Two of the Department's staff at grade 3 and above attended independent schools, 11 attended schools which were grant-aided by central Government and 19 attended schools which were managed by an education authority.

Education (Opting Out)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the progress of the leak inquiry into the unauthorised disclosure of memoranda between his Department and the Prime Minister's office on opting out of the education system.

Mr. Rifkind: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to him on 16 May 1988 at column 350.

DEFENCE

US Bases

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency of all United States bases and military facilities in the United Kingdom;

(2) if he will list those Royal Air Force bases that are allocated for use as operating bases by United States forces, signifying which have been equipped with minimum essential facilities;

(3) if he will list the location by parliamentary constituency, of all military and civilian facilities in the United Kingdom that are allocated for use by United States forces in wartime.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The following bases and facilities have been made available for use by United States forces in the United Kingdom:

Base and Designation	Constituency
Main Operating Bases
RAF Alconbury	Huntingdon
RAF Bentwaters	Suffolk, Coastal
RAF Fairford	Cirencester and Tewkesbury
RAF Lakenheath	Bury St. Edmunds

RAF Swingate	Dover
RAF Thurso	Caithness and Sutherland
RAF Uxbridge	Uxbridge
NATO Armaments Depots:
Broughton Moor	Workington
Glen Douglas	Dumbarton

The following Royal Air Force and Procurement Executive airfields, all of which have sufficient operating facilities to enable them to fulfil their role, are allocated for use as collocated operating bases by United States forces:

Collocated operating bases	Constituency
Abingdon	Oxford West and Abingdon
Bedford	North Bedfordshire
Benson	Henley
Boscombe Down	Salisbury
Brawdy	Pembroke
Coltishall	Norfolk, North
Cottesmore	Rutland and Melton
Finningley	Don Valley
Odiham	Basingstoke
Scampton	Gainsborough and Horncastle
Waddington	Lincoln
Wittering	Huntingdon

In addition to the bases and facilities listed in the tables, a number of other facilities would be made available to the United States in wartime, but details of the sites involved are classified.

NATO (US Units)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis United States forces units in the United Kingdom not assigned to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation operate in support of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: All United States forces in the United Kingdom contribute to the security of the United Kingdom and the NATO Alliance generally. The formal assignment to NATO of such forces is a matter for the United States Government.

RAF Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose and function of the proposed communications mast at Royal Air Force Greenham Common.

Mr. Freeman: The proposed communications tower at RAF Greenham Common would act as a communications relay station for United States forces based in Europe in support of NATO.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made any decision on the future use of the United States Air Force facilities at Daws Hill, High Wycombe, that are used in support of the cruise missile deployment at Greenham Common and Molesworth, once those missiles have been removed.

Mr. Ian Stewart: High Wycombe air station at Daws Hill provides administrative and logistic support to the United States Air Force in London and south-east England and will thus have a continuing role after the departure of the ground-launched cruise missiles currently based at RAF Greenham Common and RAF Molesworth.

Sidewinder

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what improvements to the Sidewinder missile are planned to be in operation during the next two years; and which of these improvements result from experience gained in the Falklands war.

Mr. Sainsbury: We constantly seek to improve the performance of all our weapons. However, it is not our practice to give details of the operational capability of individual systems. For the performance of Sidewinder missile in the Falklands campaign, I refer the hon. Member to paragraph 222 of "The Falklands Campaign: The Lessons" (Cm. 8758) and paragraph 56 of "Implementing the Lessons of the Falklands Campaign: Government Response to the Fourth Report from the Defence Committee Session 1986-87".

Arms Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total value of the United Kingdom arms exports in the last five years for which figures are available; what equivalent information he has about the United States of America; what is his estimate for 1988-89 for the United Kingdom; and what equivalent information he has for the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: The total recorded value of deliveries of United Kingdom defence export equipment for the calendar years 1982-86 is assessed at £10,198 million. The equivalent United States figure (derived from the United States arms control and disarmament agency) is $51,460 million. Both figures are at current prices.

Equivalent figures for 1987 and 1988 United Kingdom defence exports are not yet available. (SDE Volume 2 gives only an incomplete figure for 1987). I am not aware of any estimates for United States arms exports for the same period.

The United Kingdom figures refer to actual deliveries of defence equipment as opposed to defence sales contracts signed during 1987 (vide para 420 Vol. 1 SDE 88).

NATO—Warsaw Pact Forces

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the latest balance between the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and Warsaw Pact naval forces.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The latest figures showing the balance between the principal naval forces of NATO and the Warsaw Pact are shown in figure 17 of the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1988".

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has now received any request from the Gibraltar coroner in relation to military personnel involved in the Gibraltar operation appearing at the inquest into the deaths of three IRA personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 17 May at columns 369-70.

Jaguar Aircraft (Dropped Fuel Tank)

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to the circumstances in which an RAF Jaguar dropped a 10 ft long auxiliary fuel tank near the village of Halberton, Devon, at approximately 16.30 hours on Tuesday 14 June; and what effective action he proposes to take to prevent such an event happening again.

Mr. Sainsbury: At about 4.15 pm on 14 June, during a routine training flight, an external fuel tank was inadvertently released from a Procurement Executive Jaguar aircraft of the Empire test pilots' school at Boscombe Down, Wiltshire. The tank fell on open ground near Halberton. We have received no reports of consequential injury to any person or livestock or damage to property. A unit inquiry has been convened and I expect it to report on the incident in about two weeks' time. Meanwhile it would be premature to prejudge the outcome of the investigation or to predict any measures which it may suggest to be necessary.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether he has carried out monitoring exercises in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively;

(2) whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave him on 17 June.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry of Defence has an equal opportunities action plan which is reviewed on an annual basis. The aim of the plan is to set out actions required in respect of women, ethnic minorities and people with disabilities in relation to employment, recruitment, training and promotion within the Department. For example these actions include ethnic monitoring of recruitment, programmes for advertising in the ethnic press and including ethnic minorities in recruitment literature, and a review of women-only training.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Sainsbury: The proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in the Ministry of Defence who were educated at private schools is 39·2 per cent. and at state schools is 60·8 per cent.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to introduce a computerised automatic flight planning system for the United Kingdom low-flying system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: Plans to introduce a computerised notification and deconfliction warning system in the United Kingdom low-flying system are currently under consideration.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are being introduced to improve the safety of night low-level flying over the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 May 1988]: The deconfliction warning that would be provided by the introduction of a computerised notification and warning system, which is currently under consideration, could be expected to contribute to the safety of night low-level flying over the United Kingdom.

Missing Weapons

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether efforts are made to record all military weapons which go missing in the United Kingdom, which belong to (a) the Army, (b) the Royal Air Force and (c) the Royal Navy; and if he will indicate in a table in the Official Report, by category of weapon, as recorded, such information as is available to him relating to weapons which have gone missing in each year since 1 January 1980.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 7 June 1988]: Instructions require all weapon losses to be reported. Such losses are investigated by the appropriate authority in each service. The figures for small arms weapons lost and not recovered by year since 1980 are as follows:

Weapon	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	Total

LMG	—	—	—	—	—	—	—	1	1

Notes:

1. These figures do not include small arms weapons lost and not recovered from Cadet units or Service museums.
2. Figures for RN and RM not available before 1985.

Helicopters (Rescues)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish figures for the last available three years stating the number of rescues carried out in Devon and Cornwall each year by helicopter, proportioning the figures attributable to each helicopter station; what plans he has to make alterations to the service in Devon and Cornwall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 June 1988]: Records are not kept of rescues in individual counties. The following information relates to an area from 3°W to 7°W and from 49°45′N to 51°15′N. This covers all of Devon and Cornwall (including the Scilly Isles and Lundy) with the exception of some very small parts of Devon; a large part of Somerset; and also the adjacent sea areas. The figures relate to persons rescued by military search and rescue helicopters and record the number of people who were recovered alive from a hazard or who were transported for urgent medical attention.

Persons rescued in or near Devon and Cornwall

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Boulmer	—	—	4
Brawdy	4	1	4
Chivenor	50	46	59
Culdrose	74	55	51
Lee-on-Solent	—	1	1

Aircraft from these stations also rescued many people in other areas. The hon. Member may be aware that on 1 April 1988 the readiness states of the search and rescue Sea Kings at RNAS Culdrose were improved to enable them to respond to incidents within 15 minutes by day, and 45 minutes by night. As regards other decisions which may affect the service in Devon and Cornwall, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 13 June 1988 to my hon. Friends the Members for Tayside, North (Mr. Walker) and for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) at column 71.

Denmark (Nuclear-capable Ships)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his current policy towards the use of Danish ports by nuclear-capable ships of the Royal Navy.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 17 June 1988]: It remains our policy neither to confirm nor deny the presence of nuclear weapons aboard particular HM ships. The new Danish Government have confirmed that visits by ships of the Royal Navy can continue under the same procedures which obtained previously and a normal programme of visits to Danish ports by HM ships is planned.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Heart Surgery

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons in Northern Ireland presently require heart surgery and await notification that bed space has become available in hospital; and how many heart operations have been carried out weekly in Northern Ireland hospitals during the last 12 months.

Mr. Needham: At 31 March 1988 the waiting list for admission for cardiac surgery totalled 707. The Royal Victoria hospital is the only hospital in Northern Ireland to provide cardiac surgery; the number of heart operations, excluding catheterisations, carried out during the period from 28 September 1987 to 6 March 1988 were as follows:

Week Commencing	Number of Operations
28 September 1987	6
5 October 1987	4
12 October 1987	10
19 October 1987	6
26 October 1987	5

8 February 1988	11
15 February 1988	9
22 February 1988	6
29 February 1988	10

Information on the weekly number of operations carried out before 28 September 1987 or after 6 March 1988 is not readily available.

WALES

Lithotripsy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) where, in Wales, hospitals are equipped to treat kidney stones by using lithotripsy; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will release funds to enable Clwyd area health authority to purchase equipment and to appoint staff to enable them to treat kidney stones by lithotripsy method; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the cost of equipping a hospital in Wales with lithotripsy method.

Mr. Grist: Lithotripters are a developing technology which is being monitored by the Department. The cost of equipping a hospital with a lithotripter is estimated to be in the region of £700,000 capital for installation and £200,000 annually for running costs. No hospital in Wales is presently equipped with the technology and the Department have no plans to fund Clwyd health authority to acquire a lithotripter. It is open to the authority to consider appropriate arrangements to obtain lithotripsy treatment from those centres which provide the service.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients are treated annually in each of the Welsh area health authorities, for kidney stones.

Mr. Grist: The latest available information, for 1986, is given in the table:

District health authority	Patients[1]
Clwyd	97
East Dyfed	28
Pembrokeshire	22
Gwent	144
Gwynedd	127
Mid Glamorgan	96
Powys	2
South Glamorgan	125
West Glamorgan	162

[1] Number of discharges (including deaths) from National Health Service hospitals with diagnosis Calculus of Kidney and Ureter.

Maternity Units (Closure)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many maternity units have been closed since 1979, or are planned to close, in each health authority area in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Since January 1979 a total of 14 maternity units have closed and four have opened in Wales. The breakdown by health authority is as follows:—

Maternity Units

	Closed	Opened
Clwyd	5	1
East Dyfed	2	—
Gwent	—	—
Gwynedd	1	—
Mid Glamorgan	2	2
Pembrokeshire	2	1
Powys	—	—
South Glamorgan	—	—
West Glamorgan	2	—

Closure proposals have been submitted to my right hon. Friend for decision in respect of St. David's hospital, Bangor, Gwynedd, and the unit at County hospital, Griffithstown, in Gwent.

Nuclear Accidents

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will list those circulars produced by his Department relating to nuclear accidents and the response of the emergency services.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following are the circulars:

146/75
WHC (76)48
WHC (85)34
Letter dated 10 September 1985

Emergency plans for individual nuclear installations are drawn up by the operator in consultation with the emergency services and are available at local libraries in the vicinity of the plant. A description of the measures to be taken in the event of an emergency at any licensed nuclear installation in the United Kingdom is contained in the Health and Safety Executive's booklet "Emergency Plans for Civil Nuclear Installations", published by HMSO. The lead within Government for nuclear accident planning in respect of installations in England and Wales is taken by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Tonyrefail Railway Station

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether, pursuant to the statement on page 31 of his valleys initiative, it is proposed as part of new park and ride facilities at Tonyrefail to rebuild the disused Tonyrefail railway station and to relay the track necessary to reconnect it to the rail network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I apologise for an unfortunate clerical error; the reference in page 31 should have been to Tirphil and not Tonyrefail. I am arranging for the error to be corrected in future prints of the document.

Water Supplies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken by the Welsh water authority to reduce aluminium levels in water supplies in Wales.

Mr. Ian Grist: The Welsh water authority has an on-going programme of remedial works to water supplies in Wales containing levels of aluminium above that specified in EC directive 80/778/EEC (the drinking water directive). These works are part of an overall programme, which will be mostly completed by 1990, to ensure that all drinking water supplied complies with the provisions of the directive.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what studies have been conducted by his Department, the Welsh water authority and other bodies, respectively, into a possible link between high aluminium levels in water and senility; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No such studies have been conducted by the Department or the Welsh water authority.

Research at Southampton university is said to indicate a correlation between Alzheimer's disease (which causes premature senility) and aluminium in drinking water. The report has not been published and so it is not yet possible for medical advisers to comment. When it is published it will be assessed and appropriate action taken if necessary.

In the United Kingdom and many other countries, aluminium salts are used widely as coagulants in water treatment to remove undesirable suspended contamination and potentially harmful bacteria. Aluminium can also occur naturally in some raw waters. In the United Kingdom, however, the concentrations of aluminium in tap water are controlled mainly by the efficiency with which aluminium is removed during water treatment, irrespective of the source of aluminium.

The current standard which the Government have adopted, after taking advice from medical experts, for aluminium concentrations in drinking water is that contained within directive 80/778/EEC (the drinking water directive). Most water supplies comply and, where they do not, the Welsh water authority has a programme of remedial action.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Peter Walker: All officers in my Department at grade 3 and above were educated in state secondary schools. However two of these 14 had some of their education in private schools.

Cancer Treatment (Clwyd and Gwynedd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the English health authorities and with Welsh health authorities, indicating which, to agree the terms of reference for a comprehensive study of all cancer treatment services as they relate to patients from Clwyd and Gwynedd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The terms of reference of a study of cancer treatment services for north Wales patients have been the subject of consultation with officials of Clwyd, Gwynedd, Powys, Shropshire and Wolverhampton health authorities and North Western, Mersey and West Midlands regional health authorities.

Satellite Radiotherapy Centre

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to see the establishment of a satellite radiotherapy centre in north Wales related to cancer radiotherapy, currently given to north Wales patients in Wirral, Cheshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: A review of cancer treatment services to north Wales patients, to be mounted as soon as possible, will address the feasibility of providing a satellite radiotherapy centre in north Wales.

Rents

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish estimates on the likely changes in average rents paid in (a) council housing, (b) housing association properties and (c) privately rented housing in (i) Wales and (ii) the area covered by the valleys initiative as a consequence of the Housing Bill.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Bill will have no effect on the determination of council house rents: this will continue to be a matter for the local authorities. It is not possible to give reliable estimates, for the whole or any part of Wales, of the Bill's possible implications for housing association or private sector rents. Rents charged by associations will continue to reflect the cost of providing accommodation and the availability of public subsidy. As regards private lettings, existing tenants will continue to be entitled to a fair rent, while rents for new lettings will primarily be for agreement between landlords and tenants.

Council House Completions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the totals of council homes completed by Welsh councils in each year since 1974 and the estimated totals for the next five years.

Mr. Grist: The total number of council homes completed by Welsh councils in each year since 1974 is show in the table:

	Local authority completions[1]
1974	3,247
1975	7,967
1976	7,369
1977	6,890
1978	4,459
1979	3,326
1980	3,702
1981	3,530
1982	1,875

Forecasts of housing provision in different tenure categories are not made by the Department.

Income Support

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish estimates of the likely changes in Wales this year and for the next five years, in the total amounts claimed in income support in (a) Wales and (b) the area of Wales covered by the valleys initiative.

Mr. Peter Walker: No Government, past or present, have ever produced estimates of this nature.

Private House Completions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the totals of new private homes (a) started and (b) completed in each local district council area in Wales in each year since 1974 and the estimated totals for the next fives years.

Mr. Grist: The required information on private housing starts and completions from 1974 to 1986 is published in "Local Housing Statistics" copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Data for 1987 are given in the following table.

Forecasts of housing provision in different tenure categories are not made by the Department.

Local Government (Labour Statistics)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish estimates based on experience elsewhere of the changes in the numbers employed by local government in the areas covered by his valleys initiative following the implementation of the privatisation proposals in the Local Government Act 1988.

Mr. Peter Walker: Phased implementation of the competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988 will not begin until 1 August 1989. Estimates of changes in the numbers employed by local government as a result of competition are not available. If local authorities are already competitive there would be no change. If they can improve their competitiveness it may make resources available for other activities.

National Health Service (Privatisation)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish estimates on the likely job losses or gains in the National Health Service that would result in (a) Wales and (b) the areas covered by the valleys initiative if the Government privatisation proposals are fully implemented.

Mr. Peter Walker: No such estimates are available. District health authorities in Wales have been encouraged to introduce competitive tendering for certain ancillary services. This, however, is not a policy of privatisation. The object is to compare the efficiency of in-house teams with that of private contractors. Authorities are asked to place contracts with whoever provides the lowest acceptable tender. To date, most tenders have remained in-house.

Budget (Income Tax Changes)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish estimates of the average change per household in income tax payments following the Budget in (a) Wales, (b) the area covered by the valleys initiative and (c) the south-east of England.

Mr. Peter Walker: I regret that regional estimates of the effect of the Budget changes are not available.

Rate Support Grant

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish amounts of rate support grant and other Government grants paid to all Welsh district and county councils each year since 1974, using 1974 as the base year expressed as 100.

Mr. Peter Walker: An index of the amounts of rate support grant and other Government grants paid to all Welsh district and county councils each year since 1974-75 as reported by local authorities is given in the table:

	1974-75 = 100
1974-75	100·0
1975-76	133·1
1976-77	151·3

Housing Association Homes

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the totals of housing association homes (a) started and (b) completed in the areas of Welsh district councils in each year since 1974 and the estimated totals for the next five years.

Mr. Grist: The required information on housing association starts and completions from 1974 to 1986 is published in "Local Housing Statistics" copies of which are available in the Library of the House. The corresponding information for 1987 is shown in the table.

Forecasts of housing provision in different tenure categories are not made by the Department.

TRANSPORT

Cycling

10. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what new efforts his Department is making to encourage cycling.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Safer cycling is a high priority. We have a continuous programme of research, and undertake advisory and promotional activities. We helped sponsor the Cyclists' Touring Club's new guide "Positive Cycling". I have just opened a major new cycle route in Exeter and innovative cycle schemes are being opened in Cheltenham and Darlington.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has had any communication with the European Commission over the implementation of the European Parliament report, "The Bicycle as a Means of Transport"; and whether his Department has taken any steps itself to fulfill the recommendations of the report, particularly with regard to paragraph 6 of the report concerning cycle tracks.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has had no communication from the European Commission over the implementation of a report from the European Parliament over cycling. We recognise cycle tracks as a means of enhancing the safety of cyclists. Other techniques, engineering treatments at danger spots such as some junctions and roundabouts, offer more generally applicable ways of helping cyclists.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps have been taken by his Department to ensure that Eurotunnel complies with its statutory responsibility to make provision for the conveyance by means of the shuttle trains of pedals cycles in the vehicles that will use the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: Eurotunnel is drawing up plans for the conveyance of pedal cycles on Channel tunnel shuttle trains. For safety reasons, it intends to transport cyclists in minibuses towing trailers carrying their cycles. The detailed arrangements will be submitted for approval by the intergovernmental commission.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent on providing cycling facilities in the last financial year for which figures are available; and how much local authorities have spent during this time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We spend much time on cycling. The Department spent £160,000 in 1987-88 on its programme of experimental cycling facilities. Figures are not collected centrally on the amounts spent by local authorities on cycle facilities, or on the Department's continuing expenditure on cycle elements in its trunk road improvement schemes.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of cycle track have been provided as a part of new and improved trunk roads during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not held centrally. I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Pedestrian Safety

19. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent measures his Department has taken to improve pedestrian safety.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have issued a number of leaflets to help local authorities reduce pedestrian casualties by improved road layout. On 17 May we co-sponsored a conference aimed at identifying the most promising new measures. A total of 95 per cent. of pedestrian casualties are in urban areas. First results from our "urban safety" pilot projects suggest that it is possible to reduce overall pedestrian casualties by 14 per cent. using an areawide approach. I am having copies of the reports placed in the Library.

British Rail (Privatisation)

20. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has made any studies of the potential for selling off rural railway lines.

Mr. David Mitchell: No.

Settle to Carlisle Line

21. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the organisations and individuals who have expressed an interest in buying the Settle to Carlisle railway line since 16 May.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. I regard such information as commercially confidential. It is for the organisation concerned to decide whether to seek publicity at this stage.

South-Western Region (Bypasses)

22. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new bypasses are scheduled to open in the south-western region in the near future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Four new trunk road bypasses will open in July. The Blackwater bypass in Cornwall will open early in the month. I hope soon to perform three opening ceremonies at Bridport in Dorset, Ilminster in Somerset, and—the most significant of all for the west country—Okehampton in Devon.

Motorways (Charges)

23. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what reduction in motorway congestion he would expect from the introduction of tolled fast lanes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No assessment has been made of such a proposal.

46. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has made any assessment of the economic impact of charging vehicles for the use of motorway fast lanes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tolling of individual lanes on existing motorways is impracticable. If we receive proposals for the construction of additional lanes on which tolls are to be charged we shall have a full assessment made of their effect. Meanwhile there is no need to do so in any detail.

Ferry Safety

24. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to seek to amend his powers to enforce safety improvements in ferry design on United Kingdom and foreign flagged ferries.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. I have the powers that I need under the Merchant Shipping Acts.

34. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he is satisfied that the IMO is in a position to agree improvements in ferry safety within acceptable time scales.

Mr. David Mitchell: In April this year the maritime safety committee of the IMO adopted amendments to the safety of life at sea convention 1974 in the minimum time permitted by the articles of that convention. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has already introduced regulations that apply those amendments to ships using our ports.

45. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what comments he has received from the IMO concerning his Department's research into roll-on roll-off ferry safety.

Mr. David Mitchell: Such comments as individual members of IMO have made welcomed my Department's research into ferry safety.

47. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with the IMO concerning ferry safety.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State addressed the 15th session of the assembly of the International Maritime Organisation on 9 November last year when he impressed on representatives the United Kingdom Government's's concern to secure early international agreement on measures to ensure the highest safety standards for roll-on roll-off ferries. The assembly sympathised with and supported this concern. The Maritime Safety committee, at its April meeting, considered and endorsed our first package of proposals on ferry safety, including new international requirements on indicator lights, television surveillance and supplementary emergency lighting. The committee also agreed, with the United Kingdom's active support, upon new damage stability requirements for passenger ships, as explained in the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 19 May, Official Report, columns 524-25.

Main Line Railway Stations

25. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise the question of the conditions of British Rail's main line stations.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The conditions of main line stations are purely a matter for British Rail, who are well aware of the importance of quality of service, in the widest sense. If the hon. Member has a particular area of concern perhaps he will write to British Rail (and copy his letter to me).

London Underground (Bakerloo Line)

26. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals there are to extend the southern end of Bakerloo line beyond the Elephant and Castle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is for the operators to bring forward investment proposals. Possible extensions to the Bakerloo line, together with other proposals to relieve congestion in the central area of London, are being considered as part of the central London rail study announced on 25 March 1988.

London Underground (Security)

27. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about security on the London Underground.

Mr. David Mitchell: Following my Department's report on crime on the Underground, London Underground Limited is implementing a wide-ranging programme of security measures with the support of £15 million made available by the Government.

Channel Tunnel

28. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement as to the amount of room the statutory authorities will need on a train using the Channel tunnel; and whether this will give rise to any special difficulties in rolling stock construction.

59. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what conditions as to space for their purposes the statutory authorities will impose on British Rail for trains using the Channel tunnel; and whether there will be any special conditions for rolling stock construction.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand that the Customs and immigration authorities are currently discussing their requirements with British Rail. Any agreed on-train requirements will be taken into account in the specification for the Channel tunnel rolling stock.

31. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about the provision of customs and immigration facilities for the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell).

54. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive from British Rail its report on additional rail routes to the Channel tunnel; and when he expects to publish it.

Mr. David Mitchell: I expect to receive British Rail's report in July, and that it will be published before Parliament rises for the recess.

Basildon (Ministerial Visit)

29. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the visit by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Eltham (Mr. Bottomley) to Basildon.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I visited Hawtal Whiting of Pitsea, Essex on 10 June to see at first hand the work of a United Kingdom company successfully applying new technology in its work for home and overseas customers, particularly in the field of vehicle safety.

A1 (Improvements)

30. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the three road improvements under way on the A1 in Yorkshire to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Work on the new Wetherby bypass is due to end in August 1988. The new interchange at Dishforth should open by the end of 1989. Resurfacing work on the Leeming bypass should be completed in July 1988.

Car Telephones

32. Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to stipulate that the only types of telephone permitted to be used by the driver of a car whilst in motion are those equipped with voice-activated dialling.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our advice is clear: anyone who can afford a car phone can afford a hands-free microphone.

Current legislation already places the responsibility on drivers to have proper control of their vehicles at all times. A driver who fails to do so as a result of distraction or lack of concentration is liable to prosecution.

There are no plans to introduce legislation to stipulate the type of car telephones permitted to be used.

Ship Discharges

33. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what changes he is planning in controls over discharges from ships in British coastal waters.

Mr. David Mitchell: There will be changes when annex V of the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships enters into force on 31 December, 1988, when new restrictions will be placed upon the discharge of garbage into the sea. My officials are consulting the industry before I lay subordinate legislation before the House. Other recent changes in controls have come about as a consequence of decisions at the second North sea conference held in London last year. Subsequently airborne surveillance of our coastal waters, in particular for oil discharges, was increased, and new arrangements set up to ensure ships suspected of violations are visited by marine surveyors when they enter not only United Kingdom ports, but ports in Europe.

Motorways

35. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will prepare a new motorway construction programme for Great Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are continuing to develop and improve the trunk road and motorway network. The need for further motorway development is closely monitored and new schemes are added to the programme as the need is identified. Motorways in Scotland and Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Wales.

British Rail (Rolling Stock and Locomotives)

36. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold discussions with the chairman of British Rail about the provision of rolling stock and locomotives for the 1990s.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I already hold frequent discussions with the chairman of BR on investment in new locomotives and rolling stock, for which BR plans to spend around £1 billion over the next five years, making this the biggest programme of locomotive and rolling stock renewal for decades.

Cars (Clamping)

37. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on research into alternatives to the clamping of cars in London and the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Current research into parking enforcement is concentrated in and around wheel clamping areas in London and now takes into account the effects of vehicle removal in these areas. Wheel clamping commands much public support. Evidence so far is that clamping is uniquely effective for those parking offences that do not cause danger or delay by obstruction. Parking research elsewhere is largely confined to evaluating the effectiveness of new kinds of parking payment equipment.

IPCS (Meetings)

38. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to meet representatives of the Institution of Professional Civil Servants involved in transport industries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans at present to do so.

British Rail (Privatisation)

39. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has conducted any studies of options for the sale of British Rail.

40. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans for the privatisation of British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have no plans at present for the privatisation of British Rail. But I am beginning to consider long-term options for the future and the possibilities of privatisation are not ruled out.

London Underground (Safety)

41. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his staff have had any discussions with London Regional Transport concerning its report on actions taken to improve safety since the King's Cross fire.

Mr. David Mitchell: Actions to improve safety on the Underground as a result of the King's Cross fire are matters for the board of LRT which is statutorily responsible for safety; they keep my officials fully informed.

42. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recommendations his Department has made to London Underground concerning safety improvements, following the King's Cross fire.

Mr. David Mitchell: The safe operation of London Underground is the responsibility of London Regional Transport. However LRT has explained to my Department its plans for improving safety following the King's Cross fire.

British Rail

43. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of British Rail; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State last met the chairman of British Rail on 24 May and discussed a wide range of matters of mutual interest.

55. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be meeting the chairman of British Rail on 27 July to discuss matters of current interest.

Drink-Driving Campaign

44. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made in his anti-drink and driving campaign.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Secretary of State launched the latest phase of the Government's campaign against drinking and driving on 15 June. This continues the "drinking and driving wrecks lives" theme from last year. We have now produced a new TV commercial to supplement the previous ones.

Our research shows that our campaigns are making an impact. There is evidence of a long-term reduction in the amount of drinking and driving.

We are greatly encouraged by the support of the private sector, and in particular the contribution of the brewing industry. New low and non-alcoholic beers have been introduced and sales are increasing rapidly.

We are determined to maintain the momentum of this campaign. Over 1,000 people each year are killed due to drinking and driving. It requires a major collective effort by all concerned to reduce this terrible toll.

London Underground (Automatic Ticket Barriers)

48. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications for passenger safety on the London Underground of the installation of automatic ticket barriers to replace manned ticket booths.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Underground Limited has discussed the safety implications of the new system with the railway inspectorate. All the new automatic ticket barriers can be opened simultaneously from any one of at least three separate places on each station.

Inspecting officers have visited a number of stations where the new barriers have been installed and are satisfied that the arrangements for the emergency opening of the gates are satisfactory. There will be a wider overall opening in the barrier line with the new system compared with the old manned ticket booth system. Therefore a better means of escape in an emergency will be provided.

Motorways (Franchisement)

49. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans for franchising individual motorway lanes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Not of existing lanes. If we receive proposals for the construction of new lanes on a franchise basis we shall consider them.

Autoguide System (London)

50. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the autoguide system to be in operation in central London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope that a pilot autoguide scheme will be operating in London by 1990, provided that Parliament grants the necessary powers and private industry makes a satisfactory proposal. The pilot scheme is intended to provide the basis for a fully commercial autoguide service, to which the public can subscribe in the early 1990s.

Lead-free Petrol

51. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has of how many vehicles on the road could be adapted to take lead-free petrol.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Nearly half the cars on the road could use or be easily adapted to use unleaded petrol. About 2 million cars currently on the road could use unleaded petrol without modification and about 7 million others could be easily adapted to do so.

London (Public Transport)

52. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further plans he has to improve public transport in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government have approved investment by London Regional Transport of £365 million for this year and for Network SouthEast the planned investment is £197 million per annum on average over the next five years. We look forward to receiving next month the initial report of the central London rail study on improvements to London's rail services in the longer term. London Buses will be restructured into smaller units, providing some benefits as a result of increased competition; and in the early 1990s the benefits of deregulation will further improve service for the public.

A1 (Ministerial Visit)

53. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last made an official visit to any part of the A1 in Yorkshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State saw the constructional works on the new A1 Wetherby bypass on 13 December 1987. During his visit he inspected conditions on the road north of Wetherby.

Radioactive Waste

56. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has met representatives of the Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive to discuss the transportation of radioactive waste and other nuclear materials; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No, but regular contact is maintained at official level.

Passenger Transport Authorities

57. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has made for monitoring and acting upon the effects of the change in funding of passenger transport authorities, in the light of the proposed community charge.

Mr. David Mitchell: We shall be watching with interest metropolitan district expenditure billed from the PTAs and indicators of output made available annually by the PTES. The responsibility for deciding the levels of service will remain as now with the district representatives making up the PTAs.

Severn Crossing

58. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress with the provision of a second Severn crossing; and when construction is likely to be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Preparatory work on the second Severn crossing is progressing well. Survey work necessary to develop the design of the crossing is under way and consultations with interested parties are continuing. This would enable the bridge to be completed by the mid-1990s if the build up of traffic needs it by then and Parliament so decides.

M25-M23 (Traffic Delay)

60. Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why traffic turning south from the junction of the M25 and M23 was delayed for over 50 minutes at about noon on Saturday 11 June; who is responsible for co-ordinating the work of the police and other authorities to ensure that traffic is not unnecessarily delayed and motorists are informed when approaching motorway junctions that an alternative route should be used; why no attempt to reduce congestion was made on this occasion; and if he will review his Department's policy to ensure that traffic flows are maintained.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The delays on 11 June were caused by lane closures imposed while a deflectograph machine measured the structural condition of the road. The county council, as the Department's agent, is responsible for co-ordinating lane closures and traffic management. The work was undertaken at short notice to take advantage of the availability of the machine and favourable weather conditions. I regret the inconvenience to motorists. We will aim to avoid similar hold-ups.

Wild Animals (Crossings)

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his Department does to assist wild animals in crossing busy roads and railways.

Mr. David Mitchell: On trunk roads the Department takes special measures to protect wildlife. Examples are deer runs to provide for safe crossing and special fencing and reflectors designed to frighten animals from straying on to roads. Special road signs advise motorists of 150 sites where migrating toads cross during the spawning season. British Rail takes similar measures where practicable, including provision of gaps in electric rails where there are known badger runs.

Roadworks

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the effect of construction prices on his plans for road building and maintenance this year.

Mr. Channon: We are achieving a high level of activity in road building and maintenance. Our planned spending on capital items is over 30 per cent. more in real terms than in 1978-79. Spending on roads this year is at an all time record level of over £1 billion.

We are also making more rapid progress with schemes than expected. I have reviewed the scheduling of our work. All work currently in hand will continue. I shall continue to give high priority to safety schemes, though there will be implications for the phasing of major reconstruction works. My aim remains to start within the year all planned new construction schemes which are ready.

Motor Cyclists (Prescription-lensed Goggles)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on helping those motor cyclists with prescription-lensed goggles comply with the eye protectors regulations.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Amending regulations exempting existing prescription lensed goggles and postponing until 1 April 1989 the requirement for new ones to be approved and marked to BS 4110 were laid before the House today. The regulations also permit the use of glass lensed goggles approved to an earlier version of the standard which did not require marking with the letter "A" to show abrasion resistance. The regulations will come into force in early July.

M1 (Southbound Carriageway Congestion)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the causes of congestion on the southbound carriageway of the M1 between junctions 15 and 12 between 20.00 and 22.00 hours on Sunday 12 June, and what immediate action he intends to take to prevent a recurrence.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Southbound traffic on this section of M1 is very heavy on Sunday afternoons and evenings. A fatal accident near junction 12 at 18.30 hours on 12 June caused congestion to build up rapidly. The delays extended throughout the evening.

An experimental automatic incident detection system is being installed on the northbound carriageway of the M1 between junctions 10 and 19. No immediate measures are to be taken on the southbound carriageway until the results have been evaluated. We continue the work of engineering, education, enforcement, exhortation and example which is designed to cut casualties, their causes and consequences by one third in 12 years.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the last 30 months I have neither needed to know nor asked. I do not intend to start now. The hon. Member could associate information in "Whitaker's" and "Who's Who".

Motor Cycle Leg Guards

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he made of the cost of providing motor cycle leg guards when considering his policy towards their future fitting on motor cycles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: It might range between 3 and 10 per cent. of the cost of a new motor cycle. Cost and benefits are always taken into account in considering safety specifications to cut deaths and injuries. In the case of leg guards the cost would vary according to the type of motor cycle, its equipment, the manufacturer's design and production methods.

Motor Cycles (Accidents)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many injuries there have been from road accidents involving motor cycles; and at what cost of treatment, over the most recent period for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

Number of casualties in accidents involving motor cycles Great Britain: 1986

Killed	Seriously injured	Slightly injured	All casualties
915	17,678	41,754	60,347
Of these, pedestrian casualties were:
119	1,360	2,909	4,388

Number of casualties among motor cycle users Great Britain: 1986

Killed	Seriously injured	Slightly injured	All casualties
762	15,704	35,814	52,280

The estimated medical and ambulance costs of all accidents involving motor cycles were £42 million, out of a total of £150 million for road accident casualties, at 1986 prices; 406 of the pedestrian casualties were incurred at zebra crossings.

North Circular Road (Subsidence)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long the 5 ft wide hole in the middle of the northbound carriageway of the Barking to South Woodford relief road north of the viaduct over the Barking to Fenchurch Street railway line will take to repair; whether other structural defects have appeared; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Neil Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set up an inquiry, with the results to be made public, into the circumstances of the subsidence on the northbound outside lane of the South Woodford to Barking relief road (north circular) between Barking and Ilford which occurred on or about 7 June; what action will be taken against those responsible; how much compensation will be received for the loss of use of part of the road; and when the repair work will be completed.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Repairs will be carried out as quickly as possible. The subsidence was caused by the failure of a connection between a drainage gully and the main drain for the road, some 5 ft below the central reservation. Water draining through the gully washed away material below the surface.

As this occurred during the one-year maintenance period following the road's opening, the relevant contractor is responsible for the repairs at his own expense.

A considerable amount of material has blocked the main drain. Clearing this may involve further excavations and temporary traffic restrictions.

Roads (Private Investment)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the organisations and individuals who have expressed an interest in private sector investment in the provision of roads.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Much interest has been shown. I wrote to a number of firms asking for ideas on how to improve the country's transport infrastructure. Over 30 responded.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the campaign against vehicle excise duty evasion in the north-west.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The recent campaign against vehicle excise duty evasion in the north-west was run in conjunction with the Cumbria, Cheshire, Lancashire and Greater Manchester police forces. Two weeks of extensive local publicity in early May, to encourage motorists to license their vehicles voluntarily, were followed by a fortnight of intensified police activity to catch evaders who had failed to heed the warnings given. More than 1,400 offenders have so far been reported for prosecution. I shall write to my hon. Friend when the full results are available.

Home Defence Exercises

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 25 April to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms Ruddock), Official Report, column 70, if he will list the sites occupied by public sector transport undertakings at which exercise activities will take place in any or all of the military home defence exercises Eastern Shield, Capital Guard, Drakes Drum, Autumn Tiger, Northern Crusade, Western Encounter, Triple Crown and Strong Link; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. It would not be in the public interest to disclose these sites.

ATL Holdings

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many public service vehicle licences are held by ATL Holdings Ltd. or any of its subsidiary companies; when they were granted; how long they have been held; and what were the variations in those licences in the last five years;

(2) how many times the north-west traffic commissioners have reduced the public service vehicle licences held by ATL Holdings; on what dates; for which companies; and on how many vehicles;

(3) on how many occasions, and on which dates, ATL Holdings has had any of its public service vehicle licences reduced because of road safety violations or the use of unsafe vehicles.

Mr. David Mitchell: ATL Holdings does not hold a PSV operator's licence. The current licence of its subsidiary Yelloway Motor Services Ltd., was granted on 8 April 1988 and its first licence on 1 March 1982. The current licence of Crosville Motor Services was granted on 17 August 1987, and its first licence on 1 August 1981. The current licence of SUT Ltd. was granted on 19 June 1987 and its first on 1 May 1987. The current licence of Yelloway Trathens Express was granted on 1 November 1986 and its first on 28 November 1985.

The number of vehicles which Yelloways Motor Services is authorised to operate on its PSV operator's licence was reduced from 50 to 35 with effect from 1 June 1987 because of severe maintenance problems. It was further reduced from 35 to 30 on 8 April 1988 on account of new prohibition notices.

The other variations in the number of vehicles which these companies were authorised to operate over the last five years were:—

Yelloways Motor Services was granted a reduction from 60 to 50 in February 1987.

Crosville Motor Services Ltd. was granted an increase from 764 to 774 in January 1985; a reduction from 774 to 478 in October 1986 (when the company was divided into two); and a reduction from 478 to 450 in August 1987.

Yelloway Trathens Express Ltd. was granted an increase from 10 to 20 in March 1987.

National Bus Company

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he last consulted the north-west traffic commissioners; what were the subjects of his consultations; and whether he discussed the sale of Crosville Motor Co. with any of the north-west commissioners before approving the sale by the National Bus Company of the company;

(2) what consultation procedures exist to enable him to establish from the traffic commissioners whether an applicant for the sale of National Bus Company assets is a fit and proper person; and how such procedures were followed in the case of ATL Holdings.

Mr. David Mitchell: There is no formal procedure for the Department to consult the traffic commissioners on these matters. As I explained in my answer to the hon. Member's similar question on 18 May at column 614 the National Bus Company took steps to satisfy itself about the suitability of the purchasers of Crosville Motor Services. Its inquiries included discussion with the traffic commissioner's office and inspection of the maintenance facilities. The results of these inquiries were taken fully into account before approval to the sale was given.

Public Service Vehicles (Maintenance)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department lays down minimum requirements for the maintenance of public service vehicles in regard to adequate numbers of fitters, maintenance depots and general maintenance inspections; and how often the north-west traffic commissioners have discussed this matter with him.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Public Passenger Vehicles Act 1981 provides that an application for a public service vehicle operators licence shall not be granted unless the traffic commissioner is satisfied that there will be adequate facilities or arrangements for maintaining in a fit and servicable condition the vehicles to be used under the licence. It is for the traffic commissioner to decide how this requirement is to be met. The traffic commissioner for the north-western traffic area has had no recent discussions with the Department on maintenance matters.

Motor Insurance

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has concerning the extension of comprehensive and third party motor insurance to other European Community countries in the light of the forthcoming completion of the Channel tunnel and the single European market.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Motor insurance policies issued in one member state already provide the cover required by law in each of the others. From 31 December 1988, policies throughout the Community will cover liability for damage to property as well as bodily injury. This is required by directive 84/5/EC. We introduced regulations last December to comply with the directive. The Community's effort has been directed to the harmonisation of compulsory requirements to protect the interests of accident victims. Our view is that it is for individual drivers to decide what cover they require in addition to compulsory insurance.

Dial-a-Ride Service (London)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the number of drivers employers by each dial-a-ride service in the London Regional Transport area at (a) the most recent convenient date, and (b) 12 months earlier.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is a matter for the management committees of the voluntary organisations concerned and for London Regional Transport which funds them.

Channel Tunnel Rail Service (Disabled People)

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he is having with representatives of the British and French railways to ensure that all trains that will be used on the Channel tunnel rail service links will be properly equipped to ensure suitable seating and toilet facilities for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The design of the rolling stock for the Channel tunnel through rail services is the responsibility of the railway operators concerned. I understand that the draft specification for the high-speed rolling stock which has been agreed between the British and the French railways already includes suitable facilities for disabled people.

London Buses

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set out the number of vehicles operated by each district road service in the London Regional Transport area of (a) the most recent convenient date and (b) 12 months earlier.

Mr. David Mitchell: The detailed deployment of vehicles to services provided by London Regional Transport through its subsidiary London Buses Limited or secured by them through tendering is a matter for the operators concerned.

ENVIRONMENT

Bradfield Court, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the tenants of Bradfield court, Nottingham, regarding the selling of their homes.

Mrs. Roe: None.

Housing Bill

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning proposals contained in the Housing Bill to allow local authority tenants choice of landlords; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have received many representations concerning the proposals in part IV of the Housing Bill —"Tenants' Choice"—from members of the public, from organisations and from local authorities. Where these were in response to our explanatory paper and the senders gave permission, copies were laid in the Library.

Water Supplies

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to make permissible levels of aluminium in the water supply lower than the level allowed under European Community regulations, following recent research suggesting that water that passes these regulations may be dangerous.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, in view of the research findings of Southampton university on the possible link between Alzheimer's disease and aluminium compounds added to water, what immediate action he proposes to take to safeguard the consumer while scientific investigation is carried out; if he will consider alternatives to aluminium compounds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 17 June.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to ensure that water authorities comply with the European Community regulations limiting the levels of aluminium in the water supply; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: We have agreed action programmes for the 31 supplies which do not at present comply with the aluminium standard set in the EC drinking water directive, owing to the use of aluminium in the treatment process. Most of these supplies should comply by 1990.

Where aluminium is naturally occurring in water the directive allows the Department to grant derogations. The Department has granted 16 derogations, but has stressed that these should be phased out over the next few years.

The hon. Member is also referred to the statement I made in answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 17 June.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by water authority areas and their districts, the levels of aluminium in the water supply.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by how much the water supplied by the Newcastle and Gateshead water company exceeds the European Economic Community limit for aluminium content; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The local areas served by the Newcastle and Gateshead water company which have been supplied with drinking water containing aluminium levels above those specified in the EC drinking water directive since the directive came into operation in 1985 are:

Rochester
West Woodburn
Otterburn
Wark on Tyne
Bellingham

There are about 3,500 people in these areas. However, improvements have been carried out and all the company's supplies now comply with the aluminium standard set in the directive.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusion he has reached as a result of the Hatton catchment nitrate study.

Mr. Moynihan: The Hatton catchment nitrate study provides a thorough and useful assessment of the various options for controlling nitrate in water supplies in an area which may have lessons for other areas. The study is being taken into account in the Government's current review of the nitrate issue.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a list of water authorities in England and Wales, indicating in each case how much use it makes of aluminium compounds to achieve the characteristics sought in the water which it supplies; and whether his Department is to issue guidance in response to the alleged link between the long-term generation of Alzheimer's disease and the employment of chemicals containing aluminium in the public water supply.

Mr. Moynihan: All water authorities in England and Wales use aluminium compounds in some of their treatment works for the removal of suspended matter from surface waters. Those which make the most use of aluminium are Northumbria, North-West, Severn-Trent, South-West and Yorkshire. With respect to the alleged link with Alzheimer's disease I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 17 June.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people in the Stockport area receive water with aluminium content exceeding European Community permitted levels; what are the levels of aluminium in such water; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: About 180,000 people in the Stockport area receive water with aluminium content exceeding the aluminium standard in the EC directive for drinking water. Current concentrations of aluminium are not considered a health risk. I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 17 June to my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham).

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) where it is intended to locate the headquarters of the new National Rivers Authority;

(2) if he will locate the headquarters of the new National Rivers Authority in Liverpool.

Mr. Moynihan: No decision has yet been taken.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether community charge officers will be able to trace debtors and defaulters by asking for information concerning an individual's name and address from gas, water and electricity boards.

Mr. Howard: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 26 May at column 305.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of (i) the staffing implications and (ii) the administrative costs of his proposals announced on 17 November 1987 and 25 April to require 10 London boroughs to operate residual domestic rating for four years in addition to the community charge.

Mr. Howard: I have not yet completed consideration of the findings of the Price Waterhouse study of the implementation of the community charge.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he used in establishing the threshold above which 10 London boroughs will be required to operate residual domestic rating, announced in his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 25 April, Official Report, at columns 61-62.

Mr. Howard: The basic criterion was the combined level of spending above assessed need on all local services, and therefore the implied level of community charges, based on 1987-88 budgets. We also had regard to the evidence from provisional expenditure returns for 1988-89 of reductions in aggregate overspending; to representations received and to assurances given about measures to be taken which would further reduce community charge levels. At the time of my announcement no representations had been received from the individual authorities to which part IV of the Local Government Finance Bill is now to apply.

Community Charge Register

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the procedures or restrictions that will be associated with the sale of names and addresses from the community charge register.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to what was said by my noble Friend the Minister of State during the Committee stage of the Local Government Finance Bill in another place—Official Report, House of Lords, 6 June; column 1139-41.

Environment Council

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Environment Council on 16 June.

Mr. Moynihan: My noble Friend the Minister for the Environment, Countryside and Water represented the United Kingdom at this meeting, which was adjourned at 4 am on 17 June and will resume on 28 June.

The Council adopted the directive limiting diesel car particulate emissions, on which the Council had previously adopted a common position.

I am pleased to say that the Council reached a common position on the Commission's proposals to ratify and implement the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer, subject to parliamentary reserves on behalf of the United Kingdom and several other member states. The Council also agreed a political resolution which emphasises the importance of voluntary action to reduce further the use of CFCs and halons and specifies that such reductions should not be offset by increases in other uses or in other parts of the Community. The Commission was invited to seek voluntary agreement with industry on a Community label for CFC-free products.

I am especially pleased to report that after four and a half years of negotiation the Council was able to reach agreement on the large combustion plants directive, subject to scutiny reserves by France, Italy, and Portugal and parliamentary reserves on behalf of Denmark and the United Kingdom. Under the agreement, the United Kingdom accepts a phased programme of reductions in sulphur dioxide emissions from existing large combustion plants, from 1980 levels, of 20 per cent. by 1993, 40 per cent. by 1998 and 60 per cent. by 2003; and in nitrogen oxide emissions of 15 per cent. by 1993 and 30 per cent. by 1998. These ambitious new targets will require a very substantial additional effort over and above our existing programe of retrofitting 6000 MW of coal-fired generating plant with flue gas desulphurisation equipment. The agreement represents a firm and positive commitment on the part of the United Kingdom which will result in substantial benefits for the environment, and will also give the industries concerned firm targets for their future planning.

There was further discussion of the second stage of exhaust emission standards for small cars (the "Luxembourg package"). My noble Friend indicated that the United Kingdom was willing to agree to the Commission proposal, subject to parliamentary reserve, and several other member states followed him in doing so. However, I am sorry to say that there remained a blocking minority which prevented progress. The dossier was referred for further discussion on 28 June.

I am pleased to report that the Council reached agreement in principle, subject to a United Kingdom parliamentary reserve, on a second amendment to directive 82/501/EEC on the major accident hazards of certain industrial activities (the "Seveso" directive). This amendment will strengthen the parent directive's provisions on informing the public and will extend the scope of the directive to cover more premises storing dangerous substances—both isolated warehouses and process-associated storage. In the light of this extension, the Commission undertook to review urgently the list of substances and thresholds in annex III of the parent directive.

The Council had a preliminary exchange of views on a Commission report on the environmental consequences of the changing nature of agriculture and also discussed the export of hazardous wastes to Third world countries and current pollution and algae problems in the North sea.

On 28 June the Council will resume consideration of emissions from small cars and will also discuss wastes from the titanium dioxide industry and a proposed pilot scheme concerning environment and employment.

Drinking Water

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 50 areas for which derogations have been given from European Economic Community requirements concerning levels of aluminium in drinking water.

Mr. Moynihan: The 47 areas where the Department has given the aluminium derogations under article 9 of the EC drinking water directive or has applied to the European Commission under article 20 for a further period of time to comply with the aluminium standard are as follows:

Northumbrian Water Authority
Tunstall

Severn-Trent Water Authority
Parts of North Warwickshire, Coventry and Nuneaton
Parts of Charnwood, Hinckley and Bosworth areas
Part of Stroud district council area
Areas supplied direct from Elan reservoirs aqueduct
Part of Montgomery

South West Water Authority
Parishes of Seaton and Beer
Areas supplied from Tottiford treatment works
Areas supplied from Prewley treatment works
Bideford
College supply zone—Falmouth and Penrhyn
Watercombe supply zone
Higher parts of Penzance
Launceston and Callington areas
Bodmin and Wadebridge areas
Princetown
Chagford Crediton hamlets

North West Water Authority
Parts of Sefton M.B
Parts of Stockport M.B
Parts of Bolton M.B.

Parts of Tameside M.B
Parts of Oldham M.B
Parts of Carlisle District
Parts of Eden District
Parts of Lancaster Borough
Parts of Ribble Valley District

Yorkshire Water Authority
South East Sheffield
Central Sheffield
Part of West Barnsley (2)
South West Sheffield
Thornton pressure treatment works supply area, West Bradford
Area east of Thirsk
Area west of Harrogate
Addingham
Parts of Dewsbury, Mirfield and Huddersfield
Part of North Bradford
Huddersfield, Holmbridge, Holmfirth area
Parts of Huddersfield
Rural area of Keighley
Reva treatment works supply area, Rombalds
Parts of Huddersfield
Rural areas west and south of Halifax (2)
Northern area of Halifax
Halifax, served by Thrum Hall treatment works
Otley

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the local areas, served by the Newcastle and Gateshead water company, which have been supplied with drinking water containing aluminium levels above recommended European Economic Community limits over each of the last five years;

(2) how many people in the Newcastle and Gateshead areas have been supplied with drinking water containing aluminium over recommended European Economic Community limits, for each of the last five years;

(3) he will list for each of the areas which have been given derogations from European Economic Community limits concerning aluminium levels, by how much the European Economic Community limits were exceeded for each of the last five years.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not held centrally. The level of aluminium in drinking water in areas which do not yet meet the standard for aluminium set in the EC drinking water directive is considered acceptable by medical advisers.

Planning Appeal (Banbury)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to announce his decision on the appeal relating to the retail warehouse parts and so on at the old automotive products site in Banbury.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Secretary of State currently awaits the submission of an agreement, to be concluded between the parties, under section 52 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, relating to various highways and access works. It is not therefore possible to state when a decision will be reached on the appeal.

Pollution

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what actions have been taken to reduce the emissions causing acid rain; by what percentage these emissions have been reduced to date; what further actions he proposes in this field; what is the largest percentage reduction; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the levels of sulphur emissions from power stations; and what action he is taking to have these levels reduced.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he now intends to take to introduce an urgent programme of heavy cuts in the pollution from cars and power stations that causes acid rain.

Mr. Moynihan: Total United Kingdom sulphur dioxide (SO^2) emissions have fallen by nearly 40 per cent. since 1970, while nitrogen oxide (NO_x) emissions have remained broadly stable. We have authorised the Central Electricity Generating Board to retrofit flue gas desulphurisation (FGD) equipment to 6,000 MW of electrical generating capacity (three major power stations) and low-NO_x burners to all 12 major CEGB coal-fired power stations. All new power stations are to have the technology to control acid emissions, to the requirements of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

We have now agreed, subject to parliamentary reserve, to a new European Community directive on the control of emissions from large combustion plants, and I would refer the hon. Member to my answer today to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley). This will represent a very substantial reduction in United Kingdom emissions.

The European Community Luxembourg package which was agreed last December provides for substantial reductions in motor vehicle emissions. We intend to implement the new standards in full. We expect that the Luxembourg agreement will fully compensate for the growth in traffic between now and 2000 and will achieve significant reductions in both primary and secondary pollutants.

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the water authorities succesfully prosecuted under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 for excess discharge of sewage; what action he has taken to see that plant is updated by the water authorities before any privatisation takes place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that Thames water authority did not contest a prosecution last year for breaches of discharge consent conditions. I know of no other completed cases against water authorities. A major programme to renew and upgrade sewage treatment works is in progress. Investment in sewage treatment and disposal is planned to rise in real terms from £217 million last year to £260 million this year. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is investigating all sewage treatment works which failed to comply with consents in 1987 to establish the reasons for non-compliance and the remedial measures water authorities are proposing to deal with the problems.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number and the proportion of all households accounted for by owner-occupiers, for each of the last 20 years.

Mrs. Roe: Estimate of numbers and proportions of dwellings in owner-occupation from 1976 to 1987 appear in table 2.22 of the quarterly "Housing and Construction Statistics", No. 32, a copy of which is available in the Library. Estimates for England from 1968 to 1975 are as follows:

Estimated stock of owner-occupied dwellings in England

End of year	Thousand	Per cent. of all dwellings
1968	7,870	50·6
1969	8,029	50·9
1970	8,214	51·4
1971	8,501	52·4
1972	8,780	53·5
1973	9,029	54·5
1974	9,205	54·9
1975	9,385	55·3

Note: Although numbers are expressed to the nearest thousand they should not be regarded as accurate to the last digit.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each local authority area in England and Wales the number of homes made available to people under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act in 1986-87; and what percentage this represented of the total number of houses available for new tenants in 1986-87.

Mrs. Roe: The information provided by English local authorities in their housing investment programme returns for 1987 is in the following table. For information about Welsh authorities I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Longford Hall

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to respond to the request of the Longford park conservation area association for the listing of Longford hall in the borough of Telford.

Mr. Moynihan: I wrote to the hon. Member on 14 June with the news that Longford hall is to be listed grade II.

Green Belt

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of his Department's proposed new planning circular, he will make a further statement on his commitment to the green belt and, in particular, on whether the Government remain opposed to any new development taking place in existing green belt, as designated in existing structure plans.

Mr. Waldegrave: The planning policy guidance note on local plans, which my Department issued in draft for consultation on 15 June, would urge local authorities to define detailed green belt boundaries so that there is no uncertainty as to where green belt policies do and do not apply. Government policy on development in designated green belts remains as stated in PPG 2:

"Inside the Green Belt approval should not be given except in very special circumstances for the construction of new buildings or for the change of use of existing buildings for puposes other than agriculture and forestry, outdoor sport, cemeteries, institutions standing in extensive grounds or other uses appropriate to rural areas."

Rents

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing the latest available average level of fair rents registered for (a) private unfurnished tenancies and (b) private furnished tenancies in each London borough.

Mrs. Roe: The information is as follows:

Waste Disposal

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from (a) the European Commission and (b) elsewhere on the delay in implementing the European directive on the transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste.

Mr. Moynihan: We have received a number of representations about the difficulties and delay in implementing the EC directive on transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste, from the European Commission, waste disposal authorities and others.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce enabling legislation or regulations to implement the European directive on the transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste.

Mr. Moynihan: We intend to lay regulations to implement these directives before the summer recess.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions for misleading, wrong or incorrect descriptions of special waste on the consignment notes required by the 1980 regulations have been brought in each year since 1981; and how many for failure to provide consignment notes.

Mr. Moynihan: Responsibility for administering the special waste regulations rests with waste disposal authorities. Data provided to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, which may be incomplete, give the following information on prosecutions for offences under section 17 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974:

1985	1986

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many major waste disposal sites have laboratory facilities for analysis of waste coming in.

Mr. Moynihan: Details of laboratory facilities are not held centrally. Few landfill sites have laboratory facilities, but Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution knows of testing facilities at some: for example; the L Field site in Bedfordshire; the Witton Flush site in Cheshire; the Colliers site at Rixton in Cheshire; the Himley Wood site in Staffordshire; the Wellford site in Northamptonshire; and the Pitsea site in Essex. The presence of laboratory facilities does not necessarily imply that all loads are tested on arrival. All major treatment and incineration facilities have laboratories on site.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many European countries have implemented the European directive on the trans-frontier shipment of hazardous waste.

Mr. Moynihan: We understand that Belgium and Denmark have done so.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of waste coming into the United Kingdom is defined as hazardous or special (a) under British regulations, (b) under regulations of the country of origin and (c) under the EEC directive.

Mr. Moynihan: It is estimated that some 28 per cent. of imported wastes are defined as special waste under our regulations. The proportion defined as hazardous or special in the country of origin or under the EC transfrontier directives cannot be estimated until the directives are implemented by other member states.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what time after the arrival of the vessel the importer of special waste is required to notify the local authority of the port of arrival of the nature of the consignment.

Mr. Moynihan: Under the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980, notification is linked to the removal of waste from the place where it is produced or held. Notification should take place not less than three days before the waste is moved. For imports of special waste, this means not less than three days before the waste is due to leave the port.

Under regulations to be laid to implement the directive on transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste, the Waste Disposal Authority will receive notification before the arrival of the shipment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the figures for the import of (a) special waste and (b) general waste through Humberside in each year from 1980; and how much of it was deposited in Humberside.

Mr. Moynihan: Figures for the importation of special wastes via the port of Hull/Immingham for the years 1981 to 1986 are as follows:

	Tonnes
1981	2,886
1982	3,088
1983	2,444
1984	[1]2,000
1985	881
1986	12,504

[1] Approximately.

There is no requirement for other controlled waste to be pre-notified and therefore figures for the importation of these wastes through Humberside are not available.

Humberside county council is not aware of any imported wastes being deposited within the county.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what definition of hazardous waste has been used in other countries implementing the European directive on transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste; what definition he intends to use in the United Kingdom; and what representations he has made to the Commission for a common definition.

Mr. Moynihan: The directives include a general definition of hazardous waste but the detailed interpretation of this definition by other member states will not be known until they have completed their implementation. It is our intention to apply the provisions of the directives to wastes defined as special wastes in the United Kingdom and to imports which are notified as hazardous by other member states. The question of a common definition has been raised with the Commission on a number of occasions in the past three years.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations have been made to him from Humberside county council about proposals to import 15,000 tonne consignments of domestic waste for dumping in Humberside.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what evidence he has of increasing involvement of organised crime in the disposal of toxic waste.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: I have no evidence of the involvement of organised crime in the disposal of special waste in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the number of successful prosecutions for the illicit disposal of toxic waste for each year since 1979.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The unlicensed disposal of any controlled waste is an offence under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, section 3, and unauthorised dumping of any article is an offence under the Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act 1978. Information on convictions for these two offences, which may be incomplete, as reported to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department is as follows:

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986
Control of Pollution Act, S3	13	24	35	48	66	67	65	93
Refuse Disposal (Amenity) Act	385	570	648	605	584	560	436	380

Information is not collected separately on offences relating to special wastes.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will bring forward legislation to require consignment notes applying to imported toxic waste to be forwarded to the waste disposal authority responsible for its final disposal;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that consignment note descriptions of imported toxic waste contains accurate descriptions of the quality and content of each consignment;

(3) if he will seek to amend the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Act 1980, in order to ensure that waste disposal authorities responsible for ports which import toxic waste are required to be notified of the quantity and content of such consignments before they arrive at the ports concerned.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: Regulations to implement the EC directives on transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste will be laid before the House shortly. They will require the use of standard consignment notes to give advance notice to the waste disposal authority responsible for the waste disposal of an intended shipment. The consignment notes will be required to contain details of the source, quantity, composition and destination of the wastes.

The regulations, which will replace existing controls on imported waste under the 1980 regulations, will also provide for the waste disposal authority at the port of entry to be notified in advance with full details of the intended shipment.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the loss of significant quantities from consignments of imported toxic waste between their arrival in the United Kingdom and final disposal.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: I have had no such representations.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward legislation to ensure that, before completing consignment notes, importers of toxic waste are required to carry out a chemical analysis of each consignment to ensure that the information concerning its quantity and content supplied by either the waste producer or waste broker is accurate.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The Special Waste Regulations 1980 provide that the duties of a producer of special waste shall apply to the person who imports special waste. These duties include the completion of the consignment note on which details of the waste are required. The importer must declare that this description of quantities and chemical composition is correct. He is already therefore obliged to satisfy himself that the consignment note is complete and accurate. Failure to do so will render him liable to prosecution. There is no need for further legislation on this point.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that waste disposal authorities do not dispose of toxic waste until they are in receipt of the relevant consignment notes and are satisfied that they are fully aware of the quantity and contents of each consignment.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The disposal of special waste is primarily a private sector activity, licensed and monitored by waste disposal authorities. The transfrontier shipment of waste regulations, to be implemented in the autumn, will prohibit disposal of imported special waste unless the waste is accompanied by a consignment note which records that the waste disposal authority has received full details of the quantity and contents of the consignment and is satisfied that the disposal will be in accordance with the licence conditions. A consultation paper will be issued later in the year to amend the special waste regulations which will include proposals to introduce similar requirements for movements of special waste within Great Britain.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many incidents of imported toxic waste being disposed of in the United Kingdom before the waste disposal authority were in receipt of the relevant consignment notes were recorded in the past year.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: This information is not held centrally.

Ticket Touts

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about ticket touting at major sporting events in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 June 1988]: I have received three letters on this subject. One concerning touting in general and two on touting at football matches and in particular the FA cup final.

This is an issue which the Department and the Home Office have considered very carefully, especially in the context of the damage that black market ticket sales for major football matches can do to the efforts of the police and clubs to segregate rival fans effectively. However, it is not yet clear that a practicable and enforceable legal answer to this problem can be found. It may well be that a better solution to the problem rests with tighter controls by the organisers of sporting events over the distribution of tickets, and the imposition of sanctions against those found abusing the controls.

Population Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the household and migration estimates contained in "Serplan: Land for Housing in South East England 1991-2001", include any fiscal migration effects arising from the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 16 June 1988]: No. Any effects the community charge may have on migration are not sufficiently foreseeable to be incorporated into the population and household estimates.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate county populations within the Serplan area at 1986, 1991 and 2001, using the migration assumptions in the paper "Serplan: Land for Housing in South East England"; and if he will provide further estimates assuming the net in-migration levels of 1985-86 were to be (a) maintained, (b) reduced by 50 per cent. and (c) reduced by 75 per cent. in the years up to 2001.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The table sets out the population in counties in the south-east for the years 1986, 1991 and 2001 as projected by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. Alternative population projections on the same basis, but using different assumptions about net migration levels, could only be made at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate by country of origin and destination the migration flows to the south-east from outside England as in table 4 of his paper "Serplan: Land for Housing in South East England".

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The assumptions about future net migration between counties in the south-east and areas outside England are set by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. Detailed assumptions about country of origin or destination of future migrants are not made as they are unnecessary for the purposes of projecting the population of counties.

Housing

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide for each standard region, but distinguishing between London and the rest of the south-east, the net increase in dwelling stock for 1986 to 1991 on the same basis as in his paper "Serplan: Land for Housing in South East England", table 1, line E, but distinguishing between new build and conversion.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 16 June 1988]: Estimates of the possible net increase in dwelling stock over the period 1986 to 1991 on the basis referred to are set out in the following table. These have been obtained by taking recent annual averages of components of change and multiplying them by five. Averages for housebuilding completions relate to the three calendar years 1985 to 1987; averages for conversions and other gains, and for slum clearance and other losses relate to financial years 1984-85 to 1986-87.

Estimates for 1986 to 1991—Recent annual averages multiplied by 5, in thousands

	North	Yorkshire and Humberside	East Midlands	East Anglia	Greater London	[1]South East (excl. Greater London)	South West	West Midlands	North West	England
Housebuilding completions	43	71	84	59	52	259	115	82	88	854
Net conversions and other gains	1	2	4	3	28	9	7	3	4	60
Slum clearance and other losses	10	14	7	2	10	7	3	10	35	98
Total net change	33	59	82	60	70	261	119	75	58	816

[1] Total net change of 261,000 compares with the implied estimate of 250,000 included in the paper "Land for Housing in South East England". The increase reflects upward revisions to estimates of housebuilding completions over the period 1985 to 1987 in the light of the most recent returns.

Some figures do not sum to totals due to rounding.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the extra 669,000 one-person households predicted in the south-east by 2001 in his paper "Serplan: Land for Housing in South East England," will be provided for by owner-occupation, council, housing association or private landlords.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The tenure of one-person households will depend on incomes, house prices, the response of private investors to deregulation, and the way in which social landlords allocate their tenancies. It is likely that a higher proportion than now of older one-person households will be owner-occupiers.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the extra 184,000 lone-parent households predicted for the south-east by 2001 in his paper "Serplan: Land for Housing in the South East," will be provided for by owner-occupation, council housing, housing associations or private landlords.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The tenure of lone-parent households will depend on incomes, house prices, the response of private investors to deregulation, and the way in which social landlords allocate their tenancies. It is likely that the proportion of lone-parent households that are owner-occupiers will continue to be somewhat lower than for all types of households taken together.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime Prevention

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much is being spent by his Department on crime prevention measures in the current year; and what were the comparable figures for 1979-80.

Mr. John Patten: It is estimated that direct Home Office spending on crime prevention—on publicity, research, training, the safer cities programme and support for the new national organisation, Crime Concern—will total approximately £9 million in 1988-89. This compares with expenditure of some £350,000 in 1979-80, supporting publicity, training and research, a more than tenfold increase.

Convicted Persons (Pardons)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases of conviction on indictment he has recommended a full pardon to Her Majesty The Queen in each of the years 1982 to 1988, inclusive.

Mr. John Patten: In one such case a free pardon was granted, in 1982.

Mr. E. Brambergis

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he has taken in the case of Mr. E. Brambergis, referred to him on 18 April by the hon. Member for Nottingham, North.

Mr. Renton: As I advised the hon. Member yesterday, Mr. Brambergis was informed on 26 May that a visa promise for his son had been authorised by the Immigration Department.

Delible Security Markers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the security marking industry regarding the need to improve the performance of current delible security markers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office has received no such representations.

Civil Defence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to publish the report on the evaluation of the civil defence region No. 2 REGEX exercise.

Mr. John Patten: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to the hon. Member on 20 May.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether his Department has any intention of supplying gas detection equipment, as demonstrated to the delegation from the Soviet Union at Porton Down on 24 May, to local authorities or to the United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation for civil defence purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Consideration will be given to the need for such equipment when current studies into the effects of chemical weapons and protective measures against them have been completed.

Channel Tunnel (Immigration Clearance)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements he proposes for immigration clearance on trains using the Channel tunnel which are designed to provide a high-speed link between the north of England and the continent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Immigration Service is discussing with British Rail its requirements for official accommodation and facilities on trains which, using the Channel tunnel, will proceed via Olympia to destinations in the United Kingdom beyond London. Arrangements for immigration clearance will depend on the outcome of those discussions.

Terrorism (Suspects)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been detained in the last five years at the Channel ports on suspicion of terrorism, when seeking entry to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Hurd: The available information is shown in the following table. The information collected centrally does not distinguish whether the person concerned was attempting to enter or to leave the country.

Persons detained at the Channel ports[1] under the Prevention of Terrorism legislation

Numbers of persons

	Persons detained	Persons examined for more than one hour but not detained[2]
1983	16	—
1984	4	13
1985	6	12
1986	2	8
1987	5	5
1988[3]	1	—

[1] Sea and air ports (excluding Gatwick) on or near the south coast between Land's End and North Foreland.
[2] Operative from 27 March 1984.
[3] 1 January to 31 March.

London Prisons

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much land each of Brixton, Holloway, Pentonville, Wandsworth and Wormwood Scrubs occupies; and what is the market value of the land in each case.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The approximate amount of land occupied by each prison is as follows:

	Hectares
Brixton	4
Holloway	4
Pentonville	4
Wandsworth	9
Wormwood Scrubs	10

The market value of this land, were it to be available, is not known.

Community Radio

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce regulations to remove from community radio stations the right to apply for licences if they continue to broadcast unlicensed after a specified date.

Mr. Renton: We are giving thought to the possibility of including in the legislative proposals for radio broadcasting which we intend to bring before Parliament a provision disqualifying persons convicted of offences of unlawful broadcasting from obtaining licences from the Radio Authority.

Registration and Naturalisation (Fees)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total net income to his Department in 1985, 1986, 1987 and to date from applications for registration and naturalisation.

Mr. Renton: Fees received for applications for naturalisation and registration, net of refunds to unsuccessful applicants, for the financial years 1985-86, 1986-87, 1987-88 and for April and May 1988 are as follows:

Financial year	Receipts £
1985-86	3,269,000
1986-87	4,241,000
1987-88	14,218,000
[1]1988-89	4,175,000

[1] To end May.

Broadcasting Standards Council

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider locating the new Broadcasting Standards Council in Huddersfield.

Mr. Renton: No. As the headquarters of most of the broadcasting authorities are located in London, it makes sense for the Broadcasting Standards Council also to be located there.

ENVIRONMENT

Water

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the levels of impounded water in the counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, Avon, Gloucestershire, and Wiltshire; and if levels are sufficient to avoid restrictions on use during the next three months.

Mr. Moynihan: Water undertakers serving these counties consider that impounded water levels are sufficient to avoid restrictions on the use of water this summer unless a drought develops.

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what statistical information is obtained from water authorities about levels of impounded water stocks; and what information there is as to which water authorities are more than 10 per cent. below levels impounded in early June 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: Limited information upon rainfall; river flows and reservoir levels, representative of the country as a whole, is collected by my Department throughout the year. If the onset of drought is perceived, detailed information is then collected from all water authorities supplemented by information from the Institute of Hydrology and the British Geological Survey. Information upon impounded water stocks in relation to water stocks in June 1987 is not held centrally.

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what improvements in impounding water stocks and its distribution have been achieved since 1984.

Mr. Moynihan: Since 1984 major reservoirs at Colliford in Cornwall and at Grimwith in Yorkshire have been completed. Improvements have also been made to the water distribution system through the investment of over £500 million by water authorities in England.

Local Authority Publicity

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance has been given to local authorities on the implementation of section 28 of the Local Government Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Department of the Environment circular 12/88 provides guidance for local authorities on various provisions in the Local Government Act 1988, including section 28. A copy of the circular is in the Library.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of home improvement grants awarded, and what was the total amount spent on home improvement grants in each of the financial years since 1978-79 inclusive.

Mrs. Roe: The information is as follows:

Renovation grants paid to private owners and to tenants: England

	Number of dwellings thousands	Amount £ million
1978-79	58·8	81·3
1979-80	70·6	111·0
1980-81	71·8	126·8
1981-82	72·3	167·4
1982-83	131·6	367·4
1983-84	250·6	796·1
1984-85	195·2	737·1
1985-86	124·4	461·4
1986-87	110·9	384·7
1987-88[1]	114·1	371·1

[1] = provisional estimate.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of people who were living in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in each of the London boroughs on 1 June having been placed there by the local council.

Mrs. Roe: The latest figures, for the end of March 1988, appear in table 7 of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England. Results for the first quarter of 1988. Supplementary Tables", which is in the Library.

Waste Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for requiring strict declaration of quantities of waste shipped to the United Kingdom to avoid losses en route to the British port.

Mr. Moynihan: Regulations soon to be laid to implement the EC directive on the transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste require the use of consignment notes which will enable any losses during the journey to be identified.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for requiring notification to waste disposal authorities in ports of import of the quantity, nature, and dangers of all waste imports, before arrival in Britain.

Mr. Moynihan: Under regulations soon to be laid to implement the EC directive on the transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste, the waste disposal authority at the port of entry will receive detailed information on the quantity, nature and dangers of consignments of special waste before arrival at the port. We have no plans to require the pre-notification of wastes which are not covered by the directive.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the toxic waste imported into Britain during 1987 was hazardous but not recorded as special waste.

Mr. Moynihan: The records available relate only to special waste; that is, waste which is dangerous or difficult to dispose of.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take action to ensure the independent monitoring of all imported waste.

Mr. Moynihan: Disposal of all controlled waste, including imports, is subject to licences issued by waste disposal authorities.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the total cost of waste disposal authorities of undertaking the chemical analysis of imported toxic waste for the latest available year.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the toxic waste imported into Britain during 1987 was subsequently recycled into other products.

Mr. Moynihan: This information is not available.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has made any assessment of the extent to which imported domestic waste from the United States of America is likely to contain cockroaches.

Mr. Moynihan: No.

Water Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet representatives of the Water Authorities Association to discuss controls on water pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend and I regularly meet the water authority chairmen, and pollution control is among the issues discussed.

Woodlands

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken to protect woodlands following the judgment of the Court of Appeal about entitlement to compensation in the case of Bell v. Canterbury City Council.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend, jointly with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales, has laid before the House the Town and Country Planning (Tree Preservation Order) (Amendment) Regulations 1988, which come into operation on 30 June. This is an interim measure taken in response to the widespread concern about the continued effectiveness of tree preservation orders on woodlands in the light of the implications of the Court of Appeal decision for the compensation payable by local authorities. We are undertaking a general review of tree preservation policy and legislation, and the appropriate scope of arrangements for compensation will be considered further as part of that review.

The new regulations will bring the compensation provisions for those trees in woodlands which do not require a Forestry Commission felling licence into step with the compensation provisions applicable to non-woodland trees protected by tree preservation orders. Local authorities will be enabled, when refusing consent to fell a woodland protected by a tree preservation order, to certify, in appropriate cases, that the trees have "outstanding or special amenity value". The effect of such a certificate will be that no compensation will be payable as a result of refusal of consent. However, there is a right of appeal against certification to the Secretary of State, who may cancel the certificate. Accordingly the interests of owners will be adequately safeguarded under the new arrangements.

Local authorities will also now have the opportunity to consider whether any tree preservation orders previously made should be varied to reflect the amending regulations. My Department and the Welsh Office have written to them today to draw their attention to the regulations.

In order to ensure a comparable degree of protection for woodlands containing trees which are above the thresholds for Forestry Commission felling controls, the commission has agreed to change its practice in dealing with applications for a licence to fell trees in woodland which is subject to a tree preservation order. Where the purpose of such an application is to convert the land to agricultural use after felling, or in any other case where the applicant has not stated an intention to continue to use the land as woodland, the Forestry Commission will in future consider the application itself rather than refer it to the local authority to decide. In considering such applications the commission will be guided by its general presumption against the granting of felling licences to convert woodland to agricultural use, and will also take amenity considerations into account. Any claim to compensation as a result of refusal of consent will be against the commission and will be determined under forestry legislation. It is only in the exceptional case where the commission proposes to give consent that the matter would be referred to the Secretary of State for decision if the local authority objected, and that compensation would then be payable on the same basis as in the Canterbury case if consent were refused.

On the other hand, where the Forestry Commission receives an application for a licence to fell trees subject to a tree preservation order and the application is accompanied by proposals for replanting, the commission will continue to follow its present practice and refer the application to the local authority to deal with. In those circumstances, any claim to compensation as a result of refusal of consent would be against the local authority and would be determined under town and country planning legislation. But, in view of the replanting proposals that would have been submitted, we are advised that the amount of any compensation, being limited to the actual loss or damage caused or incurred, would be likely to be much more modest than in the Canterbury case.

Industrial Dredging

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies he has conducted as to the effects of industrial dredging on the United Kingdom coastal erosion.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 June 1988]: Two specific studies have been undertaken by Hydraulics Research Ltd. into the possible effects of marine dredging for sand and gravel on erosion of the United Kingdom coast. These are:

Wave Attenuation over Uneven Sea Bed Topography—A Study of Wave Changes in relation to Offshore Dredging. September 1983.

Sand and Gravel Mobility in relation to Offshore Dredging—A Radioactive Tracer Study in the Shipway Channel off the Suffolk Coast. February 1984.

The possible effects of marine sand and gravel dredging on coastal erosion were reviewed in a recent study of the United Kingdom aggregates dredging industry entitled "Marine Dredging for Sand and Gravel," which was commissioned by the Department of the Environment and published by HMSO in 1987.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last reviewed the effects of industrial dredging upon the United Kingdom coastline.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 June 1988]: A report on marine dredging for sand and gravel was published by HMSO in 1987. It includes a section on the interaction of dredging with the coastal environment and a review of the known literature on shoreline stability in so far as it is relevant.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many tonnes of gravel for commercial use were extracted from the sea bed off the United Kingdom coast by industrial dredging vessels for each year since 1979;

(2) how many tonnes of sand for industrial use were extracted from the sea bed off the United Kingdom coast by industrial dredging vessels for each year since 1979.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 June 1988]: No figures are available to identify separately the sand and the gravel extracted off the United Kingdom coast. However, the combined tonnages of sand and gravel dredged from the sea areas off the coast of the United Kingdom for each year since 1979, in millions of tonnes, are as follows:

	Tonnes Millions
1979	18
1980	17
1981	15·3
1982	14·8
1983	15·9
1984	15·4
1985	16·3
1986	17·6

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions he has had with his European Economic Community colleagues as to the number of licences to be issued for industrial dredging off the European Economic Community coastline; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what discussions he has had with his European Economic Community colleagues aimed at limiting the number of vessels involved in industrial dredging; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 June 1988]: There have been no discussions with European Economic Community colleagues concerning either the number of licences for sand and gravel dredging off the coastline of the European Economic Community or the number of vessels involved. The Crown Estate Commissioners manage the rights to exploit minerals (other than gas or oil) in territorial waters and on the United Kingdom continental shelf and it is they who are responsible for the issue of licences to dredge such minerals.

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much members of the Merseyside development corporation are paid each year.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 June 1988]: Each member of the Merseyside development corporation receives an annual salary of £3,770 per annum.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the salaries of the chairman, deputy chairman and chief executive of the Merseyside development corporation.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 June 1988]: The annual salaries of the chairman, deputy chairman and chief executive of MDC are £14,223, £6,436 and £41,049, respectively.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many meetings have been held by the Merseyside development corporation in each of the years since it was established.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 17 June 1988]: Since its inception in 1981 MDC has held 79 board meetings. An annual breakdown is provided as follows:

Year	Number of meetings
April 1981-December 1981	9
1982	11
1983	11
1984	11
1985	11
1986	12
1987	9
January 1988-May 1988	5

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many members of the board of the Merseyside development corporation reside within the city of Liverpool.

Mr. Trippier: [holding answer 17 June 1988]: None of the current board members resides within the city of Liverpool.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on how many occasions in each of the last five years (a) high level, (b) low level and (c) intermediate level nuclear waste has been moved within the United Kingdom or in United Kingdom airspace, to or from (i) any civil British nuclear installation and (ii) any British nuclear electricity generating station or reprocessing plant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

The Department does not collect details of the kind requested.

Nitrates

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what latest information he has on the medical effect of excess levels of nitrate on human beings.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

The most recent United Kingdom epidemiological study, published in 1986, did not indicate any relationships between exposure to raised levels of nitrate and cancer in humans. Whilst infantile methaemoglobinaemia is known to be caused by high concentrations of nitrate in drinking water, no cases of infantile methaemoglobinaemia attributable to concentrations of nitrate in drinking water have been reported in the United Kingdom since 1975.

Advice on the medical aspects of nitrate in drinking water was last given in a letter from the Government's chief medical officer in November 1985. The Department continues to review all relevant scientific literature including epidemiological studies in other countries, and is presently seeking the advice of the committee on the medical aspects of the contamination of air, soil and water on the findings of studies published since 1985.

Greater London (Studies)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report all studies and investigations he has announced concerning any aspect of planning and housing in the Greater London area, stating for each the purpose of the study, by whom it is being undertaken, and the date of expected publication.

Mr. Trippier: The Department has commissioned an east London housing study to examine the scope for housing in five areas of east London. Coopers and Lybrand Associates are undertaking the study, which is due to be completed by October 1988.

In addition, the Department has commissioned a number of other studies, which while not dealing specifically with London, may touch on some aspect of housing or planning in London. Full lists of the 1988-89 studies are given in DOE planning research programmes newsletter and the housing research programme as annexed to DOE press release 224. Copies of both of these have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey on 9 June, Official Report, column 653, he will estimate the population for that part of each of the dockland boroughs which lies within the area of the London Docklands development corporation, for each year since its creation and for each year for which projected figures are available.

Mr. Trippier: [holding answer 20 June 1988]: I will write to the hon. Member.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Radio Surveillance Equipment

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 8 June, Official Report, column 588, what powers are available to his Department to monitor the use of radio surveillance equipment; what use has been made of these powers over the last five years; and what plans he has to strengthen those powers.

Mr. Butcher: There are no specific powers, but during and before the last five years the parts of the radio spectrum allocated for civil use have been regularly subject to monitoring exercises to establish patterns of use, to trace radio interference and to assist in the general management of radio services. I have no plans to take any specific powers.

Home Accidents

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many people in England and Wales in the latest complete year for which figures are availale were killed or injured by accidents occurring in the home; and what proportion of these is estimated to be as a result of misuse of electrical equipment.

Mr. Butcher: In 1984, the most recent year for which complete data are available, there were 4,593 fatal home accidents in England and Wales recorded in the home accident deaths database. 120 (3 per cent.) of these involved mains electrical products, but only for the 26 cases of electrocution was there expert judgment of the extent of misuse. It was noted as a contributory factor in 14 of them. In 1986, from data collected by the home accident surveillance system, there were estimated to have been about 1,990,000 patients treated in hospitals in England and Wales as the result of non-fatal home accidents. About 64,000 (3 per cent.) of these cases involved mains electrically powered products. No information is available on the extent to which misuse was a contributory factor.

Girobank

Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he will discuss the status of Bootle as the major operations centre of Girobank with the Post Office board;

(2) who is to determine the value of Girobank before it is sold to the private sector;

(3) if, during his discussions with the chairman of the Post Office board, he will make it his policy to seek to ensure that the contingency centre for Girobank is sited in close proximity to the Bootle centre;

(4) if he will discuss with the chairman of the Post Office board the protection of conditions of service, pension rights and continued trade union recognition before Girobank is privatised.

Mr. Butcher: Girobank belongs to the Post Office, with whose chairman and board I am in frequent touch, and the Post Office is managing the sale. The Post Office has already said that an important issue in discussions with potential purchasers is to pay proper regard to the interests of Girobank's staff at Bootle and elsewhere. The price offered will of course also be a major consideration. The siting of a contingency centre is a matter for the Post Office and for Girobank.

Clinical Thermometers

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of clinical thermometers exported from the United Kingdom to the European Economic Community and from the European Economic Community to the United Kingdom in the most recent annual period for which figures are available.

Mr. Alan Clark: For the period April 1987 to March 1988 trade with the EEC in clinical thermometers was valued at: exports £54,000 and imports £105,000. These figures should be treated with caution because of major changes to Customs procedures introduced in January 1988, details of which were given in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on 7 December 1987, at columns 34-35.

Airbus

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to why the West German Economics Ministry has agreed to provide more aid to the Airbus project; whether the United Kingdom Government were consulted; and what is his latest assessment of the financial prospects of Airbus.

Mr. Atkins: Issues relating to the German Government's financial support for the Airbus programme are a matter for the German Government. I am in touch with British Aerospace about the problems which it believes the company faces in connection with Airbus programmes, and have asked for its latest assessment of the financial prospects of Airbus.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total amount of aid and guarantees provided by Her Majesty's Government to the Airbus project; and what percentage of this has been given to British Aerospace plc.

Mr. Atkins: British Aerospace has received launch-aid totalling some £249·3 million in connection with its participation in the Airbus A320 programme. It has been agreed that further launch-aid of up to £450 million will be made available in connection with the company's involvement in the A330/340 programme.

Existing intergovernmental agreements, in connection with the A300 and A310 aircraft, provide in certain events for intergovernmental liability. The Government's present liability under such arrangements is in the region of £500,000.

Steel

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why the Council of Ministers was unable to agree quota reductions, and whether steel may now be freely traded without price restriction within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Atkins: The future of the quota system is to be discussed at the Council of Industry Ministers on 24 June. In the absence of adequate commitments from industry to reduce excess capacity by the amounts agreed at the 22 December Council, quotas should end on 30 June. Pricing practices for ECSC steel producers are governed by article 60 of the Treaty of Paris, which prohibits unfair competitive practices and discriminatory pricing arrangements.

Furniture (Fire Safety)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether the proposed test for fabrics under the draft furniture fire safety regulations will be ignition source one, rather than crib four ignition procedure.

Mr. Butcher: Yes.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whereabouts on a sofa or chair the crib would normally be placed when carrying out crib ignition tests on furniture.

Mr. Butcher: In the BS 5852 tests required by both the existing regulations and by the proposed new ones, the upholstery composite is represented on a perpendicular seat/back test rig. The crib is placed on the seat in contact with the back, at least 100 mm from the edge.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether flammability testing of domestic upholstery covering material is normally carried out using the crib four procedure to cause ignition.

Mr. Butcher: The only flame test applied to domestic furniture covering material both in respect of the labelling option of the 1980/83 regulations and the draft new regulations, is the simulated match of BS 5852, part 1. There is no proposal to test covering fabrics using ignition source 4, a small wooden crib.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether flammability testing of contract upholstery covering material is normally carried out using the crib four procedure to cause ignition.

Mr. Butcher: It is for the specifying authority to decide what ignition source to use in relation to any contract.

Ignition source 5 is the most widely used of the cribs detailed in BS 5852. I am not aware of any which use the crib specified as ignition source 4.

Fire-Safe Cigarettes

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has to promote the development and use of fire-safe cigarettes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 20 June 1988]: The United States interagency committee reported on 29 October 1987 that it was technically feasible to make cigarettes with reduced liability to ignite upholstered furniture.

The report further stated that the tar nicotine and carbon monoxide yields of such cigarettes were in line with the levels obtained from many popular brands, but added that further study of potential for causing disease would be required. The committee had not attempted to assess consumer acceptability of these "fire safe" cigarettes.

The policy recommendations of the interagency committee dated 23 December recommended an examination of the health aspect and consumer acceptability and I shall monitor the progress made in this further examination.

DEFENCE

Nuclear-powered Vessels (Accidents)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information has been provided by his Department to the Australian Senate Standing Committee on Defence, Foreign Affairs and Trade's inquiry into safety procedures and contingency planning for accidents involving nuclear-powered vessels in harbour.

Mr. Ian Stewart: General information about the Royal Navy's nuclear submarine safety procedures and reactor accident contingency planning was passed to the Australian Department of Defence last year. I understand that the Department has drawn on this as appropriate in responding to the Standing Committee's current inquiry on safety procedures relating to nuclear-powered vessels in Australian waters.

Marconi

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether activities by Marconi companies in relation to defence contracts have been referred to the serious fraud office.

Mr. Sainsbury: I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General who has responsibility for the serious fraud office, that this matter is being dealt with by it.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further discussions have taken place with the Soviet authorities about the implications of the recent visit by Soviet scientists to the Porton Down establishment for future exchanges of this kind in relation to chemical weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A United Kindom delegation will be visiting the Soviet military chemical facility at Shikhany from 30 June to 4 July. This will be the second part of the exchange of visits between the Chemical Defence Establishment, Porton Down, and Shikhany. Any assessment of the merits of further exchanges should await the outcome of that visit.

Disarmament

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will make a further statement on his policy towards multilateral disarmament.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Bilateral and multilateral agreements offer the only sure means for achieving equitable and lasting arms control and disarmament measures; the recent INF treaty is a vindication of this approach. NATO's next arms control priorities of a 50 per cent. reduction in the strategic nuclear weapons of the United States and Soviet Union, the achievement of stability in conventional forces in Europe and a global ban on chemical weapons fully meet the requirement that arms control measures should maintain and, if possible, enhance security.

Nuclear Missiles

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects to be in a position to announce specific decisions on the development and acquisition of new short range nuclear and nuclear-capable missiles.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next expects to be in a position to announce specific decisions on the development and acquisition of new short range nuclear and nuclear-capable missiles.

Mr. Ian Stewart: A decision on the procurement of a weapon system to replace the free-fall bomb which currently provides the United Kingdom's independent sub-strategic nuclear capability will probably be taken next year. The timing of any decision to take into service with British forces a follow-on to the Lance missile system would depend on progress made by the United States in its efforts to meet SACEUR's requirements in this area.

RAF Aircraft (Swedish Interceptions)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in each year since 1979 Royal Air Force aircraft have been intercepted by aircraft from the Royal Swedish Air Force.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No such records are maintained.

Nuclear Accidents (Compensation)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the compensation arrangements in the event of civilian death, injury and property damage resulting from (a) a military nuclear reactor accident and (b) a nuclear weapon accident.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In the unlikely event of a military nuclear accident in the United Kingdom, the Ministry of Defence would offer compensation under the same arrangements which exist for dealing with any other claims for personal injury, loss or damage.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about low-flying aircraft were received from Northern Ireland in 1987.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 22 February 1988]: No fixed-wing low-flying training is currently carried out in Northern Ireland. However, helicopters do undertake low-flying operations in Northern Ireland. Although no central records are available of complaints received, HQ Northern Ireland received 32 complaints in 1987.

PRIME MINISTER

Security

Q49. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals she has to improve the security of information passing in (a) the Department of Education and Science and (b) other Government Departments, in the light of recent unauthorised disclosure of correspondence and briefing material.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

Every effort is made to keep classified information held in Government Departments secure. The arrangements are kept under review and modified when necessary.

Allt Yr Yn, Newport

Q86. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Allt Yr Yn, Newport, Gwent.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Arpley Meadows, Warrington

Q128. Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to pay an official visit to Arpley Meadows, Warrington.

Mr. Wakenham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 21 June.

Mr. Wakeham: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend is in Toronto for an economic summit meeting.

Poland

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if, when she visits Poland later this year, she will raise with the authorities there the treatment of workers in joint ICL-Polish Government enterprises; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend will certainly emphasise her concern about human rights in Poland and the need for trade union pluralism. I understand that ICL's joint venture agreement covers the marketing of their products in Poland and of Polish furniture in the West, and that the company has no direct involvement in manufacturing or the management of individual enterprises in Poland.

WALES

Government Achievements

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Government's achievements in Wales since June 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: Seasonally adjusted unemployment in Wales has fallen by 23,200 over the past 12 months and has now fallen every month for 24 consecutive months. We have just seen the largest monthly fall in unadjusted unemployment since May 1983. The total of unemployed school leavers is down by 28 per cent. over the past year and the number of vacancies continues to increase. Advertisements for jobs in the main daily newspapers of Wales have increased very substantially in the first six months of 1988 compared to the same period in 1987.

Over the past year, 96 inward industrial investment projects have been secured. These projects involve £370 million of capital investment and promise over 8,000 new jobs. Among the major projects are ones from companies based in the United States, Japan and Europe. Important projects have also been obtained in the financial services industries including the decision by the Trustee Savings Bank Trust to create an establishment in Newport that will provide 2,000 new jobs.

The move of the Patent Office from London to Newport has also been secured which will provide 600 new jobs.

During the year I made visits to Japan, the Minister of State visited the United States and West Germany, and visits to West Germany, the Soviet Union, Japan and Saudi Arabia are planned in the future.

The Welsh Development Agency budget for 1988-89 is a record for mainstream spending in both cash and real terms enabling it to significantly increase the range and intensity of its activities.

The £127 million factory programme announced in January 1988 will enable the Agency to build up to 4·5 million sq ft of additional industrial work space, 50 per cent. higher than previously planned and 75 per cent. more than the area completed in the three years prior to May 1979. The new capacity will have the potential to accommodate over 13,000 new manufacturing jobs. The 2·2 million sq ft of factory lettings by the agency in 1987-88 were at a record high.

In June last year I launched an exporting awareness campaign at a seminar of leading Welsh business men. The performance in Wales in terms of exporting has considerable scope for improvement. This campaign has been followed by an export promotion team from the Welsh Office contacting and working with many businesses. There has been a Principalitywide advertising campaign supplementing the national British Overseas Trade Board campign. There followed two major export advisory service promotions held in the early morning, one in Cardiff and the other in north Wales. These were considered to be the most successful export promoting meetings that have taken place in the Principality. Both were exceedingly well attended and a substantial increase in inquiries for Government export services has taken place as a result of them.

The £45 million land reclamation programme launched on 14 June 1988 is the largest ever undertaken and will enable the agency to reclaim an extra 4,300 acres of derelict land.

Registrations of new companies in Wales increased substantially during the year. The Welsh Development Agency's business development unit dealt with a record 39,000 inquiries from small enterprises in 1987-88—18 per cent. more than the previous year.

WINtech's manufacturing technology centre has been opened at Cleppa park to act as a focus for activity in promoting the use of new technology.

The Welsh Development Agency has been given approval to establish a £5 million Welsh technological development fund aimed at stimulating innovation employment in Welsh high technology enterprises.

A major initiative was launched in April 1988 aimed at increasing the real value of the craft industry's sales and jobs by at least 50 per cent. within three years.

Since June 1987 a total of 3,100 applications for regional development grant have been received—an increase of 80 per cent. over the previous year. There have been over 200 applications for regional selective assistance. If the potential of these applications is fully realised, it will increase investment in Wales by almost £2,000 million and create around 59,000 new jobs over the next few years.

Since the launch of the new enterprise initiatives in January of this year we have received around 370 applications for consultancy assistance.

Enterprise Wales has been launched, a major new package of assistance to industry. Welsh Office resources have been increased by some 40 per cent. over previous plans and new grant and support schemes have been introduced for small firms and for firms in all sectors who wish to take advantage of consultancy advice.

A major initiative has been launched to strengthen the financial services sector in south-east Wales. The campaign is being led by the Welsh Development Agency and backed by a consortium of local authorities.

It has been agreed that the Welsh steel industry should be privatised which will give an opportunity to those that work so hard in the industry to participate in its ownership and in its future success.

The gateway network was launched last October. This is an initiative that brings together central Government, local government and the private sector to co-ordinate and improve the help available to small businesses in Wales. Seven major banks have joined the network.

Investment in trunk road improvements has continued at a high level. Since June 1987 the following schemes have been opened to traffic: A48 Cross Hands-Llanddarog dual carriageway bypass; A483 Ruabon bypass; A48 Chepstow Inner relief road and A40 Haverfordwest Relief Roads Phase 1. Construction has also started on the A483 Newbridge bypass; A55 Llanfairfechan bypass and A55 Northop bypass.

The part I played in the discussions between the United Kingdom Government and the European Commission about integrated operations submissions, and the programme for Dyfed, Gwynedd, Powys in particular, helped to lead the negotiations to the recent adoption by the Commission of a £108 million national programme of community interest for the area and the acceptance in principle of the integrated operations programme for the three counties. In addition my discussion with Commissioner Varfis in February, were I believe, contributory to the recent recognition by the Commission of the need for continuing access to structural fund assistance on the part of rural Wales.

I negotiated improved arrangements for the overseas promotion of Wales as a tourism destination, with the BTA providing £70,000 for 11 distinctively Welsh promotions and a further £94,000 to lever trade contributions of £220,000. This has already led to the establishment of a Wales reservation centre in the United States of America. In addition, a futher £50,000 was provided to the WTB for expenditure in the United Kingdom that complements this overseas marketing. In February 1988 an additional £250,000 was added to the WTB's budget to finance an immediate additional marketing campaign to assist the industry in Wales.

In the year 1987-88 the commercial performance of CADW: Welsh Historic Monuments exceeded all targets and broke previous records for attendance and revenue. Admissions to monuments in care increased by 11 per cent. to £1·56 million and revenue exceeded £1·78 million, a rise of 18·7 per cent.

In December 1987 Mid Wales Development, the Welsh Development Agency and the Wales Tourist Board jointly decided to fund a new company to be called "Taste of Wales" (Blas ar Gymru) solely for the purpose of furthering the objects of the rural products group, by involving the hotel and catering sector and by encouraging them to use and promote the best of Welsh food. I formally launched Blas ar Gymru in May in Cardiff castle.

The farm diversification scheme, which came into force on 1 January 1988, is intended to assist farmers to develop alternative commercial uses for agricultural businesses and land. This covers investment in tourism, rural crafts, farm shops, on-farm catering, livery and pony trekking in the less-favoured areas only.

I have designated the Lleyn peninsula as an environmentally sensitive area (ESA). I have also extended the area of the existing Cambrian mountains ESA. Farmers participating in the scheme are offered financial incentives to maintain the broad pattern of land use, protect the rough grazing, hay meadows and archaeological features and retain broadleaved woodland. This will enable all farmers in the original area recommended by the Countryside Commission for designation to be considered for participation in the scheme and to obtain its benefits.

A new woodland grant scheme to provide Government support for private forestry planting was announced in March this year. The scheme replaced the forestry grant scheme and the broadleaved woodland grant scheme. The main features of the new scheme are increases in grants for conifer and broadleaved planting and new provision to conserve the environment.

The Welsh rural products group was formed in June 1987. This body came about at my instigation. It includes representatives from all the statutory bodies and parties interested in improving and encouraging the development of food production, as well as the marketing of Welsh food and agricultural produce.

Private housebuilding starts in Wales totalled 9,353 in 1987-88—this represents an increase of 24 per cent. on the previous year. The private sector total of over 9,000 starts in 1987-88 is the highest total for some considerable time. Taking into account starts in the public sector, over 11,500 new homes were started in 1987-88. Wales has led the way in establishing the principle of mixed funding schemes involving local authorities, housing associations and private finance. The mixed funding concept has been developed with the active support of the Housing Corporation and housing associations in Wales. It should attract approximately £7 million in private funding in 1988-89. This will be in addition to the £60 million being provided by the Government for the Housing Corporation's gross development programme. The objective of the initiative is to increase the provision of much needed social rented housing using a limited injection of public funds to trigger additional private sector investment.

A total of 20 mixed funding schemes, which will provide over 1,000 houses, have been approved. The pilot scheme at St. Mellons will alone provide over 560 houses. The scheme commenced in September 1987 and is due for final completion in 1989. Associations started over 630 more new homes on site in 1987-88 under the mixed funding initiative—an increase of 50 per cent. over the corporation's target for the year. This was a particularly welcome achievement in the first year of the scheme. I have established my alternatives for social housing (ASH) programme to promote a wider choice in social rented housing in Wales. Consultancy advice is being made available to a limited number of councils to help them formulate proposals for transfer of their housing stock to new landlord bodies.

As a consequence of our housing legislation, housing associations are set to become of increasing importance as providers of housing for those in need, in Wales as elsewhere. We have decided therefore that the time is now right to establish the independence of the Housing Corporation in Wales. The current Housing Bill makes provision to achieve this by establishing a new body, Housing for Wales, which we believe will have a major contribution to make towards helping to tackle the housing problems we face in Wales.

Between 1987-88 and 1988-89 revenue funding for the hospital and community health services in Wales has increased by £80 million or 10·7 per cent. over last year. Between 1987-88 and 1988-89 capital allocations to district health authorities increased by nearly 21 per cent.

Within this overall total I would particularly like to point to the increased funding for the all-Wales mental mehandicap strategy of £3·75 million raising it to a record level of £13·75 million for 1988-89. I launched my strategic proposals for the development of locally based mental illness services in Wales on 16 May, for a period of six months consultation. In the current financial year I am making available a record £2·3 million to assist in the development of new patterns of mental illness services.

A director has been appointed to oversee the introduction of breast screening for women aged 50 to 64 and a headquarters building has been purchased; screening will begin later this year.

An additional £400,000 a year was allocated to health authorities in November 1987 to help improve their cervical screening programme, making a total of £800,000 a year of central support for this service; all but one authority are currently using family practitioner committee computers for call and recall and the computer should come on stream in the remaining district next month.

A total of £1 million was allocated to health authorities in 1987-88 to help tackle the worst waiting list problems. I am happy to report that an additional 2,900 patients were treated and 6,600 additional out-patients were seen.

I gave approval in November 1987 to the development of a paediatric cardiac unit at the University hospital of Wales, Cardiff as the first phase of a major expansion of cardiac services. An additional four computerised tomography (CT) scanners are to be installed in hospitals in Wales bringing to eight the number, provided at a cost in the region of £3·8 million from central funds.

It was announced in May 1988 that two subsidiary renal dialysis units are to be developed and operated at the University hospital of Wales, Cardiff and Prince Charles hospital, Merthyr Tydfil, by Unicare Medical Services Limited under contract to South and Mid Glamorgan health authorities respectively.

The report of the community nursing review for Wales entitled "Nursing in the Community—a Team Approach for Wales" has been submitted and a public consultation on it completed. The resources available for use by the Welsh Health Promotion Authority (amounting to nearly £1·8 million) have been allocated in full taking account of the authority's operational plan for 1988-89 submitted at its first performance review. Recognising the importance of lifestyle in the maintenance of good health, my Department has also completed a review of the plans provided by both local drugs advisory committees and AIDS co-ordinating teams. A new training grant to support social workers involved in dealing with child abuse has been introduced.

My office is about to issue the corporate management programme for the Health Service in Wales. This is a five-year agenda for management action aimed at maximising the effectiveness of the NHS in Wales. It details the work which must be undertaken by a whole range of interests to enable health care services in Wales to adapt constructively so as to ensure the highest standards of care and value for money. The number of people waiting for in-patient treatment on 31 December 1987 was lower than the number waiting on 31 December 1986. NHS hospitals are treating an increasing number of people. In the year to 31 December 1987, an additional 14,846 in-patients were treated over the numbers treated in 1986 and an additional 12,101 out-patients were seen for the first time in the same period. This represents increases of 99,021 (28·3 per cent.) and 88,122 (20·6 per cent.) in the treatment on in-patients and out-patients respectively over the numbers treated in 1979. In view of this success, a further £1 million is being made available to health authorities in the current year.

A consultative process has been undertaken and completed on each of the proposals within the Education Reform Bill. The working group on Welsh in the national curriculum has been established and is expected to produce its report next April. The appointment of the Curriculum Council for Wales has been announced. It will be established subject to parliamentary approval of the Education Reform Bill. From September 1987, a total of 115 additional places were taken up under our assisted places scheme.

November 1987 saw the launch of the language exports centre for Wales at University College, Swansea, funded as part of the PICKUP (professional, industrial and commercial updating) programme. The aim of the centre is to help industry and education in providing foreign language and export marketing training for small and medium-sized firms.

I ensured the future of the Sherman theatre by providing £900,000 to enable the building to be purchased by the Welsh Arts Council and a grant of £27,000 to assist the Sherman Theatre Company in the short term.

Government support for the Welsh language was a record total of £3·283 million of support for voluntary bodies and for bilingual education, nearly £250,000 has been allocated to the Welsh language education development committee to enable it to start work on its first major project. This is to develop a co-ordinated effort to prepare and distribute Welsh language teaching material for secondary schools.

I have benefited in my understanding of the place of the language in Wales from discussions I have had with leading Welsh language organisations and others and from the valuable advice I have received from the working group I established in December 1987 under the chairmanship of my hon. Friend the Minister of State.

The education support grant (ESG) programme in 1988-89, announced in August last year, totalled £7·39 million expenditure compared with a total of £4·18 million expenditure approved for 1987-88—an increase of over 75 per cent. Activities supported in 1988-89 include: mid-day supervision (£2·57 million); information technology (IT) in schools (£1·48 million); books and equipment for GCSE (£0·61 million); IT in non-advanced further education (£0·26 million); computer-aided engineering (£0·24 million); and 14 other categories.

The technical and vocational education initiative (TVEI) helps to develop practical and relevant elements in the curriculum for 14 to 18-year-olds. All Welsh LEAs have been involved in pilot schemes. We announced in February 1988 their extension to all schools and colleges in Wales over the next few years, with £45 million of Government support.

Adult training schemes helped over 27,500 people, and over 20,000 people were involved in community programme work throughout the year. A further 12,000 people took part in the voluntary projects programme.

A total of 19,080 young persons entered YTS in Wales during 1987-88. Once again the Training Commission undertook to guarantee all school-leavers a YTS place by Christmas 1987, and a success rate of 99·9 per cent. in Wales bettered anywhere else in Britain.

In my statement to the House on 14 June I announced a three-year programme for the revitalisation of the valleys of south Wales designed to help improve economic, environmental and social conditions across the whole valleys area. It identifies almost 50 proposals for new and increased activity including record levels of activity in land clearance, factory building and urban programme support along with other action to promote enterprise, strengthen tourism and the arts, promote housing improvement, improve health care and education and strengthen voluntary bodies.

Public expenditure on key programmes promoting economic development, urban renewal and other environmental improvement and youth adult training is expected to be about £500 million over the life of the programme. It is also anticipated that over £1 billion of private sector investment will take place in the valleys over the same period.

Hospital Patients (Treatment Statistics)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage increase there was in patients treated in hospitals in Wales in 1986 over those treated in 1979; and what percentage increase there was in outpatients treated.

Mr. Grist: Twenty-four per cent. more in-patients were treated and 18 per cent. more new out-patients were seen in Welsh hospitals in 1986 than in 1979. I am pleased to say that the 1987 figures show an even further improvement to 28 per cent. and 21 per cent. respectively.

CAT Scanners

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will take steps to release extra funds to Clwyd area health authority to enable CAT scanners to be more widely available to the people of north Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) where CAT scanners currently operate in north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Computerised tomography scanners are presently in operation at Ysbyty Glan Clwyd and Ysbyty Maelor Wrexham. Funds have been made available to Gwynedd health authority to enable a scanner to be provided at Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor. The Department has no plans to release additional funds to Clwyd health authority for computerised tomography scanning. It is open to the authority, should it so wish, to provide additional facilities.

Cancer Treatment

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department first gave evidence to the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs concerning cancer treatment in north Wales and in the north-west of England for north Wales patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Evidence was given by officials to the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs concerning cancer treatment in north Wales on 27 June 1984.

NHS Patients

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the action taken, and the studies made and the evaluations undertaken by Welsh and English authorities since evidence was last given by his Department to the Select Committee on Welsh Affairs, including cash allocations, staff appointments, treatment centres made available and efforts made to improve the liaison between north Wales and the English authorities for the benefit of north Wales patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Valleys Programme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide details of the criteria used in delineating the boundaries of the area to be aided under his recent valleys programme.

Mr. Peter Walker: The area covered by the new programme took as its starting point the area of the south Wales coalfield. This was adjusted to exclude localities such as the coastal towns, which do not exhibit the economic, environmental and other characteristics associated with the valleys and to ensure that wherever possible the boundary follows existing administrative boundaries or physical features.

Power Stations

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many Welsh power stations have installed flue gas desulphurisation air pollution filtering equipment.

Mr. Grist: None.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to require the fitting of flue gas desulphurisation equipment to Welsh power stations.

Mr. Grist: It will be for discussion between the industries concerned and Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution how to meet the requirements on the United Kingdom, agreed at the EC Environmental Council on 16 June, to reduce the overall total of sulphur dioxide emissions from existing large combustion plant.

Snowdonia National Park

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the threat now posed by air pollution and acid rain to Snowdonia national park.

Mr. Grist: Over the last 12 months we have received two representations—one from Friends of the Earth Cymru and one from a Welsh Member in response to a circular letter from that organisation.

Unconventional Transport Services (North Gower)

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is now in a position to make a decision on the transport innovation grant to West Glamorgan county council for the provision of unconventional transport services in north Gower.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 16 June 1988]: No application for such grant has been received from West Glamorgan county council. However, my right hon. Friend expects to make a decision soon on an application under the scheme from West Glamorgan community service council.

Water Supplies

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those areas in which the Welsh water authority has applied for derogations from European Community regulations governing water quality on the grounds of excessive aluminium levels in the supply; and, in each case, what was the aluminium level.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 20 June 1988]: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on Thursday 16 June at columns 237-38.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what financial provision is made for regional development grants in his estimate of the cost of the valleys initiative.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 20 June 1988]: Applications for regional development grants received in the last 15 months from the valleys programme area involved investment of about £620 million. On the basis of applications and approvals currently outstanding, and the average payments that experience indicates will result from these, I would expect regional development grant payments to be of the order of £70 million over the next three years.

Valleys Initiative (Expenditure Estimates)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish estimates of the expenditure likely in his valleys initiative under headings of the sources of the moneys such as urban aid, private industry, local authority, European Economic Community, Welsh Development Agency and so on.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 20 June 1988]: I estimate that over the three years of the new valleys programme expenditure on key programmes for the promotion of economic development will total some £529 million. I anticipate that approximately £215 million of this will be spent on Welsh Development Agency factory building, regional development grants, regional selective assistance and other investment assistance; some £164 million will be spent on urban programme schemes, urban development grants, road improvements, derelict land clearance and other environmental measures and £150 million on industrial training and work experience programmes.

On past experience, the payment of regional development grants and regional selective assistance on the scale envisaged would lead to additional private sector investment of well over £1 billion. In addition there will, of course, be substantial private sector investment not linked to such assistance.

It is not possible to give exact figures for local authority expenditure, but it is estimated that (excluding their expenditure on the key programmes identified above) their spending in the valleys in 1988-89 will be of the order of £500 million.

It is estimated that European regional development fund (ERDF) grants totalling £26 million are likely to be available to projects in the valleys as part of the Mid Glamorgan national programme of community interest. The proposed integrated operations programme for industrial south Wales may also attract a further £100 million from the ERDF and European social fund in the years to 1992.

Rating Reform

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish estimates of the average change in total household costs to families living in the areas covered by the valleys initiative when the change over is made from domestic rates to the poll tax.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 20 June 1988]: It is not possible to make an estimate of the full effects for the area. The effects upon particular households will be influenced by the assistance which will be available to those on low incomes. Those on income support will receive an automatic 80 per cent. reduction in their community charge bill and their income support will include an uprating (based on the average for Great Britain) to help them meet the remaining 20 per cent. There will also be lesser reductions in community charge bills for people on low incomes but above income support levels.

What can be said generally is that most single-parent families, widows and widowers living alone, and many other single householders are likely to benefit substantially. Many households with more than two people over the age of 18 will contribute more towards the cost of local services. But in fact only 14 per cent. of local government expenditure will come from the community charge; 66 per cent. will come from central Government grant and the remaining 20 per cent. from non-domestic rates.

NATIONAL FINANCE

School Outings (VAT)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will issue advice to local education authorities concerning the circumstances in which value added tax ought to be charged on school outings;

(2) whether value added tax is now charged on school outings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Schools purchasing taxable goods or services from VAT-registered persons have always been charged VAT. From 1 April 1988, however, local education authorities have been unable to reclaim from Customs and Excise the VAT on purchases of accommodation and the like for school outings which they have organised where the cost is passed on to the parents and pupils. This is because, from that date, a new scheme has debarred tour operators from deducting tax on such purchases, and not to extend the restriction to local authorities making essentially similar purchases would put commercial tour operators at a competitive disadvantage. However, where school outings are subsidised by the education authority, the tax remains refundable.

The Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, at the request of Customs and Excise, issued detailed guidance to local authorities on the new VAT arrangements in its "VAT News" in February this year.

Employment Training (Taxation)

Ms. Short: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, and in what way, any of the payments that will be paid to trainees on the proposed employment training scheme, including their training allowance, any end of scheme bonus, any earnings outside the programme and any topping up payments they receive from their training placements, will be assessed for taxation purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The training allowance payable to trainees who participate in the employment training programme will not be chargeable to income tax. Similarly, top-up payments received from a training provider during an individual's training, or an end-of-course training bonus, will not be taxable provided a trainee's entitlement to such payments arises only from the completion of part or all of his or her training plan.

The tax treatment of a trainee's income which does not arise from participation in the programme will depend on the precise circumstances in each case. Income from an employment would be chargeable to income tax under schedule E and tax would normally be deducted under the PAYE arrangements.

Building Societies

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the organisations approached by himself and by the Building Societies Commission in consultations held in connection with proposed changes to schedule 8 of the Building Societies Act 1986, and in connection with the procedures set down for the conversion of societies into public limited companies; and what discussions he or the commission has had with organisations representing individual depositors or borrower members of building societies in the course of these consultations.

Mr. Lilley: The review of schedule 8 of the Building Societies Act was undertaken by the Treasury and the Building Societies Commission in close consultation with the Building Societies Association and, through it, with the societies themselves. The commission has also consulted extensively other Government Departments, the Bank of England, the Securities and Investments Board, and the relevant self-regulatory organisations.

The commission issued consultation documents on conversion in July and December last year. Copies were sent to interested parties, including the Consumer Council among others. There has also been full consultation with the Treasury and other Government Departments, and the Bank of England together with the Building Societies Association and with individual societies and their financial and legal advisers. Abbey Members Against Floatation (AMAF), approach the commission in late May and have been invited to comment on the consultation paper.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the European Court to announce its ruling on value added tax on domestic and non-domestic construction work and other matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The court delivered its judgment today.

Economic Growth

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the growth in the United Kingdom economy in the next 12 months.

Mr. Major [holding answer 16 June 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's latest forecast was published at Budget time. It showed growth of 3 per cent. in whole economy output in 1988, equivalent to 3½ per cent. growth on a non-oil basis. However, as my right hon. Friend reported to the House on 16 June at column 554, it now looks as though growth in 1988 may prove slightly higher than this.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether community charge officers will be able to trace debtors and defaulters by asking for information concerning an individual's name and address from gas, water and electricity boards.

Mr. Lang: Responsibility for the recovery of arrears of community charges will fall to regional and islands councils as levying authorities. They will have no access to information held by electricity boards or British Gas plc (Scotland). However, under a Scottish amendment to the Local Government Finance Bill my right hon. and learned Friend may make regulations providing that a levying authority may make use of information which it has at its disposal for any other purpose with the exception of prescribed sensitive information. Regional councils would, therefore, be able to use information which they had collected as a result of their responsibilities as water authorities.

Single European Market

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to ensure that the Scottish Development Agency, Locate in Scotland and Enterprise Trusts will have a full and effective role in explaining and promoting the significance of the single European market to Scottish industrialists.

Mr. Lang: My Department is working closely with the Scottish Development Agency, enterprise trusts, chambers of commerce and other organisations in Scotland to alert business to the implications of completion of the single European market. Seminars and business meetings are being organised throughout Scotland. Our aim is to ensure that every sector of industry and commerce in Scotland is fully aware of the challenges and opportunities which the single market will present.

Widowers' Pensions

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects that the Government Actuary Department's review of the various proposals relating to the payment of widowers' pensions to widowers whose wives were employed in the teaching profession between 1972 and 1988 will be published; and when he expects a ruling will be made on the Scottish scheme.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government Actuary's Department is not conducting a review of proposals relating to the payment of pensions to widowers whose wives were employed in teaching between 1972 and 1988. The Government Actuary has, however, just presented an actuarial report to the Secretary of State in respect of the Scottish teachers superannuation scheme for the quinquennium 1981-1986 which is currently being considered.

With regard to the question of widowers' pensions the Scottish teachers superannuation scheme is being amended to introduce widowers' benefits in respect of service undertaken by women teachers from 6 April 1988. The Social Security Act 1986 requires that, for service from this date, a widower will become entitled to a restricted pension of one-half of the minimum pension of his spouse guranteed for the purposes of contracting out of the state earnings related pension scheme. However, after consultation with teachers' associations and employers, it has been agreed that, in respect of service after 6 April 1988, the teachers' scheme will go further than the statutory requirement and will provide widowers' benefits on the same basis as those currently available to widows. In order to cover service prior to that date it will be necessary, however, for those women teachers, who so choose, to make appropriate payments. This is because the contributions already paid do not reflect the cost of giving such a substantial improvement.

School Rolls

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in each regional authority which have a school roll of (i) less than 500, (ii) between 500 and 1,000, (iii) between 1,000 and 1,500 and (iv) over 1,500.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The numbers at September 1987 are set out in the table:

East Kilbride Development Corporation

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met officials of the East Kilbride development corporation; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend last met officials of East Kilbride development corporation on Monday 9 May when he had the pleasure of opening the new JVC plant in the town. On that occasion he discussed the very successful year the corporation were having, with particular successes in the electronics, biotechnology and engineering industries.

Needles and Syringes

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when his Department will issue guidance to health boards on the sale of needles and syringes by pharmacists in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A circular is being issued today, and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

The circular asks health boards to promote local discussions to establish the need for the sale of injecting equipment to drug misusers in their area, and the number of pharmacists, who would participate on an entirely voluntary basis, willing to sell equipment to meet that need. This move is in recognition of the particularly significant problem of HIV infection in drug misusers which we face in Scotland. Of those who have been tested for HIV infection and found to be positive, over 50 per cent. are injecting drug misusers. HIV infection can be transmitted from one injecting drug misuser to another through the sharing of needles and syringes.

The circular is concerned with facilitating sales as a normal commercial transaction between pharmacists and their customers. Boards are, however, being asked to provide pharmacists with information about local support services. They are also being asked to ensure that adequate facilities are available for the disposal of used equipment so that the risk of its reuse by other drug misusers, and hence the transmission of infection, and the risk to the general public, in particular to children, from used equipment which has been carelessly or recklessly discarded, are minimised. The circular indicates that pharmacists should be encouraged to provide disposal facilities but that it should not be a condition of sale that used equipment is first returned. Boards are also asked to consider whether there is a need for disposal facilities in places frequented by drug misusers such as certain health board clinics.

The circular provides guidance on the procedures and conditions for the sale of equipment. These include restricting the number of needles and syringes which may be sold to each customer to five per visit. It also specifies that sales should be accompanied by the provision of advice and appropriate health education material.

As regards the legal position, while no general unqualified assurance of immunity from prosecution will be given, my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has said that he would not authorise the prosecution of any pharmacist in respect of sales by him of needles and syringes to drug misusers, provided the pharmacist has acted in accordance with the conditions and procedures set out in the circular.

Greenland White-fronted Geese

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the numbers and geographical locations of flocks of Greenland white-fronted geese, consisting of 1 per cent. or more of the world population of this sub-species, that regularly occur in the United Kingdom outside designated or proposed special protection areas.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 15 June 1988]: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that there are no such flocks regularly occurring in the United Kingdom outside areas which have already been classified as special protection areas under article 4 of EC directive 79/409 on the conservation of wild birds or areas which in the opinion of the Nature Conservancy Council meet the criteria for classification.

Maternity Units

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many maternity units have been closed since 1979, or are planned to close, in each region in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 June 1988]: Two maternity units have been closed since 1979 and one is planned to close in August. In the same period, three maternity units have opened and one is planned to open in August.

Life Expectancy

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current expectation of life for (a) men and (b) women at the age of 45 years in (i) England and Wales, (ii) all EEC countries, (iii) Scandinavian countries and (iv) Scotland; and what were the comparable figures in 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 20 June 1988]: The information is not available on a comparable basis. The information which is readily available is as follows:

Male and Female life expectancy at age 45 years

	1978-80 Male	1978-80 Female	1984-86 Male	1984-86 Female
England and Wales	28·3	33·7	29·4	34·7
Scotland	26·5	31·9	27·7	32·9

Housing Benefit

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the estimated numbers of tenants of (a) local authorities, (b) the Scottish Special Housing Association, (c) new town development corporations, (d) housing associations and (e) other private sector landlords who are in receipt of rent rebates or rent allowances for (i) certificated cases and (ii) standard cases.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 17 December 1987]: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is in the tables. Housing benefit for tenants of housing associations (other than the Scottish Special Housing Association) and other private sector landlords is administered by local authorities and information is not separately recorded. The numbers of recipients in these two groups are therefore included in the rent allowance figures for the appropriate local authorities. I apologise to the hon. Member for the delay in providing this information.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Consumer Services

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Lord President of the Council what representations he has received seeking improved consumer services for right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Wakeham: During this Session, I have received representations from two hon. Members concerning the provision of ladies' hairdressing facilities, one of whom also requested the provision of a shop. In addition to these two letters, I have answered two parliamentary questions on matters relating to improved consumer services for right hon. and hon. Members: one concerning the aforementioned services from the hon. Member for Cynon Valley (Mrs. Clwyd), and one concerning the provision of cas dispensing facilities from my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler).

Retired Members

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many Members who retired at the 1979, 1983, and 1987 general elections respectively were aged 65 and over, and what in each case was their period of service in the House.

Mr. Wakeham: The information is as follows:

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the estimated annual cost of making severance payments to Members aged 65 and over based upon experience of the last three general elections; what would be the effect of such a figure upon the total Members' contribution to the pension fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The circumstances in which a severance payment is payable to a Member who leaves the House at a general election have changed between each of the elections of 1979, 1983 and 1987. The payment (now known as the resettlemant grant) is currently payable to any Member who ceases to be a Member at a general election while aged under 65 years. Expenditure arising from the payment of each grant, which is charged to the House of Commons Vote (Class XX Vote 21), only occurs in a year in which a general election takes place, and, therefore, no annual cost arises.

The amount of the grant paid to a Member depends on his age and length of service and since it is not known which Members are likely to leave the House at the next election it is not possible to predict what costs would arise if Members aged 65 and over were entitled to the grant. However, having regard to the number and length of service of Members aged 65 or over who left the House at the last three general elections, the cost of resettlement grants, based on the current salary level and on the assumption that the percentage of yearly salary payable is equal to the rate currently applicable to those aged 55 to 64 years, would amount to an average cost of £897,560 in a general election year.

As the payment of resettlement grants is a direct charge on the Vote of the House no costs fall on the Parliamentary Contributory Pension Fund and, therefore, Members' contributions to that fund are not affected.

Palace of Westminster (Accidents)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if, pursuant to his answer of 9 June, Official Report, column 667, he will place in the Library details of all accidents in the Palace of Westminster referred to therein.

Mr. Wakeham: No. The records of accidents, which are maintained by Departments of the House, the Parliamentary Works Office and the Security Force, contain personal details of the individuals affected. It would not be appropriate to make them available in the Library.

Scottish Office (Joint Committee)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Lord President of the Council when he intends to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland of early May on the setting up of a Joint Committee of Lords and Commons to scrutinise the work of the Scottish Office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I am still considering how best to proceed with regard to a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs. As I told the House during business questions last Thursday, I will shortly be discussing this matter with the Chairman of the Committee of Selection. I hope to be in a position to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland soon.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether his Department has arranged for urgent research to be undertaken into the possible transmission of the causative agent of bovine spongiform encephalopathy to human beings in such a way that potentially fatal human Creutzfeldt-Jacob disease results.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Studies are already under way to discover whether BSE is transmissible between cattle and to other species.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he is taking any action to prevent butchers selling for human consumption uncooked brains from cattle infected with bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Legislation comes into force today which makes bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE) a notifiable disease. The Ministry's veterinary service will be retaining the heads of all cattle in respect of which disease is notified, in order to examine brain tissue for diagnostic purposes. The brains will not, therefore, be available for human consumption.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will arrange for urgent research to be undertaken to develop a test for discovering the presence of the causative agent of bovine spongiform encephalopathy before its presence is revealed by the behaviour of the infected beast.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Yes. Immunological tests are being developed which, as part of their objectives, are designed to detect the presence of the agent in various tissues of the animal. The research programme will also address the need to try and develop a test in the live animal.

Cereals (Seed Testing)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the estimated cost savings which have been identified as arising from the ending of the requirement for cereal seed testing before marketing; what is the estimated cost of (i) additional enforcement measures and (ii) additional monitoring measures arising from the proposed change; and if he will make a statement on his proposals for funding any additional costs.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 17 June 1988]: The information requested is given in paragraphs 394, 403 and 476 of the report on plant variety testing and seed certification systems in the United Kingdom. The cost of additional monitoring measures are estimated to be minimal. The additional enforcement and monitoring costs can be accommodated within the gross saving of £652,000 proposed for seed certification.

Milk

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has made to the EC Commission following the recent European Court judgment relating to the non-marketing of milk scheme, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 20 June 1988]: I am aware of this case which has implications for quota allocation in all member states; however, it is for the EC Commission to consider the necessary steps to comply with the judgment and to make proposals to the Council of Ministers. In the meantime, it would be inappropriate to advocate specific action.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Multi-sensor Platforms (South Africa)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he has made to representatives from the World Campaign against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa to the effect that multi-sensor platforms are being exported by British Aerospace to South Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: We have informed the director of the World Campaign against Military and Nuclear Collaboration with South Africa that we are considering his representations carefully. We have invited him to provide specific evidence.

Southern Africa

Mr. Cabom: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further action Her Majesty's Government will take to support the front-line states in the face of continued South African aggression.

Mrs. Chalker: We have repeatedly condemned cross-border incursions from whatever quarter. As part of our policy of encouraging stability and development in the region we will continue to give civil aid and, where appropriate, military training assistance to the front-line states.

EEC (Staff)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total number of persons employed in the European Economic Community Commission, the European Parliament, and other European Economic Community institutions, respectively; and what were the comparable totals in 1979.

Mrs. Chalker: The tables show the maximum authorised staff establishment for 1979 and 1988. The 1988 total represents a 37 per cent. increase over the 1979 figure. The Community grew from nine to 12 member states during the same period.

South Georgia

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to control fishing in the waters around South Georgia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1980 fishing around South Georgia has been subject to the provisions of the convention for the conservation of Antarctic marine living resources (CCAMLR). The United Kingdom and a majority of members of the Antarctic treaty are signatories. The CCAMLR Commission have banned fishing for Antarctic cod and in 1987 fixed a total allowable catch (TAC) for mackerel icefish around South Georgia.

In order to increase knowledge of the conservation needs of the South Georgia fishery, the Commissioner for South Georgia last month commissioned the renewable resources assessment group of Imperial college to analyse all existing relevant data. The results of this study will be presented to CCAMLR on completion.

Immigration Fees

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the fee for settlement and other long-term entry clearances (a) has been increased by around 20 per cent. and (b) is to be charged on a per capita rather than a per passport basis; and what total net income he expects to result from these changes to the end of this year and in subsequent years.

Mr. Eggar: (a) Settlement and other long-term applications take substantially longer, and thus cost more, to process than visit applications. The increase in this fee aims to reflect the disparity more closely.

(b) The amount of work involved in processing a settlement application relates to the number of applicants regardless of whether they are travelling on a single or a family passport. It was therefore decided that all entry clearance fees should henceforth be charged on a per capita rather than a per passport basis.

It is not expected that there will be any net income. Assuming settlement applications remain at existing levels, estimated additional revenue from these changes is about £500,000.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by how much entry clearance fees would have been required to be increased in the current year to recover costs of administering the entry clearance system.

Mr. Eggar: In the financial year 1987-88 the subsidy from public funds to the overseas entry clearance operation was about £9 million. With the fee increases introduced on 1 June 1988, it is estimated the subsidy will be reduced to approximately £6·7 million by the end of the current financial year. Fee revenue would have to be increased by approximately a further 25 per cent. to meet the full cost of the entry clearance operation overseas.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what net income he estimates for the remainder of the current year, and in 1989 from making fees for single entry clearance non-refundable.

Mr. Eggar: Estimates can only be tentative at this early stage, but, on the basis of past refusal rates, it is unlikely that more than £300,000 will accrue from the decision to make fees for single entry clearance non-refundable.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why revised entry clearance fees were introduced with effect from 1 June rather than 1 January as in previous years.

Mr. Eggar: There is no set date for introducing changes to entry clearance fees. The aim is to recover the costs of the entry clearance operation by the early 1990s. It was decided that some increases from 1 June 1988 were necessary to meet that longer-term objective.

Antarctic (Minerals)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the recent Antarctic minerals regime negotiations.

Mr. Eggar: The convention on the regulation of Antarctic mineral resource activities was adopted on 2 June 1988 in Wellington, New Zealand. I am placing copies in the Library today.

EMPLOYMENT

Careers Officers

64. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of secondary schools have careers officers; and what guidelines his Department gives them on the performance of their duties.

Mr. Cope: On 1 October 1987 there were 3,740 posts for careers officers in local education authorities in England. Careers officers undertake a wide range of duties, including work in secondary schools. Local education authorities decide how careers officers are deployed to carry out their duties.

Local education authority careers officers perform their functions in accordance with statutory guidance issued by the Secretary of State, most recently in March 1988.

Adult Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training agencies and training managers are planned for each of the 54 Manpower Services Commission areas under the new adult training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training is being locally planned and will be locally delivered. Each of the 57 Training Commission area offices is currently arranging to contract with potential training agents and training managers and the number of contracts will vary from area to area to meet local needs.

Deptford Skillcentre

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he intends to take to incorporate the recommendations of the Deptford skillcentre inquiries report into the equal opportunities policies and practices of the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Nicholls: The Manpower Services Commission (now the Training Commission) has already investigated and, where necessary, responded to allegations about equal opportunities at Deptford skillcentre.

The Training Commission is committed to an equal opportunities policy for all its programmes and has taken many steps to put it into effect. As part of this, the Skills Training Agency recently issued an equal opportunities guide for staff and trainees, after consulting the Commission for Racial Equality and Equal Opportunities Commission.

Cooke's Works, Penrhyndeudraeth

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has received a report from the Health and Safety Executive following the explosion at ICI Cooke's works, Penrhyndeudraeth on 14 June; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive is currently investigating the explosions and inquiries are still at an early stage. Two of its explosives inspectors have been at the site since 14 June 1988.

Co-operative Development Agency

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the assessment of the Co-operative Development Agency carried out by his Department during early 1987.

Mr. Cope: I have today placed in the Library a copy of the report of the policy review and financial management survey undertaken in 1987, as part of the general programme of reviews of non-departmental public bodies.

Disabled Persons

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has for the future funding of workshops offering sheltered employment for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The arrangements for supporting in employment people with severe disabilities falls within the scope of the internal review of the assistance offered by my Department to people with disabilities announced in March. We aim to complete this review as quickly as possible.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many adults are registered as disabled under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 on the latest date for which figures are available; and what percentage this represents of the total work force.

Mr. Lee: The number of adults registered as disabled under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 on 18 April 1988 was 371,631. I regret that the number of adults in the total work force is not available. The only figure available for the total work force is that of the total working population of Great Britain which includes young people. In December 1987 this amounted to 27,212,000 (seasonally adjusted). The number of adults and young people registered as disabled under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 on 18 April 1988 was 374,238. This represented 1·4 per cent. of the total working population in December 1987.

Part-time Workers (Holiday Pay)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the uniformity of approach of unemployment benefit offices with respect to holiday pay for part-time workers.

Mr. Lee: Procedural instructions are common to all UBOs and provide for reference to the independent adjudicating authorities of any unemployment benefit claim where a doubt on entitlement arises. This will include doubts on claims made by part time workers who have received holiday pay from employment which has not been finally terminated.

Earnings

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the proportion of full-time employees earning less that (i) £130 a week and (ii) £140 a week, when overtime earnings are excluded, for men and women separately, in each county in England and in each London borough, as recorded by the 1987 new earnings survey.

Mr. Lee: The available information is as follows:

Proportion of full-time employees earning less than £130 and £140 per week excluding overtime payments. Employees on adult rates whose pay was not affected by absence; April 1987.

per cent.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Test Results (Seven-year-olds)

11. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has yet decided whether test results at the age of seven years will be established; and if he will make a statement.

28. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has yet decided whether test results at the age of seven years will be published; and if he will make a statement.

55. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has yet decided whether test results at the age of seven years will be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: As my right hon. Friend announced to the House on 7 June, we have decided that national assessment and test results for individual pupils should not be published. There will be no legal requirement for schools to publish aggregated results for pupils aged seven, but we will strongly recommend them to do so.

Primary Schools (Rural Areas)

12. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received regarding primary schools in rural areas.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend regularly receives representations about rural primary schools which are the subject of reorganisation proposals.

A-Levels

13. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received following the publication of the Higginson report on the future of A-level examinations; and if he will make a statement.

24. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the Higginson report on the future of A-levels.

53. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received concerning the future of general certificate of education A-levels examinations.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since the report was published on 7 June about 12 representations have been received.

Biological Sciences (Review)

14. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the Advisory Board for the Research Council's review of the biological sciences.

Mr. Jackson: The ABRC is establishing a working group to review the disposition between the research councils of responsibilities for the biological sciences. The group will be chaired by Mr. J. R. S. Morris and is expected to report to the board around the end of the year.

Opting-out Proposals

15. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received concerning opting-out proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has now received rather more than 1,000 letters about his proposals for grant-maintained schools.

Speech Therapy

16. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to discuss the provision of speech therapy for children in the special educational needs category; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No. The provision of speech therapy is the responsibility of district health authorities and not a matter for my Department.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

17. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent progress has been made towards the establishment of a permanent body to negotiate schoolteachers' pay and conditions.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have already held preliminary discussions with the local authority associations and teacher unions about the Green Paper on future machinery. I intend to hold further discussions over the next few months.

National Curriculum

18. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is now in a position to publish figures of the number and type of teachers required to deliver the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

58. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is now in a position to publish figures of the number and type of teachers required to deliver the national curriculum; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Not yet. Firm estimates will depend upon reports from the relevant subject working groups. There are likely to be additional demands in some subjects but not necessarily an increase in numbers overall.

45. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what amount of teaching time will be lost to primary school teachers during the implementation of assessment arrangements for the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Time spent on assessment is not "lost" to teaching, but is an essential part of the teaching process. The national arrangements will represent a development of present practice designed to improve the effectiveness of assessment in schools for the benefit of parents, pupils and teachers.

56. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will itemise the principal suggestions and elements in any recent public representations received by his Department for the specific contents of the proposed new national core curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has not received any such recent public representations. The targets and programmes of study which my right hon. Friend will propose later this year for English, maths and science will be based on the reports of the working groups on these subjects. In producing their final reports, the working groups on maths and science will take account of detailed responses to their interim reports, and the English group will be considering comments received on the Kingman report on the teaching of English.

Adult Education (London)

19. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has made for the provision of adult education in inner London following the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: Adult education is essentially a local service which should be responsive to local needs and can thus be more effectively organised by the boroughs. There may, however, be scope for certain boroughs to co-operate over certain areas of provision. In addition, there are several high-quality adult education institutions of national repute which carry out a high proportion of advanced work. The Government have made clear their intention to direct the London residuary body to provide financial support for Morley college, the Working Men's college and the Mary Ward centre, all of which are aided colleges. After the London residuary body has been wound up, the Government will be prepared to continue to provide financial support to these institutions as necessary. The Government believe that central funding may also be required for the City Lit.

Polytechnic Students

20. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the number of students entering polytechnics.

Mr. Jackson: The figures given are taken from the Department's published "Statistics of Education: Further Education" volumes. Corresponding figures for 1987 are expected to be available in about two months.

England Polytechnics—First year students[1] (Thousands)

Enrolments on 1 November[2]	Modes of attendance
	Full-time and sandwich	Part-time day and evening only	Total: all modes
1982	64	49	113
1983	64	52	116
1984	65	50	115
1985	67	53	120
1986	69	49	118

[1] First-year students do not align exactly with entrants; some students may repeat the first year of a course and some may enter at the second or later year.

[2] Home, EC and other overseas students on both advanced and non-advanced courses are included.

Sheffield (Further Education)

21. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the relative merits of further funding city technology colleges and providing teacher funding and investment for the reorganisation of 16-plus education in the city of Sheffield; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No such assessment has been made since it is for Sheffield local education authority to decide how to deploy its teaching force to best meet the demands following the reorganisation of 16-plus education in Sheffield in September 1988.

Qualified Teacher Status

22. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the consultation document "Qualified Teacher Status"; and if he will make a statement.

36. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the consultation document "Qualified Teacher Status"; and if he will make a statement.

37. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the consultation document "Qualified Teacher Status"; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State issued the consultation document on qualified teacher status on 24 May. Responses are requested by 14 October; a few have already been received by the Department.

Foreign Language Teaching

23. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the intended time scale for the introduction of foreign language teaching as an internal part of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend expects to require all pupils in the first three years of secondary school to study a modern foreign language for a reasonable time from autumn 1989. A similar requirement for pupils in years four and five will be introduced as soon as possible thereafter, taking account of pupil's commitments to studies for GCSE. The introduction of attainment targets, programmes of study and related assessment arrangements must await the setting up of a working group for modern foreign languages. My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to set up such a group. His decision to do so will depend on factors such as the outlook for teacher supply and deployment.

27. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in north-east England teach (i) Japanese, (ii) Arabic and (iii) Latin as a normal part of their curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected centrally.

Nursery Education (London)

25. Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any further information as to how the provision of nursery education in inner London boroughs is to be safeguarded following the abolition of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: The inner London boroughs will inherit from ILEA the responsibility for nursery provision in their area. They will not be able to discontinue or curtail significantly any existing nursery schools or classes without the publication and approval of statutory proposals under the Education Act 1980.

Under-Fives (Provision)

26. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department plans to commission or undertake any survey, review or inquiry into the quality and standard of educational provision for children under five in reception classes in primary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The Government believe, and have on various occasions publicly expressed the view, that provision for four-year-olds in reception classes should be appropriate to their stage of development. While no formal investigation is planned, my Department and Her Majesty's Inspectors are monitoring the situation closely. The Department will, from next year, include in the annual statistical return submitted by schools additional questions on admission policies for four-year-olds. My right hon. Friend believes the availability of experienced teachers to be an important qualitative factor, and he has proposed the inclusion in the LEA training grants scheme for 1989-90 of an appropriate national priority area.

35. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action his Department has taken or is planning to take to ensure that local education authorities implement DES circular 2/73 recommendations on hours of attendance, staffing, and so on, for children under five years in reception classes in primary schools.

Mr. Dunn: The Government have no plans to require local education authorities to implement the guidelines in circular 2/73, whose detailed recommendations have been largely overtaken by events.

41. Mrs. Llin Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will outline his Department's strategy for improving the provision of education for children under five years.

63. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures his Department is taking to encourage an increase in the number of full-time nursery education places for children aged three and four years old.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Members to the replies that I have given today to the hon. Members for Easington (Mr. Cummings), for Knowsley, North (Mr. Howarth), and for East Kilbride (Mr. Ingram).

Local Government Act 1988

29. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidance he is issuing to local education authorities and school governors about the application of section 28 of the Local Government Act 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Advice on the provisions of the Local Government Act 1988 was issued to all local authorities on 20 May under the Department of the Environment circular 12/88. Section 28 of the Act relates to the activities of local authorities and there are no plans to issue separate advice to school governors. Copies of Department of Education and Science circular 11/87 "Sex Education at School" were sent to all schools in England and Wales in September 1987. The circular makes clear that there is no place in any school in any circumstances for teaching which advocates homosexual behaviour, which presents it as the norm, or which encourages homosexual experimentation by pupils.

GCSE

30. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is in a position to assess the success of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

60. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is in a position to assess the success of the general certificate of secondary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Her Majesty's inspectorate's interim report on the GCSE provided reassuring evidence that the new examination is being successfully introduced and is already leading to better teaching and learning in many schools. HMI is continuing to monitor progress and will publish a further report in the autumn. The Secondary Examinations Council (SEC) and the examining groups are already reviewing syllabuses and procedures.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements are being made for those candidates who wish to resit this summer's GCSE examination, including those where an assessment of course work is part of the examination; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The GCSE examining groups will provide opportunities for pupils to resit GCSE in the winter on a comparable basis to what was available in the past for O-level and GCSE examinations. The groups have also generally made arrangements for GCSE coursework to be carried forward in circumstances where a pupil changes school during the course or resits the examination. Detailed information relating to the arrangements in a particular subject or syllabus is available from the group concerned.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many cases of incorrect or late arrival of GCSE papers have been reported; what were the comparable figures under the previous GCE/CSE system; and what steps he is taking to ensure that no further such errors occur.

Mrs. Rumbold: The distribution of GCSE papers is entirely the responsibility of the examining groups. The Secondary Examinations Council and the examining groups are collaborating to review the experience of the first GCSE examinations this summer and to make any necessary administrative improvements quickly.

Science Base (Report)

Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the Advisory Board for the Research Council's report entitled "A Strategy for the Science Base".

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 17 May to the hon. Member for the Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) at column 394.

Teachers (Collective Bargaining Rights)

32. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received seeking the restoration of collective bargaining rights for teachers and their organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received various responses from teacher unions and local authority associations to the Green Paper "Teachers' Pay and Conditions: A Consultative Document." He will be holding discussions about future machinery with interested parties over the next few months.

School Building Maintenance

33. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what extra funding his Department is planning to provide for school building maintenance over the next three years, in the light of the report "Local Authority Property: a Management Handbook and a Management Overview."

Mr. Dunn: The Government's expenditure plans already include provision for local authority spending on repairs and maintenance of school buildings to increase each year. The expenditure plans for 1988-89 provide for authorities to spend 40 per cent. more in cash on the repair and maintenance of schools than in 1985-86.

Head Teachers (Training)

34. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the training of head teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend recognises the importance of systematic and well-targeted training for senior teachers with a management responsibility. He proposes in 1989-90 to extend the national priority area covering management training within the LEA training grants scheme and he is now setting up a new task force on the management training of heads.

Anti-Racist Measures

38. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy towards anti-racist measures adopted by education authorities.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is Government policy that ethnic minority pupils should have the same opportunity as all others to profit from what the schools can offer them and that schools should preserve and transmit our national values in a way which accepts Britain's ethnic diversity and promotes tolerance and racial harmony. It is for individual local education authorities and schools to determine, in the light of their own needs and circumstances, how to give effect to those policies.

Nurseries

39. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action his Department is taking to encourage the establishment of nurseries in institutions of further and higher education.

Mr. Jackson: None. The provision of nursery facilities is a matter for individual institutions.

Teachers (Salary Structure)

40. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he held any discussions with the Association of Metropolitan Authorities before announcing the latest salary structure for teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend held discussions with representatives of the National Employers Organisation (School Teachers), representing both metropolitan and non-metropolitan authorities, before making his announcement on 26 May.

City Technology Colleges

42. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the future of city technology colleges.

46. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement about progress in relation to his plans for city technology colleges.

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the progress on city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 17 May at column 392. Since that date BAT industries and others have announced their sponsorship of a Teesside CTC in Middlesbrough.

48. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a further statement about the financing of city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier this afternoon to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner).

Interdisciplinary Research Centres

43. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional funding he is providing for the new interdisciplinary research centres.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 13 April at column 135.

University Education (Funding)

44. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next proposes to meet the University Grants Committee to discuss the future funding of university education.

Mr. Jackson: There are no present plans for such a meeting. The committee recently conveyed its views in writing.

Children's Playgrounds

47. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on children's playgrounds in the light of the Consumers' Association survey on children's playgrounds, published in April, a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Government welcome this report by the Consumers' Association which will be of interest to everyone with a responsibility for children's playgrounds and should be useful to them in reviewing their policies and practices. The Department's general requirements on school playgrounds are set out in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 which require up to two thirds of a school's recreation area to be paved or have a hard porous surface. The remaining area need not be paved.

16-plus Education

49. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Government have any proposals to improve the staying-on rate at the age of 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

52. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether the Government have any proposals to improve the staying-on rate at the age of 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government are committed to increasing the post-16 participation rate in education and training. The proposal in the Education Reform Bill will help to secure that by giving more young people the motivation and the qualifications they need to stay on after 16. The Government are also working to broaden the range of opportunities available to those who want to stay on; to ensure that young people know what their options are; to give greater coherence to the pattern of post-16 vocational qualifications; and to bring home to both young people and employers the vital importance of education and training.

Cleveland

50. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last visited a school in Cleveland; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend visited the site of the new city technology college in Middlesborough on Thursday 16 June, for the announcement of the BAT sponsorship of the college.

Nursery Education

51. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about Her Majesty's Government policy towards encouraging nursery education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations recently.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if the Government have any plans to introduce legislation to make it a statutory duty of local education authorities to provide education for three and four-year-old children of parents who wish their children to benefit from it.

Mr. Dunn: No. The Government believe that local authorities are best placed to judge the extent and form of provision for the under-fives appropriate to their circumstances, in the light of local demand.

National Association of Head Teachers

54. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next intends to meet the leaders of the National Association of Head Teachers; and what issue he will discuss.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend last met leaders of the National Association of Head Teachers on 11 May to discuss the report of the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions. He also addressed its annual conference on 3 June. No date has been set for a further meeting with the National Association of Head Teachers.

Latin

57. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will estimate the number of school children studying Latin to O-level.

Mrs. Rumbold: In 1985-86, the latest year for which information is available, the number of school leavers attempting O-level classics (including Latin, Greek/Greek translation, general classics and ancient history) was 24,560.

New Polytechnic, Kent

59. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to designate a new polytechnic in Kent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. However, the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council that will be established following the passage of the Education Reform Bill will be asked to include among its early tasks an assessment of whether any further designations would be appropriate.

Basic Science (Funding)

61. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what consideration he has given to the proposal by the chairman of the Science and Engineering Research Council that funding of basic science should be a fixed proportion of gross domestic product, with the proportion to be reviewed every four years.

Mr. Jackson: We have noted the proposal in Professor Mitchell's recent lecture. The possibility of a link between part or all of the science budget and the growth of GDP was also suggested in the ABRC's discussion document, "A Strategy for the Science Base." We are currently considering the ABRC's recommendations and the comments on them which we have received from the higher education and scientific communities. My right hon. Friend expects to make a statement later in the year on the Government's policy objectives for the science base and the steps we will be taking to achieve them.

School Meals

62. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy on the nutritional content of school meals.

Mr. Dunn: Under the provisions of the Education Act 1980, the nutritional content of school meals is the responsibility of individual local education authorities. Many LEAs are promoting healthy eating options, often supported by work in the classroom and through marketing campaigns. The Government support such approaches.

Education Reform

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement on the progress of the working parties established in relation to the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Knowsley, South (Mr. Hughes).

Student Funding

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on progress in relation to his plans to review methods of student funding.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Buckley).

Parental Involvement

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received upon involving parents further in their children's education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received a number of letters from hon. Members and others on this subject. The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 increased the representation of parents on school governing bodies, and provided for more information to be give to parents. The proposals in the Education Reform Bill will further enhance parents' influence.

Schools (Discipline)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the maintenance of discipline in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Since my right hon. Friend announced the establishment of the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools on 18 March this year, we have received about 80 letters on the general subject of discipline in schools from hon. Members and others.

Universities (Funding)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the current level of Government funding of the universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend receives many representations bearing on present and prospective university funding.

TRANSPORT

Ports (Employment)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the change in the number of people employed in United Kingdom ports and associated employment since (a) 1978, (b) 1968 and (c) 1958.

Mr. David Mitchell: The following figures, published annually in "Port Statistics" by my Department and the British Ports Association, are estimates of the number of people employed in the port transport industry. They are derived from the Department of Employment's standard industrial classification. Because of changes in the definition of the classification, the figure for 1986 (the latest available year) may be rather lower than an entirely consistent series would have given. The figures relate to Great Britain and to the middle of each year.

	Employees
1958	[1]155,450
1968	129,625
1978	62,600
1986	35,100

[1] Including perhaps some 8,000 employed in inland waterway transport and other ancillary industries.

A separate survey undertaken by the British Ports Association and National Association of Port Employers in March 1987 produced a total for Great Britain of 38,989.

Leeds/Bradford Airport

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many representations he has received in favour of extending the operating hours of Leeds/Bradford airport;

(2) when he will make a decision about the hours during which Leeds/Bradford airport may be used.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of such representations have been received. The decision, to be made jointly by the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment, will be announced as soon as possible.

Vehicles (Lighting Standards)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the upper and lower standards of illumination for lights on motor vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Road Vehicles Lighting Regulations 1984 require nearly all lights on vehicles to meet European standards of performance. These cover both maximum and minimum levels of intensity for a large number of individual types of light.

Marine Surveyors

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there was any change in his Department's plans for the number of marine surveyors to be employed in any of the years 1987, 1988 and 1989 as a consequence of the capsize of the Herald of Free Enterprise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Yes. For 1988-89 and subsequent years, the planned level of staffing in the Surveyor General's organisation has been increased compared with previous plans, to provide for additional inspection work on roll-on/roll-off passenger ferries.

Greater London

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report all studies and investigations he has announced concerning the planning or improvement to all modes of transport in the Greater London area, stating, for each, the purpose of the study, by whom it is being undertaken and the date of expected publication.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have announced the following relevant studies and investigations which are yet to be completed:

Study	Purpose	Undertaker	Expected publication date
Stage 2 of London Assessment Studies	To indentify practical options for tackling transport problems in four areas of London	Ove Arup and Partners, Travers Morgan Planning, Mott Hay and Anderson, Sir William Halcrow and Partners	Spring-early summer 1989
Western Environmental Im-provement Route	Investigation into carriageway standards, junctions and associated management measures	Husband and Co.	Public Consulta-tion on study options by end 1988
Trunk Road Signing Review	To review London's trunk road signing with a view to the provision of better information along main routes	MVA Consultancy	No plans
Development of Traffic Management and Accident Prevention Measures	To examine systematically all traffic management measures currently used on trunk roads	W. S. Atkins and Partners	No plans
M25 Review	To assess traffic trends on M25 and adjacent radial routes, identify existing and potential problem areas and recommend solutions	Rendel, Palmer and Tritton	No plans
M25 Widening Study	To investigate the best way of providing a fourth lane in each direction between junctions 15 and 16	Sir William Halcrow and Partners	No plans
Central London Rail Study	To develop a strategy for improving services in the Central London area and to provide for forecast demand up to the end of the century while maximising the use of existing assets	Joint study by Department of Transport British Rail and London Regional Transport	An initial report is expected in July. Further work will be required before publication is considered
Central London Employment Trends	To provide an appreciation of likely future trends in employment in London and hence in demand for rail services	Joint study by Department of Transport and British Rail	Expected to report early 1989
Channel Tunnel Rail Capacity Study	To examine options for increasing route, seating and terminal capacity between London and Channel tunnel in the longer term	British Rail	By BR in July 1988

Road Accident Statistics

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list in the Official Report, for each of the last five years, the numbers of people killed or injured on roads in South Killingholme, Immingham, Flamborough, Brockelsby, Melton Ross, Croxton, Keelby, and Great Limber, by age group.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information in the form requested is not available centrally.

I shall write to the hon. Member.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Schoolchildren (Illegal Employment)

65. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the illegal employment of school-age children.

Mrs. Currie: No information is available on children who may be employed illegally.

The Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act 1920, which applies to Great Britain, prohibits the employment of children in industrial undertakings. The Health and Safety Executive has powers under this Act to take immediate action if a child is found to be working illegally in any such employment; and through its agricultural inspectorate to enforce legislation which prohibits the employment or involvement of children in certain agricultural operations.

The Children and Young Persons Act 1933, which applies to England and Wales, prohibits the employment of children under 13 and restricts the part-time employment of children between the ages of 13 and 16. Local authority byelaws made under this Act place further restrictions on the hours and occupations of schoolchildren's employment. Local authorities have powers, which are usually exercised through the educational welfare service, to enforce the byelaws and, under section 59 of the Education Act 1944, which also applies to England and Wales, to prohibit or restrict the employment of any child.

Oxford Regional Health Authority

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the population served by each district health authority in the Oxford region in 1986-87, 1987-88 and the forecast for 1988-89; and what was the per capita expenditure for each district in these three years.

Mr. Newton: The information requested for 1986-87, together with the projected population figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89 is shown in the table. Figures from the accounts of each health authority for 1987-88 will be available in the autumn. However, for that year and forecast expenditure figures for each district for 1988-89 (which are not collected centrally) my hon. Friend may wish to approach the chairman of the Oxford regional health authority who may be able to assist.

1986-87

	Total revenue expenditure £000s	Population (thousands)	Revenue expenditure per capita £	Projected population (thousands) 1987-88	1988-89
East Berkshire	54,411	361·3	151	364·2	365·7
West Berkshire	72,384	445·0	163	448·9	453·9

b. Mid-year estimates of population 1986. Population figures for 1987-88 and 1988-89 are 1985 based projections (Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

Notes

1. Expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded. Such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees and cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions or districts.
2. Significant variations in per capita expenditure figures at district level arise principally because:
   i. people travel across boundaries for treatment and sub-regional resource allocations reflect the pattern of service provision locally.
   ii. the population figures used make no allowance for people resident in one district who receive treatment in another or for the difference in morbidity and age/sex structure of particular populations.

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the budgeted expenditure for Oxford regional health authority for the financial years 1987-88 and 1988-89; and what was the increase between the two years;

(2) what is the budgeted expenditure for each district health authority in the Oxford regional health authority for 1987-88 and 1988-89; and what is the percentage increase for each.

Mr. Newton: The table provides the information requested for the Oxford region in terms of net cash limits.

Similar information for each district within the Oxford region is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to write to the chairman of the Oxford RHA for this information.

Oxford RHA

	1987-88 £ million	1988-89 £ million	Percentage increase Cash	Real terms
Revenue cash limit[1]	[2]475·8	[3]521·2	9·54	4·82

[3] Initial cash limit and subsequent additions from waiting list fund and following 1988 review body pay awards.

Leaflets

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects his Department's offices will have a full stock of all leaflets.

Mr. Portillo: The few outstanding leaflets referring to the April 1988 social security reforms will be available in local social security offices in the first week of July.

Doctors (Derbyshire)

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors are currently employed by the National Health Service in Derbyshire; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Newton: The information in the table shows the total number of hospital and community health service medical staff based on whole-time equivalents at 30 September each year. The figures exclude all consultants and senior registrars whose contracts are held by the regional health authority. There will therefore be more doctors actually working in Derbyshire than accounted for in the table.

Hospital and community health service medical staff at 30 September each year
Derbyshire

	Whole-time equivalent
1979	250
1986	290

Note:

Figures include permanent paid, honorary and locum staff but exclude consultants and senior registrars whose contracts are held by the regional health authorities. Distribution of consultants and senior registrars within non-teaching district health authorities is not collected centrally. Figures are rounded to nearest 10.

Paediatric Occupational Therapists

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps have been taken by his Department to deal with the shortage of paediatric occupational therapists.

Mr. Newton: The joint DHSS/NHS manpower planning advisory group has commissioned a study to look at future staffing and skill mix in occupational therapy.

The project does not single out paediatric occupational therapists as a particular group but will cover the profession as a whole.

Preliminary results will be available in late 1989.

Home Responsibilities Protection

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the qualifying years for home responsibilities protection to include tax years before 1978; and if he will estimate the cost of such an increase.

Mr. Scott: We have no plans to do so. It is very difficult to arrive at a precise costing, but the best estimate would suggest a cost of several hundred million pounds.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the answer of 26 May, Official Report, column 265, he will make it his policy in future, when producing statistics about rates of HIV infection, to make clear whether the figures are based on reported cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The statistics for HIV infection which the Department publishes in the regular quarterly reports have always been based on cases of HIV seropositivity and AIDS which are reported to the national surveillance centres. This is always explained in the text which accompanies the statistics.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what response he has made to representations by the Family Planning Association to the effect that cuts in family planning clinics are increasing the risk of young people catching HIV infection.

Mr. Newton: In correspondence with the Family Planning Association I have expressed the view that public awareness of the risks of transmission of HIV infection and the consequent demands on the services of family planning clinics are among the issues for health authorities to consider in determining the level of local provision.

AIDS

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all funds or grants made available to National Health Service laboratories, hospitals or consultants for the purpose of conducting research on HIV infection or AIDS by the following organisations: (i) the Wellcome Foundation, (ii) Burroughs Wellcome, (iii) Abbot Laboratories, (iv) du Pont and (v) Glaxo, identifying the organisation, amount, principal recipient and purpose of grant.

Mr. Newton: Such information is not held centrally. However, the Department is administering, at the request of Abbot Laboratories, the allocation of £65,000 set aside by Abbot for travel fellowships, to allow health care professionals who are undertaking research into AIDS or HIV infection to travel to the United states of America to meet other researchers working in the same field. So far eight fellowships have been awarded.

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has authorised for use within the National Health Service any anti-HIV antibody test which has not previously been the subject of an evaluation as to efficiency conducted by or on behalf of his Department.

Mr. Newton: Anti-HIV antibody tests employed in the National Health Service do not require authorisation from the Department.

The Department seeks to evaluate commercially available HIV tests on a systematic basis, and makes the reports of these evaluations available to the NHS and other interested parties, but we do not authorise particular test kits.

Doctors (Competition)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department will be contributing to the Office of Fair Trading's inquiry into the competitive position of doctors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Director General of Fair Trading has now referred the question of restrictions on doctors' advertising to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. I understand that officials from this Department will be invited to give evidence to the commission.

Income Support

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of recipients of housing benefit supplement prior to 4 April who qualify for income support, and what proportion are pensioners.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available to enable us to make such an estimate.

Income Support

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, under the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987, he is empowered to direct that payments of income support relating to accommodation charges be made direct to the organisation providing the accommodation in cases where such charges have been incurred, but the claimant has moved on between the date of claim and the first pay day.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) on 16 June at column 281.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether payment direct to the creditor of a debt owed by an income support claimant would be treated as income of the claimant under regulation 42(4)(a)(ii) of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987.

Mr. Portillo: A single payment made by a third party to a creditor of a debt would normally be treated as part of the claimant's capital under regulation 51(3)(a)(ii) of the Income Support (General) Regulations 1987 if it were used in respect of food, clothing, footwear, fuel or certain accommodation costs. Payments made regularly by a third party could be treated as income of the claimant under regulation 42(4)(a)(ii) if they were used in respect of these items. The first £5 a week of these payments would be disregarded.

NHS Managers

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the moneys paid to National Health Service managers through the performance related bonus scheme are financed (a) centrally, (b) from district or (c) from regional budgets.

Mr. Newton: Health authorities are expected to meet all pay costs including performance related pay for managers from their overall cash allocations.

Ambulances

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the current National Health Service review on ambulance purchase will be concluded.

Mrs. Currie: The review of purchasing policy for NHS ambulances is expected to be completed later this year.

Foetal Tissue

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his reply of 7 June to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos), Official Report, columns 557-58, if he will list the members of the ethical committees which approved the use of human foetal tissue in the transplant operations to which he refers;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 7 June to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos), Official Report, columns 557-58, upon what information he based his understanding that the ethical committees to which he refers considered the issues involved in the use of foetal tissue in transplant operations with care and over a long period of time;

(3) pursuant to his reply of 7 June to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos), Official Report, columns 557-58, upon what date the ethical committees to which he refers first deliberated upon each of the applications for permission to transplant human foetal tissue; on how many separate days such deliberations continued in each case; and on what date a decision finally was minuted in each case.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos) of 7 June, Official Report, column 557, he will now take steps to hold centrally the lists of names of members of ethical committees; and if he will list the members of all the ethical committees which approved the use of foetal tissue in the transplant operations to which he refers.

Mr. Newton: I understand the ethical committee at the midland centre for Neurosurgery and neurology has discussed Professor Hitchcock's work on using transplantation techniques to treat Parkinsonism on a number of occasions since 1982. The specific procedure referred to was first discussed in February last year when further information was called for. A decision to authorise it was taken in December. The members of the ethical committee who considered this procedure were:

Dr. J. M. Anderson, Consultant neurologist (December 1987 only)
Mrs. B. J. Baker, Senior Nurse Manager
Dr. S. W. Chauda, Neuro-radiologist (February 1987 only)
Dr. J. Milligan, General Practitioner
Dr. M. V. Salmon, Neuro-pathologist
Dr. R. J. West, Neuro-radiologist
Mrs. M. Wilkes, Community Health Council
Mr. J. Ballantyne, Hospital Administrator and Secretary to the Committee

Professor Hitchcock himself is also a member of the committee, but I understand attended the relevant meetings primarily to speak to his protocol and would have been excluded from any vote.

We have no plans to hold the names of local ethical committee members centrally.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 7 June to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos), Official Report, columns 557-58, if he will arrange for the publication in the Official Report of the text of the declaration which was signed by the mothers in the cases to which he refers in which human foetal tissue was used in transplant operations.

Mr. Newton: The text of the declaration referred to was as follows:

"I have no special wishes concerning the disposal of material arising from my pregnancy."

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply of 7 June to the hon. Member for Hexham (Mr. Amos), Official Report, columns 557-58, whether, during the course of the prolonged and careful deliberation by ethical committees to which he refers, any of those committees sought advice from his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No.

Research Findings (Publication)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the chairman of the university vice-chancellors, Sir Mark Richmond's letter to him about the Government's proposal on the right to republish research findings, he proposes to reconsider these proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have taken careful note of the points Sir Mark made in his recent letter, but we have no plans to change our policy.

Obstetricians

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultant obstetricians are employed by each of the outer London health districts.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally. Information on medical staff in the NHS is collected by the employing authority. Employing authorities for consultants are regional health authorities, district health authorities designated for undergraduate teaching purposes, and special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals.

NHS (Technicians)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy for bringing about an improvement in the salaries of cardiac technicians, physiological measurement technicians, employed by the National Health Service; what information he has on the difficulty of recruiting and retaining student technicians due to low rates of pay; and if he will institute a review of the basis upon which this group of technicians are paid.

Mr. Newton: I presume that my hon. Friend refers to physiological measurement technicians (cardiology). Their pay and conditions of service are matters for negotiation in the professional and technical staffs B Whitley council and I understand the management side recently offered a 5·5 per cent. increase in pay and allowances for physiological measurement technicians. The staff side is consulting its members on the offer. I am not aware of any reports of difficulty in recruiting and retaining student technicians. The number of students in post since 1979 has increased by over 10 per cent.

Körner Committee

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the cost to date of implementing the recommendations of the Körner committee.

Mr. Newton: Regional health authorities are responsible for implementing Körner; information about costs is not held centrally. The major expenditure has been on the implementation of operational computer systems to facilitate patient management and personnel administration, which provide Körner data as a by-product.

Maternity Pay

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that holiday pay is taken into account as part of a woman's earnings for purposes of calculating statutory maternity pay.

Mr. Portillo: Under current provisions employers are already required to take into account in calculating statutory maternity pay entitlement any contractual payment which is made during the test period, and which is treated as earnings for national insurance contribution purposes. This can include holiday pay.

Blind Persons

Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates is the total annual cost of a blind person to the Exchequer, indicating what proportion is resourced from central Government and local government, respectively.

Mr. Scott: I regret that information is not available centrally in the form required.

Single European Market

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes will be necessary in United Kingdom health and social services legislation in order to satisfy the harmonisation requirements of the European Community for the achievement of the single market in 1992.

Mrs. Currie: Provision of health and social services as such does not fall within the terms of the treaty establishing the European Community and therefore no change in the basic legislation covering their operation is likely. In other areas, for example the mutual recognition of professional qualifications, compliance with harmonised safety requirements for medical devices and supplies, authorisation and pricing arrangements for medicinal products and measures for the health and safety of workers, legislative changes may be necessary, depending on the measures adopted by the Community, which could affect the health and social services. The proposals for the approximation of duties on tobacco and alcohol, the labelling of tobacco products and the tar yield of cigarettes also have important health implications.

Funeral Expenses

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the qualification for the payment of a contribution towards funeral expenses to widows following the death of the spouse or a dependent relative.

Mr. Portillo: We do not plan such a review. Regulated provision is made under the social fund for claims to be made by anyone, including widows, who is awarded either income support, family credit or housing benefit who has to take responsibility for a funeral and needs help to meet the expenses involved. For this purpose, particular provision is made to disregard, for 12 months, the £1,000 lump sum payable to widows when calculating the amount which may be paid under the social fund.

Health and Social Service Benefit

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what entitlement to health and social service benefit (a) citizens of Eire and (b) citizens of Commonwealth countries have in the United Kingdom; and if these rights are reciprocal for United Kingdom citizens in Eire.

Mrs. Currie: All people ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom are eligible to use the full range of NHS facilities and the personal social services regardless of their own nationality. For health benefit the position in respect of temporary visitors from overseas depends on country of origin. All citizens of EC countries who are resident in the Community may obtain immediately necessary treatment for health conditions arising during a visit on the same terms as residents of the host country, by virtue of the EC social security regulations; this includes Irish visitors to the United Kingdom and United Kingdom visitors to Ireland. Similar arrangements for immediately necessary treatment exist for visitors from Australia, Malta and New Zealand, member countries of the Commonwealth with which the United Kingdom has concluded bilateral health care agreements. Visitors from other Commonwealth countries must pay for treatment received in the United Kingdom though they may do so through private insurance. United Kingdom citizens resident in Ireland are covered by the Irish health care scheme.

Entitlement to income support (social service benefit) is dependent on immigration status. People from Commonwealth countries who are accepted for permanment settlement here are entitled to income support in the same way as United Kingdom citizens. Temporary visitors (students, tourists, business people) however, are only admitted if the immigration officer is satisfied that they will not have recourse to public funds.

There are no immigration controls between the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland. Consequently Irish citizens can claim income support in the same way as British citizens, and similarly British citizens can claim social welfare whilst in Ireland on the same terms as Irish citizens.

Glue Ear

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of glue ear are currently diagnosed annually in children; and what were the figures in the previous five years.

Mrs. Currie: The information available centrally relates to treatment in NHS hospitals. The table shows the most recent data on the number of patients treated in NHS hospitals with a main diagnosis of chronic mucoid otitis media (ICD[1] 381.2).

	0-14 years	15 years and over	All ages
1985	12,980	720	13,700

1982	8,070	490	8,560

[1] ICD: International Classification of Diseases.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time for admission of children to hospital for operations in connection with treatment for glue ear in each regional health authority.

Mrs. Currie: Information on waiting times for operations carried out in NHS hospitals is not collected centrally by diagnosis of the patient, but according to the type of surgical operation or procedure performed. A number of different operations are performed for the treatment of glue ear; the principal one is myringotomy/tympanostomy, for which information on waiting times of patients treated in 1985 (the latest year for which information is held centrally) is given in the table.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether his Department issues any guidance to doctors about recognising behavioural changes in young children as a symptom of the onset of deafness due to glue ear;

(2) whether he will make it his policy to establish a committee of inquiry to take evidence from those with experience of the condition glue ear and to make recommendations as to how treatment of the condition can be improved.

Mrs. Currie: We have issued guidance in the past on various screening and diagnostic services for hearing-impaired children. In order to obtain more up-to-date information, we commissioned research in 1985 from the Medical Research Council Institute for Hearing Research. The results, which include various considerations in respect of otitis media or glue ear, were received recently. When these have been studied we should be in a much better position to take matters forward.

Low-income Families

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of persons in low-income families in England (i) on supplementary benefit, (ii) below 100 per cent. of supplementary benefit and (iii) below 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit, for each of the years 1979, 1981, 1983 and 1985, as reported for Great Britain in the Department of Health and Social Security low-income families tables.

Mr. Portillo: A reply can be supplied only at disproportionate cost. In addition, however, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 27 May at columns 413-14.

NHS Patients (Physiotherapy)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his question of 12 April, Official Report, column 343, what is his policy towards the treatment of National Health Service patients in need of physiotherapy outside the National Health Service by non-state registered physiotherapists.

Mr. Newton: Physiotherapy treatment for National Health Service patients is provided within the National Health Service by state registered physiotherapists. Where an NHS patient is referred outside for treatment, which is likely to be only in very unusual circumstances, there is no formal requirement that the physiotherapist should be state registered. Outside the NHS patients have the right to choose to seek treatment both from physiotherapists who are state registered and from those who are not.

Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why the word "extra" was omitted from paragraph 14(e) of schedule 4 to the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983.

Mr. Portillo: The Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1980 were amended, before they took effect on 24 November 1980, to omit the word "extra" from column 2 of paragraph 13(e) to schedule 3. This was done to avoid the great difficulty of requiring the adjudication officer to establish the cost of a normal diet in order to determine the extra cost of a special one.

Women's Refuges

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to protect the financial situation of women's refuges in any changes resulting from the review of board and lodging payments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We have commissioned a study by the Policy Studies Institute into the characteristics of hostels, including women's refuges, providing accommodation for income support recipients. We expect to receive the results shortly. In the meantime, no decisions have been taken on future arrangements for paying these claimants.

Benefits

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many people, at the latest date for which information is available, were in receipt of (a) invalidity benefit, (b) invalidity benefit and supplementary benefit, (c) severe disablement allowance and (d) severe disablement allowance and supplementary benefit;

(2) how many people were in receipt of severe disablement allowance at the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows:

(a) 899,000 at April 1986
(b) 112,000 at May 1987
(c) 261,000 at April 1986
(d) 136,000 at May 1987

Severe Disablement Allowance

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time taken between the date of claim for severe disablement allowance and the date of the decision on that claim where (a) the claimant is not required to undergo the 80 per cent. disablement test and (b) the claimant is required to undergo the 80 per cent. disablement test.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims for severe disablement allowance were made in each of the years 1984 to 1988.

Mr. Scott: The information is as follows, based on calendar years.

	Claims
1984	[1]9,398
1985	46,997
1986	38,508
1987	41,323
1988	[2]21,835

[1] Severe disablement allowance first became payable on 29 November 1984.
[2] Up to 30 April, the latest date for which figures are available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the classification of refusals of severe disablement allowance to (a) men, (b) single women and (c) married women according to the following reasons: (i) over pension age, (ii) not incapable of work, (iii) failed the 80 per cent. disablement test, (iv) failed the residence and presence conditions and (v) other;

(2) what is the classification of awards of severe disablement allowance to date to (a) men, (b) single women and (c) married women according to whether they (i) were exempt from the 80 per cent. of disablement, (ii) were passported to the 80 per cent. test or (iii) passed the 80 per cent. test;

(3) how many (a) favourable and (b) unfavourable decisions on applications for severe disablement allowance have been made to date.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to her on 23 July 1987 at columns 488-90. Since April 1987 statistics for severe disablement allowance have been collected on the same basis as those for sickness and invalidity benefit and updated information in the form requested is not available.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appeals there were, for each of the years 1984 to 1988, against refusals of severe disablement allowance because the claimant was judged not to satisfy the test of 80 per cent. disablement; and how many of these appeals resulted in the claimant being awarded severe disablement allowance.

Mr. Scott: Information is not readily available on the grounds of appeal or the satisfaction or otherwise of the 80 per cent. disablement test. The available information on severe disablement is provided in the table. National administrative statistics for social security appeal tribunals are not available in the equivalent form prior to the second quarter of 1984, while the latest available figures are for the third quarter of 1987.

Invalidity Benefit

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time taken between the date of a claim for invalidity benefit and the date of a decision on that claim.

Mr. Portillo: As at 8 April 1988 the average time taken between the date of claim to sickness and invalidity benefit and a decision on the claim was 11 days.

Separate records are not kept of the number of claimants to sickness benefit and invalidity benefit.

Clinical Thermometers

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southend, East on 16 June, what evidence he has of British producers of clinical thermometers having difficulties in exporting their products to the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have no evidence that the one existing United Kingdom producer of clinical thermometers covered by directive 76/764/EEC has difficulty in exporting his products to Europe. But under present arrangements the manufacturer needs to have his products tested by BSI in respect of sales to the NHS and also separately in Germany for the purpose of having the EEC mark applied in respect of sales elsewhere in Europe. When regulations are laid to give effect to the directive it is expected that the manufacturer will be able to reduce costs and simplify arrangements by using a single British or other approved test house to cover approval for home and export sales.

Single Payments

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East of 16 June, when he will be in a position to give the national outstanding total of single payment claims as at 31 May.

Mr. Portillo: I expect to be able to do so shortly.

Virus Reference Laboratory

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if any members of the virus reference laboratory of the public health laboratory services are now or have at any time been employed as consultants by Burroughs Wellcome.

Mr. Newton: I am advised that to the best of the knowledge of the public health laboratory service no member of the staff of the PHLS virus reference laboratory has ever been employed by or received payments from Burroughs Wellcome.

Cockroaches (Human Diseases)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the human diseases that are spread by cockroaches in the United States of America.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that although cockroaches may occasionally contaminate food, they are not "carriers" for any human disease. No specific information about the USA has been drawn to the Department's attention.

Resettlement Unit, Worsley

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is able to make an announcement concerning the future of the resettlement unit at Worsley, Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: A review team consisting of representatives of voluntary and statutory organisations has recently submitted a package of proposals for the funding of schemes dealing with the resettlement of homeless people, to replace the services provided by the Worsley resettlement unit. The schemes would provide smaller facilities in Bury, Rochdale, Salford, Oldham, Tameside, Wigan, Leigh, Stockport, Bolton and Manchester. I have agreed these proposals, and detailed arrangements for local buildings and sites will now be considered. The resettlement unit will eventually close although no actual closure date has yet been arranged.

Health Authorities (Revenue)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes in revenue have been made in the Northern regional health authority and Sunderland district health authority during the last five years for which figures are available, both in cash and real terms and as percentages.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 31 March 1988]: Following are the figures for total revenue expenditure and percentage changes over the latest available five-year period for the health authorities requested and the northern region as a whole:

Total revenue expenditure

[1] Includes the Northern Regional Health Authority, Sunderland and all other district health authorities comprising the Northern region.

Source
Annual financial accounts submitted to the Department by the health authorities concerned.

Notes to the table
1. The figures for the earlier years have been expressed at 1986-87 prices by the use of the gross domestic product deflator.
2. Capital expenditure and expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded. The latter expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees (FPCs) and cannot strictly be attributed to particular districts or regions. However, prior to 1 April 1985 the Sunderland health authority and eight other district health authorities within the northern region each had an associated FPC and those authorities' revenue expenditure for the years before that date includes elements in respect of the administrative expenses of FPCs which are not separately identifiable.

University Teaching Hospitals (Staff Salaries)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest available figure for the number of university teaching hospital medical and clinical staff whose salaries are not funded by the University Grants Committee; and what is the percentage change since 1980-81.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 4 May 1988]: Figures are not available centrally which identify separately the numbers of clinical staff of universities attached to a teaching hospital whose salaries are not funded by the University Grants Committee. Those for part-time staff funded from all sources are aggregated, as also are the figures for whole-time staff whose posts are wholly or partially funded by other sources. Information published by the Universities Statistical Record indicates that in 1985-86 there were 1,387 whole-time clinical medical and dental staff of universities whose salaries were not wholly funded by universities, an increase of 109 per cent. since 1980-81.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many households (a) in total, (b) by tenure, and (c) by household type are expected to receive (i) more and (ii) less housing benefit by up to £1 a week, £1 to £2 a week, £2 to £3 a week, £3 to £4 a week, £4 to £5 a week and £5 plus a week as a result of the changes implemented on 4 April and amended on 28 April.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 6 May 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply given to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 7 June 1988 at column 561.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of jobs to be created to administer the transitional protection scheme on housing benefit; whether those jobs will be temporary or permanent, and where they will be located.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 6 May 1988]: The transitional payments unit will be located in Glasgow and the final number of staff required will be decided in the light of applications received. Appointments will be made on both a permanent and temporary and a limited period basis; the proportion of the latter has yet to be determined.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he will be taking regarding the letters sent to him by the hon. Member for Walsall, North regarding the cases of constituents who will be applying for the transitional payments over housing benefit increases; how soon the payments will be made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In appropriate cases leaflet RR4—Housing Benefit New Rules—will be issued. This contains an application form for completion and return to the transitional payments unit in Glasgow. The first payments will be sent out in July when the unit becomes fully operational.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, of the 13 per cent. of his Department's staff who come from ethnic minority groups, which minority groups are represented and what levels of employment his Department's monitoring system shows them to have reached.

Mr. Stanley: The Northern Ireland Civil Service does not monitor the ethnic origins of its staff. It records details of the sex, religious affiliation and any disabilities of its staff. Details of the Northern Ireland Civil Service's composition in these terms are given in the second report of its equal opportunities unit, a copy of which is in the Library.

The figure of 13 per cent. relates to the Home Civil Service element of the Northern Ireland Office. This cadre is so small that the publication of information about ethnic monitoring groups which are represented and the grades they have reached would allow the ethnic origins of individuals to be identified. This would represent a breach of the confidentiality which is promised when the information is sought.

Fair Employment

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been taken to ensure that the monitoring system developed for his Department complies with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Stanley: The remits of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission for Great Britain do not extend to Northern Ireland. However, the equal opportunities monitoring system set up by the Northern Ireland Civil Service was developed in full consultation with, and its introduction was welcomed by, the Fair Employment Agency and the Equal Opportunities Commission for Northern Ireland.

As far as the Home Civil Service element of the Northern Ireland Office is concerned, the monitoring system developed complies with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission so far as is practicable with a group of only some 190 civil servants.

A survey to provide information on the ethnic origin of staff in the NIO was considered as part of a phased programme of ethnic surveys across the Civil Service, and the monitoring of recruits has continued since then. The Department also participates in annual surveys conducted across the Civil Service relating to the employment of women and of the disabled.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table showing the number of civil servants employed (a) by the Northern Ireland Office and (b) by Northern Ireland Departments, and the total cost to public funds of each, in each year since 1974.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 13 June 1988]: Information for all of the years in question is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Available information is as follows:

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Nicaragua

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much aid has been sent to Nicaragua by the United Kingdom in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 20 June.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Expenditure

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report a table based on table 12.1 of the public expenditure White Paper, Cm. 288–II, with all figures converted to 1987-88 prices.

Mrs. Rumbold: The information requested is set out in the table. The figures have been revalued using the Budget assumptions about movements in the GDP (market prices) deflator, which is assumed to rise by 5 per cent. in 1987-88, 4·5 per cent. in 1988-89, 4 per cent. in 1989-90 and 3·5 per cent. in 1990-91. All figures have been rounded to the nearest £1 million, so that the totals shown may not equal the sum of their rounded components.

Medical Research Council (Pensions)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what account he took of the current relative level of contributions paid by men and women in the Medical Research Council's pension scheme and of the Government Actuary's calculations as to the cost of a widowers' pension within that scheme when issuing guidelines to the Medical Research Council indicating that widowers' pensions should be funded by increasing members' contributions in order that the cost be shared by employer and employees.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's policy on implementation of the Social Security Act 1986 is that the cost of introducing additional benefits to existing public sector pension schemes must be shared by the employer and the employees. We are still discussing with the Medical Research Council and the Treasury the appropriate basis for applying this policy to the MRC scheme, taking account of all the relevant factors including the current level of contributions paid and the Government Actuary's calculations. A final decision has not yet been reached.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Mr. Anthony Cavendish

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects to be in a position to give the final outturn of costs incurred in relation to the proceedings on Mr. Anthony Cavendish's memoirs.

The Attorney-General: I will not be in a position to give the final figure for the costs of this case until after the conclusion of the proceedings, which are still at the interlocutory stage.

"The Friends: Britain's Post-war Secret Intelligence Operations"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General why Her Majesty's Government have not sought an injunction to restrain publication of the book written by the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Allason) under the pseudonym of Nigel West entitled, "The Friends: Britain's Post-war Secret Intelligence Operations."

The Attorney-General: The Government deplore the publication of books of this nature, and especially when advice from the D Notice Committee secretary has to any extent been disregarded.

As regards legal action, this is not a case of an author who is or has been a Crown servant, and taking that fact into account, together with the contents of this particular book, the Government concluded that an application for an injunction to restrain the book's publication would be unlikely to succeed.

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General (1) for what reason the Treasury Solicitor approached Messrs Nilsson and Lamon regarding their circular to British booksellers about the book, "Spycatcher"; what form the approach took; what warnings it contained about the risk of criminal contempt on the part of Nilsson and Lamon and on the basis of what legal precedents; how the Treasury Solicitor became aware of the circular by Nilsson and Lamon; what is his general policy towards issuing warnings to organisations and individuals about the possible criminal nature of their actions or intended actions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the implications for Her Majesty's Government's obligations under the treaty of Rome and the European Convention on Human Rights of his attempts to prevent paperback editions of the book "Spycatcher" being distributed to British booksellers; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: These questions relate to a letter which is referred to in an affidavit before the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords, which is currently hearing the Government's appeal against The Guardian, The Observer and the Sunday Times newspapers. It would therefore not be appropriate for me to comment upon it while the proceedings continue.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Rolls-Royce

Mr. Millan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has received a request from Rolls-Royce for launch aid in respect of the development of the RB211-524L engine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: I have received an application from Rolls-Royce for launch aid under the Civil Aviation Act 1982 towards the development of the RB211 family of engines including the RB211-524L. This is being considered.

Furniture (Fire Safety)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many written representations he has so far received on the subject of furniture fire safety regulations.

Mr. Butcher: Some 275 representations have been received.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what video or film evidence he has so far received concerning the furniture fire safety regulations; and if he will list the film or video producers in each case;

(2) if he has made any representation to the British Rubber Manufacturers Association in relation to procedure used during the fire safety test contained in the video sent to him by the association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The British Rubber Manufacturers Association video contains comparisons of the fires in a number of suites which were identical apart from the fillings. Rapid ignition was ensured, for experimental and video recording purposes, by the use of the small crib, ignition source 4 of the British standard, although the acrylic velvet generally ignites readily from a match. The test burn showing the cover burning off a substitute non-combustible mineral wool filling demonstrates very forcibly the contribution that a burning cover as part of the overall construction can make to the hazard of fire in furniture.

I have made no representations to BRMA in response to this video.

We have also received some short sales videos relating to fire blocking or barrier systems produced in-house by the manufacturers concerned.

Steel Industry

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the levy per tonne set each year since 1973 on steel production for the ECSC budget; and how much was raised each year by the levy on production from (a) British Steel Corporation works and (b) private steelmakers.

Mr. Atkins: The ECSC levy is raised on the average value of the production of coal and steel by enterprises falling under the treaty of Paris. Details of the levy rate are as follows:

	Percentage
1973-79	0·29
1980-	0·31

Separate figures on the amount raised each year by the levy on production from the British Steel Corporation and private sector steelmakers are not readily available.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many applications the Government have made since 1973 to the Commission of the European Communities under article 56.2.(b) of the treaty of Paris for workers in the steel industry; how many of their workers were employed in (a) British Steel Corporation works and (b) private steel works; and how much was received from the ECSC budget for each sector.

Mr. Atkins: Since 1973, the Government have applied for ECSC contributions towards aid to be given under the iron and steel employees readaptation benefits scheme in respect of some 129,000 projected redundancies in the steel industry. Of these, some 102,000 were in respect of employees of the British Steel Corporation, and some 27,000 in respect of employees of private sector steel companies. To date, 85,173 former employees of BSC and 23,112 former employees for private sector companies have registered to receive aid under the Scheme.

The ECSC contributes towards the cost of the scheme retrospectively, and to date the Government have received £158,255,862 towards aid paid to former steel employees. Of this, approximately 76 per cent. was in respect of former BSC employees, and approximately 24 per cent. in respect of former private sector employees.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been Britain's contribution each year since 1973 to the ECSC budget by way of the levy made on steel production.

Mr. Atkins: The ECSC annual financial report provides figures on the ECSC levy revenue, broken down by industry and member state, only since 1981. The latest available figures are for the year 1986. The figures are as follows:

Levy Revenue from the United Kingdom Steel Industry in ECU

	Number
1981	11,122,803
1982	9,515,579
1983	12,661,061
1984	13,199,907
1985	13,838,549
1986	13,961,944

Electrical Appliances (Plugs)

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has made of the cost to manufacturers of household electrical equipment of requiring the fitting of electrical plugs to their products.

Mr. Butcher: The cost of fitting plugs to household electrical equipment is subject to many factors, the details of which will be known only to the manufacturers. No Government estimate has been made of such a proposal and were it to be done it would require a substantial input from the industry.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what regulations oblige the manufacturers of household electrical equipment to fit electric plugs as standard; what comparable regulations exist in other member states of the European Community; and what plans he has to ensure a standardisation of the regulations.

Mr. Butcher: Many manufacturers of electrical equipment are marketing equipment with a fitted plug and the number s growing but there is no statutory requirement which would oblige manufacturers of household electrical equipment to fit electric plugs prior to sale.

There are no plans to impose such a requirement. The current legal position in other member states of the European Community is not at present available. There is no Community initiative to harmonise the national legislation governing the fitting of plugs to equipment.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mentally disordered offenders are presently in prison in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 30 September last year, the most recent date for which figures are available, 315 inmates of prison department establishments in England and Wales were, in the opinion of medical officers, suffering from mental disorder of a nature or degree with would satisfy the criteria in the Mental Health Act 1983 for detention in hospital for medical treatment.

Civil Defence

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve current arrangements for dealing with civil emergencies in the metropolis.

Mr. John Patten: Following recent major emergencies the Home Office is looking closely at the effectiveness of our present arrangements for responding to emergencies anywhere in the United Kingdom and at the possibilities for improvements. Officials will shortly be issuing a consultation paper to explore the issues with the emergency services and other interested parties, including local government associations; the Association of London Authorities and the London Boroughs Association will be included in this consultation process.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used in the compiling of lists of approved contractors and tenderers for work on civil defence facilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Companies seeking inclusion on lists of approved contractors must first satisfy the Department that they are technically, financially and commercially able to perform the contracts for which they apply. The Property Services Agency, which manages civil defence building projects on behalf of the Home Office, applies similar criteria.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to utilise private sector expertise in the hardening against nuclear electro-magnetic pulse of civil defence communications systems in both local authority emergency centres and regional government headquarters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The private sector has provided assessments of equipment resilience and advice on protection measures; we expect to continue to draw on such expertise.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to ensure that the new PABX telephone switchboard systems to be fitted in local authority emergency centres will fully meet all the operational requirements of such systems, including hardening against nuclear electro-magnetic pulse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Operational requirements for these systems have been prepared in consultation with local authority users, and an assessment of resilience against the effects of electro-magnetic pulse will be a requirement of the equipment specification.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what involvement Rainford Secure Systems has had in the drawing up of specifications for the new PABX telephone switchboard systems to be installed in local authority emergency centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: None, although before specifications were prepared, and in accordance with normal practice, information was sought from communications equipment suppliers, including Rainford Secure Systems, in order to establish the range of equipment and facilities likely to be commercially available.

Library Facilities (Prisons)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those local authorities which receive a lump sum and additional rate support grant for library facilities that are required to be made available to prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will calculate the amounts for each of the past five years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As the hon. Member will be aware, the question of rate support grants is for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. As far as the system for funding prison libraries is concerned, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his earlier question on 28 January at column 305.

Bullwood Hall

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the numbers of planned hours of education, and the numbers of actual hours of education for inmates at Bullwood Hall prison and youth custody centre in each week since 1 April; what is the reason for any discrepancy; and what plans there are to ensure that education classes at this establishment take place as planned.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the nine weeks following Easter, only 43 class sessions were made available to inmates out of a total of 125 sessions planned for the period. The establishment is in dispute with the Prison Officers Association regarding the level of prison officer cover for education classes and it is not possible to state when the matter will be resolved. The loss of educational facilities for inmates at Bullwood Hall is very much regretted.

Crime Statistics

Sir Peter Hordern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of crimes committed with violence per 1,000 population in each police authority area of the country for the latest convenient period;

(2) if he will publish a table showing the number of robberies per 1,000 population in each police authority area of the country for the latest convenient period.

Mr. John Patten: Because the numbers of offences are relatively small, numbers of offences are recorded per 100,000 population. Those for 1987 are given in the table. Figures in this form are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" (table 2.6 of the issue for 1986, Cm. 233); the issue for 1987 will be published later this year. Copies of this publication are held in the Library.

Satellite Television

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what form of Government monitoring and control there will be over the contents of programmes beamed at the United Kingdom by satellite television.

Mr. Renton: British Satellite Broadcasting Limited plans to launch a three channel direct broadcasting by satellite (DBS) service for the United Kingdom in autumn 1989. This service will be regulated by the Independent Broadcasting Authority under the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984. Existing non-DBS satellite services are virtually all transmitted for reception and distribution via cable systems; and they are therefore subject to regulation by the Cable Authority under the Cable and Broadcasting Act 1984 in the same way as other cable services. We are considering introducing legislation to extend the authority's remit to all non-DBS services transmitted direct to the home whether or not relayed by cable. Services linked from Europe may be made subject to rules currently being discussed in the Council of Europe and the European Communities. Finally, the satellite television services will be subject to monitoring by the Broadcasting Standards Council.

In all cases, regulation and monitoring is or will be undertaken by independent bodies. The Government have no wish or any plans to control any television services themselves.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether satellite television now being made for schools programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I am not aware of any satellite television service in the United Kingdom which provides schools programmes.

Prisoners (Rule 43)

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of prisoners subject to rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 1 January 1988, the most recent date for which information is available, 1,916 male sentenced and unsentenced prisoners were segregated under rule 43 in prisons in England and Wales. Figures are not kept centrally for female prisoners.

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the prisons in England and Wales that take only rule 43 prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No prisons in England and Wales take only rule 43 prisoners.

Prisons (Education Services)

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of staff employed full time on education services in the following prisons: Wandsworth, Wormwood Scrubs, Brixton, Pentonville and Holloway.

Mr. Dougas Hogg: At the present time, the complement of full-time teachers seconded by the Inner London education authority to the five prison establishments in central London is 24·5 posts.

Prisons (Category A Prisoners)

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of category A prisoners at present held in prisons in England and Wales who are serving a life sentence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 16 June 1988, there were 252 confirmed and 11 provisional category A inmates in penal establishments serving sentences of life imprisonment. In addition there were 14 confirmed and two provisional category A inmates serving sentences of youth custody for life or detained during Her Majesty's pleasure.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if his Department has evidence of misuse on any of the benzodiazepines;

(2) if he or his officials have had discussions with the United Nations officials involved with the United Nations convention on psychotropic substances regarding the reports of misuse of benzodiazepines in other countries; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs has recommended adding benzodiazepines to the list of drugs controlled by the Misuse of Drugs Act.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is evidence that some benzodiazepine drugs, particularly temazepam, are subject to misuse. Neither my right hon. Friend nor I, or Home Office officials, have had recent discussions with United Nations officials about the misuse of benzodiazepines in other counties, but we are kept fully informed by them about world trends in drug abuse. On 1 April 1986, in preparation for the United Kingdom's ratification of the United Nations convention on psychotropic substances 1971 and following consultation with the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, 33 benzodiazepine drugs, including temazepam, were brought within the controls of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 as class C drugs. We are keeping this classification under review.

Election Returns

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 14 June, he will list the names and constituencies of those candidates in the 1979, 1983 and 1987 general elections who failed to submit a return within the statutory period allowed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is given in the return to an address on election expenses which is published after each general election (HCP426(87/88) for the 1987 election, HCP130(83/84) for 1983 and HCP374(79/80) for 1979). In the 1983 publication, the footnote reference indicating that a return of expense had not been received was omitted in error for the National Labour Party candidate in the Ashford constituency.

Staines Police Station

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to replace Staines police station; and whether he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will make it his policy that any new police station for Staines will be sited in the town centre.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that Staines is high on the priority list of police stations to be replaced, but that no firm date for doing so has yet been set. The location of the new station will be determined after a thorough assessment of operational requirements and available sites.

Police (Nottinghamshire)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any further requests from the Nottinghamshire police authority for more policemen.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest application from Nottinghamshire police authority was received in May 1987 for 173 posts to be recruited over three financial years. On 18 May this year my right hon. Friend announced that he had approved 35 posts with effect from 1 June. The authority has been informed that he will consider the remainder of its application when he takes decisions on the next tranche of posts to be approved under the programme which my right hon. Friend announced in May 1986.

Religious Broadcasts

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will extend the remit of the Broadcasting Standards Council to cover religious programming; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The main purpose of the Broadcasting Standards Council is to act as a focus for public concern about violence and sex on television. Consequently, religious programmes are not likely to receive much attention from the council.

Misuse of Drugs

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to implement the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs recommendation that the prison department give urgent consideration to means of providing confidential but easy access to evidence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Health to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 29 March at columns 452-54.

Mrs. Nannete Goodman (Passport)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will inquire into the circumstances in which Mrs. Nannete Ida Goodman of 12 Avenue terrace, Southend on Sea and whose date of birth is 5 October 1907, has not received her renewal passport for which she applied to Petty France on 19 April, despite her having explained the urgency.

Mr. Renton: The application has been traced, and a replacement passport was posted to Mrs. Goodman yesterday. The application form indicated an intention to travel during June or July for holiday purposes, but no specific travel date or destination were shown, and no indication of urgency was given. The application was not therefore given priority at the Passport Office.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

90. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he next plans to meet representatives of local authorities to discuss the changes in housing benefit.

Mr. Portillo: Officials meet regularly representatives of the local authority associations through the housing benefits standing committee, and its sub-groups, to discuss housing benefit matters. The next meeting of the standing committee is on 21 July 1988.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he has taken to remedy past inequalities in employment practices in his Department, in compliance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has adopted a programme of action in support of its equal opportunity policy including the following measures to promote positive action to assist women and ethnic minority staff:

Monitoring of recruitment has been introduced and managers are encouraged to utilise all possible advertising outlets to attract in particular applicants from ethnic minority groups, for example, through use of ethnic minority press and radio, youth clubs and local ethnic employment groups.

The Department participates in the Civil Service Commission's advertising campaign which aims to recruit staff from ethnic minority groups; and in the commission's national schools liaison network, as well as a continued commitment to schools liaison at a local level.

Promotion board monitoring studies, to identify barriers to the success of women and those from ethnic minority groups, are being carried out.

Specific developmental training for women from HEO grade and above is provided. The Department is reviewing the development of equal opportunity training for all grades including the nature and delivery of the training.

Job sharing and part time working is encouraged and publicised in departmental training for women in management grades.

A "keeping in touch" scheme was introduced on 1 June 1988 which will enable officers to maintain regular contact with the Department whilst taking career breaks for domestic reasons and assist in their eventual return to work.

On the wider front, as part of our equal opportunities initiatives we commissioned Isobel Allen's research study on women doctors, "Doctors and their Careers" recently published by the Policy Studies Institute. This compares the career patterns of male and female doctors. We will be discussing the findings with the medical profession and others involved in the training and development of doctors at two seminars in July and November, and will take such further action as is indicated.

Acute and Elderly Patients

Mr. Nelson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list the 10 lowest spending and the 10 highest spending health authorities on in-patient servies for acute and elderly patients; and what are the amounts so spent per resident in the areas.

Mr. Newton: I regret that comprehensive information on each health authority's in-patient expenditure specifically on acute or elderly patients is not collected centrally. However, from financial year 1987-88, the annual financial returns of health authorities will include a district-based analysis of hospital expenditure over a range of separate specialties.

Supplementary Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claims have been received in (a) the Greenock office and (b) the Port Glasgow office of his Department from former British Shipbuilders Ltd. employees about 13 weeks arrears of supplementary benefit; how many of these claims have been accepted; what was the average payment; and what were the reasons for refusal in each case.

Mr. Portillo: Local offices are not required to keep statistics of this kind. Some information on claims from former employees of British Shipbuilders Ltd. is, however, available from local unofficial records:

	Greenock office	Port Glasgow office
Claims received to date	650	554
Claims processed	650	385
Claims paid and average amount (where known)	350 @ 350	not available

Reasons for refusal. In the main claims have been disallowed because income exceeds requirements or capital exceeds £3,000.

Low-income Families

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to publish the low income families statistics for 1987.

Mr. Portillo: No. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 29 March at column 448 and my subsequent reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Great Yarmouth (Mr. Carttiss) on 19 May at columns 563-64.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of persons in low-income families in Scotland (i) on supplementary benefit, (ii) below 100 per cent. of supplementary benefit and (iii) below 140 per cent. of supplementary benefit for each of the years 1979, 1981, 1983 and 1985, as reported for Great Britain in the DHSS low-income families tables.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 27 May 1988 at columns 413-14.

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table, extrapolating from his Department's paper, "Households Below Average Income: A Statistical Analysis", showing the proportion of individuals and children below various income thresholds held constant in real terms and analysed by family type and economic status both before and after housing costs.

Mr. Portillo: It is not possible to project "Households Below Average Income" tables forward to later years on a reliable basis.

Ethics Committees

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give those district health authorities that have ethics committees along with any information he has on the qualifications of such committees; and if he will make a statement;

(2) to whom ethics committees in district health authorities report; if these reports are published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: All health authorities are required to have a committee to advise them on the ethical aspects of clinical research. The objectives and composition of these local ethical committees are described in circular HSC(IS)153 of June 1975, a copy of which is in the Library. The reports are not normally published.

Ambulances

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any proposals to change the national criteria on the replacement of National Health Service ambulances.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) on 12 May at column 241. The review of purchasing policy referred to in that reply is expected to be completed later this year.

Drugs (Limited List)

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what have been the annual savings as a result of the introduction of the limited list of drugs available on the National Health Service in 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Dewsbury (Mrs. Taylor) on 22 January at column 895.

Leicester Night Shelter

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why Leicester staff of his Department have discontinued their practice of visiting the Leicester night shelter to take fresh claims.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) on 16 June at column 288.

Further Education Courses

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the prescribed period between YTS terminal date and eligibility to start a further education course of less than 21 hours per week for a claimant in receipt of income support or unemployment benefit; and if he has any plans to change this period.

Mr. Portillo: A person starting an education course of less than 21 hours a week could receive income support immediately if he or she had been: on a YTS course for the previous three months; or on a YTS course or receiving benefit for at least three months out of the last six months.

Otherwise, a person must receive unemployment benefit, sickness benefit, or income support, for three months before starting the course. There are no plans to change this period.

Tranquillisers

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many of the 25 million prescriptions for benzodiazepines in 1986 were repeat prescriptions.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available. Repeat prescriptions are not separately identifiable.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken to ensure that represcription of benzodiazepines is done under controlled conditions.

Mrs. Currie: General practitioners are free to decide how best to issue repeat prescriptions to suit the needs of the patient. Many general practitioners already operate control systems which ensure the patients are regularly reviewed. We have made it clear in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" that family practitioner committees will be expected to review prescribing patterns in future.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will undertake a sample survey of benzodiazepines prescribing so as to obtain a profile of the patients taking these drugs, relating numbers to the period of time for which the drugs have been taken.

Mrs. Currie: The Department has in the past supported research into prescriptions for minor tranquillisers and investigations into techniques for the cessation of tranquilliser consumption but has no plans to undertake a survey of benzodiazepine prescribing.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the number of long-term chronic users of the benzodiazepines; and what is the source of the estimated figures;

(2) what estimate he can give of the proportion of the 25 million prescriptions for benzodiazepines in 1986 which was prescribed to patients who had been taking the drug for longer than two to four weeks.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not held centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussion he has had with relevant medical bodies regarding controls on the use of benzodiazepines; and what conclusions were reached.

Mrs. Currie: Representatives of the Committee on Safety of Medicines had useful and informal discussions with the Royal College of Psychiatrists prior to the issue of "Current Problems" No. 21. However, in recognition of the current concern about benzodiazepines, issues about the prescribing of these drugs are soon to be the subject of discussions between professional organisations and the chief medical officer.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in which areas of the United Kingdom leaflets approved by the local drug and therapeutic committee and warning about the risk of benzodiazepine addiction are being circulated; and what action is being taken by his Department to encourage the wider circulation of such leaflets.

Mrs. Currie: Leaflets and other literature approved by local drug and therapeutic committees are issued on local initiative, and information about them is not collected centrally.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the money provided by his Department for drug services has gone to help those suffering from addiction to benzodiazepines; and what steps are being taken by his Department to direct money to this area.

Mrs. Currie: Under the central funding initiative set up to develop drug misuse services, grants totalling £339,000 were made to four projects specifically for those dependent on tranquillisers. Each year funds are allocated to regional health authorities (£6·5 million in 1988-89) specifically for the development of drug misuse services. It is for health authorities to allocate these funds to individual services, since they are best placed to determine local needs. Many of the services financed from these allocations, and the other 184 projects funded under the central funding initiative, provide help for those dependent on tranquillisers.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if there is evidence of a change in the prescribing of the benzodiazepines following the notice sent to doctors by the Committee on Safety of Medicines in January which recommended restricted prescribing of these drugs.

Mrs. Currie: Official statistics about prescribing of benzodiazepines for the period following January 1988 will not be available until the beginning of 1989 at the earliest.

Hospital Management (Public Inquiries)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many public inquiries he has authorised into the management of individual hospitals in each of the past 10 years and of these how many were concerned with the management of surgical divisions within hospitals.

Mr. Newton: None.

Consultants

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultants were suspended from employment by health authorities; how long was the average length of suspension; of those suspended how many were subsequently dismissed from their National Health Service employment and with what compensation in each of the past five years; and how many of those so dismissed have continued to work in private practice.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the information requested is not routinely collected.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to change the disciplinary powers available to health authorities in relation to alleged clinical or other misconduct by consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We are expecting a report shortly from the joint working party established in March 1987, to review hospital and community doctors' and dentists' disciplinary procedures.

Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to lay a commencement order in respect of the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Hospital Complaints Procedure Act 1985 is now in force at National Health Service hospitals.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 January 1988]: Directions on the complaints procedures to be operated in respect of complaints by hospital patients have been made. A copy of the direction and covering circular has been issued to health authorities and is available in the Library. Health authorities will be required to ensure that the procedures are brought into effect not later than 29 July 1988.

NHS Staffing

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a functional breakdown, showing numbers in post and grades, of staff of his Department in London dealing with National Health Service management and policy, and showing the formal means of communication with regional and district health authorities.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 25 May 1988]: The functional breakdown requested, showing numbers and grades of staff, is given in the table.

The Department communicates formally with regional and district health authorities by means of health circulars and health notices. NHS Management Board members regularly meet NHS regional general managers and their teams; and staff in the Department and health authorities communicate on a regular basis within their own spheres of responsibility.

Spending Power

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables using the assumptions in his answer to the then hon. Member for Kensington of 4 February, Official Report, column 737, but using expenditure and benefit figures appropriate for families in Bradford for which he has sufficient data, and with an additional column showing the extent of the differences that will result from the changes in benefit in April.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 14 June 1988]: The information requested is set out in the tables. It should be noted that the results are essentially hypothetical. They compare the post-reform position in April 1988 not with the actual pre-reform cash situation but with a hypothetical position which they might have been in, had the previous structure continued and been uprated on the assumptions in "Impact of the Reform Structure of Income Related Benefits" (October 1987). Second, the comparisons are based on average local authority housing charges in Bradford but do not reflect the wide variety of rents and domestic rates that people actually pay. Finally, the comparisons do not take account of the transitional cash protection arrangements announced on the 27 April.

AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in respect of tests of the efficacy of the Karpas AIDS cell test kit conducted by members of the public health laboratory service on 3 and 4 June 1987, what test slides, laboratory notes, and serum samples used in the test slides have been preserved; and where this material is now retained.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 June 1988]: I understand that the test slides were destroyed as is the usual practice. Laboratory notes transcribed to computer records, and serum samples, have been maintained at the Central Public Health Laboratory.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why the report of the PHLS and DHSS evaluation of commercial anti-HIV test kits conducted by the virus reference laboratory displays at table C(3) results as to the efficacy of the Karpas AIDS cell test kit which differs in substantive detail from the signed interim report of the same evaluation, dated 8 June 1987 with regard to the description of an HIV seropositive serum sample testing as equivocal and a seronegative serum sample testing as positive; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what procedures in respect of the report of the PHLS and DHSS evaluation of five commercial anti-HIV test kits conducted by the virus reference laboratory resulted in the alteration of the data reported in the signed interim report of the evaluation, dated 8 June 1987, as compared with that displayed at table C(3) of the draft final report; and what the consequences of this alteration were in terms of the reported sensitivity and specificity of the Karpas AIDS cell test.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The interim report was a summary which did not evaluate the findings in detail. The draft final report rested on the same data obtained at evaluation, but gave a fuller interpretation of it. A further evaluation has been offered.

Departmental Leaflets

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average length of time for supplying leaflets to inquirers at the leaflets unit in Stanmore; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 17 June 1988]: The average length of time for supplying leaflets is currently 10 weeks. Additional staff have been recruited in order to reduce the backlog.

Benefits

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update his answer of 14 July 1987, Official Report, columns 459-60, on the value of the short and long-term rates of supplementary benefit for single non-householders, householders and married couples as a proportion of average net earnings for all males and manual males.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The information is as follows:

SCOTLAND

Community Charge Register

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the procedures or restrictions that will be associated with the sale of names and addresses from the community charge register.

Mr. Lang: This matter is currently under consideration. I expect that an announcement will be made shortly.

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what instructions he has given to Lothian health board concerning its system of providing its general practitioners with postage to notify results of cervical smear tests to their patients; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Lothian health board has written to my right hon. and learned Friend's Department seeking guidance on the payment of postage costs incurred by general medical practitioners in notifying results of cervical smear tests to their patients. This matter is under active consideration.

Violent Crime (Knives)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from chief constables on the use of Stanley knives or similar tools in crimes of violence; and if he will consider taking action to control the sale of such tools.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. Restrictions on the sale of such articles could not be effectively enforced without due interference with their legitimate use by all kinds of people in all walks of life. It is already an offence to carry them in a public place with intent to cause injury.

Further Education (College Principals)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received since the publication of circular FE/65 as it relates to the defined working week and annual leave allocated to principals of Scottish further education colleges; and whether any of these supported the new conditions of service which will be implemented on 1 September.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has received representations on behalf of three college principals and one deputy principal. Several representations have also been made by or on behalf of the Association of Principals of Colleges. None of these has expressed support for the new conditions of service relating to the contractual working week or annual leave entitlement.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, in 1989-90 in any situation, any person in a household will be responsible for the payment of the community charge which any other person in that household is liable to pay.

Mr. Lang: Under section 8(7) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 people who are married to each other and live together or, a man and woman who live together as if they were husband and wife, will be jointly and severally liable for their personal community charges. An amendment has also been made to the Local Government Finance Bill to make it clear that in the case of the standard and collective community charges where two or more people are liable, as would arise in the case of joint owners or tenants, they should be jointly and severally liable to pay the charges.

Hospital Management (Public Inquiries)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many public inquiries he has authorised into the management of individual hospitals in each of the past 10 years; and of these how many were concerned with the management of surgical divisions within hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Consultants

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many consultants were suspended from employment by health boards; how long was the average length of suspension; of those suspended how many were subsequently dismissed from their National Health Service employment; with what compensation during each of the past five years; and how many of those so dismissed have continued to work in private practice.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on suspensions is not held centrally. The Scottish Home and Health Department is only informed of decisions to dismiss consultants where the individual concerned decides to appeal to the Secretary of State against dismissal. There has been only one such case in the past five years involving a consultant and in that case the appeal was upheld. A doctor dismissed by a health board, or any other NHS employer, is still permitted to undertake medical practice so long as he remains registered by the General Medical Council.

Electricity

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average domestic consumption of electricity (a) per head and (b) per household in (i) Scotland, (ii) the Strathclyde region and (iii) in Greater Glasgow for each year since 1974.

Mr. Lang: The figures requested for Scotland are set out in the table. Information on average consumption in Strathclyde region and Greater Glasgow is not available.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has for dealing with problems relating to drug abuse in prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A range of security measures is used aimed at stopping drugs being smuggled into prisons. For dealing with drug abuse in prisons, medical examination on reception should identify drug abusers. They are counselled and educated as to the dangers of abuse, and physical or mental symptoms of withdrawal are treated as necessary.

Community Programme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions have taken place between his officials and those of the Scottish Council for Voluntary Organisations about the continued funding of present community programme projects in the community care fields; and what is the outcome of their discussions.

Mr. Lang: No such discussions have been held, but I am to meet a delegation including representatives from the Scottish Council of Voluntary Organisations today to discuss employment training, which will replace the community programme.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Manpower Services Commission community programme projects there are in Scotland which provide community care; how many people they employ; and what are the running costs of these projects.

Mr. Lang: This information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much Manpower Services Commission community programme money went into Scottish voluntary organisations during 1987-88.

Mr. Lang: £57·1 million (estimated).

Bail Hostels

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has received any proposals from local authorities to establish bail hostels in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No such proposals have been received. In October last year I commissioned from the Scottish Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders a study of the options which might exist for the provision of bail accommodation. The report of that study is now under consideration.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he established his programme of voluntary ethnic monitoring; what steps have been taken to progress that programme; what results were obtained from that programme; and why and when the programme is being updated.

Mr. Eggar: The diplomatic and aid wings participated in the Civil Servicewide survey on ethnic origins covering London, the south-east and East Anglia which took place between April 1986 and March 1987.

In the diplomatic wing, 77 per cent. of staff have responded to the survey. Some 2 per cent. of respondents have classified themselves as coming from an ethnic minority. A further 5 per cent. declined to classify themselves.

The response rate in the aid wing was 79 per cent. (84·8 per cent.) in the London and East Anglia survey) of which 5 per cent. classified themselves as coming from an ethnic minority.

The databases in both wings are updated regularly with details of new entrants, promotions, resignations and retirements.

The updated programmes will allow us to monitor recruitment, training, promotions etc. to ensure that we are meeting our obligations as a equal opportunity employer.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs by what methods he monitors recruitment and training; and what have been the results of such monitoring.

Mr. Eggar: The diplomatic wing monitors the following aspects in the grades for which it has delegated authority to recruit directly:—

Gender
Ethnic origins
Geographic origins
Educational backgrounds (state or public school, university, college or polytechnic)
Educational qualifications
Effectiveness of recruitment publicity

Relevant details are drawn from application forms and ethnic monitoring questionnaires completed by individual applicants. Results in 1987 showed, for example, that of all recruits into the diplomatic wing of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office in that year some 60 per cent. were women and 2 per cent. were from ethnic minorities.

The diplomatic wing monitors the quality and effectiveness of training by means of examinations and assessments of subsequent performance. Participation of officers in training courses is monitored according to age, grade, gender and ethnic origin by means of voluntary self-classification forms. Results have shown, for example, that in the financial year 1987-88 a total of 31 per cent. of participants in training courses were women.

The development wing monitors recruitment into those grades for which it has delegated authority to recruit directly on the basis of gender and ethnic origins. Relevant details are again drawn from application forms and ethnic monitoring questionnaires completed by individual applicants. Results have shown, for example, that the ethnic minority success rate in the majority of 1987 recruitment exercises were higher than the percentage of ethnic minorities in the working population. The recruitment of women has been monitored only since July 1987. In the second half of that year 79 per cent. of all recruits were women.

Participation of development wing officers in training courses is monitored according to gender only. Results have shown that in 1987 a total of 39 per cent. of participants were women.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in which of the ethnic minority press he has advertised; and with what results.

Mr. Eggar: In 1988 clerical vacancies in the diplomatic wing have been advertised in "The Voice". This produced 78 out of a total 811 inquiries. Applications from this competition are still being processed. We also advertise in other newspapers with a large ethnic minority readership.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State told the hon. and learned Gentleman in the reply given to him on 26 May we appointed equal opportunity officers in the diplomatic and aid wings in 1984. This month we appointed a new equal opportunity officer in the diplomatic wing who will deal exclusively with equal opportunity issues.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many, and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department, are women and from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Eggar: The table for the diplomatic and aid wings show the number of staff in post (counting part-time staff as whole units) broken down into five grade bands. The table also shows in each band the number of women and the number of staff who have identified themselves as coming from an ethnic minority.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State told the hon. and learned Gentleman on 26 May, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office is pursuing the 1984 programme of action for women in the Civil Service.

As an equal opportunity employer we recruit nationally and from all sections of society. We shall continue to monitor the proportion of women members of ethnic minorities amongst those who apply to, and join the diplomatic service.

We provide training where appropriate for all members of the diplomatic service irrespective or gender of ethnic origin. We monitor participation on training courses by gender and grade.

We promote those members of the diplomatic service who have shown the ability to do the work of a higher grade irrespective of gender or origin. We shall monitor the promotion of women and officers from ethnic minorities.

The aid wing has similar arrangements.

Cyprus and Turkey

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to seek to arrange a joint meeting of the Foreign Ministers for Cyprus and Turkey and himself to discuss matters of common interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no plans to seek to arrange such a meeting. The United Nations Secretary-General is working towards an early meeting under his auspices between President Vassiliou of Cyprus and Mr. Denktash, the leader of the Turkish Cypriot community, as a prelude to the resumption of intercommunal negotiations. We support the Secretary-General's efforts to arrange this meeting.

Hong Kong Cattle Depot

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what steps are being taken to relocate the Hong Kong cattle holding depot as a matter of urgency in the light of the overcrowding and health hazards;

(2) what measures are being taken by the Hong Kong agriculture and fisheries department to improve the state of the buildings in the cattle holding depot;

(3) what steps are being taken to improve conditions at the agriculture and fisheries department cattle holding depot in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

(4) if he will make a statement on the conditions prevailing in the agriculture and fisheries department cattle holding depot in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: Conditions at the agriculture and fisheries department holding depot at Ma Tau Kok are adequate. But the buildings which comprise the depot are old and the Hong Kong Government have begun renovative work which should be completed later this year. The depot is not overcrowded.

Average occupancy in the past year has been well within capacity. The cattle-holding areas are washed down twice a day. There is no evidence that the depot is a health hazard.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what records are kept of animals arriving and leaving the Hong Kong agriculture and fisheries department cattle holding depot.

Mr. Eggar: The Hong Kong Government agriculture and fisheries department maintain daily records of the animals arriving at and leaving the cattle depot.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the average charges to dealers using the Hong Kong agriculture and fisheries department cattle holding depot; and whether this covers provision of bedding and water.

Mr. Eggar: No charge is made if the cattle are to be slaughtered in a public abattoir. A flat charge of one Hong Kong dollar per head is made if they are to be slaughtered in a private abattoir. Because of the climate in Hong Kong there is no requirement for bedding. Water is provided as necessary.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make it his policy to impose full quarantine restrictions together with disease control and veterinary services, in the event of the Hong Kong cattle holding depot being an official agriculture and fisheries department quarantine station; and if he will make a statement;

(2) for how long animals have to stay at the Hong Kong agriculture and fisheries department cattle holding depot in order for quarantine to have the desired disease control effect; and who enforces this;

(3) if he will make a statement on the extent of veterinary services covering the Hong Kong agriculture and fisheries department cattle holding depot;

(4) whether he will make a statement on the reasons for, and the timing of, the declaration by the agriculture and fisheries department of Hong Kong of the cattle holding depot to be a quarantine station.

Mr. Eggar: Regulations governing the use of the cattle depot as a cattle quarantine station date from 1956. All cattle imported into Hong Kong for slaughter are segregated from local animals from the time of their arrival until their slaughter. While regulations allow imported cattle to be held in quarantine for up to 21 days their average stay, over the past 12 months, has been 4·4 days. Care of the cattle in the depot is under the supervision of trained staff and this is supplemented by regular inspections by a Hong Kong Government veterinary officer.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure that RSPCA inspectors will in future be able regularly to attend the Hong Kong agriculture and fisheries department cattle holding depot.

Mr. Eggar: The depot is managed and operated under the close supervision of a qualified veterinary surgeon. Routine visits by RSPCA staff are not required.

Mr. Alex Zelichenok

Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last raised the case of the Jewish refusenik Alex Zelichenok of Leningrad with the Soviet authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Zelichenok's case has been raised by us on several occasions in the past. His name was included in a list of refuseniks about whom we are particularly concerned which was handed to the Soviet authorities last December. We shall be raising it again during Anglo-Soviet talks on human rights on 23 June in Moscow, when we shall be pressing for all Soviet citizens who wish to emigrate to be allowed to do so.

El Salvador

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the ambassador of El Salvador.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the ambassador of El Salvador informally on 15 June. I last met him on 21 June.

Hong Kong (Camps)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy not to keep any person for more than five years in a closed camp in Hong Kong.

Mr. Eggar: As part of their new policy towards Vietnamese boat people arriving in the territory, the Hong Kong Government intend over the next six to 12 months to liberalise the regime in the centres which will house all those accorded refugee status. Those arriving after 16 June who are not accorded refugee status will be detailed in closed centres without access to resettlement, pending their return to Vietnam as soon as internationally acceptable conditions for this are established.

Immigration Fees

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy, in the light of entry clearance fees being non-refundable, that where an applicant successfully appeals against refusal to grant a visa, the applicant will not be required to pay any additional fee.

Mr. Eggar: This is already current practice.

WALES

Homelessness

89. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give figures for the number of households accepted as homeless in Wales in (a) 1979 and (b) 1987; and when he expects the number of households accepted as homeless in Wales to fall below the level recorded for 1979.

Mr. Grist: The number of cases accepted as homeless in Wales in 1979 and 1987 was 4,676 and 5,294 respectively. The 1987 figure represents an 11 per cent. decrease over 1986. It is impossible to predict when the number of cases accepted as homeless will reach the 1979 level. This will depend on social behaviour as well as availability of housing. I welcome the decrease in 1987 and hope that it will continue and I note that the 1987 figure was lower than the one for 1980.

Cancer Treatment Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish and give details of the proposals concerning the comprehensive study of all cancer treatment services, including the possibility of establishing a satellite radiotherapy centre in north Wales, by management consultants; when the health authorities will discuss and decide upon their proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: We propose to initiate a review of cancer treatment services provided for north Wales patients by north Wales health authorities and neighbouring English regional health authorities. When the review report is available we will consider it and take appropriate action.

Corporation Management Programme (Health Service)

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the draft corporate management programme for the Health Service in Wales following the consultation exercise in 1987.

Mr. Grist: As a result of the consultation exercise which my hon. Friend has mentioned, the corporate management programme for the Health Service in Wales is to be issued today. It details the work which must be undertaken by a whole range of interests to enable the health care services in Wales to adapt constructively to changes in the environment, so as to ensure the highest standards of care and value for money. The programme paves the way for more patients in Wales to receive the health care they need, when they need it and for that care to be of the highest quality. There is further evidence of our commitment to ensuring that the people of Wales receive first-rate health services for the years to come. A copy of the document is available in the Library of the House.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the monthly regional development grant applications on which he based his 15 month total quoted in his statement on the Valleys Initiative.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 20 June 1988]: The following numbers of applications are assessed to derive from the valleys programme area:

Date	Number of applications
1987
January	45
February	51
March	70
April	48
May	50
June	43
July	58
August	42
September	36
October	62
November	50
December	98
1988
January	117
February	91
March	472
	1,333

The review of the first quarter of 1988 serves to validate what I said at Welsh Grand Committee on 2 December 1987. Our regional policy will expand not contract.

Earnings

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the proportion of full-time employees earning less than (i) £130 a week and (ii) £140 a week, when overtime earnings are excluded, for men and women separately, in each county in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 16 June 1988]: There are no figures available since April 1987. The figures both including and excluding overtime for April 1987 are as follows:

Full-time employees[1]

County	Males		Females
	Percentage earning less than £130 per week	Percentage earning less than £140 per week	Percentage earning less than £130 per week	Percentage earning less than £140 per week

DEFENCE

House Sales

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in the sale of surplus married quarters to service men through the discount scheme.

Mr. Freeman: The scheme for the sale of surplus married quarters at discounted prices to service personnel began on 1 December 1983. As at 26 May 1988, 1,430 married quarters sales had been completed, with a further 547 potential sales in the process of completion.

Strategic Defence Initiative (Polytechnics)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many contracts have been awarded to polytechnics in the United Kingdom by the United States Department of Defense for research in support of the strategic defence initiative; how many subcontracts have been awarded to polytechnics in the United Kingdom by existing strategic defence initiative contractors in the United Kingdom or abroad; and if he will list all polytechnics which are or have been involved in strategic defence initiative research and state the value of each contract.

Mr. Sainsbury: One polytechnic in the United Kingdom has been awarded an SDI research contract. It would be for that polytechnic concerned to decide whether to divulge publicly any information related to that contract.

RAF Leuchars

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next plans to visit RAF Leuchars.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present.

Ethnic Monitoring

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be in a position to make a statement on his policy toward ethnic monitoring exercises within the Army, the Navy and the Royal Air Force, respectively.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. and learned Member to my right hon. Friend's evidence to the Defence Committee. The Committee's report (HC391) was published on 25 April, and we shall be responding to it shortly.

Search and Rescue Operations

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force pilots were assigned to flying duties in operational search and rescue helicopter squadrons in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: It is not our practice to reveal numbers of aircrew assigned to specific operational roles. However, I can confirm that the search and rescue force is manned to requirement.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force helicopter pilots were under training for the search and rescue role in each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information is as follows:

Year	Number
1979-80	14
1980-81	11
1981-82	19
1982-83	20
1983-84	13
1984-85	14
1985-86	18
1986-87	17
1987-88	13

RAF Prestwick

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the function of the air defence notification centre at RAF Prestwick; and what plans there are to change its role and manning.

Mr. Freeman: The air defence notification centre at RAF Prestwick co-ordinates civil and military flight plans in the Scottish air traffic region.

There are no plans to change its role or level of manning.

Short-range Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what further discussions he has had with his European North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts about the modernisation of short-range nuclear weapons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend last met his NATO European colleagues at the Eurogroup and Defence Planning Committee ministerial meetings in Brussels in May. I have nothing to add to the communiqués issued after those meetings, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Service Personnel (Discipline)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many members of the British armed forces have, since 1969, been convicted of murder or manslaughter while serving in Northern Ireland; and if he will give the name and date in each case;

(2) how many members of the British armed forces have been charged, since 1969, with murder or manslaughter while serving in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Since 1969, 23 members of the armed forces serving in Northern Ireland, including the UDR, have been convicted of murder. Five of these cases are currently the subject of appeals. A further 22 service men have been convicted of manslaughter. These figures cover offences involving negligent discharges of weapons where the victims were other soliders. It is not our policy to disclose details of individual cases.

Figures are not kept for cases where charges did not result in conviction.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many serving British soldiers have, since 1969, been convicted of indictable offences while serving in Northern Ireland, giving the name and date in each case.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 February 1988]: Records of numbers of service men convicted of all indictable offences in Northern Ireland since 1969 are not available. The table shows the number of offences for which service men have been convicted between 1982 and April this year.

Nuclear Test Site (Maralinga)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has on the cost of decontaminating the area around the Maralinga nuclear test site in Australia; if Her Majesty's Government will contribute to the cost of this decontamination; if Her Majesty's Government will compensate victims of the nuclear tests at Maralinga in 1963; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 26 May 1988]: Responsibility for the test sites has been a matter for the Australian Government since the 1968 clean-up operation. However, the two Governments continue to liaise closely on the future of the sites. No United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear tests were undertaken after 1958. The Government do not accept that the health of participants has been affected by the ionising radiation generated by these tests or the experimental programmes which continued until 1963. Compensation other than that already provided by the war pension scheme administered by the DHSS cannot therefore be justified.

Nuclear Weapons (Tests)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement as to what action the Government propose to take in the light of the recent House of Lords judgment on the applicability of section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 in the context of radiation exposure and its somatic and genetic effects on soldiers participant in United Kingdom atmospheric nuclear weapons tests conducted by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 May 1988]: The recent House of Lords judgment in the case of Mr. Melvyn Bruce Pearce was sought to resolve an important, but preliminary, legal point, and was to the effect that section 10 of the Crown Proceedings Act 1947 does not constitute a bar to an action for personal injury damages in the particular circumstances of the case under consideration. Mr. Pearce is therefore free to proceed with a claim for damages through the courts. The decision whether or not to proceed with such an action is for Mr. Pearce to take in consultation with his own legal advisers. The Government, in the meantime, remain of the view that the radiological protection measures adopted during the United Kingdom's overseas nuclear weapons test and experimental programmes were effective.

Radiation Exposure

69. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to discuss possible compensation with trade unions or representatives of those allegedly exposed to radiation during the course of their duties.

73. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to discuss possible compensation with trade unions or representatives of those allegedly exposed to radiation during the course of their duties.

78. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to discuss possible compensation with trade unions or representatives of those allegedly exposed to radiation during the course of their duties.

83. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any plans to discuss possible compensation with trade unions or representatives of those allegedly exposed to radiation during the course of their duties.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 24 May 1988]: My right hon. Friend has no current plans for any such discussions.

EMPLOYMENT

Training Agents

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training he proposes to give to training agents to assist them in making assessments and drawing up appropriate personal action plans.

Mr. Nicholls: The Training Commission is funding a full range of provision to help training agents provide training for their own staff where this is appropriate. The training will follow the planned approach for employment training itself, with staff being helped to assess their own training needs, prepare a personal training plan and to take training leading towards vocational qualifications. As part of this commitment a series of special training events for training agents has been arranged over the next few months.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the provisions for the development of supervised child care facilities for single parents participating in the Government's employment training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: The Training Commission will meet costs of up to £50 per week, per child if lone parents make arrangements for the care of their children with a childminder, nursery or creche which is registered with a local authority.

All travel costs over £5 a week incurred by the trainee including the cost of travel to the childminder, will also be reimbursed.

I expect most child care to be provided through existing facilities. However, training managers and providers will be able to set up arrangements for the children of parents training with them, providing the facilities are appropriately registered with the local authority.

Radiation Limits

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the terms of reference of the working group of the Health and Safety Commission, established to consider radiation dose limits in the United Kingdom; who are the members of the group; and when he expects it to report.

Mr. Nicholls: The terms of reference for the Health and Safety Commission's working group on ionising radiations are:

"To consider all matters concerning the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 and related radiation protection matters that are referred to it by the Health and Safety Executive or the Commission, and to advise the Commission."

The working group is due to report to the commission by the end of the year. However, it will send detailed reports to the commission on specific matters in the interim.

The members of the working group are:

Mr. E. A. Ryder—Chairman (Health and Safety Executive)
Ms. B. Bernard—National Union of Public Employees
Dr. R. Berry—British Nuclear Fuels plc
Professor K. Boddy—Newcastle General Hospital
Dr. R. Clarke—National Radiological Protection Board
Mr. A. Cunningham—Electrical Electronic Telecommunications and Plumbing Union
Dr. J. Gittus—United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority
Mr. B. Godfrey—Department of Health and Social Security
Dr. J. Hill—Ministry of Defence
Mr. F. Howell—Transport and General Workers Union
Dr. P. Roberts—Queen Elizabeth Medical Centre, Birmingham
Mr. G. Shaw—Lancaster City Council
Professor E. R. Davies—University of Bristol
Mr. W. L. Ross—Royal College of Radiologists
Professor J. Walker—University of Birmingham
Dr. J. K. Wright—Central Electricity Generating Board

Opencast Coal Mining

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, in the light of recent medical evidence about the effects of opencast coal mining operations on the health of local populations, the Health and Safety Executive proposes to exercise its powers to prosecute under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, section 3(1), in relation to the duty owed by employers in such undertakings to ensure so far as is reasonably practicable that persons not in their employment who may be affected by their operations are not exposed to risks to their health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The suggestion that opencast coal mining operations may have a significant effect on the health of local populations could only be tested by long term systematic epidemiological study. In the absence of medical evidence that there has been such a significant effect, no proposals have been put to me that regulations under section 3(3) of the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 are called for.

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, in the light of recent medical evidence about the effects of opencast coal mining operations on the health of local populations, he will prescribe under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, section 3(3) the cases, circumstances and manner in which it shall be the duty of any employer operating an opencast coal mining undertaking to give to persons not in his employment, who may be affected by the way in which he conducts his undertaking, prescribed information about such aspects of the way in which he conducts his undertaking as might affect their health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive's mines and quarries inspectors carry out tests at selected opencast sites for the presence of airborne respirable dust which might affect the health of those on site and of the local population. These samples are then analysed to determine the presence of any respirable silica. The tests do not cater for the collection and analysis of non-respirable airborne dust. The procedure for such sampling was determined in close conjunction with the medical profession and is regularly reviewed. Inspectors consider each case to see what, if any, enforcement action is required under their statutory power.

Quota Working Group

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what extent the recommendations of the quota working group 1985 have been fulfilled.

Mr. Lee: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in 1985 that he proposed to defer action on the working group's proposals relating to the administration of the scheme pending research suggested by the group into the disabled working population and its characteristics.

Research into employers' attitudes towards the quota scheme has been completed and the results will be published as soon as possible. Consideration is being given to the commissioning of a research project into the numbers and characteristics of people with disabilities in the working population in the light of a feasibility study completed last year.

My officials continue to promote awareness of the scheme through the employment service's disablement advisory service and its network of jobcentres.

Sex Discrimination and Equal Pay Act

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to seek to amend the Sex Discrimination Acts and Equal Pay Acts.

Mr. Nicholls: We have already announced our intention to amend section 51 of the Sex Discrimination Act. We plan to introduce legislation as soon as parliamentary time permits.

The Equal Opportunities Commission has also put forward recommendations to amend the law. Its proposals are under consideration by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in consultation with colleagues.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applicants to industrial tribunals in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987 proceeded to a full hearing from a pre-hearing assessment.

Mr. Nicholls: The numbers are as follows:

	Number
12 months ended 31 March 1987	350
12 months ended 31 March 1988[1]	303

[1] Provisional figure.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applicants to industrial tribunals in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987 were warned by the chairman at a pre-hearing assessment that costs might be awarded against them.

Mr. Nicholls: The numbers are as follows:

	Number
12 months ended 31 March 1987	515
12 months ended 31 March 1988[1]	341

[1] Provisional figure.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many applicants to industrial tribunals in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987 proceeded to a full hearing despite being warned by the chairman at a pre-hearing assessment that costs might be awarded against them.

Mr. Nicholls: The numbers are as follows:

	Number
12 months ended 31 March 1987	97
12 months ended 31 March 1988[1]	75

[1] Provisional figure.

Household Expenditure Statistics

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide a table showing total housing costs, and separate sub-totals for rent, rates, water rates and other costs, for all households included in the income groups £100 to £125 a week and £325 to £375 a week, as reported in the 1986 family expenditure survey, table 5, included in expenditure items 1 to 4.

Mr. Lee: I am sending the hon. Member the information he requested. I am also sending a copy to the Library.

Disposable Incomes

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the aggregate disposable income in 1979, showing the median, the lowest and highest deciles, and the lower and upper quartiles for (a) all households in the United Kingdom and (b) for Greater London, in an adjusted form on the current basis, as if the housing benefit scheme had applied at that date, as provided for 1983 in the answer in the Official Report, 22 July 1987, columns 211-12;

(2) what was the aggregate disposable income in 1979 and 1981, showing the median, the lowest and highest deciles, and the lower and upper quartiles, for (a) all households in the United Kingdom and (b) for Greater London, in an adjusted form on the current basis, as if the housing benefit scheme had applied at that date, as provided for 1983 in the answer in the Official Report, 22 July 1987, columns 211-12.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to produce estimates from the 1979 or 1981 family expenditure survey on the same basis as those provided for 1983, in the Official Report, 22 July 1987, at columns 211-212.

Agricultural and Factory Inspectors

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his statement on 2 December 1987 at column 1007 that there will be 40 additional agricultural and factory inspectors in place before April 1989, whether he will state the number of inspectors in each of these two inspectorates on 1 December 1987, 1 May 1988 and 1 June 1988; by what date the 40 inspectors are expected to be in place; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of inspectors in each inspectorate on the dates mentioned are as follows:

	Factory Inspectorate	Agricultural Inspectorate
1 December 1987	558	150
1 May 1988	541·5	150
1 June 1988	542·5	150

Some 30 successful candidates from a recent recruitment competition should be joining the Health and Safety Executive's factory and agricultural inspectorates shortly and further recruitment of inspectors to both inspectorates is currently under way.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspectors had (a) resigned, (b) retired and (c) otherwise left the agricultural and factories Inspectorates since 1 December 1987 by (i) 1 May and (ii) 1 June; and how many additional inspectors had been recruited in the same period.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is as follows:

Factory and agricultural inspector	1 December 1987-1 May 1988		1 December 1987-1 June 1988
	FI	AI	FI	AI
(a) resignations	13	0	19	0
(b) retirements	4	0	6	0
(c) otherwise left	1	0	1	0
(d) recruits	2	0	7	0

Note: Figures do not include inspectors returning from secondment or special leave, etc, those regraded or those transferring internally in HSE to and from the Inspectorates.

TRANSPORT

Lorries (Hazardous Chemicals and Waste)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for inspecting lorries carrying hazardous chemicals or hazardous waste to see that they are maintained and equipped up to British standards.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986 as amended in 1987 and the Road Traffic (Carriage of Dangerous Substances in Packages etc.) Regulations 1986 are enforced by the police and the Health and Safety Executive.

Roll-on/Roll-off Ferries

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has about the minimum time it would take for a roll-on/roll-off ferry to capsize:

(2) what information he has about the expected time in which a roll-on/roll-off ferry would capsize in the event of collision.

Mr. David Mitchell: If a roll-on/roll-off ferry is loaded correctly, operated in a safe and competent manner, and does not receive structural damage in excess of that assumed in the internationally agreed standards, there is no reason why it should capsize.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the number of collisions in which roll-on/roll-off ferries have been involved for each year since 1983.

Mr. David Mitchell: The number of collisions in which United Kingdom roll-on/roll-off ferries have been involved for each year since 1983 is as follows:

Year	Number
1983	4
1984	4
1985	2
1986	3
1987	3

In addition, since 1983, there have been seven incidents involving non-United Kingdom roll-on/roll-off ferries in collision with United Kingdom ships of other types.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration was given to the vulnerability of roll-on roll-off ferries to rapid capsize in determining the maximum evacuation time of 30 minutes under the passenger ship safety regulations.

Mr. David Mitchell: The 30-minute period prescribed to evacuate a passenger ship was first introduced by the 1960 international safety of life at sea convention, and has been repeated by successive conventions. The primary aim was to set a realistic target time in which to evacuate all the persons on board any passenger ship.

London Airports (Traffic Distribution)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to review his traffic distribution policy for airports serving the London area; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I have today written to the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority formally seeking the authority's advice on traffic distribution policy for airports serving the London area. A copy of my letter has been placed in the Library. With that advice pending, it would be inappropriate for me to consider introducing either of the existing deferred rules, covering frequency capping at Heathrow and peak hour priority for scheduled services at Gatwick. I expect to receive the authority's formal advice by July next year.

Ferries

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those recommendations of the formal investigation into the Herald of Free Enterprise which (a) he has implemented, (b) he plans to implement, (c) on which he is still undecided and (d) over which he has no control.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 21 March]: I have placed in the Library a list of the recommendations in the report of the court indicating the action that has been taken or is in hand.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Empty Dwellings

86. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the number of Government-owned empty houses and flats.

87. Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish a list of all Government Departments which own empty houses and flats and the length of time they have been empty.

88. Mr. Fachett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any proposals for the use of empty Government-owned houses and flats.

Mr. Major: The Government are concerned to reduce the number of empty dwellings in its possession to the minimum necessary for operational requirements. Departments, therefore, are encouraged to sell the empty dwellings that are surplus to those requirements. According to annual returns made by departments to the Treasury, in 1987 there were 18,426 empty dwellings owned by Government Departments. The Departments owning these were the Ministry of Defence, Home Office, Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland departments, PSA, Scottish Office, Forestry Commission, Department of Transport, and the Welsh Office. Information on the length of vacancy of each dwelling would incur a disproportionate cost.

Exchange Rate

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will not make it his policy to publish the upper and lower numerical levels in pounds sterling and the reference limits within which the Treasury and the Bank of England are seeking to operate in relation to other currencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Policy towards the exchange rate was set out in my right hon. Friend's Budget speech. The Government do not discuss the tactics they pursue in the foreign exchange markets.

Government Data Network

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether the Government data network will have spare communications capacity when it first becomes operational;

(2) whether, during the planning of future expansion of the Government data network, consideration will be given to developing opportunities for use of the Network's facilities by the private sector;

(3) whether, when the Government data network becomes operational, Government Departments will still be allowed to consider competing offers of services alternative to Government data network in order to meet their telecommunications needs;

(4) whether any spare capacity of the Government data network will be made available on a commercial basis to other Government Departments or with appropriate security safeguards to private concerns.

Mr. Brooke: The Government data network takes account of the current planned needs of the four initial users. However, because of the size of the Inland Revenue and DHSS applications, and the wide geographical spread of all four users, the network will be designed from the outset to facilitate rapid and easy growth and increased geographical coverage. Private concerns are not expected to become users of GDN.

Racal Data Networks Ltd. has to guarantee service levels and offer the GDN service at a lower cost than comparable public services. Departments will be free to compare alternatives to GDN to ensure best value for money. The GDN could be used to carry value-added services if Departments require these. The procurement of these services will normally be on a competitive basis.

ENERGY

Coal Workers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many applications the Government have made since 1973 to the Commission of the European Communities under article 56.2.(b) of the treaty of Paris for workers in the coal industry; how many of these workers were employed in (a) British Coal NCB deep mines, (b) opencast sites and (c) licensed mines; and how much was received from the ECSC budget for each sector.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A total of 13 applications have been made, one covering the years 1973 and 1974, and one for each subsequent year up to 1986. An application for the period 1 January to 28 March 1987 is expected to be made shortly. All the redundancies included in previous applications have arisen from the closure, partial closure or merger of British Coal deep mines. However it would involve disproportionate cost to calculate the number of workers included in the applications who were actually employed at British Coal deep mines, as opposed to the number employed at other British Coal units such as area services. No workers employed at opencast sites or licensed mines have been included in the applications.

Redundant Mineworkers

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many former employees of British Coal who were employed at opencast sites have received payments made under the Redundant Mineworkers and Concessionary Coal (Payments Scheme) Order 1973 and 1978 and amending orders; what were the dates on which such payments were made; and what were the opencast sites at which such persons were employed giving their occupations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what applications or approaches he has had from companies based in the United Kingdom or overseas for permission to build small, purpose-built coal-fired power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None. The consent of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is not required for the building of private coal-fired power stations.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to stipulate that any new small purpose-built coal-fired power stations must have advanced fluidised bed combustion techniques; if he will seek to ensure that any prefabricated parts in such stations are built in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is a matter for the generating organisations concerned whether they wish to utilise advance fluidised bed combustion techniques. All new coal-fired power stations must meet the requirements of HMIP for emission control.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Set-aside Scheme

Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he intends to take to exclude the use of land for opencast coal mining from the terms of his set-aside policy.

Mr. MacGregor: Land used for opencast coalmining will not be eligible for set-aside payments under draft regulations shortly to be put to Parliament.

Whale Conservation

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will press for measures within the European Community similar to those adopted by the United States of America which provide for trade sanctions against countries which ignore whale conservation measures.

Mr. Gummer: It has been widely recognised that the United Kingdom Government have taken a strong lead on the conservation of whales. We shall continue to do that and hope to have continued success working through the International Whaling Commission.

Pigmeat MCAs

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made with regard to the abolition of monetary compensatory amounts for pigmeat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The proposal is to remove 3·2 percentage points of the United Kingdom pigmeat MCA, leaving it at 1·7 per cent. and making it our lowest MCA. I have agreed this in principle, provided that the package remains as it was in Luxembourg.

Plant Testing and Seed Certification

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations have taken place with the potato seed trade in Scotland about the possible transfer of potato variety testing for distinctness, uniformity and stability from Edinburgh to Cambridge.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on Thursday 16 June, at column 231, to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood). At the meeting with representatives from the Scottish Crop Research Institute and Caithness Potato Breeders Ltd. on 28 July 1987, there was no disagreement that potato variety testing for distinctness, uniformity and stability should remain at Edinburgh. The report on plant variety testing and certification in the United Kingdom recommends the same.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what account was taken in calculating the saving of £42,000 of overheads to be achieved by transferring vegetable variety tests to Cambridge as against Edinburgh.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In 1987-88 the costs, including overheads, of vegetable variety testing for distinctness, uniformity and stability were estimated as £222,000 at Cambridge and £76,000 for the smaller number of species tested at Edinburgh. It was estimated that the extra cost of transferring all the work to Cambridge would be just under £35,000—a net saving of about £42,000.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of the detailed calculations by which the review on plant testing and seed certification systems arrived at its cost estimate for work which it is proposed to transfer from Edinburgh to Cambridge, showing, in particular, any assumptions about productivity or efficiency gains.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the hon. Member to the replies given to him on Monday 20 June, Tuesday 21 June and today. The calculations were based on information provided by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland and the National Institute of Agricultural Botany.

Colorado Beetle

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the frequency, and dangers from the accidental import, of the Colorado beetle.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 21 June 1988]: Up to 100 or so Colorado beetles are found in the United Kingdom each year. The beetles enter the country in a wide variety of ways. Most are found on fruit and vegetables imported from the continent but others occasionally arrive on timber, vehicles and other materials. Thanks to the vigilance of the public in alerting the police or my officials when beetles are found we have managed to prevent this pest being established in our potato crops, where it could do substantial damage. It is very important that this vigilance continues.

Poisonous Algae

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether he is investigating the effect of the poisonous algae on the marine ecosystem of the North sea and its effect on fish stocks; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he is investigating the causes of the presence of the poisonous algae found in the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The algal blooms to which I believe the hon. Member is referring occurred off Scandinavian coasts and in the eastern North sea. The causes and effects of this phenomenon are being investigated by the responsible authorities in the countries concerned. We are keeping closely in touch with the progress of this work.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will increase research funds to be made available for investigating the cause and effect of the poisonous algae in the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 21 June 1988]: As indicated in my earlier reply the algal blooms which have occurred recently have not affected British waters. A substantial amount of research work on inputs into the North sea and their effects is already undertaken and there is no requirement for additional work on algal blooms to be given priority over other research activities related to the marine environment. The United Kingdom is contributing fully to the work of the scientific task force which is being established to enhance our knowledge and understanding of the North sea.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with Ministers of other Nordic countries about dealing with the poisonous algae in the North sea; what was discussed; whether any agreements were reached; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 21 June 1988]: An international scientific symposium has been convened by the Federal Republic of Germany to consider the growth of algae in the North sea and Baltic sea. This will take place on 23-24 June and representatives of the Governments concerned have been asked to participate; these are Denmark, the Netherlands, Norway and Sweden. The United Kingdom is not directly involved, but we are sending an observer to this symposium and will be following the proceedings with interest and concern.

Vegetable, Plant and Animal Matter (Imports)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the restrictions placed on the import of vegetable, plant and animal matter (a) into the United States of America from the United Kingdom and (b) into the United Kingdom from the United States of America.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 20 June 1988]: The United Kingdom has a wide range of controls on imports of plant matter made under the Plant Health (Great Britain) Order 1987, and on imports of animal matter in orders made under the Animal Health Act 1981, which are aimed at protecting this country against serious plant pests and plant and animal diseases being introduced from the United States and elsewhere.

Similarly the United States has a wide range of controls on imports of plant and animal matter, including those from the United Kingdom, made principally under the United States Code of Federal Regulations.

PRIME MINISTER

Chlorofluorocarbon-related Products

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will designate a Minister to take interdepartmental responsibility for policy towards the use and taxation of chlorofluorocarbon-related products in respect of the protection of the ozone layer, the needs of developing countries, ecosystem conservation requirements, and export potential.

Mr. Ridley: I have been asked to reply.

I have overall responsibility for policy on chlorofluorocarbons in consultation with other colleagues involved.

ENVIRONMENT

"London Under Stress"

15. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action his Department proposes to take in response to the report from the London Boroughs Association entitled "London Under Stress", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: It is for the London boroughs grants committee, for whom the report was prepared, and the individual London boroughs to decide what action to take.

Urban Programme

16. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money is estimated to have been spent on the urban programme in England since 1979.

Mr. Trippier: Estimated public spending on the urban programme between April 1979 and March 1988 is £2,477 million, cash.

New Towns (Asset Sales)

18. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the Commission for New Towns in disposing of the former assets of the new town development corporations.

Mr. Ridley: The Commission for the New Towns is conducting an extremely successful programme of asset sales which in 1987-88 yielded receipts in excess of £200 million. I expect asset sales in the current financial year to be higher than this. The success of the asset sales programme is a clear indication of the confidence which private investors have in the future of the new towns.

Sport

19. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to involve active or recently retired sportsmen and women in the administration of British sport.

Mr. Moynihan: On 16 May I hosted the first ever conference for sportsmen and women which enabled over 100 active participants in sport to have their say on a wide range of issues affecting the future of sport. A number of top-level sportsmen and women are directly involved in three particularly important initiatives—first Steve Ovett, Clive Lloyd and Jeoff Thompson are members of my review group looking at sport and recreation provision in inner cities; secondly, Duncan Goodhew and Tessa Sanderson are working with me on my reveiw of sport for people with disabilities; and thirdly, Sebastian Coe and I have worked closely together on efforts to stamp out drug abuse in sport. Earlier this year I invited Chris Bailieu to be a member of the United Kingdom's delegation at the Council of Europe's sports committee.

35. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the levels of private sector sponsorship in sport over the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Between 1981 and 1987, the level of private sector sponsorship of sport rose from about £50 million to £170 million per year, a real terms increase of 150%. Over the same period, the number of companies involved in sponsorship rose from 700 to 1,000. Comparable figures are not available for the period 1978-81. I welcome this growth in the sponsorship of sport. It brings substantial benefits to sport at all levels.

Housing

20. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further measures he proposes to increase the availability of low cost housing for local people in rural areas.

Mr. Ridley: The Housing Corporation is aiming to double the present level of provision by housing associations in rural areas, and I have agreed that the Rural Development Commission should increase its funding of the National Agricultural Centre rural trust for its work in support of rural housing associations. We shall be making a full statement shortly.

21. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any fresh proposals to help reduce local authority housing waiting lists; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: It is for each local authority to decide the criteria for its waiting list. The findings of the study "Queuing for Housing", a report published by my Department in March this year showed that nearly half of those on current waiting lists no longer required local authority housing. It is clearly important, therefore, for authorities to review their lists and procedures regularly.

31. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what targets he is currently developing for housing starts in the north and midlands.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend does not have targets for housing starts. This is best left to the market. The Department's revised household projections for the period to 2001 were published on 15 February. I expect local planning authorities to consider these figures carefully in reviewing and extending their development plans.

34. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent representations he has received calling for the construction of more new houses in the south-east.

Mrs. Roe: Records are not kept in a form which directly answers my hon. Friend's question. Whilst many representations have expressed concern at the pressures for development in the south-east, there is also concern about housing shortages in some areas.

50. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action the Government are taking in order to ensure an adequate supply of low-cost housing in rural areas.

58. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further steps he will take to assist the provision of modestly priced rural housing.

Mrs. Roe: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key).

57. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to bring into use for housing purposes privately-owned empty properties in England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: Our proposals in the Housing Bill for the deregulation of new lettings will enable private owners to let their property at market rents. This will encourage owners of empty private houses and flats to let them.

62. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards the provision of housing in the borough of Basingstoke and Deane under the north-east Hampshire structure plan, in relation to the demands of local commerce and industry.

Mr. Waldegrave: Hampshire county council's strategy towards the provision of housing in the borough of Basingstoke and Deane in relation to the demands of local commerce and industry was an issue raised at the examination in public held in November 1987 into aspects of the second alteration to the north-east Hampshire structure plan. My right hon. Friend will need to consider the report of the panel which conducted the examination in public before deciding whether to propose any modifications to the housing or employment provisions for the Basinstoke and Deane borough.

Smith Houses (Leicester)

22. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the reasons for the refusal of his Department to grant Leicester city council the extra money for the repurchase of Smith houses.

Mr. Ridley: For 1988-89, £20 million was reserved from the total available for housing investment programme allocations to assist authorities with particularly heavy obligations under the housing defects legislation. Leicester city council's bid for extra resouces was considered carefully but the needs of certain other authorities in the east midlands were considered to be greater.

Planning Law

23. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any representations about the case of re-examining the presumption in favour of development in planning law.

Mr. Trippier: Yes.

Football (Crowd Behaviour)

24. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives from the Football Association and the Football League to discuss the implementation of future measures to combat hooliganism and disorder.

59. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to meet the Football League and Football Association; and whether he will be discussing new measures to combat football hooliganism for the forthcoming domestic season.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall discuss progress on existing measures and the possibility of further measures with the football authorities, on 5 July.

76. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will authorise progress on the February 1987 joint Government and Football Authority agreement on measures to combat football hooliganism; and if he will make a statement.

46. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest initiatives by his Department to improve crowd behaviour at English football grounds.

Mr. Moynihan: In February 1987 the Government and the football authorities reached agreement on a package of measures aimed at combating hooliganism at Football League grounds. Progress on some elements of the package has been good, particularly on the introduction of local plans for dealing with home and away supporters. But I regret that some clubs still have to put CCTV in place and the progress on the introduction of membership areas has been slow. I will be discussing progress with the football authorities on 5 July.

Urban Development Grant

25. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public funding has been devoted to urban development grant in each year since it was introduced.

Mr. Trippier: Expenditure on urban development grants was as follows:—

	£ million
1983-84	7
1984-85	15
1985-86	22
1986-87	22

Expenditure in 1987-88 is estimated to have been £23 million.

38. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications have been received from Liverpool city council for assistance under the urban development grant scheme since its launch; and how many of those applications have been accepted by his Department.

Mr. Trippier: Since 1982 my Department has received seven applications for urban development grant assistance from Liverpool city council. One scheme has been approved.

42. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent in total on the urban regeneration grants since its launch.

Mr. Trippier: Eight urban regeneration grants totalling £40·7 million have been approved by my Department. Further approvals are expected to flow from applications received before the beginning of May. In each case payment of grant will be spread over the period in which the development is carried out.

51. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many schemes were approved over the lifetime of urban development grants and urban regeneration grants; and at what cost to public funds.

Mr. Trippier: A total of 289 urban development grants and eight urban regeneration grants have been approved at a total cost of £175 million. Further approvals are expected to flow from applications made by the beginning of May.

Improvement Grant Work

26. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the recommendations of the committee appointed by the hon. Member for Oxford, West and Abingdon (Mr. Patten), as Minister for Housing, Urban Affairs and Construction, regarding the financing of improvement grant work and preventing low-quality builders being involved in such work.

Mr. Trippier: The report of the working party is under consideration.

Environmental Monitoring

27. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether it is intended to make any further changes in environmental monitoring procedures, and in particular of radioactivity in the environment, in the light of post-Chernobyl experiences.

Mr. Moynihan: The national response plan to cater for the consequences of nuclear accidents abroad incorporates new radiation monitoring arrangements. Details are set out in the HMSO booklet "The National Response Plan and Radioactive Incident Monitoring Network (RIMNET): A Statement of Proposals" published earlier this year, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Bail Hostels

28. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations on class C1 of the Town and Country Planning (Use Classes Order) 1987 regarding change of use to bail hostels and similar residences for offenders.

Mr. Ridley: We have received one letter about bail hostels and the use classes order, from an area probation service, and I am aware of my hon. Friend's concerns about a proposed hostel in his constituency.

Cluttons Ltd.

29. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the directors of Cluttons Ltd; and what matters of mutual interest were discussed.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has had no meeting with the directors of Cluttons. I met the senior partner approximately 18 months ago when we discussed the management of PSA district works offices.

Development (Density)

30. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he gives to planning authorities and planning inspectors on density of development.

Mr. Ridley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle).

49. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has, in the light of the overdevelopment of the south-east, to introduce a new planning circular.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle).

Pollution

32. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will outline new proposals for steps being taken to reduce pollution from motor vehicles, in the light of the recent report on increasing air pollution in London.

Mr. Moynihan: I outlined the Government's proposals for further measures to reduce motor vehicle pollution in my reply of 7 December 1987 to my hon. Friend the Member for Fulham (Mr. Carrington), at column 20-21. We expect these measures to achieve reductions in air pollution, despite predicted increases in traffic.

European Football

33. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will next meet the chairman of the Football Association to discuss the future of English participation in European football.

Mr. Moynihan: As I told the hon. Member in my answer on 18 May at column 941, I met the chairman of the Football Association on 14 May together with the president of UEFA and the president of the Football League. I have presented to UEFA my report on the 1987-88 domestic season and the preparations for the European Championship finals. UEFA will now take its decision on whether English clubs should be re-admitted to European competitions at its congress on 24 June.

Homelessness

36. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of single people (a) under 18 years and (b) under 25 years who are homeless (i) in London and (ii) in England; and if he will introduce legislation to amend the Housing Act 1985 to include people under the age of 18 years within the category of homeless people who are in priority need and entitled to be housed by their local authority.

Mrs. Roe: Information about the ages of homeless single people is not available. Section 59 of the Housing Act 1985 does not specify any age limit for those who may be treated as in priority need for accommodation, and local authorities are therefore already able to house young people under 18 under the homelessness legislation when they judge them to be at risk.

37. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for families in bed-and-breakfast accommodation in England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: The latest number of households temporarily placed in bed and breakfast accommodation by English local authorities, appears in table 4(A) of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England, Statistics for the first quarter 1988", which is available in the Library. For Welsh figures I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

39. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many young single homeless people there are (a) in London and (b) in England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: The information is not available.

Urban Development

40. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much private money in total is estimated to have been attracted as a result of public funding for urban development and regeneration in the Merseyside and London Dockland development corporations; and what level of leverage that represents.

Mr. Trippier: Estimated private sector investment committed by the end of March 1988 to the London Docklands development corporation's area was £4 billion and to the Merseyside development corporation's area was £63 million. Total grant-in-aid paid to the two corporations over the same period was £564 million. This represents a leverage (defined as the ratio of grant-in-aid received to private sector investment committed) of 1:7.

60. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) jobs have been provided, (b) homes have been provided and (c) areas of inner-city derelict land have been reclaimed, as a result of awards under the urban development and urban regeneration grants during their lifetime.

Mr. Trippier: Urban development grants and urban regeneration grants approved to date will result in the provision of 30,800 jobs and 8,500 homes as well as bringing 1,380 acres of land back into use. Further approvals are expected to flow from applications received by early May.

44. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money has been spent in total on the urban development corporation budget in each of the last three years.

Mr. Trippier: Urban development corporation grant-in-aid in the last three years was:

1985-86 outturn £ million	1986-87 outturn £ million	1987-88 provision £ million
82	89	133

Planning Control

41. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he is considering for changes in the local authority planning control system.

Mr. Waldegrave: At any time we have a number of improvements to the planning system under consideration. In particular, revised rules governing planning inquiries have just been made; we have laid regulations to give effect by 3 July to the European Community's environmental assessment directive; we published on 15 June a draft planning policy guidance note on local plans; and we shall be laying a revised and consolidated general development order later this year.

River Pollution

43. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what directions he has given to the chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee with regard to the maintenance of river pollution standards subsequent to the introduction of the National Rivers Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: None. The privatisation legislation will put the existing system of quality objectives and standards on a statutory basis, and allow my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, to set such objectives in the light of recommendations from the National Rivers Authority. These arrangements cannot be brought into operation until the NRA has been established and the relevant pollution control functions have been transferred to it. Until then, such matters remain the responsibility of the regional water authorities.

Ozone Layer (Protection)

45. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last discussed the question of the protection of the ozone layer with his European Economic Community counterparts; and what was the content of the discussion.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer to the answer which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) on 20 June 1988.

66. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take, in the light of the report from the Environment Committee, published on 15 June, in so far as it relates to damage to the ozone layer caused by chlorofluorocarbons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 14 June at columns 143-44.

Development (South-West)

47. Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what approaches and how many letters he has received from people and organisations concerned about the increased incursion of inappropriate modern buildings into the countryside of the south-west region of England; and what specific steps he proposes to take to preserve the rural heritage in this region.

Mr. Moynihan: In the year to 31 March the Department's south-west regional office received over 300 letters about planning matters in the region. Some would have referred to the subject raised by my hon. Friend. The Government's policy for the countryside is aimed to encourage growth and diversification in the rural economy in ways that will enhance the quality of life in rural communities and conserve the nation's countryside heritage.

Planning Appeals

48. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department currently provides to inspectors appointed to conduct planning appeals to assist them in carrying out their duties.

Mr. Waldegrave: Like local planning authorities, inspectors must have regard to guidance on planning policy published by my right hon. Friend, so far as it is material to the particular case. The Department also arranges training for inspectors on all aspects of their work.

63. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appeals he has allowed from developers every year for the last five years.

Mr. Waldegrave: The number of planning appeals allowed in each of the last five years is as follows:

Year	Appeals allowed
1983	3,633
1984	3,773
1985	5,477
1985-86	5,581
1986-87	6,208
1987-88	6,955

Local Government Finance Bill

52. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people and how many organisations have now made representations to him in favour of the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Howard: A summary of the 1,271 responses received by 31 October 1986, when the consultation period on the Green Paper ended, was placed in the Library on 15 December 1986. Since June 1987, my Department has received some 10,400 letters, the majority of which are from private individuals. The letters contain a variety of comments on specific aspects of our proposals, or requests for further information, and for this reason do not readily lend themselves to an analysis of correspondents' views.

London Docklands Development Corporation

53. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much private finance has been attracted to the London Docklands development corporation as a result of Government urban regeneration and development funding; and what level of public/private sector leverage this represents.

Mr. Trippier: Estimated private sector investment committed by the end of March 1988 to the London Docklands development corporation's area was £4 billion. The grant-in-aid paid to LDDC over the same period was £396 million. This represents a leverage (defined as the ratio of grant-in-aid received to private sector investment committed) of 1:10.

Olympic Games, Seoul

54. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any representations about the safety of United Kingdom sportsmen and women competing in the summer Olympic Games in Seoul.

Mr. Moynihan: I replied to a question on the safety of competitors at the Olympic Games from the hon. Member on 25 January at column 51, and I refer the hon. Member to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Shipley (Sir M. Fox). I have not received any letters on the subject.

83. Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is satisfied with the security arrangements being made for the British Olympic team in South Korea.

Mr. Moynihan: Security for the Olympic Games is primarily the responsibility of the South Korean Authorities. They are taking extensive precautions and both I and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs are confident they are giving this matter very careful consideration. We will continue to monitor the situation between now and the start of the games.

Litter Act 1983

55. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the effectiveness of the Litter Act 1983.

Mr. Moynihan: No, but we shall be monitoring the effectiveness of the City of Westminster Act which introduces a fixed penalty of £10 as an alternative to being prosecuted for an offence, to establish whether the concept is suitable for wider application.

Urban Development Grant (Brent)

56. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public funding has been awarded to Brent under the Government's urban development grant scheme since 1984; and how much private funding has been attracted as a result.

Mr. Trippier: Since 1984 two urban development grant schemes have been approved in Brent generating £2,125,000 of Government funding. These projects are expected to encourage private sector investment in excess of £7 million.

County Precepts

61. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which counties in England have (a) the highest and (b) the lowest county precept.

Mr. Howard: In 1988-89 Derbyshire has the highest county precept (297·5p) and Hereford and Worcester the lowest (185·0p).

Housing Investment Programme Allocation (Cherwell)

64. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Cherwell district council concerning its housing investment programme allocation.

Mrs. Roe: None.

Water Pollution

65. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to reduce pollution levels in the waters around the United Kingdom coastline; and what information he has about pollution levels in other European Economic Community countries with coastal waters in relation to the levels in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: The ministerial declaration of the second international conference on the protection of the North sea, which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State chaired last November, contains a number of agreed proposals for reducing pollution of the North sea. The Department has since published a guidance note setting out the action the Government believe is necessary to implement the declaration. Discussions are in progress with water authorities and other interested parties with a view to drawing up an action plan for reducing inputs of dangerous substances via rivers and estuaries, and this will be reviewed at the third international conference to be held in the Netherlands in early 1990.

The Government have stated that actions implied by the declaration will be applied consistently throughout the United Kingdom and not just to North sea waters.

The North sea quality status report, prepared for last year's conference, provides the best assessment of the current state of the North sea. Copies of the ministerial declaration of the second conference, the Department's guidance note and the quality status report have all been placed in the Library of the House.

Rents

67. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures he intends to bring forward to co-ordinate the work of his own Department and of other Government agencies with regard to rent levels in the event of the Housing Bill becoming law.

Mr. Waldegrave: We do not consider that there will be any need to alter arrangements for co-ordination as a result of the Housing Bill.

Consortium Developments plc

68. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to meet the chairman of Consortium Developments plc to discuss his policy on housing development.

Mrs. Roe: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present for such a meeting.

House Sales (Basildon)

69. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many New Town Commission houses and council houses have been sold in Basildon up to the present time.

Mrs. Roe: At 31 March 1988 11,083 new town houses and 1,685 council houses had been sold in Basildon.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent advice he has received from public water authorities about the current state of nitrate pollution of public water supplies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Water authorities and water companies have advised me of 49 public water supplies currently containing nitrate which regularly exceeds a concentration of 50 milligrams per litre.

Planning Applications

70. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for planning permission that fell outside county council structure plans he received in 1987.

Mr. Waldegrave: Local planning authorities are required to notify my right hon. Friend of any planning application which would materially conflict with or prejudice the implementation of any of the policies or general proposals of the structure plan but which they intend to approve. Some 342 such applications were referred to him in 1987.

75. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications for 3,000 houses or more have been called in by him within the last 12 months or are now under consideration by him with a view to calling in; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: One such application was called in; and another is currently unde consideration for call-in.

Construction Industry

71. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the most recent set of construction figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Provisional figures for the first quarter 1988 are given in the table.

Construction activity in Great Britain—1st Quarter 1988
£m 1980 prices—seasonally adjusted

	Output[1]	New orders[2]
Housing
Private	1,086	1,040
Public	177	152
TOTAL	1,263	1,192
Other New Work
Private industrial	752	659
Private commercial	1,214	1,879
Public non-housing	837	1,090
All other new work	2,803	3,628
TOTAL New Work	4,066	4,820
Repair Maintenance and Improvements[3],[4]
Housing R M and I
Private	856
Public	561
Private Non-housing R and M	552
Public Non-housing R and M	695
TOTAL R M and I	2,664
TOTAL All Work	6,730

[1] Includes DLOs of LA's and PAs
[2] Private Contractors only.
[3] Includes housing refurbishment but non-housing refurbishment is included with new work.
[4] Orders for R and M are not collected.

These total output figures of £673 million are the best for 15 years and represent a 10 per cent. increase over the same period a year earlier. It has been largely achieved by the dominant influence of work for the private sector reflecting the success of the Government's economic policies.

The high level of contractors' new orders confirms that the healthy state of the industry will be maintained during 1988.

Arpley Meadows Dumping Site

72. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to meet representatives of Cheshire county council to discuss the future of the Arpley meadows dumping site.

Mr. Moynihan: I am arranging to meet representatives of Cheshire county council shortly.

Rating Reform

73. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were his estimates in June 1987 and in December 1987 of the total number of people who will be exempt from paying the poll tax; and what is the latest equivalent estimate.

Mr. Howard: In June 1987 we estimated that about half a million people would be exempt from the community charge. We estimate that decisions taken since then will result in exemptions for about an additional 25,000 people.

84. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning exemption from the community charge of full-time residential community volunteer carers, including community service volunteers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Government have received a number of such representations, which are currently under consideration.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning his proposals, announced on 17 November 1987 and 25 April to require 10 London boroughs to operate residual domestic rating for four years in addition to the community charge after 25 April.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 20 June 1988]: I have received representations from the London Boroughs Association, the Association of London Authorities, the City of London and from members and officers of a number of the boroughs affected.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date the Price Waterhouse report on administering the community charge was received; when he proposes to publish the report; what arrangements will be made for disseminating its findings; and if he will publish the cost of commissioning the report.

Mr. Ridley: The date on which both volumes of the final report were available was 16 June. I shall make both volumes available shortly and will distribute volume 2 of the report widely to local authorities as soon as this has been discussed with the local authority associations. The report is expected to cost £60,000.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if mature students paying the 20 per cent.

community charge with a non-student spouse, will be jointly and severally liable for their spouse's community charge at a rate of 100 per cent.

Mr. Ridley: All married and unmarried couples will be jointly and severally liable for the full amount of each other's community charge during the period that they live together.

Air Pollution

74. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department is monitoring the build-up of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere.

Mr. Moynihan: Although the Department does not monitor carbon dioxide concentrations directly, we keep in close touch with the United States National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration laboratories which maintains the definitive long-term records such as that at Mauna, Loa, Hawaii. The Department does monitor concentrations of many other important greenhouse gases (eg Methane, CFCs) in co-operation with NASA and University college, Galway, at a clean site in Western Ireland, which has been established with the co-operation of the Department of the Environment of the Republic of Ireland.

"The Way Forward"

77. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received following the publication of the document entitled "The Way Forward" by United Kingdom Nirex Ltd.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about Nirex's discussion document "The Way Forward". We have advised all respondents to make their views known to Nirex.

Housebuilders Federation

78. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met representatives of the Housebuilders Federation; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning, last met representatives of the Housebuilders Federation at their conference on 24 March, when a wide range of issues of interest to the federation were raised. Ministers keep in regular touch with the federation.

Housing Defects Act

79. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the working of the Housing Defects Act.

Mrs. Roe: We have recently modified the rules of the scheme to enable local authorities more readily to give appropriate help to owners of houses designated as defective. We have also increased the cost limits up to which grants for repairs are available, and we have allocated a further £20 million to local authorities with the heaviest obligations to help house owners.

Local authorities are now generally making good progress in implementing the legislation, but we are continuing to monitor the scheme closely, and to examine the scope for further streamlining.

Right to Buy

80. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will seek to extend the right to buy granted to council tenants to include tenants of privately rented properties without resident landlords.

Mrs. Roe: No.

Planning Inquiries

81. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to improve and make more cost-effective planning inquiries, particularly major planning inquiries; and if he will seek to introduce a power for inspectors at such inquiries to commission independent expert research not requested by parties to the inquiry.

Mr. Waldegrave: New procedure rules for planning inquiries were laid before both Houses on 16 June. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) on that date at columns 247-48. A major objective of the new rules is to speed up decision times by introducing time tabling provisions for the service of pre-inquiry statements and for the date by which the inquiry should open. There are also now provisions for the exchange of evidence before the start of the inquiry. The rules are supplemented by a code of practice giving additional guidance on the action required from the various participants in preparing for a major inquiry.

The rules do not give inspectors a specific power to commission independent research, but there is nothing to prevent them from inviting submissions on a particular issue. In general, however, it is for the parties to an inquiry to decide the scope and content of their evidence.

Sport (Drug Abuse)

82. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will outline the national and international steps taken to implement the proposals outlined in the Government's report on drug abuse in sport.

Mr. Moynihan: Nationally, the Sports Council began implementation on 1 April of a new drug-testing regime which provides for:

(i) Testing to be undertaken by independent sampling officers
(ii) Random selection of competitors
(iii) Testing out of competition
(iv) Publication of adverse findings and action taken by governing bodies of sport.

Under this new regime, for which the Government allocated an additional £180,000 to the council's budget this year, testing has already taken place at over 100 events and 56 out-of-competition tests have been taken.

Internationally, I proposed to Council of Europe Sports Ministers in Athens on 2 June that a European convention should be drawn up. Such a convention would be legally binding on the states which ratified it. Among other things, it would reflect international agreement to the principles of an independent testing regime set out in the report which Sebastian Coe and myself produced last summer. I am pleased that my European colleagues accepted my proposal. Additionally, the Council of Europe's working group on effective anti-doping measures is considering amendments to the existing European charter which will take account of the proposals set out in our report; the first permanent world conference on anti-doping in Ottowa on 26-29 June will bring sports organisations together to consider a worldwide charter in line with the proposals in our report; and the European sports conference which includes eastern bloc countries and which meets in Sweden in October will consider the adoption and promotion of out-of-competition testing.

Urban Development (Hull)

85. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money has been given to Hull under urban regeneration and urban development grants since 1983.

Mr. Trippier: Since 1983 a total of £22 million of urban development and urban regeneration grants have been approved in schemes for Hull. In each case payment of the grant is spread over the development period of the project.

Council Properties (Wandsworth)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of empty council properties in the London borough of Wandsworth on 1 June.

Mrs. Roe: I have nothing to add to the reply given to the hon. Member by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning on 25 January 1988 at column 39.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for licensing importers, transporters and disposers of hazardous waste.

Mr. Moynihan: Disposal of controlled waste is subject to licensing under the Control of Pollution Act 1974. Proposals for the registration of waste handlers were included in a consultation paper issued in September 1986. We expect to announce our conclusions very shortly.

Glanville Fritillary

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further plans he has for protecting the Glanville fritillary.

Mr. Moynihan: I cannot at present add anything to the answer I gave my hon. Friend on 7 December 1987 at column 16. I will, however, write to my hon. Friend to explain the present position.

Waste Imports

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement summarising the guidelines issued by his Department to local authorities on the subject of the import of hazardous and domestic waste from abroad.

Mr. Moynihan: Guidance on waste mangagement in respect of all controlled waste disposed of in this country is given in waste management papers issued by my Department. The guidance applies equally to imported wastes and wastes generated in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement outlining the policy of his Department on commercial agreements entered into by local authorities with companies allowing them to import waste from abroad to landfill sites in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: Local authorities may enter into contracts to dispose of waste provided the disposal complies with all conditions necessary to ensure the protection of public health, water supply and local amenity.

Planning Circular

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to introduce a new planning circular.

Mr. Ridley: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar.

Inner-City Sport

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in the Government's review of inner-city sport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Since its official launch in March, the review group has had one full day's meeting and has undertaken a two-day visit to the west midlands region. During that visit the group looked at existing sport and recreation schemes and held discussions with business men, community groups and voluntary groups. Further meetings and visits are being arranged for the coming months.

Lead-free Petrol

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to ensure that petrol companies are doing enough to advertise the availability of lead-free petrol.

Mr. Moynihan: Petrol companies which have installed equipment to sell unleaded petrol already have a strong incentive to advertise its availability. The additional duty differential introduced in the Budget makes the new fuel highly attractive at about 6p per gallon cheaper than leaded 4-star. The work of the various organisations interested in the smooth transition to unleaded petrol is co-ordinated by the unleaded petrol group, which I chair.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish the third report of the hazardous waste inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: On behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, I welcome the third report of the hazardous waste inspectorate which has been published today. Copies of the report have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses, and are publicly available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

The report is concerned with standards of waste management for the year ending 31 March 1987. From that time, the hazardous waste inspectorate has been incorporated in Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the new title of HMIP: Wastes. HMIP will in future publish reports on its activities as a whole including those of HMIP: Wastes. The present arrangements are being maintained in Scotland for the time being.

While it is encouraging to note that the inspectorate found significant improvements in standards of waste management by comparison with its earlier findings, it is apparent that much remains to be done. The report particularly highlights the need for greater professionalism and training in the industry.

The Government have already initiated a number of measures intended to ensure that the progress so far made is maintained and that waste management practice will continue to improve. On 11 May regulations were laid before Parliament which will inter alia clarify the application of the disposal licensing system in England and Wales; they do, for example, require the licensing of oil and solvent recovery operations as recommended in chapter 5 of the report. A separate review of the licensing provisions for waste disposal in Scotland is at present in hand, with a view to making new regulations. The provisions of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 on waste will not, however, be affected. Regulations are planned to be laid before the summer recess to implement the EC directives on transfrontier shipment of hazardous wastes; the regulations will apply to special wastes and will ensure that waste disposal authorities for the areas covering both port of entry and disposal site receive prior notification of such shipments from overseas. This will provide valuable assistance to waste disposal authorities in carrying out their enforcement duties.

A revised version of waste management paper No. 4, which provides advice on the terms and conditions which should be applied to disposal licences will be published in September. Full publicity will be given to this up-to-date guidance, which the Government expect to be followed by both authorities and the waste disposal industry. Strict adherence to the guidance will avoid many of the unsatisfactory practices which the Inspectorate has found.

The problem of landfill gas discussed in chapter 6 of the report is currently being reviewed by the inspectorate and the Secretary of State will consider urgently with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland any recommendations for improving control of gas generation at landfill sites.

We are also concerned by the inspectorate's comments in chapter 8 about waste management practice in some of the former metropolitan county areas, and we await the considered views of the inspectorate in the light of the comprehensive review they are conducting.

So far as concerns waste disposal plans required under section 2 of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, the Department has written to all waste disposal authorities in England asking them to expedite their plans with the aim of completing them by October 1989.

The Secretaries of State for Social Services and Wales share our concern about the inspectorate's comments on hospital incinerators. Health authorities no longer have Crown immunity from the requirements of the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974, and it is intended that the new controls on incinerator emissions associated with the proposed new air pollution legislation (see chapter 11) will apply to health authorities as to all other operators. Health authorities intending to dispose of waste by incineration will, as they upgrade their installations to meet these new emission controls, also be required to obtain and comply with the requirements of waste disposal licences, in accordance with the provisions of the new collection and disposal of waste regulations.

Work has commenced on the review of the special waste regulations for which we plan to issue a consultation paper in the autumn.

Finally the inspectorate draws attention to the proposals for primary legislation to improve the framework of control for waste management on which a consultation paper was issued in September 1986. Very careful consideration has been given to the responses to the consultation and we expect to be able to announce our conclusions later this month. Following similar consultations in Scotland in 1987, consideration is being given to equivalent action there.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 20 June 1988]: Information on the types of schools attended by senior staff is not available.

Local Government Finance Bill

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Government amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill were tabled during (a) Committee stage in the Commons, (b) Report stage in the Commons and (c) Committee stage in the House of Lords.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 20 June 1988]: The Government have tabled amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill as follows:

Commons Committee—218 amendments.
Commons Report—135 amendments.
Lords Committee—196 amendments.

These totals include consequential amendments.

Free Aluminium

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what studies are being conducted into the levels of free aluminium to be found in soil in the United Kingdom, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 17 June 1988]: Studies on the mobilisation of aluminium in United Kingdom soils and freshwaters are being conducted by water authorities and a number of research contractors on behalf of the Natural Environment Research Council and this Department.

Aluminium tends to be mobilised mainly in soils which have low or no acid neutralising capacity. Waters from these areas have higher aluminium contents than waters from calcareous areas but the contribution they make to the total aluminium content of public drinking water supplies is quite small.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Legislation

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the Northern Ireland legislation passed since the abolition of the Northern Ireland Parliament (a) in the form of an Act of Parliament applying to the Province alone and (b) as part of a statute applying to the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Stanley: As far as the first part of my hon. Friend's question is concerned, all, or most, of the provisions of the following Acts, passed since the abolition of the Northern Ireland Parliament in 1973, extend only to Northern Ireland.

Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1973
Northern Ireland (Young Persons) Act 1974
Social Security (Northern Ireland) Act 1975
Industrial Injuries and Diseases (Northern Ireland Old Cases) Act 1975
Northern Ireland Assembly Disqualification Act 1975
Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) (Amendment) Act 1975
Statute Law Revision (Northern Ireland) Act 1976
Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1976
Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) (Amendment) Act 1977
Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978
Education (Northern Ireland) Act 1978
Judicature (Northern Ireland) Act 1978
Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons (Northern Ireland) Act 1978
Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act 1980
Statute Law Revision (Northern Ireland) Act 1980
Elections (Northern Ireland) Act 1985
Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) (Amendment) Act 1987

The list does not include certain Acts (such as the Northern Ireland Constitution and Constitution (Amendment) Acts 1973, the Northern Ireland Acts 1974 and 1982, and the Northern Ireland Loans Acts 1975 and 1985) which are of United Kingdom-wide extent, notwithstanding that they are principally concerned with Northern Ireland.

As far as the second part of the question is concerned, there are more than 500 Acts of Parliament that have been passed since 1973 that have application throughout the United Kingdom. Complete lists of such Acts are published in the annual volume of Northern Ireland statutes as table IV or V according to year.

Social Workers

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of whole-time equivalent social workers in Northern Ireland in each year from 1976-77.

Mr. Needham: The number of whole-time equivalent social workers (fieldwork and management staff) in Northern Ireland in each year from 1979 is as follows:

	Number
1979	582·54
1980	675·40
1981	747·38
1982	808·78
1983	827·45
1984	850·48
1985	874·02
1986	896·30
1987	927·91

The information is not available for earlier years.

Schools (Joint Projects)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many Catholic and Protestant schools have applied during the last six months for grants for specific joint projects; how many have been accepted; how many rejected; on what grounds these rejections have been made; how many are still awaiting consideration; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: Since the introduction of the cross-community contact scheme in September last year, 103 school-based projects have applied for grant support, involving 242 schools drawn equally from the two communities. Of the 103 applications, 79 have been accepted, 12 rejected and 12 await a final decision.

Projects have been rejected for a variety of reasons: a number included proposals for capital expenditure which is not eligible for assistance under the scheme; others lacked a sufficient programme of ongoing contact.

I am greatly encouraged that the scheme has succeeded in stimulating and encouraging cross-community activities not only in schools but also in youth and community organisations.

Limavady

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether persons who made objections to the public inquiry into the Limavady area plan will be given an opportunity to comment upon the inspector's report before it is made public.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: No.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects the inspector's report of the public inquiry into the Limavady area plan to be published.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The inspector's report is likely to be published by the end of September 1988.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what planning applications have been (a) received and (b) approved for the construction of dwellings on land which is not presently approved for such development in the area surrounding Limavady town; and whether any such development works are presently underway on land which is not presently approved but was shown for such development on the area plan presently under consideration.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: Five planning applications have been received in accordance with article 17 of the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1972. Outline approval has issued for one site and detailed approval has been given for the construction of two dwellings. Development works are under way on one site.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what comments have been made by the Department of the Environment, Northern Ireland, in respect of the inspector's report following the public inquiry into the Limavady area plan;

(2) under what powers the Department of the Environment, Northern Ireland, acted in making comment on an inspector's report following a public inquiry into the Limavady area plan before publication of the inspector's report.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The Department of the Environment (Northern Ireland) has not made any official comment on the inspector's report following the public inquiry into the Limavady area plan.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether Limavady district council will be given an opportunity to comment on the inspector's report which was made as a result of the public inquiry into the Limavady area plan before publication of the report.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: No. There is no statutory provision in the Planning (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 for such comment to be made.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff Recruitment

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will set out, for each Department of the House and for the service of the House generally, the procedure and responsibility for the recruitment of staff; and what interviewing procedure is followed to establish (a) the physical and (b) the mental capabilities of those applying to work.

Mr. Beith: The provisions of the House of Commons (Administration) Act 1978 require that, as far as is consistent with the needs of the House, the conditions of service of staff are kept broadly in line with those of the Home Civil Service. Recruitment procedures therefore follow those laid down for the Civil Service, selection being on merit and on the basis of fair and open competition.

In general, administrative responsibility lies with the Establishments Office acting on the instruction of Departments. Every candidate is required to complete a confidential health and character declaration form which is only made available to an interview panel when appropriate. Every applicant is notified of the Commission's policy on employment of disabled persons and the fact that it is an equal opportunities employer.

Interview panels usually consist of three or four staff of the appropriate grades, whose chairman is responsible for reporting to the appropriate departmental head with whom resides responsibility for appointments. Each panel member is advised of the need to avoid discrimination on the grounds of sex and race when interviewing and assessing the suitability of candidates.

Variations to this general procedure, which accommodate the usual health and character inquiries, include the following:

(a) Clerk's Department and Library

Assistant Clerks and Assistant Library Clerks are recruited through the Civil Service Commission. The respective Departments are represented on the interview panel and the recommendation is subject to the agreement of the respective head of Department in the normal way.

(b) Serjeant's Department

Doorkeepers are recruited from men and women who have completed a period of regular service in one of Her Majesty's forces. These required qualifications were endorsed by the Select Committee on House of Commons Accommodation etc. in its report of 1954.

(c) Refreshment Department

Vacancies for industrial staff of the Refreshment Department are notified to the specialist hotel and catering branch of the jobcentre located at Denmark hill and those interested are asked to complete an application form. Suitable applicants are interviewed by the personnel administrator and other staff as appropriate in that Department.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many staff have been recruited by the Commission in each of the past five years.

Mr. Beith: The information requested is set out in the following table, each 12-month period running from June to the following May.

	Staff
1983-84	76
1984-85	141
1985-86	106
1986-87	122
1987-88	141

The figures include temporary staff and those recruited by way of the Civil Service Commission.

Staff (Insurance)

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what insurance cover is provided for employees of the Commission.

Mr. Beith: In line with practice in the Civil Service the House of Commons Commission acts as its own insurers in respect of its staff and meets its liabilities from the House of Commons Administration Vote.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 23 June 1988

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Driving Offences

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General how many defendants in motoring cases have been acquitted during the last year due to legal technicalities; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The great majority of motoring cases are disposed of in the magistrates courts. As a general rule, magistrates are not required to give their reasons for acquitting defendants, and do not do so. The information that the hon. Member requires is therefore not available.

Debtors

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Attorney-General if he will give the latest figures for the numbers of county court actions against debtors.

The Attorney-General: In 1987 a total of 2·2 million claims for money only—default actions—were issued in county courts in England and Wales. Of these the great majority were claims in respect of alleged debt.

Wild Birds (Shooting)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General what action he is taking under section 1 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, in connection with (a) the recent shooting of a goshawk in South Yorkshire, (b) the recent shooting of a peregrine falcon in the Yorkshire Dales national park and (c) the recent shooting of a goosander in the Yorkshire Dales national park; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No papers have been referred to the Crown Prosecution Service in this matter. If the hon. Member will write to me I shall endeavour to make inquiries and provide a more detailed reply.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Kampuchea

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the level of aid to Kampuchea in the current year.

Mr. Chris Patten: We do not give aid to Cambodia. We do, however, contribute to international programmes for the relief of Cambodian refugees in Thailand. In 1987, our contribution amounted to almost £1·5 million.

TRANSPORT

Disabled People (Station Platform Access)

Mr. Tom Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will raise with the chairman of British Rail the case for improvements in the access to station platforms for disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have no plans to raise this specific matter with the chairman. British Rail has its own special adviser on facilities for the disabled traveller.

British Airways (Transatlantic Air Route)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority in relation to the Gatwick-Manchester-New York air route, operated by British Airways; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I have no immediate plans to meet the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority to discuss the Gatwick-Manchester-New York air route. However, there have been complaints about the quality of service offered on this route, which I understand British Airways have undertaken to improve. Over the next few months the Civil Aviation Authority will be monitoring aspects of the performance of this service.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has carried out monitoring exercises in compliance with the code for the Commission of Racial Equality and Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what positive measures his Department has taken in accordance with the codes for the Commission of Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively, other than those specified in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West on 26 May, Official Report, column 281.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have encouraged women members of staff to become members of promotion and recruitment boards; provided (jointly with our trade unions) an experimental child-care scheme at a residential training centre, and a holiday playscheme.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. He serves both the Department of Transport and the Department of the Environment other than the Property Services Agency.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by whom and when measures were taken to reduce under-representation of women in the higher grades and of black and Asian staff throughout his Department; and with what results.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The measures have been taken in accordance with Government policy, mainly within the last three years, by the staff responsible for action in the areas concerned. There has been an increase in the number of women in the executive grades. It is too early to judge results in relation to ethnic minority members of staff.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what promotion and monitoring projects have been carried out by his Department, and when and with what results.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have been monitoring recruitment, part-time working and job-sharing, and special leave since 1987. The results so far are being analysed to see if discrimination might be occurring. We intend to monitor a series of promotion boards this year.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are women and from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Numbers and percentages of women are as follows, as at 31 May 1988:

Grade band	Number	Per cent.
1–4	1	—
7	34	5
8 and 9	196	10
10	756	18
11 and 12	5,630	73
Total	6,626	45

Numbers and percentages of ethnic minority staff are available, as at 31 March 1988, only for those staff who have responded to the voluntary monitoring surveys. Figures are as follows:

Grade band	Number	Per cent.
1–6	3	1½
8	32	5
9	27	3
10	46	2
11	121	6
12	97	3
Total	335	3

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr Peter Bottomley: Yes. The policy of equal opportunities is well established. Plans for improvements include proposals for expanding part-time working and job-sharing; setting up a keeping-in-touch scheme for people who have left for domestic reasons; reviewing training; participating in promotion and other monitoring projects to investigate possible areas of discrimination; and taking appropriate follow-up measures.

A3 (Hindhead)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to announce his proposals for the A3 at Hindhead.

Mr Peter Bottomley: Shortly.

Thornbridge Viaduct, M6

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the contract for repair of the Thornbridge viaduct on the M6 midland link motorway to be completed.

Mr Peter Bottomley: Middle of August 1988.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the daily contracted hours of work of his contractor working on the Thornbridge viaduct of the M6 motorway.

Mr Peter Bottomley: Twenty-four.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if any noise pollution measurements have been taken of the effect of early morning and late evening working of his contractor for the Thornbridge viaduct of the M6 motorway.

Mr Peter Bottomley: No.

Steam Railways

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has held with any of the officers of the preserved standard gauge steam railways in the United Kingdom during 1986, 1987 and 1988; and if he will list the occasions and the subjects discussed.

Mr. David Mitchell: I attended the annual conference of the Association of Railway Preservation Societies and I attended functions on various preserved railways by invitation. Officials of the Department of Transport have had various consultations with officers of preserved steam railways mainly about safety. A list could be prepared only at disproportionate cost.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has made any calculations of journey times for a return trip, including station stops for the operation of the Settle-Carlisle section of British Rail under a light railway order with a 25 mph speed limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. It is for any potential new operator of this line to decide what service to offer and what form of statutory operating authority to seek for it. Operating the line as a light railway is only one of a number of options.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he has held with the railways inspectorate regarding any safety criteria for the private and separate operation of the Settle-Carlisle section of British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: There has been no need for consultations with the railway inspectorate. The safety criteria which would be applied if the Settle to Carlisle railway were to be privately and separately operated are those which are applied to any statutory railway in this country.

Rail Freight

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the total proportion of freight traffic moved by rail as a percentage of the whole for each year from 1970; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The latest available figures are published in "Transport Statistics for Great Britain 1976-86", a copy of which is in the Library.

Road Vehicles

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what decisions were taken at his meeting with European transport ministers on 21 and 22 June in regard to proposed changes to European regulations concerning weights and dimensions of certain road vehicles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State insisted that the existing derogation on drive axle weights should cover other vehicles. No decisions were made on this or other weights and dimensions issues.

Transport Problems (London)

Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to ensure that consultants for the London assessment studies discuss with the boroughs participating in the studies any options they are considering for dealing with transport problems in the areas and that relevant papers are placed in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes.

Motor Vehicles (Safety)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has any plans to review the fire resistance standards for car upholstery set out in BS AU 169 1978-1985 to meet criteria parallel to the new regulations for domestic household furniture which has to be introduced as of 1989-90;

(2) if he will extend more stringent regulations, to apply to roof linings, carpeting and sound insulating material in motor vehicles;

(3) if he will introduce, as a compulsory requirement for motor vehicles sold in the United Kingdom, the fitting of impact inertia switches to the electrical pumps of the fuel system;

(4) what recent Government representations have been made to car manufacturers with regard to the reduction of the risk of accidental fire;

(5) what recent attempts have been made by the Government to reduce risk of accidental fire in motor vehicles; and, in particular, what attempts have been made with regard to (a) redesign of fuse ratings and electrical circuits to incorparate low-powered equipment on separate low-rated fuse circuits and heavier high-powered equipment on separate high-rated fuse circuits, (b) redesign and strengthening of impact zones, (c) greater use of fire resistant plastic laminates in body construction, and (d) incorporation in motor vehicles of automatic fire fighting systems.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 26 June 1988]: Over the past two years we have made representations to the manufacturers about the instances of vehicle fires. The response has generally been constructive. Manufacturers are currently examining information from Home Office reports complied from fire brigade data. They have also provided information about fusing methods and given assurances that existing fuel cut-off devices on vehicles fitted with high-pressure fuel injection systems are sufficient to prevent fire risk from this source. They are considering how best to obtain further information on under-bonnet car fires. Given the information and assurances provided by the manufactures on cut-off devices fitted to prevent fuel leakage from pressurised fuel systems, we have no plans to make the fitting of inpact inertia switches to such fuel systems compulsory.

The transport and road research laboratory is about to commission a short research programme investigating car electrical systems. This will include fusing arrangements and will identify low fire risk wiring methods. Any future action will depend on the findings of this research.

There are no plans to extend the strength of impact zones in relation to fire risks. The performance of cars is monitored through our accident investigation study. Shortcomings in the design of individual models are taken up with the manufacturer to rectify the problem in question. The fitting of automatic fire extinguishers could not be justified.

BS AU 169 is a test method to establish the burning rate of materials and does not differentiate between good and bad materials. The inflammability of car trim and upholstery is not a major cause for concern as the occupants of a car can escape quickly except in major crashes where the vehicle structure is severely distorted. In those instances, the slight delay in the spread of any resultant fire afforded by current fire resistant trim materials would make no difference to the occupants. We have no plans to ask BSI to review the test method or to introduce requirements for fire resistant materials in cars.

In the case of coaches, however, there is a risk as escape is not so straightforward if a fire has taken hold. For that reason, we have taken the initiative in getting provisional agreement on inflammability requirements for the interior of coaches included in an EEC directive. We will be making the new requirements mandatory at the earliest opportunity. The plastic laminates used in coach interiors will have to meet the fire resistance requirements laid down in the standard.

New Road Schemes

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Waveney on 14 June, he will consider adding (a) seasonal tourist use and (b) growth in population to the list of criteria for cost benefit analysis in new road schemes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The Department's computer program for cost-benefit analysis of new trunk road schemes, COBA9, incorporates factors for seasonal tourist use, where appropriate. The Department has recently reviewed this issue, and its report, "Tourism, Leisure and Roads", published in October 1987, confirms that the special characteristics relating to the tourism and leisure industry are fully taken into account in reaching decisions on road schemes. Local population growth is taken into account in the preparation of local traffic forecasts used in COBA9.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

GCSE

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide a breakdown of the distribution to individual local education authorities of the additional resources for GCSE-related expenditure of (a) the sum for secondary school libraries and (b) the general allocation.

Mrs. Rumbold: The table gives the amount allocated to each local education authority within the education support grant for 1986-87 for the additional costs of books and equipment associated with the introduction of the GCSE. The subsequent distribution of these resources is the responsibility of the individual authorities. These amounts do not include provision within the LEA training grants scheme in 1988-89 of £15 million for in-service training related to the assessment of achievement including GCSE; nor do they include the additions to rate support grant in respect of GCSE-related expenditure, of £90 million in 1987-88 and £77 million in 1988-89.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has carried out any monitoring exercises in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively, other than by using ethnic monitoring in sample recruitment surveys; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes. All staff on our training courses are now asked to complete an ethnic monitoring questionnaire on a voluntary basis.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the sample recruitment surveys were carried out to measure the number of white and ethnic minority applicants and to identify significant variations in their success rates throughout the competition; and with what results.

Mrs. Rumbold: We began to monitor our recruitment in July 1987. We do this continuously, not on a sample basis. It is planned to compile and analyse the information on an annual basis.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is using sex monitoring in sample recruitment surveys to measure the number of women applicants and to identify significant variations in their success rates throughout the competition; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: We do not use sex monitoring in sample recruitment surveys and have no plans to do so.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) when his Department last reviewed its range of employment practices in the light of Civil Service policies on equal opportunities; and what that review revealed concerning past inequalities in employment practices in his Department;

(2) how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively;

(3) what steps he has taken to ensure that there is equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department keeps its employment practices under continuing review in the light of developing Civil Service policies on equal opportunities. The numbers and proportion of women in the Department at 1 May 1988 were

		Percentage
Grades 1 to 7	156	23
Higher and Senior Executive Officer	135	39
Executive Officer	203	53
Administrative Officer and below	881	78
Overall	1,375	54

The proportion of women in posts in DES compares favourably with the Civil Service as a whole; we have sought to improve their position further by measures such as the introduction of "keeping in touch" arrangements to provide reinstatement opportunities for staff in all grades who resign for domestic or associated health reasons and wish to return to work within five years. We have also provided equal opportunities training, including women-only development courses. The Department's Darlington office has had a flexible working hours system since 1976.

The Department does not hold information on the ethnic origin of all its staff. Of those who had responded to a recent ethnic origins survey by 1 May 1988, those from ethnic minorities were Grades	Number	Per cent.

1 to 7	10	[1]1·7
HEO and SEO	7	[2]2·6
Executive Officer	21	6·9
AO and below	118	15·1
Overall	156	8·1

[1] of respondents in those grades.
[2] of respondents.

The Department monitors the recruitment of ethnic minority staff in direct recruitment grades (administrative officer and below). Applicants who do not have the minimum academic qualifications can take a short answer test.

A number of in-house training courses aimed specifically at women are available, including assertiveness training and management training for women. There are also courses in equal opportunities awareness and equal opportunity sessions on other courses. Staff on training courses are now asked to complete an ethnic monitoring questionnaire on a voluntary basis. An anti-racism training film package is used as part of induction courses for all new staff.

Guidance on equal opportunity matters is included in training courses for members of promotion boards. Where possible, boards are constituted so as to include women members. Over the next year, a sample DES promotion board will be monitored for the purpose of identifying the progress of ethnic minority candidates.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Yes. An equal opportunities officer for the Department was first appointed in 1984. A separate equal opportunities officer for our Darlington branch was appointed in 1986.

Health Education

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision will be made for health education within the GCSE curriculum, in particular warning against solvent abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: GCSE syllabuses are determined by the GCSE examining groups in accordance with the GCSE general criteria and with the subject-specific national criteria, where appropriate. GCSE criteria and syllabuses will be revised to reflect the 16-plus attainment targets and programmes of study for the national curriculum subjects, including any relating to health education which is a cross-curricular theme to be covered within the core and other foundation subjects.

Rugby League

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answers of 14 and 16 June to the hon. Member for Wakefield, if he will give the reasons why he will not take steps to encourage the greater availability of rugby league as part of the content of physical education courses at teacher training colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend considers that the precise range of sports included within courses of physical education at initial teacher training institutions is a matter for the institutions themselves.

PRIME MINISTER

Bradford

Q1. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to Bradford.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Pinner

Q101. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects to make an official visit to Pinner in the county of Middlesex.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 23 June.

The Prime Minister: This morning I returned from Canada. I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today including one with the President of West Germany.

Rover Group (Takeover)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Prime Minister if she will publish in the Official Report the text of her letter to Jacques Delors, President of the European Commission, concerning the proposed takeover of Rover; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is not my usual practice to publish correspondence of this kind.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fireworks

87. Mr. Archer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to control the sale and use of fireworks.

Mr. Butcher: I have no present intention to do so.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what extent the adoption of policies on race relations and equal opportunities for women, agreed with his departmental trade unions in 1984, included monitoring in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Butcher: The policies agreed with our departmental trades unions in 1984 and in subsequent years made provision for monitoring ethnic origin (which is now in hand, or proposed) in the following areas:

Recruitment Promotion
Career development
Training

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has carried out monitoring exercises in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission respectively.

Mr. Butcher: Yes. The DTI has contributed towards the following reports published by the Cabinet Office:

"Ethnic Origin Surveys. Non-industrial staff in the Civil Service: London and the South East of England" 1987.
"Report on a Trial Recruitment Survey" 1987.
"Equal Opportunities for Women in the Civil Service: Progress Report 1984-1987" April 1988.

Copies of these have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the ethnic monitoring survey of all staff was undertaken; and what that survey revealed concerning past effects of employment practices in his Department.

Mr. Butcher: An ethnic monitoring survey of DTI staff was completed in April 1988. The information obtained is now being prepared for analysis to see what indications it gives.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what positive action he has taken in order to remove the effects of past inequalities in employment in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively;

(2) how and when he has made all departmental staff aware of their personal responsibility to ensure equality of opportunity; and whether he has taken any steps to ensure equality of opportunity in his Department.

Mr. Butcher: I refer the hon. and learned Member to my answer to his question given in the Official Report for 27 May at column 370.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Butcher: Information on equal opportunities has been and is being collected and will be analysed to see whether any further action is necessary.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether his Department provides specific language or other courses for black personnel.

Mr. Butcher: No. All training opportunities are available to black personnel as to other staff in the DTI.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Butcher: Yes. An equal opportunity officer was appointed in this Department in 1984.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are women and from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Butcher: The figures for non-industrial staff as at 1 June 1988, and by groups of grades, are as follows:

	Female
	Number	Percentage
Grades 1-7	132	9·5
SEO-EO and similar (other than* below)	1,029	33·3
AO and AA	2,341	59·4
*Technical and scientific	245	15·1
Typing and Secretarial	1,089	98·6
*Insolvency and Patents grades	199	18·9
Office support	736	69·7
TOTAL	5,771	43·5

Ethnic origin of staff who contributed to the DTI's ethnic classification monitoring survey (as at June 1988)

	Other	Percentage
Grades 1-7	21	1·7
SEO and similar (other than* below)	152	5·6
AO and AA	559	17·0
*Technical and scientific	86	6·5
Typing and secretarial	147	15·4
*Insolvency and Patents grades	58	6·2
Office support	31	3·5
TOTAL	1,054	9·3

Note: These figures represent 85·5 per cent. of DTI staff. Staff not included are those who did not respond to the survey, declined to participate, were employed on a casual basis, or who were employed outside the Department.

Girobank

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if his Department made any assessment of consumer opinion regarding privatisation of Girobank among its customers before his statement in the House on 7 June;

(2) how many customers of Girobank wrote to him urging its privatisation before his statement in the House on 7 June.

Mr. Butcher: Privatisation should strengthen Girobank and allow it to provide more services. Customers should welcome this. None wrote to support it before the announcement. They will have seen no need to urge the Government to make a proposal consistent with their own policies.

Plugs and Sockets

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has for the harmonisation of plugs and sockets for use with domestic supplies of mains electricity.

Mr. Atkins: None.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the latest figure for the United Kingdom balance of trade.

Mr. Alan Clark: The current account for the period January to April 1988 is estimated to have been in deficit by about £3·5 billion.

Mergers

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many mergers were referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in each year from (a) 1974 to 1979 and (b) 1979 to 1988.

Mr. Maude: The number of mergers referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission for the years in question is as follows:

Year	Number
1974-1979
1974	5
1975	5
1976	4
1977	8
1978	2
1979	2
1979-1988
1979	2
1980	5
1981	7
1982	9
1983	8
1984	4
1985	6
1986	13
1987	6
1988	3

These figures do not include references of mergers involving newspapers made under section 59 of the Fair Trading Act 1973.

Barlow Clowes

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, as part of his Department's inquiry into the activities of Barlow Clowes he will also examine the activities of Brookwood Asset Management and Woodhill Developments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The inspectors have wide powers under the Companies Act 1985 and the Financial Services Act 1986 to investigate dealings between companies in the James Ferguson Group (including Barlow Clowes, Gilt Managers Ltd) and other persons. If my hon. Friend has any information pointing to the need for separate investigation of Brookwood Asset Management and Woodhill Development I would be grateful to receive it.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by what date Sir Godfray Le Quesne QC will complete his report into his Department's handling of Barlow Clowes.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the report of the investigation into his Department's handling of matters relating to the Barlow Clowes group to be completed and made available.

Mr. Maude: Sir Godfray Le Quesne has been asked by my right hon. and noble Friend to report to him as soon as possible.

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department has any evidence that Barlow Clowes and Partners in England transferred money to Barlow Clowes International in Gibraltar after October 1987.

Mr. Maude: I have appointed inspectors under section 432 of the Companies Act to look into James Ferguson Holdings plc which will enable the affairs of all that company's subsidiaries to be investigated. It will be open to the inspectors to look into the nature and extent of any transactions between those companies. It would be inappropriate for me to comment in advance of receiving the inspectors' report.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the findings of the inspectors appointed under section 432 of the Companies Act 1985 to examine the affairs of James Ferguson Holdings plc will be made public, and when he expects the inspectors to complete their investigations.

Mr. Maude: It is the practice to publish reports of inspectors appointed under section 432 Companies Act 1985 into public companies unless there are strong reasons to the contrary.

I am unable to say how long the investigations will last. The inspectors and I are anxious that their investigation should be concluded as quickly as possible.

Rover Group plc

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his recent meeting in Strasbourg with the European Commissioners for competition, concerning the proposed takeover by British Aerospace of Rover.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The meeting between my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the European Commissioner with special responsibility for competition policy in Strasbourg on 15 June was one of a series of discussions concerning the state aid aspects of the proposed sale of the Government shareholding in Rover Group to BAe. Such meetings are arranged as necessary to facilitate a full understanding of the United Kingdom case for the aid in order that the Commission can complete its examination as expeditiously as possible.

Insurance Companies Act

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will take steps to reduce the cost of compliance with his Department's regulations under the Insurance Companies Act.

Mr. Maude: I am setting up a review of the regulation of non-life insurance business, excluding Lloyd's, with a view to improving the cost effectiveness of regulation and improving the presentation of the related returns required by insurance companies legislation. Lessons from this review will be taken into account in considering the returns required for life insurance business. The review will be carried out by Mr. Geoffrey Hunt, who has been seconded to the DTI from a senior position in the insurance industry.

Post Office Counter Services

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the counter services provided by the Post Office at Crown offices will be published.

Mr. Maude: The commission noted that in the short time since it was established counters had found many ways of reducing the costs of operating its network. These included the closing of some Crown offices, regrading others as sub-offices or franchised offices, closing some urban sub-offices and introducing community offices in rural areas; in its plans counters had assumed that the Crown network would be reduced from 1,500 to 750 offices by the conversion of 750 offices to sub-offices or franchises. The commission decided that a major conversion of Crown offices into sub or franchised offices would reduce counters costs yet maintain similar services. Its report therefore commended the action taken so far by the counters business but recommended that counters should compare the costs and contributions of Crown and sub or franchised offices and consider regrading an even greater number of Crown offices.

The commission found that there had been some improvement in the quality of performance attained by Crown offices. It commended the Post Office's efforts to reduce queueing time by, for example, installing new types of stamp vending machines and selling stamps through retailers.

Two automation projects being developed by the counters business were considered. The first project is a major scheme, which will incur further costs of some £360 million over the next 15 years. This will introduce electronic equipment in some 3,000 Crown and sub-offices out of a total of 21,500. The second scheme involves the introduction of electronic cash registers (ECCO) at all Crown offices. The commission has serious doubts about the financial justification for both the automation and ECCO schemes and concluded that the automation scheme, which would affect only 15 per cent. of counters business, is not financially justifiable at present. Approval of any further roll-out of the automation scheme should not, in the commission's view, be given until the planned pilot scheme had been properly tested.

Some working practices and clerical procedures were found to be outdated and inefficient and staff in Crown offices could be more effectively employed. The commission has therefore recommended that counters should carry out a detailed organisation and methods study in respect of the work of the counters offices; it considers that savings from the productivity recommendations could amount to some £10 million per annum.

The commission also concluded that the staffing of the central and territorial headquarters of the counters business appeared to be excessive for the management of a network where day-to-day management has been decentralised to 32 district managers. Recommendations that the territorial level of management should be abolished with resulting savings of about £5 million per annum are included in the report.

In an overall assessment of the counters business, the commission found that the management, in the relatively short time that it had been responsible for it, had put in hand many changes to improve efficiency. It concluded that the Post Office was not, in relation to the counters business, pursuing a course of conduct which operated against the public interest.

The Post Office will be producing a preliminary response to the commission's findings within three to four months, in the light of which a further statement will be made.

Dragonby (Subsidence Damage)

Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of Duchy of Lancaster what measures will be taken following the proposed privatisation of the British Steel Corporation to ensure that the people of Dragonby, near Scunthorpe, and the county council as the highway authority will receive adequate compensation from any subsidence damage to either homes or roads arising from former deep-level iron-stone mines in the ownership of the British Steel Corporation in the vicinity.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 20 June 1988]: Under the terms of the British Steel Bill, currently before Parliament, all the property, rights and liabilities of the British Steel Corporation will be transferred to a public limited company nominated by the Secretary of State. Any potential liability of BSC in respect of the matters referred to will therefore become the responsibility of the successor company and will be unaffected by the privatisation process.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Parliamentary Printing

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many copies of Votes and Proceedings and Notices of Motions are printed daily; and what is the approximate average daily cost.

Mr. Brooke: On average 2,080 copies of Votes and Proceedings and 1,980 copies of Notices of Motions are printed daily. The approximate average daily production cost is £7,000 which HMSO recovers through revenue from sales.

Nationalised Industries and Public Corporations (Borrowing)

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why no statements of guarantee on borrowing by nationalised industries and public corporations have been laid by the Treasury recently.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I regret that due to failure in our clerical procedures a number of statements of guarantees given by the Treasury over the past year have not been laid in the House. Some relate to temporary borrowing and have now expired. Statements for those which are still current are being laid today, along with statements for the batch of guarantees normally issued at the start of the financial year.

VAT (Non-Domestic Construction)

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a further statement, pursuant to that by the Economic Secretary, Official Report, 21 June, column 957, about the timing of the imposition of value added tax on contracts for non-domestic construction.

Mr. Lilley: All non-domestic construction work will continue to be zero-rated until 1 April 1989. VAT at the standard rate will then be payable only in respect of work done and paid for on or after 1 April 1989. Any contract entered into prior to 21 June 1988 will continue to be zero-rated for the life of the contract. I should make it quite clear that no VAT will be payable in respect of any construction work done before 1 April 1989.

Provisions to levy VAT at the standard rate from 1 April 1989 will be subject to the House of Commons passing the necessary Budget Ways and Means resolutions, which will be laid before the House in the normal way at the time of the Budget statement. These provisions will also be subject to the enactment of the subsequent Finance Bill in the normal way.

Company Cars

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the scale charges in relation to the taxation of company cars are calculated; what are the independent studies he was referring to in his Budget speech; and what was the detailed basis of his calculation that an employee with a typical company car may be taxed on only about a quarter of its true value.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer, 21 June 1988]: The scale charges introduced in 1976 have been increased each year on a percentage basis. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer takes a number of factors into account in deciding the appropriate level of increase for any year. One of these is the value of the benefit to the employee. Various independent studies appear annually quantifying the benefit of having a company car available for private use. They use a variety of methods to estimate the benefit and some—for example, Income Data Services top pay unit report and the PA Personnel Services annual fringe benefits report—base their calculations on figures of motoring costs collected by the AA. Although the results naturally vary in detail, the broad picture emerging from such studies was consistent with the Government's own view that the 1987-88 car scales represented only about a quarter of the value of the benefit.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Departmental Staff

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the proportion of civil servants at grade 3 and above in his Department who were educated in (a) private schools and (b) state schools.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 20 June 1988]: None of the names of schools attended by civil servants grade 3 and above in my Department are recorded on personal files.

Vehicle Imports

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the limit on the number of personal car imports imposed on an individual per year.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: No limit is imposed.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) motorcars, (b) vans, and (c) other motor vehicles, imported as new vehicles from the Irish Republic, have been processed through the Vehicle Inspection Branch, Balmoral road, Belfast, in each of the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: Vehicle inspection branch processes only those cases of imported private cars where there is doubt about their compliance with type approval requirements. Type approval does not apply to vans and other motor vehicles. The number of private cars referred to vehicle inspection branch is set out in the following table.

Fair Employment Agency

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a table to show (a) the investigation reports published by the Fair Employment Agency in each of the last three years, (b) for each of those reports the percentage of Roman Catholics employed, on the basis of the information obtained by the Fair Employment Agency, (c) the percentage which the Fair Employment Agency considered to reflect that fair employment procedures were being followed, (d) the percentage of Roman Catholic employees which the employers believed to be in the work force and (e) by what means the Fair Employment Agency determined the number and percentage of Roman Catholics and what methods they used to check the accuracy of their figures.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 22 June 1988]: The table lists reports of investigations by the Fair Employment Agency over the past three years indicating the percentage of Roman Catholics identified by the agency in each work force and indicating those organisations where the agency found that equality of opportunity had been afforded. Copies of these reports are available in the Library. Apart from two employers highlighted in the table no others were aware of the religious composition of their work forces prior to the agency's investigation.

The agency assesses perceived religion from questionnaires issued to employees, from original applications for employment or from personnel records. Personal details taken into account, include name, address, school attended, subjects studied, names of referees and leisure interests.

ENERGY

Connah's Quay Power Station

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) when he proposes to announce his decision on the bids to purchase Connah's Quay power station; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will make it his policy to allow Alyn and Deeside district council to acquire Connah's Quay power station site for economic, environmental and social development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The disposal of Connah's Quay power station is a commercial matter for the CEGB.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the maximum weight of aircraft and speed of impact provided for in the design of nuclear power stations to withstand the impact of aircraft crashes.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The hazards associated with aircraft crashing on to nuclear power stations are assessed by the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. An assessment of the hazard at each site shows that the risk of an impact is sufficiently low to support the judgment that no specific features need to be incorporated into the design of the stations to take account of aircraft impacts.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy which advertisements relating to equal opportunities in his Department have been placed with which selected newspapers from the ethnic minority press; and when and with what results.

Mr. Parkinson: In the Department's current recruitment campaign, advertisements were placed in the week beginning 6 June 1988 with the Daily Jang and The Voice, as well as with the South London Press. To date, three inquiries have been received from people citing the Daily Jang as their source, and 54 from applicants citing The Voice. So far eight application forms have been returned from these inquiries.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Parkinson: Yes.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Parkinson: The good practice which underpins the employment policies that operate within my Department ensures equality of opportunity for employment, training and promotion for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has taken any positive action, pursuant to the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively, other than those measures specified in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West on 27 May, Official Report, columns 398-99.

Mr. Parkinson: Yes. Career managers encourage women, as well as employees from ethnic minority groups, to apply for promotion; for staff who are directly recruited, jobcentres in areas where ethnic minority groups are concentrated are regularly asked to advertise vacancies; applications from both sexes for leave to undertake domestic responsibilities are sympathetically considered whenever possible; and arrangements for residential training courses are made well in advance so as to enable staff with young children to make appropriate childcare arrangements.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are women and from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Parkinson: Based on staff in post on 1 June 1988, the table sets out the numbers and percentage of women employed in each grade in my Department. Information on the numbers and percentage of staff from ethnic minorities is not yet available.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has carried out monitoring exercises in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department monitors its direct recruitment to determine the success of its equal opportunities policies for women and for people from ethnic minority groups. My Department also monitors its promoting processes to determine progress towards equal opportunities for women. Because of difficulties in obtaining reliable data, monitoring the ethnic origin of staff in promotion processes is not yet undertaken.

Acid Rain

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate he has made of the likely increase in the price of electricity in consequence of the decision of the Council of Ministers on 17 June in relation to curbing acid rain emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The CEGB was already planning to fit flue gas desulphurisation (FGD) equipment to 6000MW of existing capacity, the equivalent of three large coal-fired power stations, and to fit new coal-fired power stations with this equipment. The recent decision of the Council of Ministers could require the retrofit of a further three existing coal-fired stations. Much uncertainty surrounds the costing of FGD technology which has not been used before in the United Kingdom on the scale now contemplated. The CEGB estimated the effect of its original programme of FGD retrofits as possibly requiring an increase in electricity prices of around 1·5 per cent. by the year 2000. My Department estimates, on the basis of present knowledge, that the effect of the further work needed to fulfil the Council decision should be broadly similar.

WALES

Impounded Water

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the levels of impounded water in the counties of Gwent, Mid and South Glamorgan; and if levels are sufficient to avoid restrictions on use during the next three months.

Mr. Grist: Present levels of impounded water in the three counties are typical of those to be expected at this time of year. The water resources position currently gives no cause for concern and there are no plans to introduce restrictions on use. The situation will, of course, be subject to review as the summer progresses.

Ysbyty Gwynedd, Bangor

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress being made by the Welsh Health Common Services Authority in relation to the disputes arising from design and construction faults in the buildings of Ysbytv Gwynedd, Bangor.

Mr. Grist: I am pleased to be able to report to the House that an out-of-court settlement has been reached between the Welsh Health Common Services Authority and the Hospital Design Consortium in the main dispute over the cost of rectifying design faults in the hospital building. Under the terms of the settlement, the Hospital Design Consortium has paid damages of almost £5·3 million and has waived outstanding fees due on the main hospital and residential building contracts currently estimated at £600,000. Judgment in the Welsh Health Common Services Authority's action against Haden Young Ltd. claiming £190,000 for fire damage alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant employees was given in favour of Haden Young Ltd. However a proportion of this claim was met under the main settlement with the Hospital Design Consortium.

The dispute with IDC Ltd. remains unresolved. The Welsh Health Common Services Authority has withheld £130,000 from IDC to pay for remedial work to windows and cavities. Further remedial work may be needed to repair defective wall ties in the residential buildings and to modify some staircase balustrades. Under the terms of the main settlement, the defendants now agree to assist the Welsh Health Common Services Authority in the action necessary to bring these matters to a conclusion.

Radiotherapy

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will convene and chair a conference of north Wales and north-west England health authorities to discuss the terms of reference for a comprehensive study of all cancer treatment services in north Wales including the possibility of a satellite radiotherapy centre in north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The terms of reference of a review of cancer treatment services to north Wales patients have already been the subject of consultation with appropriate health authorities in Wales and England.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take urgent steps to set up a satellite radiotherapy cancer centre in Clwyd, north Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The feasibility of a satellite radiotherapy centre in north Wales will be addressed in a review of cancer treatment services for north Wales patients.

Maternity Units

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioner maternity units have been closed in Wales since 1979.

Mr. Grist: Since January 1979, nine general practitioners maternity units have closed and two have opened in Wales.

Slurry Tank (Dyfed)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the circumstances surrounding the application for the siting of a 200,000-gallon slurry tank on Ciliau Moor Common, Dyfed.

Mr. Grist: During the course of construction of a collection chamber and slurry tank in the area of Ciliau Moor, it became apparent that the consent of the Secretary of State was required for these works because the site chosen was found to be within the boundary of Ciliau Moor Common. The necessary statutory procedures were subsequently followed and after due consideration of all the relevant factors the necessary consent was given on 5 May 1988.

Mink Farm (Dyfed)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has made a decision concerning the application for a licence for the operation of a mink farm at Curtnewydd, Danybydder, Dyfed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I expect a view to be reached on the application shortly and I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Local Development Projects

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what local development projects have been undertaken in Wales; and what are their costs.

Mr. Peter Walker: The table gives details of local development projects since the initiative began in Wales in November 1986:

Contractor	Description	Cost ('000)
1. British Coal Enterprise, Cardiff	Small Firms' Training Needs	18

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Israeli Diplomat (Expulsion)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the recent expulsion of an Israeli diplomat, giving the reasons, and the text of any letters relevant to that expulsion.

Mr. Eggar: Following the trial and conviction of Ismail Sowan the Israeli ambassador was informed on 17 June that a member of his diplomatic staff must leave the country by the end of the month. It is not the practice to publish details of confidential exchanges between Governments.

Diplomats

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for each of the last 10 years (a) those countries whose diplomats have been expelled from the United Kingdom and (b) which of those countries are in breach of UN resolutions according to the votes of Her Majesty's Government's representatives there.

Mr. Eggar: As the information is not readily available, I will write to my hon. Friend when it is to hand.

Provisional IRA (Document)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will withdraw the document, "The Provisional IRA: International Contacts Outside the United States", on account of the errors acknowledged by his Department.

Mr. Eggar: No. Any further copies will be amended to take account of the objections raised.

EEC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what moneys the European Economic Community and its institutions have spent under the European Economic Community budget for purposes which are not provided for under the treaty of Rome, in the last available annual period.

Mr. Brooke: I have been asked to reply.

I assume that the hon. Member has in mind the category of expenditure defined in article 203 of the treaty as spending which does not necessarily result from the treaty or from acts adopted in accordance with it. This is generally known as non-obligatory expenditure. Provision for such expenditure in the 1988 budget is 11·6 becu (£8 billion) in commitments and 10·1 becu (£7 billion) in payments.

SCOTLAND

Cervical Smear Tests

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will advise health authorities to notify results of cervical smear tests simultaneously to patients and general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I announced on 10 December 1987 that the Government had accepted the main recommendations of the report of the working group on cervical cytology in Scotland. The report contained detailed recommendations on notifying the results of the test to the woman concerned; to the clinician who took the smear; and, if the clinician concerned was not her general practitioner, to that general practitioner, unless the woman specifically requests otherwise. It is for health boards to decide how the results should be conveyed to patients but the detailed guidance issued to them on the provision of the cervical screening service stressed the need to institute the "fail-safe" arrangements set out in the report to ensure that action is taken to follow up positive or doubtful smears.

Dentists

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there are any plans to change the contract of employment of dentists operating in health centres within the Greater Glasgow health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what were the results of the survey of the ethnic origins of staff in the Scottish Office and associated Departments, recently completed by his Department;

(2) what new action he has decided to take, having reviewed the results of the survey of the ethnic origins of staff, which his Department recently completed.

Mr. Rifkind: In the voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of staff 99·6 per cent. of respondents classified themselves as 'white', 0·3 per cent. as 'asian' and 0·1 per cent. as 'black'. The survey achieved a response rate of 88 per cent. The results of the survey are presently being evaluated and will be borne in mind by my Department in future action on equal opportunities.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he carries out ethnic monitoring of applicants for posts, in accordance with the codes of the Equal Opportunities Commission and of the Commission for Racial Equality respectively.

Mr. Rifkind: Most of my Department's recruitment is undertaken on its behalf by the Civil Service Commission and the Board of Inland Revenue, both of which have introduced ethnic monitoring as part of their recruitment procedure. For recruitment carried out by the Department itself, ethnic monitoring will be introduced in the autumn.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has carried out a survey of women in his Department in accordance with the code of the Equal Opportunities Commission.

Mr. Rifkind: No. My Department already maintains statistics which enable it to conduct the kind of monitoring recommended by the Equal Opportunities Commission's code of practice.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: An equal opportunities officer was appointed in 1984. All staff were informed of the appointment by means of an office notice and each new entrant is given updated information.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Rifkind: Figures for each of the very large number of grades in the Department could be given only at disproportionate cost. However, the figures for the numbers and percentage of women in each of the main grades are as set out. Figures for the number and percentage of people from ethnic minorities cannot be given without risking the identification of individual members of staff since the numbers in individual grades are very small.

Number of women	Women	Percentage
Unified Grade 1	—	0·00
Unified Grade 2	—	0·00
Unified Grade 3	1	4·17
Unified Grade 4	—	0·00
Unified Grade 5	8	6·96
Unified Grade 6	20	11·30
Unified Grade 7	37	10·91
Senior Executive Officer	26	13·76
Higher Executive Officer	171	27·49
Executive Officer	433	54·74
Administrative Officer	750	67·45
Administrative Assistant	600	66·30
Professional, Scientific and Technical Grades	293	18·59
Industrial Grades	35	5·45
Other Grades	831	70·36
All Grades	3,205	41·46

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to ensure that there is equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department has circulated to all staff the Civil Service policy statements on race relations and equal opportunities for men and women to ensure that all staff are aware that discrimination will not be tolerated. All new entrants also receive copies. An equal opportunities officer has been appointed. A joint management and trade union side committee has been set up on the implementation of the recommendations of the Civil Service programme of action on women; substantial progress is being made on implementation and as appropriate action under the programme has also been applied to ethnic minorities. An ethnic survey of existing staff has been carried out and ethnic monitoring will be extended to cover all recruitment in the autumn.

My Department keeps under review the need for further action on all issues affecting equality of opportunity.

Road, Bridge and Tunnel Facilities

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a list of road, bridge and tunnel facilities in Scotland for which tolls are levied, with a note for each entry of (a) the name and address of the responsible authority (b) whether it produces published accounts for that specific facility (c) which Minister, is responsible for authorising changes in such tolls, and (d) on which (i) public expenditure programme and (ii) class, vote and subhead, the toll revenue and associated expenditure is to be found.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Tolls in Scotland are levied on the Erskine, Forth and Tay road bridges. The required information relating to the specific facilities is as follows:

Erskine Bridge

(a) The Secretary of State for Scotland.
(b) A White Paper Account is published annually.
(c) The Secretary of State for Scotland.
(d) (i) Roads, Transport and Environmental Services, Scotland.
(ii) Class XVI, Vote 6, Subheads A1(2) and A2(5).

Forth and Tay Road Bridges

(a) (i) The Forth Road Bridge Joint Board
Regional Headquarters
George IV Bridge
Edinburgh EH1 1UQ
(ii) The Tay Road Bridge Joint Board
Tayside House
28 Crichton Street
Dundee DD1 3RJ
(b) Accounts are published annually by the respective joint boards
(c) The Secretary of State for Scotland is responsible for the authorisation of changes in tolls either:
(i) on his own initiative after consulting the joint board and taking into account any representations it makes; or
(ii) if the joint board, or any of the constituent councils, or a representative body of traders, vehicle users, and so on, request a revision of tolls.
(d) Revenue and expenditure is the responsibility of the joint boards and does not appear in a public expenditure programme.

Fish Farms

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy towards the role that the Crown Estate Commission should play in the allocation of seabed leases for fish farms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for the Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) on 17 June, at column 336.

Alcoholism (Treatment)

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals exist for further designated places for those with drink problems similar to Albyn house in Aberdeen.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A grant offer under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 was recently accepted by the Church of Scotland for a designated place to be built at Inverness. The provision of designated places is a matter for voluntary organisations, which may apply for grant under the 1968 Act, or local authorities.

Community Programme Projects

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to establish a fund to allow the continuation of community programme projects in the community care field where these projects find difficulty in meeting the requirements of the new adult training projects.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on Wednesday 22 June.

School Facilities (Hire)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received seeking an amendment to the School Boards (Scotland) Bill to ensure that school facilities continue to be available for hire by youth organisations after responsibility for school letting has passed to boards of governors; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have received representations from the Scottish standing conference of youth organisations, and have explained to the conference that clause 14 of the Bill gives control of out-of-hours use of their schools to boards, subject to any direction given to them by their education authority.

Prison Service (Staff Training)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has received from Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons for Scotland his report on staff training in the Scottish prison service.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons for Scotland's report on staff training in the Scottish prison service. I have today placed copies of the report, including my response, in the Library, and I am sending a copy to the chairman of the Scottish all-party penal affairs group and to other interested bodies. Copies may also be purchased from my Department.

EMPLOYMENT

Community Programme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment of the entrants to the community programme in the 12 months to February and the entrants in the 12 months to April, what proportions were (i) to full-time places, (ii) men, (iii) single, (iv) aged over 25 years, (v) unemployed for over 12 months and (vi) formerly benefit claimants.

Mr. Cope: The figures requested are shown in the table:

Community Programme Entrants

	12 Months to February 1988	12 Months to April 1988

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish the most recently available tables to show the total number of community programme projects and places by type of project and type of sponsor.

Mr. Cope: The following table gives the figures for authorised places at 29 May 1988.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people under the age of 25 years are currently on community programme schemes; and what is the estimated number who will be on such schemes when the community programme ends in September.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the form requested.

The total number of entrants of the community programme in the 12 months to 31 May 1988 was 264,135, of whom about 50 per cent. were under 25. It is unlikely that the proportion in the under-25 age group will change significantly over the next two months. The total number of filled places at 31 May 1988 was 219,262.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each employment service region, how many restart interviews were conducted between July 1985 and May 1986 inclusive, and during April and May 1988.

Mr. Cope: The national programme of restart interviews started in July 1986, following pilots in nine offices from January to June 1986.

The number of restart interviews conducted in the pilot offices between January and May 1986, together with the numbers of interviews conducted in each employment service region during April and May 1988, are shown in the tables.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each jobcentre conducting restart interviews, how many restart interviews were conducted during May; and how many claimants were referred to the unemployment benefit service due to availability doubts during May.

Mr. Cope: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each jobcentre in the 11 areas chosen to pilot the availability test questionnaire RR6 form, how many restart interviews were conducted during March, April and May; and how many claimants were referred to the unemployment benefit service due to availability doubts during March, April and May.

Mr. Cope: The information requested for the 11 offices involved in launching the restart interview form (RR6) is shown in the table.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provision is to be made to include suitable courses of study to the restart menu; and what guidance will be given to restart counsellors to interpret the meaning of suitable when judging a course to be a positive outcome from a restart interview.

Mr. Cope: The restart programme is the gateway to a range of opportunities to help the individual into work. These include courses of study made available by local education authorities and others. The decision to take up a course of study is made by the individual after discussion with the restart interviewer. A course of study likely to benefit an individual's job prospects would be regarded as a positive outcome from the interview.

Job Training Scheme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what designation orders have been issued for new JTS; on what dates and in respect of what legislation.

Mr. Cope: Designation orders under section 13 of the Race Relations Act 1976 and section 14 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 were signed on 9 November 1987.

Unemployment Benefit Service

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment for each employment service region, how many claimants have been referred to the unemployment benefit service due to availability doubts during May 1988.

Mr. Cope: This information is not available in the form requested. Questions concerning a person's availability for work may arise following any interview with an employment service official and records of all such instances are not kept.

However, the table gives figures by employment service region for the number of cases which were referred in May to the independent adjudicating authorities from unemployment benefit offices for a decision on a claimant's availability.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much will be allocated from the European social fund towards the costs of the employment training scheme for unemployed adults due to start in September.

Mr. Cope: My Department has not yet received formal notification of the European Commission's decision on United Kingdom social fund applications for 1988. We understand, however, that the Commission intends to allocate around £9¾ million towards the cost of this programme for unemployed people aged over 25 years and £14½ million for those under 25.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what would be the effect on the benefit entitlement to participants on employment training of paying £5 per week top-up and a further £5 for work done outside the programme.

Mr. Cope: Participants in employment training who are on income support when training starts will continue to receive an element of that benefit while they train. Additional income received will be treated in the normal way. Any voluntary top-up to the premium made at regular intervals will attract a £5 per week disregard. In addition, the appropriate weekly disregard (usually £5, but £15 in some circumstances) will be applied to any earnings received from work outside the programme.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of places on training programmes, by skill and the shortfall in trained workers, by skill.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not fully available in the form requested. However, the tables provide the breakdown by occupation/skill of places on the two main training programmes run by the Training Commission. There is no comprehensive information on the shortfall of trained workers by skill. However in the main employers who report skill shortages usually face difficulties in recruiting people with the desired mix of skills and experience.

The main skill shortages reported by the latest CBI/MSC special survey of skill shortages in November 1987 were:

professional engineers (especially) electrical, electronic and production engineers); experienced managers;
computer specialists; and certain engineering craft occupations such as machinists, welders and mechanics.

Other sources of information report skill shortages in: construction—particularly builders, carpenters, plasterers teachers and nurses.

Latest results (April 1988) from the CBI's quarterly industrial trends survey indicate that 19% of respondents in manufacturing industry expected skill shortages to limit output over the coming four months. These levels of shortages in the quarterly survey remain less serious than in the 1960s and 1970s.

Mines and Quarries

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions have been initiated by mines and quarries inspectors for Devon and Cornwall for each year since 1970.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the number of prosecutions taken by the mines and quarries inspectorate in Devon and Cornwall for the period 1970-75 is not available. Since 1976 there have been none.

Hantergantic Quarry, St. Bernard

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the Health and Safety Executive has yet reached a decision on prosecution of the owners of Hantergantic quarry, St. Bernard arising from the accident occurring on 25 August 1987; and what is the average period of time taken by the executive to reach such decisions.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Health and Safety Executive has taken action to seek counsel's opinion on this case. I will write and advise the hon. Member when a decision has been reached. The time taken to reach a decision varies and depends on the facts and features of each individual case.

Penlee Quarry, Newlyn

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the investigation into the accident to Penlee quarry, Newlyn, Penzance on 28 January 1987, by the mines and quarries inspectorate.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The disclosure of information is governed by the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. Within these constraints there are established procedures for the supply of factual information by the executive to interested parties.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) on what date a guard was installed on the troughed conveyors at Penlee quarry, Newlyn, following the accident on 28 January 1987; and if he will make a statement;

(2) on what occasions advice was given by inspectors to the occupier of Penlee quarry, Newlyn, concerning the standard of guarding for their troughed belt conveyors installed at the quarry.

Mr. Nicholls: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Wages (Underpayments)

Ms. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total of underpayment of wages in 1987 detected by the inspectorate in the 4,443 establishments which were not prosecuted that year.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1987 arrears of pay assessed as due to workers employed by 4,443 establishments found to be underpaying totalled £1,252,034.

Earlier replies to the hon. Member on 13 May at column 286, and 27 May at column 396 may not have made it clear that (a) the number of establishments prosecuted is included in statistics of establishments found to be underpaying and (b) the two sets of figures cannot be directly related. Prosecutions brought in 1987, for example, do not necessarily relate to establishments found to be underpaying in that year.

Scotch Derrick Cranes

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Bradford, South, 26 May, Official Report, column 315, what efforts are being made by the Health and Safety Executive to compile a comprehensive list of all scotch derrick cranes currently in use in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: None. I do not consider that this would be justified.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been (a) the total number of persons in employment each quarter since January 1979 and (b) total labour force for each quarter since the same dates; what was (a) as a percentage of (b) for each quarter; and what was the difference between (a) as a percentage of (b) and (b) from each of these quarters.

Mr. Lee: The available information is as follows:

YTS

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of YTS trainees who go on to obtain jobs in the same industry within three months of the end of their training.

Mr. Cope: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The list shows the percentages of trainees who leave YTS and obtain jobs in the same occupational area as that in which they trained. This information is taken from the 100 per cent. follow-up survey of YTS leavers in the period April 1986 to December 1987.

Occupational Focus of Training	per cent.[1]
Administrative and Clerical Occupations	78·2
Creative and Educational and Recreational Service Occupations	25·4
Health, Community and Personal Service Occupations	60·5
Selling and Storage Occupations	52·3

Motor Vehicle Repair and Maintenance Occupations	66·8
Non-Metal Processing Occupations	4·6
Printing Occupations	16·9
Clothing and Textiles Manufacturing Occupations	29·8

[1] Who gained work in the same occupational area.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of those declining a YTS place had a benefit reduction on grounds of voluntary unemployment for each month between June 1987 and May 1988; and how many of those leaving YTS early had a benefit reduction on grounds of voluntary unemployment for each month between June 1987 and May 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

The numbers of people who had their supplementary benefit reduced for refusing a youth training scheme place, or for leaving a youth training scheme course early, in each four-week period between 6 May 1987 and 8 April 1988 are as follows:

For 4 weeks ending	Refusal of place	Early leavers
1987
2 June	6	85
30 June	9	67
28 July	4	65
25 August	3	80
22 September	2	64
20 October	1	85
17 November	8	94

1988
12 January	6	42
9 February	5	68
8 March	3	59
8 April (see note 3)	—	55

Notes:

1. The figures are provisional and subject to amendment.
2. No figures are available for periods after 8 April 1988.
3. The period to 8 April covers just over four weeks to run to the end of the end of the supplementary benefit scheme.

Opencast Coal Mining

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether, in the light of recent medical evidence about the effects of opencast coal mining operations on the health of local populations, he will exercise his powers under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, sections 1(1)(d) and 5(1) to place a duty on any person having control of an opencast coal mining operation to use the best practicable means to prevent emission into the atmosphere from the premises of noxious or offensive fumes and for rendering harmless and inoffensive such substances as may be so emitted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

Opencast coal mining, in common with other mining and quarrying activities, is not a process prescribed under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 for the application of sections 1(1)(d) and 5(1) of the Act. There is already a strong framework of control over such operations under other parts of the 1974 Act and in the Mines and Quarries Act 1954. Responsibility for enforcement rests with Her Majesty's mines and quarries inspectorate, which already carries out tests at selected opencast sites for the presence of any respirable silica in airborne respirable dust.

I am aware of newspaper articles suggesting that opencast coal mining operations may have a significant effect on the health of the local population. I understand that the HSE considers that this matter could be tested only by a long-term study.

Nevertheless, the effects of dust and other impacts associated with opencasting are all matters to be considered by mineral planning authorities as part of the normal planning process in considering applications to work coal or other minerals by opencast methods.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Abuse

2. Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further measures his Department is taking to combat the abuse of drugs; and if he will make a statement.

67. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further measures his Department is taking to combat the sale of illegal drugs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Our effort against drug misuse must continue at full strength. The Government's strategy is set out in detail in "Tackling Drug Misuse", a new edition of which is being issued today. A copy has been sent to all right hon. and hon. Members. It recognises that there is no single answer to the problem, and that sustained action needs to be taken both to reduce the supply of, and demand for, drugs. The new powers, contained in the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 for the police and courts to trace, freeze and confiscate the proceeds of drug trafficking have already proved their worth.

Devon and Cornwall Constabulary

12. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the most recent request for increased police numbers from the Devon and Cornwall constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police authority applied in September 1986 for 137 posts to be recruited over three years. Seventeen posts were approved with effect from 1 January 1987, 20 with effect from 1 April 1987, and eight with effect from 1 January 1988. My right hon. Friend announced on 18 May a further 25 posts with effect from 1 June. The police authority has been informed that consideration will be given to the remaining posts when my right hon. Friend takes decisions on the next tranche of posts available under the programme announced in May 1986.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

31. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of the City of London police on the identity of the witnesses interviewed during recent inquiries into contacts between two of the principal Crown witnesses during the appeal of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

71. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of the City of London police on the identity of the witnesses interviewed during the course of inquiries into contacts between Dr. Frank Skuse and former Superintendent Reade during the appeal hearing of the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

79. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of the City of London police as to the number and identity of witnesses interviewed in the course of inquiries into alleged contacts between the two principal Crown witnesses during the appeal of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: No. These inquiries into alleged criminal offences were made at the request of the Director of Public Prosecutions, to whom the Commissioner has already submitted a report.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General answered questions on these police investigations on 20 June at columns 823-27.

15. Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now appoint an independent review tribunal to examine the case against the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

31. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now appoint an independent inquiry into the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

64. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now appoint an independent review body to examine the case against the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: No. The conviction has been carefully reviewed by the Court of Appeal, and we see no grounds for setting up any other form of inquiry.

54. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from the Irish Government regarding the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and what was his response.

55. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received from the Irish Government regarding the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and what was his response.

84. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed with the Irish ambassador or representatives of the Irish Government the case of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I refer to the reply my right hon. Friend gave earlier to the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Wall).

Retail Premises (Theft)

14. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his Department is making in preventing theft from retail premises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The number of offences of theft from shops recorded by the police fell by just over 3 per cent. in 1987; but there is much scope for a further reduction in the incidence of these offences. Our handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime," published in March this year, points the way. This will aid the planning of effective counter measures against retail crime.

I am also encouraged by the interest shown by major retail organisations including the Association for the Prevention of Theft in Shops in our safer cities programme and the work of the new crime prevention organisation, Crime Concern.

Dr. Frank Skuse

16. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when officials of his Department last had contact with Dr. Frank Skuse; and for what purpose.

22. Miss Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when officials of his Department last had contact with Dr. Frank Skuse; and for what purpose.

43. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when officials of his Department last had contact with Dr. Frank Skuse; and for what purpose.

75. Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when officials of his Department last had contact with Dr. Frank Skuse; and for what purpose.

Mr. John Patten: On 16 June 1988, when an official in the establishment department wrote to Dr. Skuse in reply to a request he had made for extracts from the Official Report.

Terrorism and Drug Trafficking

17. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the Government's policies to prevent terrorism and drug-trafficking will be affected by the creation of a single European market in 1992.

33. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to ensure that the policies of Her Majesty's Government on combating terrorism and drug trafficking will not be weakened by the creation of a single European market in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

69. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on how the creation of a single European market in 1992 will affect his Department's efforts to combat terrorism and drug-trafficking.

Mr. Hurd: In accepting the provisions of the Single European Act, the United Kingdom and other member states expressly reserved their right to take such measures as they considered necessary to combat terrorism, crime and the traffic in drugs. At a meeting of the Trevi group in Munich earlier this month, my colleagues agreed with my suggestion that officials in the Trevi framework should consider the implications of changes in frontier controls and the kind of measures which could be taken to offset disadvantages to our security which might otherwise result from the implementation of the European internal market.

Metropolitan Police

18. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current establishment figures for the Metropolitan police, giving the number of places vacant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Following the further increase of 300 which I approved in April the current establishment of the Metropolitan police is 28,115. After the latest intake of recruits on 6 June, the force was 178 below establishment. The Metropolitan police hope to reach full establishment by November 1988.

West Midlands Police Force

19. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking further increases in the establishment of the West Midlands police force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has received representations from the police authority, which applied for 350 additional posts, and from hon. Members whose constituencies lie within the force area. On 18 May, at columns 466-67, in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames), my right hon. Friend announced an increase of 70 posts for West Midlands police with effect from 1 June. The police authority has been informed that the posts outstanding from its application will be considered when my right hon. Friend takes decisions on the next tranche of posts to be approved under the programme which my right hon. Friend announced in May 1986.

Satellite Television

20. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what current discussions he is holding with interested parties concerning the future development of United Kingdom satellite television.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 10 June that exploratory discussions were being held with the BBC, the IBA and British Satellite Broadcasting Limited to examine the technical, commercial and financial feasibility of transferring BBC 2 and Channel 4 to DBS. These discussions are at a very early stage, and we have not reached any decisions about this approach. Before reaching any decisions we will take full account of the interests of all those concerned, above all viewers.

Police Forces (Civilianisation)

21. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in civilianisation by police forces in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in civilianisation by police forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested concerning police forces in England was given in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 26 May at column 278. As regards forces in Wales, the equivalent information is as follows:

	Per cent.
Dyfed-Powys Police	17·3
Gwent Constabulary	18·9
North Wales Police	22·9
South Wales Constabulary	28·9

National Lottery

23. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 to allow a national lottery to raise funds for good causes.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering the position in the light of recent developments.

Crimes (Write-off Scheme)

24. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crimes were cleared up under the write-off scheme following admissions by prisoners after interviews by police officers; and what percentage of total crimes was cleared up during 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Centrally held information about the way in which offences are cleared up is incomplete but it is estimated that, of the 1·2 million notifiable offences which were recorded by the police in England and Wales in 1987 as cleared up, about 200,000 were cleared up following prison visits. The overall clear-up rate for recorded offences during 1987 was 33 per cent.

Self-loading Rifles

25. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of self-loading rifles with an integral five-round magazine, that will have to be surrendered under the terms of the Firearms (Amendment) Bill; and what total compensation will be payable to the owners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Insufficient information exists to enable a reliable estimate to be made. However, there are very few models of this kind on the market and, traditionally, they have been uncommon.

Cleveland Constabulary

26. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cleveland on the state of morale in the Cleveland constabulary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no evidence to suggest that my right hon. Friend should call for such a report. If my hon. Friend has any relevant information, perhaps he would write to me.

Isle of Man and Channel Islands

27. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received recently from the Governments of the Isle of Man and the Channel Islands seeking changes in their constitutional relationship with the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None.

Masonic Lodges (Police Membership)

28. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to ask the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to reissue the section of the Metropolitan police principles of policing and guidance for professional behaviour relating to police membership of masonic lodges.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. All Metropolitan police officers are given a copy of the principles of policing and guidance for professional behaviour, which includes the guidance on membership of masonic lodges and many other aspects of behaviour.

Immigration

29. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect the imposition of visas on visitors to the United Kingdom from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Ghana and Nigeria has had upon the operations of immigration service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier to questions from my hon. Friends the Members for Fylde (Mr. Jack) and Ipswich (Mr. Irvine).

North of England (Crime)

30. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to help fight crime in the north of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Our strategy for crime prevention applies to all parts of England and Wales. Police manpower and resources have been substantially increased and the largest ever national crime prevention publicity campaign has been launched. Two places chosen for our successful five towns local crime prevention initiative were in the north of England, at Bolton and north Tyneside. Using the valuable experience gained from this initiative, we have launched our safer cities programme. Our intention is to establish that programme in 20 high crime areas over a three-year period. One of the first two safer city areas will be Bradford. Local authorities and local agencies in other northern cities will also be invited to take part in this programme. With Home Office encouragement, inner city task forces and city action teams in the north of England are supporting and encouraging crime prevention work in their areas. Under the auspices of the joint Home Office/community programme crime prevention initiative, a number of schemes in the north of England are involved in a range of crime prevention activity including, for example, lock fitting, security patrols and support for victim support schemes.

Prisoners (Sanitation)

32. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for ensuring access to basic sanitation for all prisoners.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: By 1995, 75 per cent. of all prison places will have access to sanitation, compared with 43 per cent. in 1979. Trial schemes which might accelerate the introduction of integral sanitation are being tested in 13 different establishments.

Broadcasting Standards Council

34. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking an extension of the Broadcasting Standards Council's terms of reference to cover television current affairs and news programmes.

Mr. Renton: Various representations have been received about the sort of programmes on which the Broadcasting Standards Council should concentrate. The main purpose of the council is to act as a focus for public concern about violence and sex on television.

Strip Searches (Gatwick Airport)

35. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men and how many women have been strip-searched by immigration officials at Gatwick airport in the last year; and what guidelines are issued by his Department on strip searches.

Mr. Renton: Paragraph 4(3) of schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971 provides that an immigration officer may search the baggage and person of passengers seeking entry to ascertain whether they are carrying relevant documents, but no woman or girl may be searched except by a woman. Immigration officers normally seek the co-operation of Her Maj... Customs in any search of a passenger's baggage or person which may be considered necessary. In practice, immigration officers do not carry out strip searches and no guidelines on this have therefore been issued.

Aldermaston Forensic Science Laboratories

36. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last visited the forensic science laboratories at Aldermaston.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend visited the Home Office forensic science laboratory at Aldermaston and the Home Office forensic science service central research establishment, which is in the same building, on 31 May 1988. He was much impressed by the work in hand.

BBC Local Radio Stations

37. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used in assessing need in the licensing of British Broadcasting Corporation local radio stations.

Mr. Renton: The BBC has been authorised for several years to extend its local radio services in accordance with the proposals set out in reports by the Home Office working party on local radio, copies of which are in the Library, with the general aim of enabling the BBC to provide such services to as many listeners as practicable within its overall resources and subject to the availability of frequencies for sound broadcasting. It has since been for the BBC itself to decide whether to operate local radio services in the areas concerned.

Passports

38. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current waiting time for the issue of passports from the Glasgow office; what was the figure one year ago; and if he has any proposals for improvement.

Mr. Renton: The current time for straightforward non-urgent applications at the Glasgow passport office is 39 working days, six days fewer than at this time last year. Urgent applications are given priority. As I announced on 31 March, at column 679, in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), a number of special measures to reduce delays at United Kingdom passport offices in advance of computerisation of the passport-issuing system, which is due to begin at Glasgow from this July. In the meantime, arrangements are in hand to transfer blocks of postal applications from Glasgow to Liverpool, where delays are shorter.

40. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the proposed introduction of machine-readable passports will affect passport applicants; and if he will make a statement.

44. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on how the proposed introduction of machine-readable passports will affect applicants for passports.

57. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the proposed machine-readable passports will affect applicants for passports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The computerised production of United Kingdom passports in machine-readable form should lead to a faster service in the issuing of passports and reduce delays at overseas frontier controls. Family passports, which include the particulars of a wife or husband, cannot be issued in machine-readable form and are being discontinued, although it will remain possible to include children.

46. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of employees at the passport office and the number of passports issued in 1979, 1981, 1983, 1985 and 1987.

Mr. Renton: The information, covering the six United Kingdom passport offices, is as follows:

Year	Number of passports issued	Highest number of staff in post in any month[1]
		Permanent staff	Casual staff
1979	1,754,506	901	182
1981	1,748,118	996	119
1983	1,960,687	949	167
1985	1,794,111	938	111
1987	2,141,330	961	232

[1] Includes headquarters staff.

61. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average time currently taken by the passport office in Petty France to process a passport renewal.

Mr. Renton: The current times for straightforward non-urgent postal applications at London and other passport offices are shown in the table. Urgent applications are given priority.

Passport office	[1] Delay
London	61
Glasgow	39
Peterborough	35
Newport	22
Liverpool	14
Belfast[2]	3

[1] Working days
[2] The Belfast Office is by far the smallest

Applicants making inquiries to a passport office about the progress of their application should always quote the date on which it was submitted, their full name and date of birth as this is necessary to locate the relevant papers.

Violent Crime (Sentences)

39. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received calling for longer minimum prison sentences in respect of violent offences.

Mr. John Patten: We receive many letters about sentencing policy and some call for the introduction of minimum sentences. At present, only murder has a mandatory sentence. We believe that minimum sentences for other offences would hinder the courts' ability to take account of the widely different circumstances of each case.

45. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department has taken to ensure that adequate penalties are available to the courts for them to deal with offenders convicted of violent crimes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We consider the existing maximum penalties are generally satisfactory but we keep them under constant review. When necessary, they are increased; the Criminal Justice Bill increases the maximum penalties for child cruelty and certain firearms offences. The Bill also includes a provision which will allow allegedly overlenient sentences to be referred to the Court of Appeal.

Car Crime

42. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to combat car crime; and if he will make a statement.

68. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures his Department is taking to combat car crime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Last November, the Home Office standing conference on crime prevention set up a working group to consider the prevention of car crime. Rover Group, which is represented on the working group, has offered to produce a thief-proof concept car, incorporating a range of the latest technology in car security, for display at this year's standing conference in December.

Three parts of a British standard on vehicle security (mechanical locking systems, security of in-car entertainment equipment and window etching) have been published and further parts are due to be published shortly. We are seeking to have the British standard adopted as a European Community directive.

Our new crime prevention publicity campaign, launched in March, includes information on car crime and the scope for preventing it.

In 1987 the number of offences of theft of or taking of a motor vehicle recorded by the police in England and Wales fell by 5·2 per cent. compared to 1986. Although conclusions should not be drawn from one year's statistics, it is encouraging that this reduction coincided with measures taken by the Home Office and by police forces throughout the country with the specific aim of reducing car crime.

Bookmakers

47. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been made against bookmakers soliciting bets by inducement in the last 10 years; and how many were successful.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available from the records of court proceedings held centrally.

Metropolitan Police (Drug Squad)

48. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers in the Metropolitan police are currently employed upon drugs squad duties; and what was the corresponding figure for 1 June 1986 and 1 June 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner that the numbers are as follows:

	Number
13 June 1988	186
1 June 1987	160
1 June 1986	107

Prisoners (Work Schedules)

49. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to enable more of the prison population to be available for open-air work and to reduce the length of time younger convicts are confined to their cells.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: About 7,500 inmate in work places are provided on prison service farms and gardens and on building maintenance, most of which involve work in the open air for a whole or part of the time, and there are a number of additional places in locally organised open air activities. Governors already make every effort to keep outside work parties up to strength, and to enable inmates to spend the maximum time out of their cells, a key objective for all prison service establishments, but operational and security considerations may constrain the extent to which these two objectives can be achieved. Full account will be taken of both objectives in planning regimes for young offenders under the unified custodial sentence proposed in the Criminal Justice Bill currently before Parliament. In addition, new performance monitoring arrangements being implemented in all establishments will help us to manage regimes effectively.

Punishment in the Community

50. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy with regard to punishment in the community.

Mr. John Patten: We are introducing national standards for community service orders which will ensure that the orders are rigorous and demanding. The standards will deal with the type of work to be done by offenders, the way hours worked are reckoned, standards of performance and behaviour and the action to be taken if an offender fails to comply with the requirements of the order. We propose that some of the requirements should be embodied in statutory rules made under the Powers of Criminal Courts Act 1973.

We are also exploring with the probation service the scope for more intensive supervision of some offenders subject to probation orders. As part of this we are encouraging an expansion in the number of day centres run by the probation service. Offenders can be required to attend day centres under the terms of a probation order, and to undergo a programme of activities and education with the primary aim of making them face the consequences of their offending behaviour, both for themselves and for their victims. We have made available new money to approve four new projects in 1988-89 and we have asked the probation service to put forward proposals for other new projects in later years.

At the same time we have been putting the case for developing new disposals which would exercise more control over offenders in the community as well as punishing them for the harm they have done. This would build on the existing work of the probation service and extend it where necessary. We hope to publish proposals on this before long.

Badgers

51. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to prohibit those who have been convicted of badger baiting or the illegal destruction of badger sets from being allowed to own dogs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Badger baiting is an offence under the Protection of Animals Act 1911. A court may disqualify someone from having custody of any animal on a second or subsequent conviction for any offence of cruelty under the 1911 Act. The Protection of Animals (Amendment) Bill, which the Government are supporting, seeks to make such disqualification available on first conviction.

The Criminal Justice Bill currently before Parliament will also empower the court on conviction of any offence to order the forfeiture of any property (which could include an animal) used in the commission of the offence.

Vandalism

52. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking an increase in the penalties available to the courts for offences relating to (a) litter, (b) graffiti and (c) vandalism; and what response he has made.

Mr. John Patten: We have received representations from some hon. Members and members of the public. However, we believe the existing maximum penalties to be adequate. These are 10 years' imprisonment or an unlimited fine, or both, for offences of criminal damage, which include graffiti writing and vandalism, and a fine of £400 for dropping litter.

Commercial Radio Stations

53. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the legal requirement for local news on commercial radio stations; and when he expects to publish the White Paper on the future of broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: We have received a number of such representations, mainly from the National Union of Journalists or on behalf of the NUJ chapels of independent local radio stations. We expect to publish a White Paper on broadcasting within the next few months.

Police Manpower

56. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further plans he has to increase police manpower.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The programme announced in May 1986 allows for 500 posts for provincial forces and 300 for the Metropolitan police in 1989-90. We shall continue to keep the size of planned increases in police establishments under close review.

Sexual Offences Act 1985

58. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the working of the Sexual Offences Act 1985.

Mr. John Patten: We are continuing to keep the working of the Act under review.

Independent Television Programme Producers

59. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to promote the greater use of independent programme producers by the British Broadcasting Corporation and the independent television companies; and if he will make a statement.

63. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to promote the greater use of independent programme producers by the British Broadcasting Corporation and independent television companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight).

Police Complaints Authority

60. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking expanded powers and terms of reference for the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 13 June, at column 2, I answered a question from the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field), who wanted the authority to be given power to carry out investigations of serious allegations against police officers.

Court Clerks

62. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the difficulties being experienced in the magistrates' courts service as a result of the inability to recruit court clerks; what steps he is taking to remedy the situation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I am aware that concern has been expressed by justices' clerks and others about difficulties in recruiting and retaining court clerks, especially those qualified as barristers or solicitors. I understand that in some areas court sittings have been cancelled and delays have increased. I understand that the joint negotiating committee (JNC) which negotiates pay and conditions of service for magistrates' courts staff is collecting information on recruitment and retention, and that the JNC will take such information into account when considering the pay settlement for 1988. We shall consider very carefully whatever proposals the JNC puts forward.

Broadcasting White Paper

65. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to publish the White Paper on the future of broadcasting.

Mr. Renton: Within the next few months.

South Yorkshire (Crime)

66. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on trends in crime in South Yorkshire.

Mr. John Patten: Figures announced by the South Yorkshire police on 13 May show that in the 12 months to the end of March 1988, crime in South Yorkshire fell by 1 per cent. This is welcome news.

Broadcasting Regulations and Standards

70. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to discuss brodcasting regulation and standards with his counterparts in other European countries.

Mr. Renton: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, East (Mr. Dykes) on 19 May at columns 544-45.

Prison Building Programme

72. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the prison building programme.

81. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in providing further places in Her Majesty's prisons; and if he will make a statement on future prison building.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The building programme should provide 22,000 new places by 1995—14,000 in 26 new prisons and 8,000 at existing establishments. Over 6,000 of these places, including six new prisons, have already been built since 1985; and a further two new prisons will open this year. Wherever possible we are accelerating the programme to bring new places on stream at the earliest possible date.

Safer Cities Programme

73. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the budget of the Government's programme "Practical Ways to Crack Crime" includes sums allocated to the safer cities programme.

Mr. John Patten: "Practical Ways to Crack Crime" is the title of a crime prevention handbook made available as part of a national crime prevention publicity campaign launched in March this year. The budget for that campaign does not include provision for the safer cities programme.

Leicestershire Constabulary

74. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next intends to review the established numbers of the Leicestershire constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police authority has been informed that its application for an increase in the establishment of the Leicestershire constabulary will be considered again when my right hon. Friend takes decisions on the next tranche of posts to be approved as part of the programme announced in May 1986.

Prison Cells (Photographs)

76. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy on the display of pin-up photographs in prison cells and dormitories.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The display of such material is a matter for local control by the governor.

Industrial Estates (Crime Prevention)

77. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to improve security and crime prevention on industrial estates.

Mr. John Patten: We are looking for an extension and an intensification of the considerable efforts that are now being made locally to deal with local problems. We have been pleased to see an increase in the number of industry watch schemes being established around the country, including a particularly successful one at the North Lynn industrial estate in my hon. Friend's constituency. One of the aims of crime concern, the new national crime prevention organisation which was launched on 23 May, will be to stimulate and support local initiatives of this kind.

Crimes of Violence

78. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new measures are being taken by his Department to deter and punish crimes of violence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are proposing new controls on the possession of firearms and knives. Initiatives are being taken, which follow up studies of violent crime undertaken by the Home Office research and crime prevention units and the standing conference on crime prevention; these include studies of commercial robbery and violence associated with licensed premises. The new national crime prevention publicity campaign deals with the problem of violent crime and advice on prevention is included in the new booklet "Practical Ways to Crack Crime". The safer cities initiatives will provide opportunities to target violent crime locally. Further policy planning is being developed by the ministerial group on crime prevention. We are providing the courts with powers to deal with offenders who commit serious or violent crimes. The maximum penalty for child cruelty is being increased from two to 10 years and for going equipped with a firearm from 14 years to life imprisonment. Within maximum penalties, the sentence given for any particular offence is a matter for the courts but, following guidance from the Court of Appeal, average sentences imposed by the Crown court have increased over the last five years by 30 per cent. for rape and 20 per cent. for offences including serious violence. We are operating a restrictive policy on release on licence and parole for all long-term prisoners.

Graffiti

80. Mr. Faveli: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further penal measures he contemplates to combat the incidence of graffiti.

Mr. John Patten: We see no need to increase the maximum penalty for criminal damage, which is six months' imprisonment or a £2,000 fine or both on summary conviction, and two years' imprisonment or an unlimited fine or both on indictment. Those sentenced to community service may be required to do work making good damage to the environment. The proposed national standards for community service orders will encourage the probation service to involve offenders who have committed acts of graffiti vandalism in the removal of graffiti.

Neighbourhood Policing (Report)

82. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place a copy of the report on neighbourhood policing in the Library.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The report is the property of the Metropolitan police who commissioned the research.

Sunday Trading

83. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his consultations with interested parties on the reform of the Sunday trading laws.

Mr. Renton: Home Office Ministers have met various interested parties concerned with the reform of Sunday trading to try to find a practicable and acceptable solution likely to command a parliamentary majority. Consultations are continuing.

Football Grounds (Violence)

85. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he intends to make to seek to curtail violence at and around football grounds.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police are conducting a full appraisal of last season, and will feed the results of that review into planning for next season in consultation with football clubs. My noble Friend the Minister of State and my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for sport will also be discussing with the police and the football authorities what further joint steps need to be taken to curtail further the violence at football matches.

Identity Cards

86. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further consideration is being given to the possibility of introducing identity cards.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We shall continue to consider the views and representations which are put to us from time to time on this matter. But, at present, we remain to be persuaded that there is a sufficiently strong case for reintroducing identity cards.

Football Matches (Policing)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has had with the police about controlling crowd behaviour at football matches.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis yesterday, and this was one of the matters discussed.

Jurors (Vetting)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the total numbers of jurors who have been vetted against police records, the number that have failed selection because of the vetting procedure and the reasons why they failed selection.

Mr. John Patten: No records are at present kept centrally of checks against records of previous convictions carried out by the police for the purpose of ascertaining whether a juror is disqualified from serving.

There are exceptional circumstances in which, in addition, checks may be made of the records of police special branches and inquiries may be made of the security services. Such further checks may only be made with the personal authority of my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General. The procedures to be followed are set out in the Attorney-General's guidelines, which were published in August 1980 and amended in February 1986.

I understand from my right hon. and learned Friend that during the 12 months ending 14 June 1988 he authorised checks in four such cases. In two cases, no juror was either required to stand by for the Crown or challenged; in each of the remaining two cases, two jurors were peremptorily challenged by the defence; and in one of those cases one juror was required to stand by for the Crown. My right hon. and learned Friend is not able to say whether any of the four jurors peremptorily challenged was so challenged as a result of information obtained during the course of the checks and supplied to the defence by the Crown.

Records are not maintained of the total number of jurors in respect of whom checks authorised by my right hon. and learned Friend are made.

Homicide

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been convicted in England and Wales of homicide since the abolition of the death penalty for murder.

Mr. John Patten: The number of persons convicted in England and Wales of homicide is published annually in table S2.1(A) of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables Volume 2", copies of which are in the Library; the figures for 1966-86 are given in the following table. The corresponding figure for 1987 is not yet available. The Murder (Abolition of Death Penalty) Act 1965 came into operation on 9 November 1965.

[1] Homicide comprises murder, manslaughter and infanticide.

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons convicted of homicide in England and Wales and released on licence or termination of sentence have been convicted of homicide again since the abolition of the death penalty for murder.

Mr. John Patten: Thirty-eight persons convicted of homicide in England and Wales and released on licence or termination of sentence have been convicted again of homicide since the abolition of the death penalty for murder. Of those, 15 committed their first offence of homicide before abolition.

NATO (Chemical and Biological Weapons)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to which sub-committee of NATO's senior civil emergency planning committee the NATO chemical and biological weapons' working party report; when he expects the chemical and biological working party to deliver it's final report; and whether it will be subject to any NATO security classification.

Mr. John Patten: I believe the hon. Member is referring to the NATO civil defence committee group of experts on nuclear biological and chemical warning and detection systems. The group meets regularly and its chairman reports each year to the civil defence committee. Minutes of the group's meeting are unclassified: copies are in the Library.

Security Marking

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on the increase in the use of security marking, as recommended by his Department and the crime prevention centre, since 1983; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Whilst detailed information is not held centrally, there can be no doubt that security, or property marking, has increased significantly since 1983 and, in particular, that it is being widely used in neighbourhood watch scheme areas and by crime prevention panels. Apart from the results of research undertaken by the Home Office, there is also a large amount of anecdotal evidence from around the country which suggests that security marking acts both as a deterrent and as an important aid to the police in returning stolen property to its rightful owner.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer.

Mr. Hurd: There are two equal opportunities officers in the Home Office, one for the prison service and one for the rest of the Department.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what advertisements he has placed in ethnic and local press in order to promote greater equality in his Department.

Mr. Hurd: Some of our recruitment advertisements have been placed in the ethnic or local press. All recruitment advertisements refer to our commitment to equal opportunities in employment.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what methods his management training courses and those for members of recruitment and promotion boards address equal opportunities.

Mr. Hurd: The issue of equal opportunities is addressed on these training courses by means of presentations, discussion, and sometimes syndicate exercises.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are women and from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Hurd: The figures refer to non-industrial staff as at 1 May 1988. (Part-timers are counted as whole units).

Staff in post (grade equivalents)	Number of Women	Percentage of Women	Number of respondents to ethnic surveys	Percentage of respondents stating ethnic minority origin
Grades 1-7—1892	204	11	1,565	2
SEO and HEO—2858	567	20	2,284	1
EO—4964	1,512	30	3,233	3·5
AO and below 8698	5,271	61	6,441	8·8
Prison Service unified grades—19178 VI-VIII	1,120	6	5,597	0·6
Total—37590	8,674	23	19,120	4

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Hurd: We are committed to equality of opportunity for all members of staff, and all applicants for appointment. We shall continue to examine recruitment, training and promotion to see what further steps might usefully be taken.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department by what means he collected data on the ethnic origins and sex of staff; and whether he will place a copy of the collected data in the Library.

Mr. Hurd: Data on the sex of staff is collected routinely. Relevant figures have recently been published in "Equal Opportunities for Women in the Civil Service: Progress Report 1984-87". Data about ethnic origins have been gathered in a series of regional surveys of all non-industrial civil servants, by means of voluntary self-classification. The results of the surveys have been published by the Office of the Minister for the Civil Service (OMCS) and are available in the Library. All applicants for employment are now asked about their ethnic origin and sex, and OMCS will periodically publish up-dated information.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what disparities in recruitment and promotion he identified by using the data collected on the ethnic origins and sex of staff.

Mr. Hurd: We have monitored all recruitment schemes since October 1987, and have recently begun to examine promotion. The information gathered so far is being assessed, but it is too early to reach firm conclusions.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what effect he has achieved through the steps he has taken to promote greater equality in his Department for women and for people from ethnic minorities, respectively, by use of part-time work, job-sharing, flexible working hours and arrangements for special leave.

Mr. Hurd: The arrangements for part-time work, job sharing, flexible working hours and special leave apply equally to both sexes and people from all ethnic groups; but they are likely to be particularly useful for staff with domestic responsibilities. At present, the Home Office has nearly 1,000 part-time members of staff, and 21 sets of job sharers; and some 8,000 members of staff are on flexible working hours schemes.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what contacts he has made with ethnic minority communities in order to promote greater equality of employment within his Department.

Mr. Hurd: Meetings have been held with ethnic minority community and Church leaders. Details of our equal opportunities policy as it relates to staff have been given to the National Association of Community Relations Councils. Members of the ethnic minorities have addressed internal training course. We have close links with Project Fullemploy, which trains young people from the inner cities, many of whom are from the ethnic minorities. This year, we hope to sponsor a student under the Windsor Fellowship scheme, most of whose fellows are from ethnic minorities.

Forensic Services

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to vary the number of grades of those working in the forensic services of the Home Office.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Proposals for altering the grading structure within Home Office forensic science laboratories are being considered in consultation with the Institution of Professional Civil Servants. The proposed new structure offers a sound basis for the future development of the service and provides reasonable career prospects for staff.

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals for reducing the staffing numbers currently employed in the forensic services of the Home Office (a) generally and (b) at Aldermaston.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Proposals to alter the grading structure within Home Office forensic science laboratories are under consideration, but there are no plans to reduce the overall numbers of staff in the forensic science service, either generally or at Aldermaston.

Crime Prevention

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps his Department is taking to encourage greater private sector involvement in crime prevention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, South (Mr. Sumberg).

Criminal Records (Screening Methods)

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the methods used by private contracting companies to screen potential or existing employees for records of criminal offences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Private companies are not generally able to receive information from the police to screen potential or existing employees for records of criminal offences.

Paris Commission (Isle of Man)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions his Department has had with the Government of the Isle of Man regarding representation of Manx interests at the recent meeting of the Paris Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A request by the Isle of Man Government to be granted observer status at the recent meeting of the Paris Commission was declined, but the United Kingdom delegation was aware of the position taken by the Isle of Man on Sellafield.

Works of Art (Illicit Movement)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government plan to implement recommendation 1072 of the Council of Europe concerning the restitution of cultural property that has circulated illicitly; if he will seek to set up tighter controls of the export and import of works of art and to reinforce collaboration with international organisations, and Interpol, in taking action against the illicit movement of works of art; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Parliamentary Assembly's recommendation 1072 (1988) has not yet been the subject of full discussion by the Council of Europe's Committee of Ministers, and it would therefore be premature to consider its implementation by Her Majesty's Government. Statutory control of the import and export of works of art is a matter for my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The facilities of Interpol are available to assist the investigation of the alleged illicit movement of works of art, just as they are for any other criminal investigation.

Custodial Remands

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people awaiting trial before magistrates and Crown courts were held in police cells for each day during May and June in England and Wales.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The number of prisoners held in police cells in England and Wales on each day from 1 May, most of whom would have been awaiting trial, were as follows:

Date	Number of prisoners
1-3 May	1,115
4 May	1,011

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been brought under section 1 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 in (a) South Yorkshire and (b) the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, shows, in 1986 six prosecutions in South Yorkshire and 112 in England and Wales under section 1 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Traffic (Policing Costs)

14. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total estimated cost of policing traffic for 1988-89.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I regret that it is not possible to provide an accurate estimate of the total cost of policing traffic. However, it has been estimated that in 1985-86 the total costs for the 43 police forces in England and Wales of police officers employed in specialist traffic departments and of traffic wardens was of the order of £200 million. Traffic duties are also carried out by other uniformed officers but it is not possible to produce a separate estimate of the cost of such work.

Newton Lodge Secure Unit (Escape)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of West Yorkshire police as to what representations have been received from the people who live in the vicinity of the secure unit in Wakefield following the escape of Carlos Brigins from Newton lodge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of West Yorkshire police that he has received one petition signed by 47 people who live in Westfield view, expressing their concern about the security of Newton lodge.

PLO Representative (Expulsion)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action had been taken by the Palestine Liberation Organisation representative that led to his recent expulsion.

Mr. Hurd: The application from Mr. Zaki Mohd Ibrahim Abu El Hawa for leave to remain in the United Kingdom as an employee of the PLO office has been refused on the grounds that his departure from the United Kingdom would be conducive to the public good in the interests of national security.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wheat

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the average export price for wheat sold from the European Community in the latest convenient year.

Mr. Donald Thompson: According to information provided by the International Wheat Council, the average price for wheat exported from the European Community (FOB Rouen) in the 1986-87 marketing year (July 1986-June 1987) was $83 (£55) per tonne.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the export restitution per tonne for wheat in pound sterling.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest export restitution granted by the cereals management committee on 16 June was 83 ecu or £54 per tonne.

Pig Farming

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he intends to initiate discussions in the Council of Ministers and with the agriculture commissioner about banning the use of dry sow and tether stalls in pig farming.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The European Commission is already working on a proposal concerned with the welfare of pigs kept in intensive systems. As soon as it is sent to the Council, I shall ensure that United Kingdom representatives play a full part in the discussions, taking account of British interests and the views of the Farm Animal Welfare Council.

Wartime Buffer Depots (Food Stocks)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the number of his Department's wartime buffer depots in each constituency and the type of food and amount contained in each; how often the contents are checked; how long the food has been in stock; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Information about the types of food held in the strategic stockpile is given in section 11 of the emergency planning guidance issued to local authorities by the Home Office and is available through the House of Commons Library. Foods in the stockpile are maintained in good condition through a programme of systematic turnover, and regular inspections by scientific and other staff ensure that their quality is maintained and that they are wholesome, in good condition and ready to eat. In the interests of national security information on the levels and locations of the stockpile is not made available.

Tribunals

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any remuneration is payable to the chairman and other members of agricultural land tribunals; and what is the practice for dairy produce quota tribunals.

Mr. Gummer: Chairmen and deputy chairmen of agricultural land tribunals receive fees and expenses; lay members receive expenses only. I have not received any representations from lay members for the introduction of a fee. The chairmen and other members of the dairy produce quota tribunal receive a daily sitting fee and expenses.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the total administrative costs to his Department of the agricultural land tribunals in 1987-88; and what proportion of such costs were recovered from litigants.

Mr. Gummer: The total administrative costs to my Department of the agricultural land tribunals in 1987-88 were £186,655. None of this is recovered from litigants.

Waste Imports

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those local authorities which have approached his Department in the last 12 months seeking advice on the importation of household waste from overseas.

Mr. MacGregor: The following local authorities have made approaches to my Department on this matter in the last 12 months:—

Cheshire county council
Warrington borough council
Humberside county council.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment is available to him about the hazards to human health, animal and plant life from the importation of domestic refuse from other countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: It is not possible to make a general assessment since the animal health and plant life implications would have to be considered in relation to specific proposals taking into account the disease situation in the country concerned. The human health implications are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Animal Products (Imports)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the companies, and countries of origin, which have been granted licences under the Importation of Animal Products and Poultry Products Order in each year since 1980; and for what products;

(2) if he will list the companies and their country of origin which have been refused licences under the Importation of Animal Products and Poultry Products Order in each year since 1980; and for which products.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Since 1980 my Department has issued 13,000 licences under the order. Information about individual applications is commercially sensitive and could not be disclosed even if it were readily available.

Wild Birds (Shooting)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the tests carried out on the peregrine falcon and goosander shot recently in the Yorkshire Dales national park.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The carcases of a male goosander and a female peregrine falcon were submitted to the Ministry's veterinary investigation centre at Thirsk on 18 May and 1 June respectively with the request for post mortem examination. In both cases the cause of death was considered to be by shooting.

Budgie Seed

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) of 20 June, whether the compromise agreement on prices and support arrangements for agriculture commodities by 11 member states included the increase in the levy on budgie seed proposed by the Commission.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No. The compromise package proposed by the presidency and Commission on 17 June, which 11 member states were prepared to accept, included a commitment from the Commission to withdraw its proposal on bird seed.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Investment Programme Allocations

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which local authorities have received extra housing investment programme allocations in 1988-89, to provide additional accommodation for the homeless under the initiative he announced on 24 March; what additional housing investment allocation each local authority has received under this initiative; and how many units of accommodation each local authority has estimated will result, comprising (a) local authority dwellings refurbished, (b) hostel places provided by local authorities, (c) hostel places provided by housing associations other dwellings or places provided by local authorities and (d) how quickly these units are expected to become available.

Mrs. Roe: Local authorities estimate that the additional allocations of £28·1 million we have given them following our announcement in March will provide over 3,000 extra units of accommodation for the benefit of homeless people. These units should be available in the current financial year. The further details requested are set down in the table.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he used in selecting (a) which schemes should be approved for additional housing investment programme allocations; (b) which local authorities should receive additional housing investment programme allocations; and (c) what extra housing investment programme allocation each local authority should receive under the initiative he announced on 24 March to provide additional accommodation for the homeless.

Mrs. Roe: In making available the additional £28·1 million of resources announced in March to help homeless people we looked particularly at the number of households in bed-and-breakfast accommodation, and at the number of people councils were housing as homeless. Authorities made bids, and we responded to those which showed the greatest needs and had reasonable plans for meeting them. My right hon. Friend has since announced a further £21·1 million, which we are aiming to distribute in the same way.

Urban Regeneration

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much is being spent per head in (a) the northern region and (b) Scotland in support for urban regeneration, factory provision and derelict land clearance.

Mr. Trippier: Estimated spending on my Department's urban regeneration programmes in 1987-88, per head of the northern region's population, was £22·7, of which spending on derelict land reclamation was £3·86 per head.

Expenditure in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland; expenditure on factory provision generally is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Note:

1. Urban regeneration programmes include urban development grant and urban regeneration grant (now city grant), urban development corporations, the urban programme, derelict land grant and estate action.

2. Mid-1987 population estimates are not yet available; mid-1986 estimates have therefore been used.

3. Urban programme, urban development grant and urban regeneration grant include some spending on factory provision.

Heathrow Airport

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what planning procedures will apply to proposals for the construction of a new terminal at Heathrow airport or the development of a rail link to central London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Application for planning permission for a new terminal would need to be made to the local planning authority in the normal way. The promoters of any new rail link from the airport to central London could be expected to seek parliamentary authorisation via a private Bill as is normal in the case of authority to construct railways. When such a Bill is passed, the works have permitted development rights under class XII of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order 1977.

Right to Buy (Southwark)

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mrs. S. G. Beale of her home at 4 Lyall avenue, Dulwich, London SE21 8QS from Southwark borough council.

Mrs. Roe: According to Southwark council this delay was the result of staff shortages, particularly in the valuers' department.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list the categories of corrosive, flammable and toxic substances dangerous to life; whether he has plans to extend the list and to widen the scope of the definition of special waste; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will introduce legislation to define hazardous waste and to establish controls over its disposal; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he has any plans to introduce amendments to the Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 to provide greater protection to the environment from waste disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The term hazardous waste is not well defined as almost all waste is potentially hazardous in some circumstances. In United Kingdom legislation the term "special waste" is used to describe wastes which are dangerous or difficult to dispose of. The Control of Pollution (Special Waste) Regulations 1980 list 31 substances and the criteria to be applied to them to determine whether they are in a form which poses a risk to human life. The regulations impose controls on the movement of these wastes so that waste disposal authorities can ensure they are sent to facilities licensed to deal with them.

A consultation paper reviewing the special waste regulations is planned for later this year. This will include consideration of the extent to which the list of substances and the toxicity criteria require amendment to ensure proper protection for human health and the environment.

Nine Ladies

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take about the poor condition of the bronze age stone circle known as Nine Ladies on Stanton moor.

Mr. Moynihan: This is a matter for English Heritage. I gather it has a programme of remedial works in hand and is monitoring the condition of the site carefully. I am sure that the chairman, Lord Montagu of Beaulieu, will be happy to provide my hon. Friend with further details.

Sheltered Workshops

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether, following the passage of the Local Government Act 1988, those sheltered workshops recognised by the Government as priority suppliers will still be afforded opportunities by local authorities to tender or quote for suitable work; and whether having had any submissions to local authority supplies officers suitably examined, such workshops will be offered part or all of a contract at a price acceptable to the supplies officer and subject to the provisos of the local authority preference scheme;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effect of the Local Government Act 1988 on the observation by local authorities of the requirements of the Treasury priority supplies scheme, with regard to sheltered workshops for people with disabilities.

Mr. Howard: It is, of course, for individual local authorities to decide from whom to invite tenders, but they have previously been encouraged to give preferential treatment to priority suppliers, including sheltered workshops, on the lines of the Treasury priority suppliers scheme which is binding on Exchequer Departments. The effect of part II of the Local Government Act 1988 is to prevent local authorities giving preferential treatment to priority suppliers other than their own sheltered workshops. I understand, however, that most of the business awarded by local authorities to priority suppliers is placed with their own sheltered workshops and the Act should not therefore have any adverse effect on the business levels of sheltered industry.

Thorncliffe Hotel

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set up an inquiry into allegations of squalid conditions and abuse of residents by staff at Thorncliffe hotel for the homeless; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: No. The London borough of Hounslow, in whose area the Thorncliffe hotel is situated, has very wide ranging powers to deal with hotels used as temporary accommodation for homeless families.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what investigations his Department has made of the legal aspects of constructing a nuclear waste disposal facility (a) under the sea bed, accessed from a coastal land base and (b) under the sea bed, accessed from an offshore structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Any proposal to develop a facility under the sea bed would be subject to a number of legal considerations. These will depend on the specific nature and location of the proposal.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what research by private companies his Department has wholly or partially financed regarding the disposal of nuclear waste (a) under land, accessed from a land base, (b) under the sea bed, accessed from a coastal land base, and (c) under the sea bed, accessed from an offshore structure; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what research his Department has undertaken regarding the disposal of nuclear waste (a) under land, accessed from a land base; (b) under the sea bed, accessed from a coastal land base, and (c) under the sea bed, accessed from an offshore structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department of the Environment has undertaken no research directly related to the disposal of nuclear waste since 1982 when Nirex was established. The company now has responsibility for such research. Work undertaken up to that time has been published and made available to Nirex.

Sellafield (Discharges)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations his Department has received from the Government of the Isle of Man regarding radioactive discharges from the Sellafield nuclear facility.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations from the Government of the Isle of Man on radioactive discharges from BNFL's Sellafield site.

Special Sites (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the names of sites of special interest in South Yorkshire which have been damaged or destroyed since 1981; and by what causes.

Mr. Moynihan: I am advised by the Nature Conservancy Council that no SSSI in South Yorkshire has been destroyed since 1981. The following five sites have sustained some damage.

Site	Type and cause of damage
(i) Hatfield Moor (ii) Thorne Crowle and Goole Moors	Peat/gravel extraction, carried out with the benefit of long-standing planning consents.
(iii) Roche Abbey Woodland	Arson/wood cutting—short-term damage by third parties from which the site is expected to recover.
(iv) Sandall Beat	Motor cycling—short-term damage by third parties from which site is expected to recover.
(v) Shirley Pool	A small area of the 15½ ha site has been damaged by agricultural operations but overall scientific interest of the site has not been significantly affected.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the name, size, type of habitat and whether privately or publicly owned of (a) sites of special scientific interest, (b) national nature reserves, (c) local nature reserves, (d) sites protected by the Ramsar convention and (e) sites protected by the European Community birds directive, in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Moynihan: The information is as follows:

(a) SSSIS (as at 21 June 1988)

Westminster Hall (Plaques)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are to be taken to ensure that the commemorative plaques in the floor of the Westminster Hall can be refurbished so that the lettering can be read without difficulty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I shall consider what might be done to refurbish the plaques and will write to the hon. Gentleman in due course.

Water (Aluminium Content)

Mr. Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information was made available to (a) water authorities and (b) his Department to consumers prior to May 1988 on the risks associated with the addition of aluminium components to water.

Mr. Moynihan: Consumers who requested information have been told that current aluminium concentrations in water supplies are not a health risk. I also refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend, the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 17 June, at column 360.

Rating Reform

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now publish the Price Waterhouse report on the implementation and collection of the community charge; if he will announce what further resources will be made available to local authorities in recognition of these costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I have today placed copies of the Price Waterhouse report in the Libraries of the Houses of Commons and Lords. The report is in two volumes. Volume 1 contains the consultants' forecasts of costs of setting up and collecting the community charge. Volume 2 consists of a summary of best practice which should help to reduce the cost of implementing the new arrangements.

The consultants confirm the Government's estimate that the cost of collecting the community charge from each chargepayer would be very similar to the present average cost for collecting rates from each ratepayer.

Since there are twice as many chargepayers as ratepayers, this would produce collection costs in 1990 of between £379 million and £435 million, compared with the £200 million it now costs to collect rates each year.

The report finds wide variations in the present productivity of different rating departments. The consultants believe that economies of up to 15 per cent. could be achieved if all authorities were to perform as well as the most efficient for each category of authority.

The consultants estimate that current expenditure on preparation in 1989-90 could be around £122 million but note that improved productivity could reduce this to £99 million, compared with the Government's initial estimate of £70 to £90 million.

The report's estimate of the cost of administering community charge benefit and of operating the phasing in of the new arrangements in parts of inner London during 1990 to 1994 are in line with Government estimates. The report also confirms that little expenditure is likely to need to be incurred by authorities before April 1989.

Authorities have already been provided with sufficient resources to absorb the limited expenditure likely to be incurred in 1988-90 through the provision for current expenditure made in the RSG settlement for that year and the additional capital allocation of £25 million announced on 24 March 1988.

For 1989-90 we shall take account of the Price Waterhouse findings in our proposals for the RSG settlement. We will be making additional capital allocations when we have further considered the figures contained in the report. Final announcements on provision will follow the usual consultation with local authority associations on RSG and in the specification of capital allocations which will follow the Chancellor's autumn statement.

In the meantime, I am arranging for a summary of these findings together with the whole of volume 2 to be widely circulated to local authorities in order that they may consider the many opportunities now open to them for introducing the community charge as efficiently and economically as possible.

Paris Commission

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who will be representing Her Majesty's Government at the annual meeting of the Paris Commission to be held in Lisbon on 15 to 17 June.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 13 June 1988]: Her Majesty's Government were represented by officials from the Department.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Governments of (a) the Isle of Man and (b) the Irish Republic concerning their proposals to the next annual meeting of the Paris Commission on 15 to 17 June.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 13 June 1988]: I have received no representations from either the Isle of Man or the Irish Governments concerning any of the proposals discussed at this year's meeting of the Paris Commission.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the level of community charge for spending at needs assessment which would apply in 1988-89 if the proposed local government finance system were in operation; and what assumptions are made to arrive at that answer.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1988, c. 267]: I have today placed in the Library illustrative community charge figures for English authorities based on 1988-89 budgets.

The figures have been calculated on the same basis as those for 1987-88 and are subject to the same limitations. In particular they are not a prediction of the community charges which will apply in practice. Those will depend on the spending decisions of individual local authorities at that time.

The figures do, however, illustrate the community charge levels associated with current levels of overspending. The Government's proposals would allow all authorities to finance expenditure sufficient to provide a standard level of service for £202 in 1988-89. The extent to which the full community charge may exceed £202 is simply a measure of the overspending by local authorities in that area. Likewise, a full community charge of less than £202 is a measure of the economy of the authorities concerned. The level of the community charge in this way provides a ready reckoner enabling charge payers to compare the amount which their councils spend with what they need to spend and with the performance of other authorities.

I am pleased to say that compared with the figures based on 1987-88 expenditure levels published on 29 June last year, many of the highest community charges have been substantially reduced. This is largely the result of Government action to reduce the spending of the highest spending authorities in London through rate capping. In particular, the illustrative charge for Camden is £143 lower. For Hackney and Lewisham charges are £113 and £100 lower, respectively, than before. I hope these reductions will continue. There is still time for overspending councils to reduce their spending before the community charge is introduced in 1990 and before the safety net grant is withdrawn finally in 1994. In particular authorities in inner London will have the opportunity to deal with the overspending of the ILEA and all authorities will be able to benefit from increased competitive tendering.

The published figures also include later estimates of the effect of moving to a uniform business rate, or NNDR, although estimates of the effects of the revaluation will not be available before the autumn. The latest figures suggest that 60 per cent. of non-domestic hereditaments would have benefited from the NNDR on its own. There will be particular benefits to businesses in the north and the inner cities. For example, poundages would reduce by 27 per cent. in Manchester, 31 per cent. in Sheffield and 26 per cent. in Liverpool. The NNDR will continue to be particularly good news for areas of above average unemployment where high rates have slowed economic regeneration.

Businesses generally will also benefit from the linkage of business rates to the RPI. Rate increases this year for some businesses were over 20 per cent.—five times the rate of inflation.

In those cases where there will be significant increases in rate bills arising from either the national non-domestic rate or the concurrent revaluation of non-domestic property, there will be generous transitional arrangements which will limit year-on-year changes in rate bills. The Government are also taking powers to provide for a lower annual limit on rate increases for small businesses.

I have also placed in the Library estimates of the impact of a local income tax and of the combination of a local income tax and capital value rates which have been revised in the light of the new expenditure information.

DEFENCE

Equipment Exhibition

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether all overseas delegations will be allowed to see all the exhibits on display at the British Army equipment exhibition.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes.

AWACS

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom companies have benefited so far from offset from the AWACS purchase.

Mr. Sainsbury: Boeing has, to date, submitted two reports to my Department which are now being evaluated. These reports show that approximately 120 United Kingdom companies have so far received contracts placed by Boeing and its sub-contractors under the AWACS offset programme.

Submarines

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many new Royal Navy submarines have been launched over the past five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: Five Royal Navy submarines have been launched over the past five years.

Communications Relay Station (Rugby)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the very low frequency communications relay station at Rugby was first made available to United States forces.

Mr. Freeman: The site at Daventry was first made available to the United States in 1961. It has not been used since 1978 but it is proposed to reactivate it next year.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which United States military service is responsible for the very low frequency communications relay station at Rugby.

Mr. Freeman: The United States microwave communications relay facility at Daventry is the responsibility of the United States air force.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United States very low frequency communications relay station at Rugby includes both transmitter and receiver facilities.

Mr. Freeman: The United States communications station at Daventry is a microwave relay facility not a very low frequency system. It includes both transmitter and receiver facilities.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the relationship between the British-owned and operated very low frequency communications facilities at Rugby and the United States very low frequency communications relay station at Rugby.

Mr. Freeman: The British-owned very low frequency communications facility at Rugby is a British Telecom transmitting station. The United States microwave facility referred to in my answer of 7 June at columns 556-57 is at Daventry. There is no connection between the two stations.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the United States very low frequency communications relay station at Rugby is notified to pilots of aircraft as a high intensity radio transmission area.

Mr. Freeman: The United States microwave communications relay facility at Daventry is not a high intensity radio transmission system and consequently is not notified to pilots as such.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for or on behalf of which United States forces communications systems the very low frequency communications facility at Rugby is operated; if Her Majesty's Government have any right of access to the traffic carried via the very low frequency communications facility at Rugby; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The United States microwave communications relay facility at Daventry is part of the digital European backbone communications system. This provides communictions for United States forces stationed in Europe operating in support of NATO, though other NATO nations, including the United Kingdom, have access to the system.

Royal Naval Armament Depot, Beith

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what area outside his Department's property at the royal naval armament depot, Beith explosive hazard areas extend; what is the total civil population resident within these areas; and what plans exist for evacuation of the resident population in the event of an accident at the depot.

Mr. Freeman: The explosive hazard areas surrounding the royal naval armaments depot, Beith are detailed on the safeguarding map held by the local planning authority, Cunninghame district council. I am sending a copy of this map to the hon. Member.

It is estimated that approximately 130 people are resident in these areas. Detailed standing orders exist to cover potential fire and explosion situations and frequent exercises are held to test these procedures. In addition copies of the RNAD emergency plans are held by the local fire and police authorities. These arrangements would enable immediate action to be taken to protect the public in the unlikely event of a serious fire or accidental explosion at RNAD Beith.

RAF (Drink and Drugs)

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the substance of allegations about drinking and drug taking by airmen working on Royal Air Force aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: Recent press reports are based on generalised and unevidenced allegations which cast a slur on the high professional standards maintained by dedicated air crew and ground crew throughout the Royal Air Force. The service will, of course, investigate any specific complaints which are made against it.

Procurement Executive

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of project managers in the Procurement Executive were (a) uniformed, (b) civilian with previous military service and (c) civilian without previous military service in the Army, Royal Navy and Royal Air Force controllerates in 1980, 1985 and at present.

Mr. Sainsbury: In 1985 civilian staff occupied 77 per cent. of project manager posts in the sea systems controllerate, 50 per cent. in the land systems controllerate and 90 per cent. in the air systems controllerate. Military staff occupied the balance of posts. These proportions have remained broadly constant up to the present day. No figures are available for distribution between civilian and military staff in 1980. The information requested about the proportion of civilian project managers with previous military experience could be provided only at a disproportionately high cost to the Department.

Low Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the minimum permitted height for fixed-wing military aircraft operating (a) over the landward portion of the Castlemartin danger area, D 113, (b) over the landward portion of the Manorbier danger area, D 115, (c) over the landward portion of the Pendine danger area, D 117, (d) in the Salisbury main training area and (e) in the Shawbury area of intense aerial activity.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The information concerning the minimum permitted operating heights for military fixed-wing aircraft is as follows:

(a) 15,000 ft over Castlemartin range, when the danger area is activated. When inactive, a 250-ft minimum separation distance (MSD) is operated;

(b) 30,000 ft from Monday to Friday between 8 am and 5 pm and 23,500 ft at weekends and on public holidays (unless this needs to be raised to 30,000 ft on occasion) over Manorbier range danger area. At other times, a 250-ft MSD exists;

(c) 27,000 ft over P&EE Pendine danger area when this is activated. When not activated, a 250-ft MSD is used;

(d) the minimum operating height varies between 2,000 and 15,000 ft according to the type of live firing taking place on the five United Kingdom danger areas on Salisbury Plain training area. When live firing is not taking place, 250-ft MSD is followed;

(e) the Shawbury area of intense aerial activity extends from the surface to 6,000 ft and covers part of low-flying area (LFA) 9 which is a user area for intensive helicopter pilot training. Military fixed wing aircraft are allowed to fly through LFA 9 at low level (below 2,000 ft) with prior clearance from RAF Tern Hill.

As regards all the above areas, aircraft may, however, transit danger areas when these are activated at the 250-ft MSD with prior clearance from the danger area co-ordinating authority.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Rule Changes (Advertising)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what national newspaper or television advertising has already been carried out by his Department to inform or explain to the public the current social security rule changes; whether any such advertising is to be carried out and at what cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In the period between July 1986, when the Social Security Act became law, and March 1988, the end of the 1987-88 financial year, £1·41 million was spent on advertising. The split between television and press advertising was as follows:

£ thousands

	TV	Press
General reform advertising	—	243
Pensions	64	141
Maternity benefits	—	344
Housing benefits	—	55
Family credit	322	—
Income support	—	126
Widows benefits	—	49
Funeral benefits	—	59

Planned spending in the 1988-89 financial year is approximately £5 million. The split between television and press advertising of expenditure already committed is as follows:

£ thousands

	TV	Press
Pensions	1,162	286
Housing benefits	—	263
Family credit	2,106	709

Children in Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take, in the light of the Economic and Social Research Council's report, entitled the "Physical and Mental Health of Children in Care: Research Needs", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

The Economic and Social Research Council has a research initiative on children in care in which the Department of Education and Science and the Department of Health and Social Security are both collaborating. The papers which make up this report were commissioned by the ESRC and were intended to review the need for research and to establish the research base for the council's initiative. As such the report is primarily for the council itself to consider but the Departments will take account of what it says in their approach to the further development of the initiative.

Ambulances

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the criteria used in determining the recommended intervals between replacements of (a) National Health Service ambulances and (b) National Health Service cars.

Mrs. Currie: Because of the rust-free body specification, high maintenance standards, practical experience and depreciation factors, the recommended interval between replacements for ambulances is after 140,000 miles or seven years.

For National Health Service vans replacement is recommended after 70,000 miles or five years, thus reflecting general fleet management practice for this type of vehicle, modified to meet the specialised circumstances of the National Health Service.

Decisions on replacement of individual vehicles are taken in the light of local usage and circumstances.

Nurses (Job Vacancies)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many unfilled nurses' jobs there are in Doncaster; and what is the national average figure.

Mr. Newton: Information about nurse vacancies is not collected centrally. However, a sample survey for the nurses' pay review body showed that at 31 March 1987 about 3·5 per cent. of all nursing and midwifery posts had been vacant for three months or more.

The hon. Member may care to write to the chairman of Doncaster health authority for details of the position within the authority.

Surplus Property (Sales)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Beverley, 7 June, Official Report, column 563, what guidance has been supplied to regional health authorities concerning the retention of receipts from the sale of surplus assets by district health authorities, other than the general statement of policy contained in the answer.

Mrs. Currie: No guidance has been supplied. It is for regions and districts to allocate sales proceeds in the light of the Department's policy and the circumstances of each individual transaction.

Income Disregard

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what categories of unemployment claimants are entitled to the higher rate weekly income disregard; and what plans there are to extend this concession to other categories.

Mr. Portillo: Unemployed claimants are entitled to the higher disregard on earnings if they are receiving, or satisfy the condition for receiving, the disability premium or the lone parent premium; or are members of a couple who have been in receipt of benefit continuously for two years. Certain types of employment also attract the higher disregard, namely employment as a part-time fireman, an auxiliary coastguard, in the part-time manning or launching of a lifeboat and a member of any territorial or reserve force.

There are no plans to extend this concession.

S Manual

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what amendments have been made to the S manual at paragraphs S1287 to S1307, inclusive, since the release of amendment 34.

Mr. Portillo: None. From 11 April the instructions contained in these paragraphs of the S manual have been replaced by part 25 of the adjudication officers' guide. Although the format has altered the guidance remains the same.

Regional Health Authorities (Trade Union Nominees)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what timetable he is working to in relation to the appointment of trade union nominees to regional health authorities; and what criteria for selection he employs.

Mrs. Currie: The terms of office approximately half the members of regional health authorities end on 30 September 1988. My right hon. Friend appoints members because of their own personal qualities and not to represent any particular interest and will consider all nominations, including those from wider trade union movement, on that basis.

Income Support

Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many claimants are in receipt of income support transitional protection of (a) £1 to £5, (b) £6 to £10, (c) £11 to £15 and (d) over £15;

(2) how many claimants are in receipt of income support transitional protection, by county, and by Department of Health and Social Security local office.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not currently available. Statistical information about claimants receiving income support transitional protection will appear in the annual statistical inquiry. This will be published in summer 1989. The information will, however, be published only on a Great Britain or DHSS regional basis.

South Manchester (Hospitals)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations his Department has had concerning south Manchester's hospitals; what action is being taken; and when a definitive statement can be expected in regard to the matters raised by the deputation received by the Minister for Health on 13 June.

Mr. Newton: We have received representations from a number of right hon. and hon. Members.

Following my meeting with the deputation on 13 June, which included the right hon. Member, I wrote to the chairman of the South Manchester community health council on 15 June. This letter was copied to the right hon. Member. It confirmed that discussions on changes to patient services were continuing at local level and no final decision had been reached on them at that stage.

Dental Services

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the maximum that a dentist may charge for dental work undertaken by the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: The maximum charge for a course of treatment required to secure dental fitness under the general dental service is currently £150. Where an NHS denture needs to be replaced as a result of an act or omission on the part of the patient an additional charge may be made.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has any plans to require dentists to inform their patients of the cost of treatment before it is undertaken;

(2) if he has any plans to require dentists to provide an itemised bill detailing the costs of treatment.

Mrs. Currie: As indicated in the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249), the Government's proposals for a revised contract for general dental practitioners include a requirement to explain the treatment plan to patients and the probable cost.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to require dentists to display details of their charges in their surgeries.

Mrs. Currie: We have agreed with representatives of the profession a requirement that National Health Service general dental practitioners should display information about National Health Service charges. A poster giving information about National Health Service dental treatment and charges is already supplied free of charge to all National Health Service general dental practitioners. Information on charges is also contained in leaflet D11 available from local social security offices.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations or evidence he has received alleging that dentists are encouraging patients to undergo unnecessary treatment.

Mrs. Currie: The committee of inquiry into unnecessary dental treatment chaired by Mr. S. G. Schanschieff, which reported in 1986, concluded that a small but significant amount of unnecessary treatment was undertaken in the general dental services; but that this was not so great that patients should lose confidence in their dentists, the vast majority of whom continued to provide a thoroughly professional service. The committee made a large number of recommendations, the majority of which have been, or are in process of being, implemented. Since publication of the committee's report the Department is not aware of receiving any direct representations or further evidence that dentists generally are encouraging unnecessary treatment.

Residential Homes

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will detail the average number of beds in private residential homes for the elderly and handicapped for each year for which the figures are available since 1979;

(2) if he will detail the average number of beds in local authority residential homes for the elderly and handicapped for each year for which the figures are available since 1979;

(3) how many private residential homes registered under the Registered Homes Act have rooms containing three or more beds;

(4) what is the latest estimate for the numbers of elderly and handicapped persons living in private residential establishments with fewer than four beds.

Mrs. Currie: The average numbers of places, that is beds, per local authority and private residential care homes for elderly or handicapped people in England at 31 March in the years 1979 to 1986 are contained in the table. Information is not available centrally on residential establishments with fewer than four beds or on the numbers of beds in bedrooms within establishments.

Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the average number of beds in local authority residential establishments for children and young persons for each year for which the figures are available since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Information on the average size of residential homes is not available centrally.

Details of the number of children and young persons in care accommodated in community homes are given in the table.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many private nursing homes registered under the Registered Homes Act have rooms containing three or more beds.

Mrs. Currie: Information about the number of beds in individual rooms in nursing homes is not collected centrally.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding his policy towards medical practitioners with pecuniary interests in particular private, residential or nursing homes treating residents or patients in those homes; and what response he made.

Mr. Newton: None.

Consultants

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why consultants holding part-time contracts with the National Health Service are allowed to include time spent travelling between home and hospital or clinic as part of their working hours.

Mr. Newton: Because this was agreed in 1949 as part of the hospital medical and dental staff terms and conditions of service, which are subject to negotiation between the health departments and the professions.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what percentage of consultants were employed full time within the National Health Service for each year since 1979;

(2) what percentage of consultants employed within the National Health Service held maximum part-time contracts for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The latest available information is set out in the table.

Permanent paid NHS Consultants (Medical and Dental) at 30 September, England
Whole time and maximum part-time staff as a percentage of all Consultants (Numbers)

	Whole time	Maximum part-time
1979	41	26
1980	43	34
1981	44	33
1982	46	33
1983	47	32
1984	47	32
1985	46	33
1986	46	33

Note: Percentages rounded to the nearest whole number.

Social Work (Diploma)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received regarding his refusal to fund the introduction of a new qualifying diploma in social work; and what was the nature of these representations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have received about 20 letters, which express continuing support for the introduction of a new qualifying diploma in social work. I have also met representatives of the parliamentary panel on the personal social services and of the professional social work associations to discuss their views.

Griffiths Report

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to implement the Griffiths report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 29 March at columns 439-40.

Social Security (Scrutiny Body)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has now received the reports of the scrutiny body looking at the social security organisation and the study of the location of headquarters work.

Mr. Moore: I have received both the report of the regional organisation scrutiny team and the report of a study team appointed to look at the possibilities of relocating work currently based at DHSS headquarters in London. Copies of both reports have today been placed in the Library.

Both reports express the views of the respective study teams and both raise important and wide-ranging issues which affect many aspects of the Department and the way it functions. I will wish to consider these carefully before making decisions. That consideration will proceed with all possible speed.

I accept in principle that some relocation of work from London will provide a better way for the Department to conduct its business. The aim is to improve the efficiency of our operations so as to deliver a better service to those who use them.

Leeds Western Health Authority (Chairman)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to announce the appointment of the new chairman of Leeds western health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 29 March at column 449.

Northern Region

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what action is being taken by his Department following the 1987 report by Professor Peter Townsend and colleagues on inequalities in health and deprivation in the northern region, a copy of which has been sent to him;

(2) if he will make specific provision to assist those areas identified as having the worst health and being the most deprived in the 1987 report by Professor Peter Townsend and colleagues on inequalities in health and deprivation in the northern region, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Newton: The report was commissioned by Northern RHA and raises issues for its consideration which it is no doubt taking into account in its planning.

Electricity and Gas (Deductions)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest figures for the number of people on supplementary benefit who had direct deductions for (a) electricity and (b) gas.

Mr. Portillo: The number of cases with deductions for electricity and gas is as follows. Where a person has deductions for both electricity and gas, they are included in both figures.

	Number
Electricity	163,000
Gas	138,500

Newton Lodge

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will take steps to provide for more staff to be employed at the Newton Lodge secure unit in Wakefield so as to prevent any further escapes by inmates, following the escape on Friday 10 June of Carlos Brigins; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps are being taken to protect the security of patients at the Pinderfields, Stanly Royd, and Fieldhead hospitals in circumstances when inmates at the Newton Lodge secure unit are allowed in the grounds of those hospitals unaccompanied and without surveillance; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will make a statement on the security arrangements applied to inmates at the Newton Lodge secure unit in Wakefield when they are allowed out and away from the secure unit on parole.

Mrs. Currie: The running of Newton Lodge regional secure unit, including security arrangements, is the responsibility of Wakefield health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of that authority for the information he is seeking.

Drug Abuse (Publicity)

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make available copies of the studies evaluating the efforts of the drug prevention and anti-injection publicity campaigns launched in September 1987.

Mrs. Currie: We have received reports from two studies commissioned to evaluate the effects of the drug prevention and anti-injecting campaigns and copies of the research studies have been placed in the Library.

In summary, the findings show that general awareness of advertising and publicity against heroin is as high as it has ever been since the Government's drug prevention campaign started in 1985. The drug prevention campaign seems to have consolidated young people's negative attitudes towards drug misuse, and resistance to trying drugs remains at a high level. The anti-injecting campaign clearly communicated the risk of becoming infected with HIV through sharing equipment. The television commercial in particular was seen as accurate, authentic, and hard to deflect. It was praised by the majority of injectors interviewed. There was nothing in the research to suggest that the anti-injecting campaign had in any way undermined the drug prevention message by making other ways of misusing drugs seem more tempting.

Oral Tobacco Products

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations have been received by his Department in respect of the proposed safety regulation under the Consumer Protection Act 1987 to ban oral tobacco products; what proportion of these were in support of and against the proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply 8 June 1988, c. 592]: The Department has now uncovered further representations which were overlooked due to a backlog in mail. The correct total for separate representations received by 26 May is 328. Of these, 300 were in support of the Government's proposal and 28 were against.

Health Care (Spending)

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the proportion of gross domestic product devoted to health care for each year since 1980 including expenditure on nursing home care.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 27 May 1988]: The figures in the following table have been derived from the United Kingdom national accounts prepared by the Central Statistical Office and show the percentage of GDP spent (a) on health services and (b) on private sector residential and nursing homes in the period 1980 to 1986. For the latter series it has not been possible to separate expenditure on nursing home care from that on residential homes.

Percentage of GDP spent on health services by sector and on private sector residential and nursing homes

Year	Health Services			Private sector residential and nursing homes[1]
	Public	Private	Total
1980	5·2	0·6	5·8	0·1
1981	5·4	0·6	6·0	0·1
1982	5·2	0·7	5·9	0·1
1983	5·4	0·7	6·1	0·2
1984	5·4	0·8	6·2	0·3
1985	5·2	0·8	6·0	0·3
1986	5·3	0·8	6·1	0·4

[1] Figures in this column show the estimated annual total of public and private expenditure on such homes. Because these estimates are based on a series of assumptions regarding the proportion of residents in such homes receiving supplementary benefits, attempts to further disaggregate the total expenditure figures would result in spurious accuracy.

Private Operations

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of the report on certain expenditures by North Staffordshire and Shropshire health authorities on private operations, being prepared for him by his Department's statutory auditor, group 4, Birmingham, when that report is completed; and if he will make a statement.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the date of publication of the audit report of the plan by the West Midlands regional health authority for North Staffordshire and Shropshire district health authorities to purchase private operations; and if he will make it his policy to place a copy of the report in the Library as soon as it is available.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 7 June 1988]: The statutory audits of North Staffordshire and Shropshire district health authorities are due to take place over the next few months. Audits take place annually and are not confined to specific areas of expenditure. Statutory auditors' reports normally consist simply of the formal certification of a health authority's annual accounts. They only contain additional comments when the auditors wish to raise matters which they feel are of particular concern. While the audits have yet to take place, there is no reason to believe that the pilot project to make use of the private sector facilities for treatment for National Health Service patients will be one.

The advice issued to health authorities by the Department is that they should normally take any issues raised formally in such reports in open session. We do not consider it necessary, therefore, to place copies of the reports in the Library of the House.

Nurses

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what plans he has to reduce student nurses' registered service contributions on National Health Service wards;

(2) what plans he has made to deal with the staffing gap that will result from making student nurses supernumerary on National Health Service wards;

(3) what percentage of the time student nurses presently spend working directly on wards in National Health Service hospitals is devoted purely to training as opposed to giving patient care; and how this calculation is made;

(4) by what date state enrolled nurse training will be phased out;

(5) whether all those state enrolled nurses eligible for conversion courses to train for qualifications to become state registered nurses will have those courses made available to them on request;

(6) what is the level of the student nurse bursary being proposed in plans to implement Project 2000;

(7) if he will make a statement as to the proposed role, annual remuneration and training programme to be carried out by nurse helpers, as defined in Project 2000.

Mr. Newman: In accepting the broad thrust of the project 2000 proposals put forward by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting my right hon. Friend indicated that further work needed to be done before final decisions could be reached on some of the proposals. We need to be satisfied that the UKCC's proposals for widening the entry gate to qualified nurse training and the development of proposals for the new support worker grade will successfully make good the gap in the work force resulting from the fall in school leavers, the cessation of enrolled nurse training and the lower rostered contribution of students.

Implementation of Project 2000 will be phased over a number of years, with the new support worker grade being phased in, in parallel with the phasing out of enrolled nurse training. It is likely that the support worker will undertake a variety of roles, but the exact nature of the work and the training required have yet to be determined.

My right hon. Friend made it clear that agreement to the cessation of enrolled nurse training would be dependent on the successful outcome of the further work referred to above. Meanwhile, health authorities will be encouraged to expand the already growing number of courses for enrolled nurses to convert to the first (registered nurse) level.

We shall set the size of the proposed student nurse bursary, having regard to the level of support for other students among other factors, when we have received firm proposals from the statutory nursing bodies as to the duration and shape of the new courses.

In work for the UKCC, management consultants Price Waterhouse estimated the current service contribution of student nurses to be 59 per cent. In arriving at this figure it took account not only of the time spent in clinical placements as part of the establishment, but the relative efficiency of a student compared with a permanent member of the work force. While Project 2000 will not significantly lessen students' clinical experience, placements in the clinical environment will in future be determined by the educational needs of the students. The detail, and therefore the extent of the reduction in the service contribution which can be restored and relied upon, has yet to be determined.

Written Answers to Questions

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Land Registry

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General how many people were employed at Her Majesty's Land Registry during each of the past 10 years; how many are now employed by the Land Registry; and whether he has any proposals for increasing staffing of the Land Registry.

The Attorney-General: Staff in post as at 1 April in each of the last 10 years:

	Permanent	Casual	Total
1988	8,200·0	728·0	8,928·0
1987	7,310·0	608·0	7,918·0
1986	7,029·0	262·5	7,291·5
1985	6,820·5	329	7,149·5
1984	6,676·5	316·5	6,993·0
1983	5,818·0	712·5	6,530·5
1982	5,546·5	361·5	5,908·0
1981	5,680·5	3·0	5,683·5
1980	5,898·0	45·0	5,943·0
1979	5,543·0	47·0	5,590·0
1978	5,309·0	42·0	5,351·0

There are current proposals for additional resources to meet the Land Registry's growing commitments, which have nearly trebled over the last 10 years.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General what was the cost of staffing the Land Registry during the last year for which records are available; what was the total cost of operating the Land Registry during that year; and what was the total in fees received by the Land Registry during that year.

The Attorney-General: The provisional memorandum trading account for 1987-88 shows staff costs (including superannuation) of £94·04 million, total costs of £121·14 million and income from fees of £141·07 million.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General what is the minimum, maximum and average time taken to process an application to the Land Registry to complete a registration.

The Attorney-General: The minimum processing time can be as low as one week. Applications so processed include the registration of transactions where the register has already been computerised, expedited applications and many straightforward applications where no points arise. The average time for processing substantive applications at the end of May 1988 was 16 weeks.

No information is available as to the maximum processing time, but many complex applications take some considerable time to process and can be dependent on the ability of applicants to deal satisfactorily with departmental requisitions.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General how much profit he estimates was made by the Land Registry during each of the last 10 years for which records are available.

The Attorney-General: The surpluses shown in the Land Registry's memorandum trading accounts for the last 10 years are as follows:

	£ million
1978-79	5·93
1979-80	8·13
1980-81	1·17
1981-82	6·93
1982-83	12·40
1983-84	10·18
1984-85	20·64
1985-86	16·98
1986-87	26·02
1987-88	19·93

The figures for 1987-88 are, as yet, only provisional.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General on what basis fees are payable to the Land Registry for the registration of properties assessed.

The Attorney-General: Section 145 of the Land Registration Act 1925 (as amended) provides for the making of fee orders, under which applications to register conveyances and transfers are charged on an ad valorem basis related to the price or value of the property. Most minor applications are either charged at flat rate or there is no fee. The current fee order is the Land Registration Fee Order 1988.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will establish an inquiry into the operation and staffing of Her Majesty's Land Registry; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No. The National Audit Office has conducted a review of the operations of Her Majesty's Land Registry and the Comptroller and Auditor General reported to Parliament the findings of the review on 28 July 1987. The Committee of Public Accounts has considered the report and the report on its findings is awaited.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General how long he estimates it takes for applications to the Land Registry to be opened; and how long it takes thereafter for required payments received from applicants to be banked.

The Attorney-General: Applications to the Land Registry are opened on the day of receipt and cleared funds in respect of the cheques associated with these applications are normally available five working days later.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will institute a system whereby interest is paid to applicants on moneys received from them, where registration is not completed within two months of the date when fees paid to the Land Registry have been banked.

The Attorney-General: No.

Secret Intelligence Operations (Member's Book)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Attorney-General what action he proposes to take in the light of the publication of the book "The Friends—Britain's Post War Secret Intelligence Operations" written by the hon. Member for Torbay (Mr. Allason).

The Attorney-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 22 June, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. There is no legal action that I propose to take in the light of the publication of this book.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committee on Scottish Affairs

Mr. McLeish: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if he will estimate the administrative costs of the Select Committee on Scottish Affairs in each of the years 1983 to 1987 inclusive.

Mr. Beith: The administrative costs of Select Committees borne on the House of Commons Vote include the costs of visits in the United Kingdom and overseas, the fees and expenses of specialist advisers, witnesses' expenses, entertainment expenses and the costs of preparing minutes of evidence for publication. Details of all such costs in respect of the Scottish Affairs Committee in the financial years 1983-84 to 1986-87 are set out in the Select Committee returns for each Session. The totals of these costs were as follows: 1983-84, £12,162; 1984-85, £38,612; 1985-86, £13,487; and 1986-87, £23,535.

Printing and publishing costs are borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office and are also shown in the Sessional Returns. Staff serving the Committee varied from time to time in this period, and had other responsibilities in addition to their work for the Committee; it is not possible, therefore, to give precise figures of staff costs. For most of this time, however, the staff of the Scottish Affairs Committee consisted of a deputy principal clerk, an assistant clerk and a secretary.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has carried out monitoring exercises in accordance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Brooke: In 1982 the Department carried out a study of career opportunities for women in the Treasury, which included the monitoring of relative success rates for men and women at an internal promotion board from the EO to the HEO grade and a comparison of these rates with relative assessments of long-term potential.

This year the Treasury will be participating in the OMCS review of career development issues, including the promotion process and allocation to duties, by gender and ethnic origin. This will involve monitoring two internal promotion boards during 1988 and calculating the likely representation in five and 10 years' time of women and ethnic minority staff in the grade levels covered by the exercise. This information will be used to judge future equal opportunities performance.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what monitoring of ethnic recruitment to his Department has been undertaken; and what have been the results of that monitoring.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury introduced the ethnic monitoring of recruitment for the AO and AA grades in London in July 1987. This is now carried out continuously. Results suggest that the number of appointments offered to members of ethnic minorities is broadly in proportion to the number of eligible candidates applying from each ethnic group.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what extra allocations of funds have been made, other than those related to the nurses pay settlement, to (a) the Scottish Office, (b) the Northern Ireland Office and (c) the Welsh Office since he published his public expenditure White Paper; and for what purposes.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 21 June 1988]: Only a few low-cost adjustments in 1988-89 amounting to about £3 million in Scotland, and £1 million in Wales, and no change for the Northern Ireland Office.

VAT

Mr. Madel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce legislation to provide that, where a company incurs liability for value added tax or deposits taken from customers for goods not yet supplied, value added tax may be collected on a quarterly basis for all the deposits the company has taken, rather than the company being required to raise a second invoice for each customer's job to account for the value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 20 June 1988]: Existing legislation already provides for this where a company supplies goods to customers who are not registered for VAT, since there is no obligation in such cases to issue a tax invoice for either the deposit or the main supply. However, if a tax invoice were not issued to a registered customer in respect of VAT charged on a deposit, the customer would not, in turn, be able to reclaim the VAT.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Holloway Prison

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many hours a day women spent out of their cells, on C1 psychiatric unit, Holloway, from 14 May to 14 June; and how many women have attended the skills training unit each day during the same period of time.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the period 14 may to 14 June 1988, inmates on C1 unit spent an average of 5·7 hours out of cell each day.

The table gives the number attending the skills training unit each weekday.

Passport Applications

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the current average time taken in dealing with full passport applications at each passport office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave yesterday to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett).

Political Asylum

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants for political asylum in 1988 to date have been refused permission to enter or remain in the United Kingdom; to what countries they have been sent upon refusal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Recent press reports have referred to information gathered weekly from Heathrow and Gatwick airports and Dover, for guidance of management. These describe the number of asylum applications made by passengers arriving at those ports, and the initial action taken. The returns do not trace further action, for example, to grant temporary admission or to remove a passenger who was initially detained.

The latest available refugee statistics are for 1987 and were published earlier this month in Home Office statistical bulletin 16/88, copies of which are in the Library.

Itinerants (Stonehenge)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Wiltshire as to what recent checks have been made by the police concerning the insurance, road fund tax and where applicable MOT certificates of vehicles in the convoy of itinerants at present in the vicinity of Stonehenge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Wiltshire that over the period of the summer solstice police resources were concentrated as a priority on the maintenance of public order and prevention of mass trespass in the Stonehenge area. Nine vehicles were impounded following the attempted occupation of Stonehenge by a group of people on 16 June. Subsequent checks showed that eight of these were unroadworthy and they have been retained by the police.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been received recently by the National Television Licence Records Office from the Walsall metropolitan borough council on behalf of pensioners for the concessionary licence fee; how many were approved and on what dates; and how many submitted before the change in the regulation remain outstanding and for which proportion.

Mr. Renton: Three applications have been received since 1 January this year, all of them before the new regulations came into force. They were approved on 4 February, 29 March and 12 April. There are no applications outstanding. However, I understand the hon. Member has been in correspondence with NTVLRO about some further applications which Walsall metropolitan borough council says it sent earlier this year, but of which there is no record of receipt.

Identity Cards

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards identity cards being issued for all citizens.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The question of the issue of identity cards has been considered from time to time, but we remain to be persuaded that there is a sufficiently strong case for their introduction.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the report from the Home Office advisory committee on drugs relating to anabolic steroids.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 21 June 1988]: We expect to receive advice shortly from the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs on extension of the controls in the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971 to anabolic steroids. A further announcement will be made when this advice has been received and considered.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Education Reform

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the overall additional estimated costs that will be incurred by local authorities as a result of the implementation of the provisions of the new Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: The cost of the progressive implementation of the measures in the Education Reform Bill for schools and further education will vary from authority to authority according to developments already under way. Some redirection of recurrent and capital resources will be required. My right hon. Friend has announced proposals for the education support grants programme in 1989-90, which includes some £65 million new expenditure related to the Bill's provisions for financial delegation and the national curriculum. A significant part of the programme of in-service training grants, currently supporting expenditure of £270 million, will be directed towards the implementation of the Bill's provisions in 1989-90 and subsequent years. There will also be implications for capital programmes within the Government's plans to enable local education authorities and voluntary bodies to spend more than £750 million on improving school buildings between now and 1990-91. The Government have set aside £65 million over the next three years mainly for the development and administration of assessment procedures, for which local authorities will not be charged fees. The Bill's provisions for the transfer of funding responsibility for polytechnics and colleges to central Government will lead to a reduction in spending and grant for local authorities of some £800 million from 1989-90.

Home Education

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children in England are educated at home (a) by their parents and, (b) by local education authority tutors; and what is the cost per child per week.

Mr. Dunn: The precise information requested is not available. Based on local education authority returns to the Department of Education and Science, 8,266 pupils in England were receiving education otherwise than at school in January 1987 under arrangements made by the authorities. The number includes those being taught in hospitals, excluding hospital special schools, in other groups such as units for spastics, assessment centres and community homes as well as at home. Figures for the various categories are not available; nor are the separate costs of this provision.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the cost of educating a child (a) at a state primary school and (b) at a state secondary school in England.

Mr. Dunn: The average net institutional recurrent expenditure per pupil in England in 1986-87 was £900 in maintained primary and £1,340 in maintained secondary schools.

Net institutional recurrent expenditure covers the cost of salaries and wages, premises and certain supplies and services. It does not cover the cost of school meals, central administration and inspection, debt charges or revenue contributions to capital outlay.

Truancy

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many prosecutions for truancy of pupils aged (a) under 11 years of age, (b) 11 years, (c) 12 years, (d) 13 years, (e) 14 years and (f) 15 years were instituted in each of the past five academic years;

(2) what is the average time taken to bring court proceedings against parents whose children play truant from school.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department does not collect statistics on court proceedings related to truancy.

Itinerants (Stonehenge)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are taken to ensure that children of school age living in vehicles attached to the convoy of itinerants currently in the vicinity of Stonehenge are educated in accordance with the provisions of section 36 of the Education Act 1944; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is the duty of parents to ensure that their children of compulsory school age receive efficient full-time education suited to their age, ability and aptitude and any special educational needs they may have, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise. It is for local education authorities to ensure that the parents of any children of compulsory school age in their area are performing this duty.

Children (Statistics)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide figures for the number of children in England (a) in care, (b) in psychiatric units and (c) in residential schools for non-attendance at school; and if he will give the overall costs and costs per week per child for each case.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that not all the figures requested are available; the available information is as follows.

At 31 March 1986, it is estimated that there were 66,700 children in care of local authorities in England.

In 1985-86, the total expenditure on children in care was £406 million, an average cost of £144 per child per week (provisional figure). Expenditure on some items, including administration and field work, cannot be separately identified for children in care and is not included here. Children on whom little or no expenditure has been incurred (for example children in care living at home) have been excluded in calculating the average cost.

There were 500 children aged under 16 years resident in NHS mental illness hospitals and units in England at 31 December 1986.

It is estimated that there were 1,900 children in care for non-attendance at school under section 1(2)(c) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 at 31 March 1986. It is not known how many of these children are in residential schools.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Regional Selective Assistance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the average payment of regional selective assistance in (a) development areas and (b) intermediate areas under (i) the old system of grants and (ii) the new system.

Mr. Atkins: The average payment of regional selective assistance by my Department per completed project where the offer was made in the period 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1988, when the revised regional development grant scheme was terminated, was £58,862 in development areas and £33,359 in intermediate areas. There have not yet been any payments to projects which have received offers since 1 April 1988. Regional selective assistance has been interpreted as covering project and training grants.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the average payment per job for regional selective assistance in (a) development areas and (b) intermediate areas.

Mr. Atkins: The average payment per job by my Department for regional selective assistance on completed cases where the offer was made in the period 1 April 1985 to 31 March 1988 was £2,710 in development areas and £2,099 in intermediate areas. Regional selective assistance has been interpreted as covering project and training grants.

Leeds-Bradford Airport

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has made of the likely impact on industry in Yorkshire of an extension of operating hours at Leeds-Bradford airport.

Mr. Atkins: Both the Association of Yorkshire and Humberside Chambers of Commerce and the Yorkshire region of the Confederation of British Industry have recently supported the case for extension of operating hours at the airport. I see no reason to doubt that an extension would be of benefit to industry in the region.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has made of the likely impact on industry in Yorkshire and Humberside region of a high speed rail link through the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Consideration of high-speed rail links through the Channel tunnel from regional centres is still at an early stage. My Department keeps closely in touch with British Rail and business nationally and regionally over the way services can be developed once the tunnel is open in 1993, in order to maximise the benefits to the business community.

PRIME MINISTER

European Monetary System

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the operation of the exchange rate mechanism of the European monetary system.

The Prime Minister: I will be discussing a number of aspects of monetary co-operation with my European colleagues at the European Council meeting to be held in Hanover on 27-28 June, but the Government's position on the matter to which my hon. Friend refers is well known.

Security Services (Employment Policy)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister whether the security services are an equal opportunity employer; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The legislation governing equal opportunities recognises the need for exceptions in relation to members of the armed forces and the safeguarding of national security.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the take-up of certificated and standard housing benefit separately in 1985, showing in each case (a) the total likely to be entitled to benefit, (b) the proportion receiving benefit, (c) the numbers not receiving benefit, (d) estimated amount of benefit unclaimed, and (e) the average weekly amount unclaimed, broken down into pensioners, sick and disabled, families with children, and one-parent families.

Mr. Portillo: We expect to publish housing benefit take-up estimates based on the 1985 family expenditure survey by the end of the year.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of senior citizens who have lost (a) some and (b) all of their housing benefit as a result of changes in regulations implemented in April 1988 by region for (i) Scotland, (ii) England, (iii) Wales and (iv) Northern Ireland.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Patient Information Systems

Mr. Michael Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the extent to which computerised patient information systems and inter-hospital information systems have assisted development of the desired service cost indicators; and where such systems have been implemented.

Mr. Newton: All district health authorities have systems for processing the cost and activity data required to derive specialty costs, the major components of which will be drawn from computerised patient information systems.

Child Benefit

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much would be saved if child benefit were given in full up to £100 a week gross earnings, and phased out between £100 and £140 gross earnings for one child and £100 and £180 gross earnings for two children, if no payment were made for more than two children.

Mr. Nicholas Scott: The precise savings from such a measure would depend on the exact nature of the scheme adopted. However, assuming that families who lose child benefit would be compensated, as appropriate, through income support and housing benefit, and also through family credit (via the addition of £7·25 per week to the child credits), the estimated net saving, in a full year at 1988-89 prices and benefit levels, would be of the order of £2·7 billion.

Income Support

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the value of income support, including premiums where appropriate, for (a) a single person aged under 25 years, (b) a single person aged over 25 years, (c) a couple over the age of 18 years, (d) a couple with two children aged under 11 years and (e) a one-parent family with one child under 11 years of age as a proportion of average net earnings for all males and all manual males.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is given in the table:

Income support benefit rates—as percentages of average earnings (11 April 1988)

Recipients under pension age	[1] Per cent.	[2] Per cent.
Single person
Aged 16-17	11·1	13·3
Aged 18-24	15·0	17·8
Aged 25 and over	19·2	22·8
Married couple	28·4	33·5
Married couple plus 2 children	37·3	43·4
One parent family with one child (under 11)
Aged 16-17	21·2	24·9
Aged 18 and over	28·7	33·6

[1] Average net earnings: All males.
[2] Average net earnings: All manual male workers.
Notes:
1. Net average earnings are taken to be provisional gross average earnings less tax and national insurance contributions at the non-contracted out rate, plus child benefit where appropriate.
2. The calculations for one parent families incorporate the additional personal tax allowance in respect of a one parent family.

Erith and District Hospital

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received during the past six months on the future of Erith and district hospital.

Mrs. Currie: One letter has been received from a member of the public.

1991 Census

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his proposals for the 1991 census are on schedule.

Mrs. Currie: Yes.

Orthotists and Prosthetists

Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received representations from the Orthotists and Prosthetists Training and Education Committee, the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation and other organisations on the need to increase the number of trained orthotists in England and Wales; if he has received representations of the best methods for training such professional staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No representations have been received on this subject. The Orthotists and Prosthetists Training Council is currently considering future training needs for orthotists.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give his best estimate of the anticipated shortfall in the number of trained prosthetists in England and Wales; what action is being taken on behalf of his Department in (a) the short term and (b) the long term to overcome the shortfall; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Orthotic and Prosthetic Training and Education Council is currently considering the future training needs of prosthetists, in consultation with the Disablement Services Authority, which is concerned with prosthetic services in England.

Lost or Stolen Payments

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what, on average, is the waiting time by region for a claimant reporting a payment lost or stolen to be informed of the outcome of inquiries.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the period laid down in his Department's guidelines for dealing with a claimant who reports that a payment is lost or stolen and the claimant being told of the result in investigations; and whether he will publish the guidelines in the Official Report.

Mr. Portillo: The administrative procedures followed when a claimant reports a loss of benefit vary according to the benefit concerned, the method of payment and the circumstances of the loss.

Itinerants (Stonehenge)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of benefits currently being paid by his Department to claimants who are living in vehicles attached to the convoy of itinerants currently in the Stonehenge area of Wiltshire; what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that no benefits are paid in respect of fraudulent claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: A total of £6,383·57 has been paid in benefit to claimants who were part of the convoy in the Stonehenge area of Wiltshire. All income support claimants are required to produce evidence of identity and all statements are subject to verification.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for 1979 and for the latest available year the total figures showing the change in the number of beds in the areas covered by the following health authorities: North West Thames, South West Thames, North East Thames, South East Thames, Basingstoke, Winchester, Portsmouth, Southampton, Isle of Wight, Milton Keynes, Aylesbury, Wycombe, East Berkshire, West Berkshire and Oxfordshire; and if he will also give the totals for acute bed changes.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 16 June 1988]: The available information is given in the table.

Average daily number of available beds

[1] Data for 1979 and 1986 is not comparable due to NHS restructuring in April 1982
[2] Milton Keynes is included in Aylesbury Vale for 1979

Patients (Expenditure)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the average annual expenditure per patient in 1986-87 by (a) the Northern regional health authority and (b) Sunderland district health authority.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 24 March 1988]: For patient treatment costing purposes all hospitals are classified into a series of standard types which reflect the principal use to which their beds are allocated and an overall average cost or expenditure per patient is thus not determined.

In terms of 1986-87 per capita expenditure (that is, total revenue expenditure on hospital and community health services, etc. per head of resident population) the figure for Sunderland health authority (£206) is typical of the overall average for all sixteen district health authorities within the northern region (£208).

Smokeless Tobacco Products

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will detail the scientific and research evidence which has been produced to him in support of the proposed ban on all smokeless tobacco products;

(2) on what statistical scientific and analytical information his Department has based its proposed ban on all smokeless tobacco products.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 23 march 1988, c. 153-54]: A number of references were omitted from the list placed in the Library. A revised list has been placed in the Library. The Government's proposals rest on the evidence listed and the conclusions based on it of the committee on carcinogenicity of chemicals in food, consumer products and the environment, those of the independent scientific committee on smoking and health, the report of the United States Surgeon General of April 1986 on evidence of links between smokeless tobacco products and oral cancer, the findings set out in the International Agency on Research into Cancer's report on evaluation of carcinogenetic risks to humans (volume 37) and the views of a WHO group of experts meeting in June 1987. A press release summarising their views has also been placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Contracts (Regional Policy)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration is given to regional policy implications when contracts are placed by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: As I said to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 10 November 1987, at column 158, it is our policy to place equipment orders, wherever practicable, by competitive tendering. This policy has brought significant benefit to the defence budget and to the taxpayer and has promoted the health and efficiency of the defence industry. Where appropriate, however, we do take into account wider, relevant factors, including local employment levels.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to state how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) woman and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Sainsbury: As at 1 May 1988 the number of women industrial and non-industrial employees was 40,800 (28·6 per cent.). As there are some 430 different non-industrial grades within the MOD the following breakdown relates to stated grades and equivalents: grades 7 and above, 135 (2·8 per cent.), SEO/HEO, 1,452 (7·1 per cent.), EO, 4,141 (16·5 per cent.), AO and below 24,791 (65·2 per cent.), industrial grades 10,281 (19 per cent.). In common with what is happening in other Government Departments, the voluntary survey of the ethnic origins of MOD staff is being conducted in six phases. The results of the three phases completed were published in December 1987 by the Cabinet Office. The figures from the first three phases show that the number of respondents from the ethnic minorities employed in the MOD was as follows: grade 7 and above 31 (1 per cent.), SEO/HEO and equivalent 91 (0·9 per cent.), EO and equivalents 148 (1·2 per cent.), AO/AA and equivalents 598 (2·9 per cent.). The overall figure was 868 (1·9 per cent.). No figures are available yet for industrial staff.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken to encourage more applicants from the ethnic minorities; and when and with what results and by which sections within his Department such positive action was taken.

Mr. Sainsbury: The MOD has implemented a programme of positive action to encourage more applicants from the ethnic minorities. The actions already taken include advertising in the ethnic press, featuring ethnic minorities in new recruitment brochures, sponsoring students under the Windsor fellowship scheme, and participating in a scheme to provide training for potential executive officer recruits. Further actions are being given consideration.

The actions are primarily being undertaken by MOD recruitment authorities serving units located in areas with a high ethnic minority working population. It is too early to say whether this programme of positive action has had an effect on the number of ethnic minorities applying for posts in the MOD.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what efforts he has taken to increase the number of part-time posts in his Department and with what results; and how many and what percentage of such part-time posts are occupied by women and by people form ethnic minorities, respectively.

Mr. Sainsbury: As at 1 May 1988 there were 3,849 part-time posts in the MOD. Of these 3,545 (92 per cent.) are occupied by women. Figures for ethnic minorities in part-time posts are not available. The MOD actively encourages part-time working and job-sharing. As part of the MOD equal opportunities plan, instructions on part-time working have been issued within the Department, and job-sharing trials are being conducted in a number of local areas.

Submarines

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will now make a statement on the disposal of the Dreadnought submarine;

(2) whether he has made a decision on the disposal of Polaris submarines once they are decommissioned.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answers I gave to the hon. Member on 28 January 1988, at column 307.

Persian Gulf (Naval Co-operation)

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the arrangements for co-operation between the Royal Navy and other Western navies in the Gulf.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Following discussions held in the framework of the WEU between the United Kingdom, Belgium and the Netherlands, the three Governments have agreed to integrate their mine countermeasures forces operating in the Gulf with effect from 1 July. The three Royal Navy, one Belgian and one Dutch MCMVs will operate as a joint force, with logistic support provided by RN or RFA vessels. RN destroyers or frigates of the Armilla Patrol will provide any necessary protection for mine countermeasures operations. Operational tasking will be co-ordinated from the headquarters of the RN's commander-in-chief fleet at Northwood, although in the case of the Belgians and Dutch ultimate command over their own ships will be retained by their respective national naval authorities. The British commander of the integrated flotilla will be assisted by a staff officer provided alternately by the Belgian and Dutch navies. The joint operation has been designated Calendar after the world war H code name for the successful tri-national mine clearance of the Scheldt estuary in 1944-45.

Overall, the United Kingdom remains committed to close co-ordination with other Western navies also working to preserve international freedom of navigation in Gulf waters, and the arrangements for co-operation between the Royal Navy and other Western navies in the Gulf remain in other respects unchanged.

ENVIRONMENT

Stud Farms (Rates)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount was collected in rates from stud farms and other horse breeding establishments in each of the last two years; if he has any estimate of the amount due in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Information on rateable values and rates paid by stud farms is not available centrally. We have announced that an exemption from rates for these buildings which are occupied together with agricultural land or buildings and which are below a specified size threshold, will be provided for by Government amendment to the Local Government Finance Bill. It is envisaged that this provision will result in the great majority of those that keep one or two horses for their own enjoyment or for breeding on a small scale being exempt.

Council House Sales

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the continuing delay in the purchase by Mr. W. B. Hamond of his home at 12b Mount Adon park, London SE22 0DT from Southwark borough council.

Mrs. Roe: I am most concerned about the continuing delay in this case, which Southwark says is due to a shortage of valuers. I understand that a section 125 offer notice is expected to be served in early July.

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has regarding the reasons for the delay in the purchase by Mrs. R. Newton of her home at 10 Denesmead, Herne Hill, London SE24 from Southwark borough council.

Mrs. Roe: I understand that industrial action has caused a delay in the dispatch of the draft lease. The council says that it expects to dispatch it next month.

Homelessness

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give his latest estimate of the numbers of single homeless persons in London.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) on 22 June.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the extra £24·1 million to be made available to local authorities to combat homelessness constitutes new expenditure; from which Vote it will be financed; to which authorities, and based upon what criteria, these moneys will be paid; how much each receiving authority will receive; what guidelines will be given to authorities about how they may spend these moneys; and what restrictions will be placed upon its use.

Mrs. Roe: The extra money is not voted expenditure. It forms part of the £141·7 million increase in this Department's cash limits arising from a local authority underspend in 1987-88. £21·1 million of the £24·1 million extra is to be targeted on authorities with the most severe homelessness pressures. Decisions on specific allocations have not yet been taken, but they will reflect numbers of homeless acceptances and in bed-and-breakfast accommodation. Whilst it is our intention that these additional resources will be used to alleviate homelessness, it will be for the local authorities to make the final decision on the use of individual allocations.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many appointments have been made to the National Rivers Authority to date, stating positions and salary levels.

Mr. Moynihan: No appointments will be made to the National Rivers Authority until it has been established by the main water privatisation legislation, which we hope to introduce next Session. As has already been announced, my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Crickhowell has been appointed chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee, which will advise Ministers on the reorganisation of the water authorities needed to prepare for the creation of a separate NRA. The committee will be assisted by a team of civil servants and consultants under a grade 3 civil servant.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the result of his consultation exercise on waste regulation and disposal.

Mr. Moynihan: We expect to make an announcement very soon.

Trade in Endangered Species

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he proposes to take to secure better compliance with the convention on the international trade in endangered species by signatory nations; and whether he will make proposals for the strengthening and more effective enforcement of the convention.

Mr. Moynihan: The United Kingdom vigorously supports the convention and, together with our partners in the European Community, implements the provisions of the convention through EC regulations 3626/82 and 3418/83.

We shall be considering with our European partners whether it would be appropriate to submit any proposals for securing better compliance with the convention to the next meeting of the conference of the parties to the convention to be held in October 1989.

Leasehold Valuation Tribunal (Appeals)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the arrangements for appealing against the decision of the leasehold valuation tribunal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department and the Welsh Office have written to a wide range of interested parties inviting comments on a consultation paper about the arrangements for appealing against the decision of the leasehold valuation tribunal in connection with the operation of the Leasehold Reform Act 1967. I am arranging for copies of the paper to be placed in the Library.

Rating Reform

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes any concessions concerning the uniform business rate for charity shops.

Mr. Howard: We are currently considering representations on this matter which have been received during proceedings on the Local Government Finance Bill in another place.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 16 June, Official Report, column 248-49, when he expects to have the necessary information to estimate the effect of exempt individuals including student nurses, on the likely levels of central grant and community charge for particular areas; and how often that information will be updated.

Mr. Howard: It will be necessary to have this information in good time for the introduction of the community charge in England and Wales on 1 April 1990, and to update it each year thereafter.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish an updated version of figures K1 and K3 on pages 130 and 132 of Cmnd. 9714, using the most recent available statistics.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 20 June 1988]: An updated version of figure K3 is provided in the table. Data to update figure K1 are not readily available and could be collated only at disproportionate cost.

Merseyside Task Force

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the staffing levels of the Merseyside task force in every year since its inception.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The following are the numbers:

Year	Number
1981	27
1982	27
1983	24
1984	39
1985	43
1986	51
1987	59
1988	59

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what plans he has to appoint a new director of Merseyside task force;

(2) what review is being carried out into the functions of the Merseyside task force; who is in charge of such a review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 June 1988]: An internal management review is being carried out by two of my officials. Decisions about future senior management of the task force will be taken after the review has been completed.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received in respect of the future of the Merseyside task force; and what has been his response.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 June 1988]: I have received representations that the task force has been valuable in promoting the regeneration of Merseyside and should remain in operation. I have indicated in my response that I intend to retain a strong office in Merseyside.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what role is being planned for the Merseyside task force in the administration of the Government's policies for the inner cities.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 21 June 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 13 June, at column 21.

Chimneys (Lining)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce grants for lining of chimneys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I have been asked to reply.

The existing arrangements for renovation grants can include, at local authorities' discretion, works for the provision of chimney linings where such works form part of a wider package of renovation. I have no plans to introduce a specific grant for such provision.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agricultural Spending

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current annual expenditure incurred by Her Majesty's Government on items relating to agriculture which were, prior to 1979, financed in part or whole by the European Economic Community; and if he will specify the nature of the functions involved.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 21 June 1988]: All the costs of operations in the United Kingdom under the CAP are ultimately borne by the United Kingdom, either directly or via our contribution to the EC budget. Estimates for United Kingdom expenditure in 1987-88 on CAP schemes which are fully or partly-funded by the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund (EAGGF) are given in the table.

For the guarantee section, all the schemes listed were in operation prior to 1979, although Community reimbursement for intervention costs was reduced by 25 per cent. of the standard amounts fixed for this purpose only with effect from December 1985. Community funding for guarantee section expenditure was also reduced in 1987-88 by the introduction of a two-month delay in advances from the EAGGF. As a result of this, funding for expenditure in February and March 1988 was not received until the 1988-89 financial year.

For the guidance section, most of the schemes listed, or their predecessors, were in operation prior to 1979. It would not be practical to provide figures which exclude all those schemes which did not exist before 1979.

	Total expenditure £ million	EAGGF funding £ million

Brewers Society Code of Practice

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has had from the National Licensed Victuallers Association to make the Brewers Society code of practice a legally binding document; what action he intends taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave to our hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-West (Dr. Hampson) on Tuesday 14 June 1988, at column 135.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he hopes to achieve at the next EC Council of Ministers meeting with regard to the fishing industry in general, and the inshore fleets in particular.

Mr. Gummer [pursuant to his reply, 13 May 1988, c. 290]: I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers in Luxembourg on 23-24 June.

The Council agreed an amendment to the marketing regulation which amongst other things provided for carry-over premiums to assist the private storage of herring and mackerel. This should facilitate smoother marketing of species of considerable importance to the United Kingdom industry. The Commission will also review the operation of the carry-over premium system for all species within the next two years. A widening of the margin of tolerance in the price at which herring and mackerel can be withdrawn from the market was agreed, which will also assist our industry. In addition, the new regulation limits the total amount of subsidy which can be paid in the tuna sector, where expenditure has been growing significantly.

The Council also agreed an amendment to the technical conservative regulation which reduces the minimum landing size of nephrops in the Irish sea and the seas of western Scotland to acceptable levels. The Council endorsed the requests of the United Kingdom and France for further scientific work to be undertaken before any action is taken to revise the technical conservation measures in respect of nephrops in the North sea and the Bay of Biscay. I again drew the Council's attention to the problem of the changing migratory pattern of western mackerel and warned that we may wish to return to the Council later to request flexibility in the fishing across the 4°W line should this prove to be necessary.

The Council had a first round of discussions on amendments to the control regulation which would facilitate better enforcement in the case of vessels landing in a member state other than its flag state. I explained the need for urgent action and the Council agreed to reach an early decision on this question. I pressed the Commission to make proposals as soon as possible, on the basis of the evidence we have given it, to increase the precautionary TACs for Channel cod and plaice, and the Commission undertook to consider this request urgently. This was a useful Council meeting in which progress was made on a number of issues of importance to the United Kingdom fishing industry.

Radioactive Contamination

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make available in the form of a map the figures for milk and sheepmeat tests for caesium 137 included in "Radionuclide Levels in Food, Animals, and Agricultural Products 1987," for the areas of Clwyd and Gwynedd only, showing as accurately as possible the sampling sites.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have been asked to reply.

The document contains over 160,000 milk and sheepmeat results for Gwynedd and Clwyd, and the cost of mapping in the form requested would be disproportionate.

ENERGY

B205 Corridor (Decontamination)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will seek to have placed in the Library copies of the British Nuclear Fuels plc video recordings of aspects of the B205 corridor incident clean-up and decontamination operations of about June 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that from time to time video recordings are taken to assist in the planning of, and briefing for, engineering work. Although the cassettes used for these recordings are reused as a matter of course, some recordings presently remain of the —205 corridor work of June-July 1987. As it is not BNFL's normal practice to issue these recordings, I shall ask its chairman to write to the hon. Member to arrange a suitably convenient time for viewing.

Sacked Miners

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has concerning the number of miners in the north-east area of British Coal who are not yet re-employed, having lost their jobs during the miners' strike.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Questions on the dismissal and re-employment of mineworkers are matters for the management of the British Coal Corporation.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to fund a Government-sponsored seismological survey using the latest available techniques in order to establish the oil and gas potential around the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: There are no current plans to fund such a survey.

SCOTLAND

Patients (Waiting Times)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board for each year since 1970 the mean in-patient and out-patient waiting time and two standard deviations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on waiting times is available for health boards from 1975—the first full year of boards' operation. The mean waiting times for in-patient treatment are given in the table. They refer to heterogeneous groups of specialties, within each of which the distribution of waiting times is not symmetrical. In these circumstances, an overall standard deviation is not meaningful. The sharp increases in 1979 and 1983 reflect industrial action in the NHS. Mean waiting times for out-patients are not available.

Scottish Joint Negotiating Committee for Further Education

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are his plans for the future of the Scottish Joint Negotiating Committee for Further Education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: In the Government's view the 40-strong statutory committee has proved a cumbersome and ineffective forum for negotiating the pay and conditions of academic staff in the local authority further education colleges and in the centrally-funded colleges.

In large measure this seems to be because the two sectors have different funding sources, the staff have different conditions of service and the pressures facing management are different. Over the last six years management and staff sides have done their best to establish the committee as an effective forum for negotiation, but progress has been disappointing. Moreover, from time to time in recent years we have received representations from both management and staff interests about the unsatisfactory nature of the present arrangements.

In the last two negotiation rounds the differing interests of the two sectors have been recognised by both management and staff interests with the creation of two separate negotiating groups. The 1987 negotiations resulted in two separate packages which reflected the differing priorities of the two sectors. In the 1988 negotiations a settlement has just been reached for the further education, but not for the centrally-funded, sector, and the expectation must be that in due course there will again be a different outcome affecting pay and conditions in the two sectors.

In the light of this evidence of the difficulties inherent in working within the present SJNC(FE), I intend taking the first legislative opportunity to abolish the committee. I do not wish to reach a conclusion at the present time on the precise form of any replacement negotiating machinery, as this is a matter on which the interests concerned in the two sectors will themselves have views.

My officials stand ready to assist the various parties in devising alternative arrangements which better reflect the needs of management and staff at all levels in the two sectors.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which regional council areas service men are exempt from requirements to register for the poll tax.

Mr. Lang: In general, adult United Kingdom service personnel and their families who are solely or mainly resident in the area of a local authority will require to register for and pay the personal community charge in the normal manner. The position of those United Kingdom service personnel in Scotland who are exceptionally mobile and for whom individual registration for the personal community charge would be impracticable is the subject of continuing discussion between the Scottish Office and the Ministry of Defence. These arrangements will not apply to visiting forces which, in fulfilment of the United Kingdom's international treaty obligations, will be exempt from personal community charge liability. Provisions covering the position of visiting forces are contained in the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what discussions he has held with the United States Government over registration and payment of community charge by United States service men stationed in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: None. The Ministry of Defence is the principal point of contact between Her Majesty's Government and the United States forces stationed in the United Kingdom. That Department is in regular contact with the United States authorities on a wide range of matters, including the implications for visiting forces of the introduction of the community charge.

Leukaemia (Rosyth)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to inquire into the link between leukaemia and radiation in the Rosyth area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment (COMARE) has completed consideration of the incidence of leukaemia occurring in young people near Dounreay and has published its report, copies of which are in the Library. We have referred to COMARE information on the incidence of leukaemia throughout Scotland, including incidence in the vicinity of Rosyth. We will continue to be guided by the committee on any further work which is necessary in relation to specific Scottish sites.

East Kilbride Development Corporation

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Lang) last met officials of the East Kilbride development corporation; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Lang: I last met officials of the East Kilbride development corporation on Tuesday 7 June, when I had the pleasure of announcing the establishment in the new town of the Motorola Semiconductor Company's European design centre. We discussed the successful conclusion of Motorola's plans to bring to East Kilbride the full range of its manufacturing, assembly, test and design operations and to create the largest centre of its type in Europe.

Schools (Staffing Review)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the outcome of his Department's review of staffing standards in Scottish schools will be available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A review of the staffing needs of secondary, primary and special schools has been completed and I shall be issuing today for consultation new guidance on staffing standards based on its outcome. This will replace existing standards, which date from the mid-1970s. The new standards are based on existing and immediately foreseeable demands on teachers' time. They reflect the weight of classroom duties, but also take into account the need for specialist teachers, management time required to service school boards and for other purposes, and the importance of adequate provision for small primary schools and for pupils from eithnic minorities and from deprived backgrounds. They should also give authorities and head teachers more flexibility in the disposition of their staff resources than hitherto.

The standards offer a framework for the staff complements needed to implement current educational policies, and they are commended as an indicative guide to staffing levels. I shall be monitoring the effect of their application on schools from 1989-90, and as changes occur in the running of schools, for example, through the progressive delegation of financial and managerial responsibility to school level, I shall be ready to review the form of guidance on staffing for the longer term.

Application of the revised standards would have increased by about 2,700 the teacher numbers taken directly into account within the RSG settlement covering 1988-89. Financial provision for education within this year's settlement included an unallocated margin pending completion of the review of staffing standards. The new standards will be used as the basis of provision for the cost of teachers' salaries within the revenue support grant settlement for 1989-90.

Further Education (College Principals)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will establish a review into the further education negotiating machinery with a view to offering principals of further education colleges a negotiating right on the Scottish joint negotiating committee for teaching staff in further education, or its successor body.

Mr. Rifkind [holding answer 22 June 1988]: I refer to the reply I gave today to a question from the hon. Member for Cumbernauld and Kilsyth (Mr. Hogg) in which I announced my intention to abolish the SJNC(FE) at the first legislative opportunity. I hope that the parties concerned in the local authority sector will discuss how best to represent the interests of the principals in discussing the form of replacement negotiating machinery.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Day Care

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the average cost per day care place in Northern Ireland for each year from 1976-87 according to type of day centre.

Mr. Needham: The information is not collected in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Residential Care

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state for residential care in the personal social services in Northern Ireland the average cost per resident for each year from 1976-87 by type of establishment.

Mr. Needham: The cost per resident week by type of establishment is shown in the table.

Hospital Patients

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state for Northern Ireland the average cost per in-patient day or case by hospital type from 1971-72 up to the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Needham: The average cost per in-patient day by hospital type for 1978-79 and subsequent years is shown in the following table. Costs for years prior to 1978-79 are not available on a comparable basis.

NHS (Patients)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was, for acute services, the number of day cases, out-patient attendances and in-patient cases treated in Northern Ireland in each year from 1976-77 together with the expenditure after allowing for general inflation, expenditure after allowing for hospital and community health service inflation and the average stay per patient.

Maternity Services

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was, for maternity services in Northern Ireland, the number of in-patient cases, the expenditure after allowing for general inflation, the expenditure after allowing for hospital and community health service inflation, the number of out-patient attendances and the length of stay per patient for each year since 1976-77, together with the perinatal mortality rate.

Mr. Needham: The health and social services boards' accounts are not maintained in such a way as to permit the expenditure on maternity services to be separately identified. The statistical information requested is as follows:

Maternity services in Northern Ireland

Mentally Ill People

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what, for the personal social services for the mentally ill in Northern Ireland, was the number of day centre places, expenditure after allowing for general inflation, expenditure after allowing for personal social services inflation and the number of residents in each year from 1976-77.

Mr. Needham: The information is not collected in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Constitution (Referendum)

Mr. Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will arrange for a referendum on the constitutional position to be held in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Tom King: I have no current plans to do so.

Mental Handicap Hospitals

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of patients leaving mental handicap hospitals and units after a stay of five or more years in Northern Ireland and by area board.

Mr. Needham: The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

National Health Service

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of National Health Service community psychiatric nursing staff, mental illness, in Northern Ireland and each area board at 30 September in each of the years 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986; and what was the percentage change between 1983 and 1986.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Year[1]	Eastern Board	Northern Board	Southern Board	Western Board	Northern Ireland
1983	22	8	10	22	62
1984	25	9	10	20	64

1986	35	8	11	25	79
Percentage change
1983-	59	Nil	10	14	27

[1] Information on the numbers of community psychiatric nurses is collected on an ad hoc basis and therefore it is not possible to give information as at 30 September in each year.

Vehicle Imports

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many new (a) motorcars, (b) vans, and (c) other vehicles have been brought into Northern Ireland from the Irish Republic in each of the last 12 months for which figures are available; how many in each category have been listed as personal imports; how many have been imported for sale by the importer; and what percentage of total sales in each month in each category these imports represent.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The information requested is set out in the tables:

Irish Language

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the role of Irish in the school curriculum has been discussed at meetings of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 21 June 1988]: The Intergovernmental Conference has discussed Irish language questions and education questions on a number of occasions, as reported in the joint statements issued after such meetings. The details of conference proceedings are confidential.

Tolls

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish in the Official Report a list of road, bridge and tunnel facilities in Northern Ireland for which tolls are levied, with a note for each entry of (a) the name and address of the responsible authority (b) whether it produces published accounts for that specific facility (c) which Minister is responsible for authorising changes in such tolls, and (d) on which (i) public expenditure programme and (ii) class, vote and subhead, the toll revenue and associated expenditure is to be found.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 June 1988]: There are no roads, bridges or tunnel facilities in the Northern Ireland public road system for which tolls are levied.

WALES

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department's ethnic monitoring exercise commenced; when he expects it to be concluded; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. and learned Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 16 June 1988. A survey of the ethnic origin of staff in my Department commenced on 20 April 1988 and was concluded on 31 May. A 94 per cent. rate of return was achieved. The results of the survey are currently being analysed by the Cabinet Office (Office of the Minister of the Civil Service).

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what positive action he has taken to remedy past inequalities in employment practices in his Department in compliance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively, other than those measures specified in his answer to the hon. and learned Member for Leicester, West dated 27 May, at columns 397-8.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 27 May. Since my earlier reply agreement has been reached with the trade union side in my Department on equal opportunities framework papers covering monitoring of policies, training, promotion and job allocation.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has appointed an equal opportunities officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: An equal opportunities officer has been designated within my Department's personnel management division. The officer has responsibility for advising senior management on the application and monitoring of the Civil Service policy on non-discrimination. The officer also provides advice on the implementation of the programme of action on equal opportunities recommended by the joint review group of the Civil Service National Whitley council's joint personnel management committee.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many and what percentage of officers in each grade and overall in his Department are (a) women and (b) from ethnic minorities, respectively;

(2) what were the results of the survey recently completed to provide information on the ethnic origin of staff in his Department; and how many, and what percentage of staff in each unit or grade were found to be of Afro-Caribbean and Asian origin, respectively.

Mr. Peter Walker: The details requested by the hon. and learned Gentleman for female staff in my Department are set out in the table. The information sought about staff from ethnic minorities is not available, since an ethnic monitoring staff-in-post survey of the Welsh Office has only very recently been completed and the results are currently being analysed by the Cabinet Office (Office of the Minister of the Civil Service).

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has any plans to improve equality of opportunity for women and for people from ethnic minorities in all grades of his Department, in connection with employment, training and promotion, respectively.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department, as an equal opportunities employer, is conducting a continuing policy of encouraging women and members of ethnic minorities to play their full part in its work. The matter is kept under review by a joint management-union working party. Specific issues currently under consideration include a feasibility study of day care facilities, training for women managers and efforts to build links with schools with significant numbers of children from ethnic minorities.

Home Education

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has to how many children in Wales are educated at home (a) by their parents and (b) by local education authority tutors; and what is the cost per week per child.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Information on children educated at home is not collected by the Department.

Non-attendance at School

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide figures for the number of children in Wales (a) in care, (b) in psychiatric units and (c) in residential schools for non-attendance at school; and if he will give the overall costs and costs per week per child.

Mr. Peter Walker: There were 3,481 children in care on 31 March 1987. The number of resident patients aged under 16, in mental illness hospitals and units, as at 5 April 1987, was 38. Information on expenditure in respect of children in mental illness hospitals and units is not available centrally. Information is not collected centrally on residential schools for non-attendance at school. However, it is estimated that 84 children were in care under a care order for non-attendance at school. It is not known how many of these children were in residential schools. The provisional 1986-87 current expenditure by local authorities on children in care was £15·7 million and the average cost per child per week was £110.

Pupil Costs

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the cost of educating a child at (a) a state primary school and (b) a state secondary school in Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The costs to local authorities of educating a child in Wales in 1986-87 were as follows:

	£ (out-turn)
State primary schools	909
State secondary schools	1,320

Language Teaching

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many children educated in maintained schools in Wales passed Russian A-level in 1987; if he is satisfied with the quantity and standard of Russian teaching in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many children educated in maintained schools in Wales passed Italian A-level in 1987; if he is satisfied with the quantity and standard of Italian teaching in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many children educated in maintained schools in Wales passed Spanish A-level in 1987; if he is satisfied with the quantity and standard of Spanish teaching in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he is satisfied with the quantity and standard of German teaching in Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(5) if he is satisfied with the quantity and standard of French teaching in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The policy statement "Modern Languages in the School Curriculum" recognised recent improvements in the nature and provision of foreign language teaching. While levels of performance taken as a whole have improved, there is evidence that much higher standards can be achieved, especially in oral communication. Recent attention by LEAs in service training programmes, and the work of LEA advisers, will enhance the quality of foreign language teaching and will help raise standards of achievement. I hope to see, also, a greater diversity in the range of languages offered in schools.

Implementation of the national curriculum will mean that all pupils up to the age of 16 in maintained secondary schools will in due course study a modern language, which will, in Wales, be in addition to Welsh.

The numbers of pupils educated at maintained schools who passed Spanish, Italian and Russian at A-level in 1987 in Wales were 46, five and one respectively.

Starter Homes

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he is satisfied with the rate of building of starter homes in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Data are not collected on the number of starter homes built in Wales. I am satisfied, however, that the housebuilding industry is responding to the demand for all types of homes. In 1987 the private sector started 8,700 new homes in Wales, an increase of 23 per cent. on the previous year and the highest total since 1973.

Tolls

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report a list of road, bridge and tunnel facilities in Wales for which tolls are levied, with a note for each entry of (a) the name and address of the responsible authority, (b) whether it produces published accounts for that specific facility, (c) which Minister is responsible for authorising changes in such tolls, and (d) on which (i) public expenditure programme and (ii) class, vote and subhead, the toll revenue and associated expenditure is to be found.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 23 June 1988]: There are two major tolled crossings in Wales—the Cleddau bridge and the Porthmadog Cob. Neither is the responsibility of the Secretary of State for Wales and toll revenue and associated expenditure do not appear in the roads public expenditure programme. The toll rate on the Porthmadog Cob is fixed in primary legislation. Changes in the tolls on the Cleddau bridge are not required to be authorised by the Secretary of State, though he has certain powers relating to such tolls. Accounts are published annually and the authorities responsible for these crossings are:

Cleddau Bridge
Dyfed County Council
County Hall
Carmarthen
Dyfed SA31 1JP

Porthmadog Cob
The Rebecca Trust
Y Dollborth
Porthmadog
Gwynedd

Details of ownership and accounting arrangements for minor crossings and roads are not readily available.

EMPLOYMENT

Co-operative Development Agency

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing for each of the past four years the funding provided under the terms of the Co-operative Development Agency and Industrial Development Act 1984, as well as an estimate of the funds which will be available in the current year.

Mr. Cope: The Co-operative Development Agency's estimated funding for the 1988-89 financial year under the terms of the Co-operative Development Agency and Industrial Development Act 1984 has been approved at £240,000. The table shows for each of the past four years the funding provided under the terms of the Co-operative Development Agency Act 1978, as amended by the Co-operative Development Agency and Industrial Development Act 1984.

Year	Funding £'000s
1 April 1984—31 March 1985	200

1 April 1986—31 March 1987	235
1 April 1987—31 March 1988	200

Also, under the terms of the Industrial Development Act 1982, £40,000 was made available in 1987-88 and £45,000 has been approved for 1988-89.

Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many filled places on the following programmes for each standard region, including Greater London, there were at the end of each month from February to May inclusive: community programme, enterprise allowance scheme, YTS, young workers' scheme, job release scheme, jobshare scheme, new job training scheme and jobstart allowance.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what circumstances an unemployed claimant receiving income support or unemployment benefit and studying in further education on a course of less than 21 hours per week can continue with that course work as an element within an employment training personal action plan.

Mr. Cope: Everyone joining employment training will follow an integrated programme of directed and practical training based on an agreed individual action plan. Employment training will build on trainees' previous attainments and experience, and an individual's action plan may include the completion of courses started before the trainee joined the programme that are relevant to the plan.

YTS Bridging Allowance

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment under what circumstances 16 and 17-year-olds in receipt of the YTS bridging allowance will be able to pursue a part-time education course, similar to the 21-hour rule without losing the allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The YTS bridging allowance will be paid for a maximum of eight weeks in any 12-month period to young people who have lost a job or a previous YTS place. To be eligible for the allowance young people must apply for a YTS place, make themselves available for interviews when required and be prepared to start on a YTS course at any time. Subject to those conditions young people may, if they wish, pursue a part-time education course while receiving the allowance.

Itinerants (Stonehenge)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total amount of benefits currently being paid by his Department to claimants who are living in vehicles attached to the convoy of itinerants currently in the vicinity of Stonehenge; what steps are taken by his Department to ensure that no benefits are paid in respect of fraudulent claims; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department does not keep records which show the amount of benefit paid to special groups of claimants. My Department has over 800 officers engaged exclusively in the investigation of benefit fraud. They liaise with their counterparts in the Department of Health and Social Security to ensure that every suspicion of benefit fraud is investigated. Because of the nature of their travels, the itinerants gathering at Stonehenge are unlikely to be committing the most common sort of benefit fraud, which is working and signing. If they are drawing benefit, however, they may be infringing the benefit system by not being available for work. Availability for work is rigorously enforced by my Department through the availability questionnaire which I announced in the House on 1 December 1987. Instructions issued to officials in the south-west require them to apply the full test of availability to any unemployed person claiming benefit.

YTS

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the projected numbers of YTS trainees on (a) year one and (b) year two for 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92 and what are the projected average lengths of stay.

Mr. Cope: The Government's expenditure plans, published in January 1988, show projected entrants to YTS at 363,000 in 1989-90 and 358,000 in 1990-91. Assumptions which underpinned that forecast are that 207,000 trainees with a two-year entitlement would progress into a second year in 1989-90, and 195,000 such trainees would progress into a second year in 1990-91. Average length of stay for those with a two-year entitlement would be 72 weeks in 1989-90, and 73 weeks in 1990-91, while for those with a one-year entitlement average length of stay would be 42 weeks in 1989-90 and 43 weeks in 1990-91.

The current public expenditure survey will cover the three years in question. The projections made last year are of course under review as part of this year's survey in the light of labour market trends, changes in legislation, and other factors.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he now has final figures for the number of entrants to YTS in 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cope: The Training Commission has released figures today which show that there were 419,635 starts to YTS in 1986-87. Cumulative figures at the end of each month were:

	Number
1986
April	22,826
May	37,738
June	128,225
July	190,786
August	244,557
September	332,928
October	356,181
November	371,877
December	379,849
1987
January	396,055
February	407,198
March	419,635
TOTAL FOR YEAR	419,635

These figures represent the actual numbers of scheme starts, including second and subsequent starts where trainees have transferred between schemes. It is estimated that the number of individuals entering YTS in 1986-87 was some 20 per cent. lower than the figures for starts in the table.

These figures differ from those published during 1986-87 because they include notifications of starts which had not been received at the time the monthly statistics were announced.

Wages Councils Agreements

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the estimated number of establishments and workers covered by wages council agreements, in 1987, in each region in Scotland and in each of the four cities: Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dundee and Aberdeen; and if he will show in that table the number of inspections, by visit and by other methods, carried out by the Wages Inspectorate in each area, and the rate of compliance with wages councils' rates in 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: Wages Inspectorate statistics are not compiled for areas smaller than the inspectorate's nine divisions, of which Scotland is one. Those items requested for which separate figures are compiled for Scotland were provided in the reply given to the hon. Member on 4 March 1988, at columns 734-38.

Minimum Wages

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of employers who have been informed by the Wages Inspectorate in Scotland that the maximum period for which arrears arising from under-payment of minimum rates can be claimed is 18 months; and if he will estimate the number of workers in Scotland affected by this information.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not the case that arrears can be claimed only for a period of 18 months. To the best of the inspectorate's knowledge, no such advice has been given.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about recent changes in the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Cope: As one of the initiatives in the action for cities launch on 7 March the Government announced their intention to raise the guarantee level on the loan guarantee scheme loans from 70 to 85 per cent. for eligible borrowers in inner city task force areas. That initiative has now been brought into effect. Since the introduction this January of simplified arrangements for loans of up to £15,000, take up under the scheme has doubled to over 200 per month. Both those changes should assist small businesses to start up and grow.

TRANSPORT

Departmental Staff

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give for each standard planning region of England (a) the number of employees of his Department, (b) the amount spent on wages and salaries and (c) the proportion of total expenditure in each region by his Department which is represented by personnel costs.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of employees in each economic planning region of England at 21 June was as follows:

Region
Northern	444
Yorkshire and Humberside	689
North West	840
East Midlands	547
West Midlands	776
East Anglia	306
South East	2,146
South West	1,103
London	2,818

The Department does not have a breakdown by former planning region of the amount spent on wages and salaries or of the proportion of total expenditure which personnel costs represents.

Motorists (Green Card)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there are any plans to end the green card insurance requirement for British motorists travelling in EEC countries as a result of the Single European Act.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is no requirement for motorists to have a green card when driving in other Community countries. Motor insurance policies issued in one member state already provide the cover required in law in each of the others. For convenience, United Kingdom insurers issue green cards to drivers who wish to extend the full cover provided by their domestic policies. This use of the green card does not correspond with its original purpose. To use some other form of certification as evidence of the extension of such cover would introduce an additional complication at a time when the aim is for freer movement between EC countries.

Irish Road Traffic

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will set up a survey to identify the total amount of road traffic from the Republic of Ireland which passed through the United Kingdom on its way to the continent of Europe during a given period of time.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Road Traffic Law

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to complete his consideration of the recommendations of the North report on road traffic law.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State said on 12 April, at column 79, we are pressing ahead with consideration of the recommendations of the North report. We will report to the House on our progress before the summer recess.

A27 (Flyover)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will provide a scale model of the road flyover at the Offington roundabout proposed in the consultant study of the A27 to enable constituents of the right hon. Member for Worthing attending the public exhibition to assess the impact of the proposed flyover on the local environment.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The consultants' recommended route has been developed to a sufficient extent to show that it would be a practicable solution and to indicate the approximate height of a flyover at the Offington roundabout. It would not be possible to prepare an accurate scale model until the detailed design stage is reached.

Tyre Treads

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he plans to discuss the issue of tyre tread depths with Governments of those countries enforcing a minimum tread depth of 1·6 mm or above; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the minimum statutory tyre tread depths in each country for which his Department has records.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We have no plans to discuss tread depths with other Governments. In use requirements for tyres are a domestic matter which each country decides in the light of local conditions. The Department does not keep complete records of minimum statutory tread depths in other countries. I would also refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for York, (Mr. Gregory) on 18 April, at columns 538-39. The latest informal information we have is as follows:

European and other country tread depth standards

Italy, West Germany, Denmark, Ireland, Belgium:
1 mm over the full width

France:
1 mm in the principal grooves

Luxembourg, Switzerland and Japan:
1·6 mm over the full width

United States of America:
$\frac{1}{16}$ inch over the full width

Austria:

Motor cycles	1 mm over the full width
Passenger cars and vans up to 3,000 kg laden weight	1·6 mm over the full width
PSVs and goods vehicles	2 mm over the full width

Netherlands:

Passenger vehicles for up to 9 people (including driver)	1 mm over the full width except the tyre shoulder
Goods vehicles with a laden weight of up to 3,500 kgs and trailers
Other goods vehicles and PSVs	No tread depth. tyre must be suitable for use and have rubber over whole surface. Slight cuts in rubber are permissible.

Portugal:
1 mm over $\frac{3}{4}$ of width.

HGV Test Centres

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many firms have block bookings at the HGV test centre at Beverley.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Five firms have block booking arrangements at the Beverley HGV driving test centre.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport upon what principles block bookings at the Beverley HGV test centre are allocated.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At Beverley, and all other HGV driving test centres, block booking arrangements are made with full-time training organisations which have a regular demand for HGV tests, provided that a reasonable amount of testing capacity remains to accommodate individual applicants.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the waiting time for individual applications for tests at the Beverley HGV test centre for firms without block bookings.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The forward booking date at Beverley HGV driving test centre is not kept separately for individual and block booked candidates. The forward booking date inclusive of both is currently 17 weeks. This is too long. We are urgently seeking ways to improve the situation.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the commercial value for firms training for HGV licences of the value of block bookings at the Beverley HGV test centre.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No financial estimate has been made. The Department's policy is to provide block booking facilities at Beverley and other HGV driving test centres wherever possible.

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why block bookings are granted to HGV licence training firms at the Beverley HGV training centre.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: At all HGV driving test centres we provide block booking facilities so that firms can plan their HGV driver training programmes to known test dates. The extent to which block booking facilities can be made available is currently limited at Beverley by shortage of accommodation.

M23 (Traffic Delays)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Worthing on 20 June, whether he will take steps to ensure that the county council officials responsible for delaying the traffic on the M23 on 11 June to use a deflectograph machine are no longer employed on his Department's work; why it was considered necessary to undertake the work at short notice; what cost saving was achieved by employing the machine at that particular time; who owns the machine used; and what factors led to the conclusion that similar weather conditions were unlikely to prevail at a time when traffic was not heavy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The county council is being asked for a report. I shall write to my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Worthing of 20 June, what information he has, in respect of the measurements of the road surface of the M23 on 11 June, as to when the police were first informed by the county council of its intention to carry out the work; what conclusions were reached as a result of the measurements; what action has been taken as a result of measuring the condition of the road; and when he expects a review by his Department of traffic flow maintenance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Surrey county council and the police first discussed the programme for the measurements on 26 April. The police were informed at 11.30 am on 10 June of the work to be done on the following day. The information obtained will take some weeks to analyse. It is needed to decide the structural treatment required during future major maintenance works. We are considering more generally what further steps might be taken to improve traffic flows in connection with maintenance works.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 135

SESSION 1987–88

13th June–24th June 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, • = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
